OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Secretary Gresham's funeral.—Noted lectures.—Foreign missionary ordained.—Important Supreme Court decisions.

Bishop Hurst, who was a personal friend of the deceased, conducted the funeral services over the remains of the late Secretary Gresham, in the east room of the White House, this morning. Owing to the limited seating capacity only those especially invited were admitted, and invitations were only sent to members of the diplomatic corps and prominent officials of the government and their families. President Cleveland and members of the Cabinet left here with the corpse immediately after the funeral for Chicago, where the interment will be made. The arrangements for the funeral were as near as possible the same made at the funerals of Mrs. and Miss Tracy, who lost their lives at a fire early in the last administration, Mrs. Harrison and Dr. Scott, her father, all of which took place in the White House. The Cabinet officers were honorary pall bearers, the active bearers being detailed from the Marine Corps. The government departments were all closed as a mark of respect and the flags on all government buildings will be half masted for ten days. Secretary Gresham's death, which was entirely unexpected a few hours before it occurred, was a great shock to Washington people.

Mr. William A. Boyd, General Secretary of the Y. M C. A., of Dublin, Ire., and William H. Roberts, member of the Y. M. C. A. National Council, of London, and District Secretary of Southwest England, who have been traveling in the United States since the recent convention at Sprinfield, Mass., attended a Gospel meeting last night, held under the auspices of the local Y. M. C. A., and delivered interesting addresses on the work that is being done by the organization on the other side of the Atlantic. At the Sabbath afternoon meeting of the Y. M. C. A., Mr. F. R Jacobs, the singing evangelist, of Chicago, told "Why I believe the Bible" in a most convincing manner. At the last meeting of the Presbyterian Ministers' Association to be held before next fall, Rev. J. T. Marshall, of Kensington, Ind., read a paper on "The New Christianity," in which he discussed new forms of worship and sensational preaching, and advised a strict adherence to the old established forms and emphasized the necessity of preaching the doctrinal teachings as laid down in the Bible.

Prabala Ramachandrayya Garu, a convert from Brahminism, and for more than thirteen years a member of the mission church at Guntur, India, lectured Monday evening in the Luther Memorial church, under the auspices of the Lutheran Ministers' Association, on "Castes and the Women of India." At the close of the lecture Dr. Butler, pastor of the church, presented the lecturer with a gold watch as a testimonial from the members of the congregation and the Junior Epworth League.

Ordination services of more than ordinary interest were held in the first Congregational church Sabbath evening, the candidate for the ministry being Mr. Jenichiro Oyabe, a native of Japan, who graduated last year from the Theological Department of Howard University, and who has just completed a post-graduate course at the Yale Divinity school. The ordination sermon was preached by Dr. J. E. Rankin, president of Howard University, and formerly pastor of this church, his text being, "There was a man sent from God whose name was John." Mr. Oyabe will do mission work, under direction of the Hawaiian Evangelical Association, among his countrymen who now reside in Hawaii. His instructors say he has energy and great ability and predict his success as a missionary.

The decision of the Supreme Court, denying the petition of Eugene V. Debs and his associates, who were imprisoned for declining to obey the orders issued by United States courts during the Chicago railroad strikes, for a writ of habeas corpus, was unanimous, and it contained some strong language. For instance, this paragraph: "The entire strength of the nation may be used to enforce in any part of the land the free and full exercise of all national powers and the security of all rights intrusted by the Constitution to its care. The strong arm of the national government may be put forth to brush away all obstructions to the freedom of interstate commerce or the transportation of the mails. If the emergency arises, the army of the nation, and all its militia, are at the service of the nation to compel obedience to its laws."

The Supreme Court decided the Geary Chinese act constitutional, Justice Brewer dissenting. It also practically decided the anti-Lottery act to be constitutional by denying a writ of habeas corpus asked for by a man who was arrested for violating that act by carrying lottery tickets from one State to another. *

VOICE OF APPROVAL.

DEAR TO THE HEART IS THE WORD OF ENCOURAGEMENT.

Rev. Madison C. Peters Believes In Acknowledging Merit—Strew Flowers In the Path of Weary Feet — We Have Blamed Each Other Long Enough.

Rev. Madison C. Peters preached to a large and appreciative congregation at the Bloomingdale Reformed church, New York, on Sunday, June 30. He took for his theme "Encouragement." The text selected was Matthew xxv, 21, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant." The preacher said:

Sweet to the human ear is the voice of approbation; dear to the human heart is the music of approving lips. Everybody has burdens, and what we need is the spirit of helpfulness, words of encouragement. We have blamed each other long enough; now let us praise. Praise your wife! Let your acknowledgments of her merits be felt and outspoken.

She may have ceased to expect praise, but it would do her good were she surprised some day by a tender expression of appreciation of all her care and toil and self denial. Many wives are only upper household servants without the upper household servants' wages.

Tell your wife how much money you have. Appeal to her intelligent judgment. No honorable woman will want to spend more than can be afforded. Every man in comfortable circumstances should keep his wife supplied with money for the disbursement of which she should never be required to give account. Your wife has a sacred right to some expression of appreciation of her unselfish devotion to your interests. You may all the while be full of loyal devotion to her, though for a want of comprehension of a nature more sensitive and more dependent than your own never give her any assurance of your appreciation. Many a husband boasts to others of the treasure he finds in his wife—he is really proud of her—but he does not care to spoil her by telling her so. Dr. Hoge tells of a husband who said: "I always take my wife's advice, but I never tell her so. She is a treasure. She is like a fine day which grows as it advances. I never knew her equal, but I never tell her so."

When did you give her a flower before?
Ah, well, what matter when all is o'er?

Husbands Too.

Wives, praise your husbands. If you let your husband feel that you think him a good husband, it will be a strong stimulus to his being so. As long as he thinks he possesses the character he will take some pains to deserve it, but when he has lost the name he may abandon the reality. Keats tells us that he has met with women who would like to be married to a poem and given away by a novel, but wives must not cease honoring their husbands on discovering that instead of being poetical and romantic they are very ordinary, imperfect beings.

Parents and Children.

Parents, encourage your children! Don't call them stupid. Don't ridicule them and so discourage them that they will not have any heart to do better. Many parents are wanting in courtesy to their children. They speak to them roughly, violently and insultingly and so inflict painful wounds on their self respect. Parents often refer to the faults and follies of the children, faults and follies to which they are keenly sensitive, of which they are ashamed and which it would be not only kind but just to forget. Never allude in jest to the personal defects of the children, nor mockingly humiliate them by adverting to their failures, or speak scornfully of their companions. Don't be tyrannical, thwarting their plans, and do not needlessly interfere with their pleasure. Don't expect old heads on young shoulders. Don't forget that you were once young, and don't impose on them unreasonable and fruitless sacrifices.

Children, encourage the parents. Honor them. Help them. Remember what they have done for you. Save them as many steps as you can. Make them comfortable in old age. Write to them often, if you can't visit them. Anticipate their wants and wishes. Remember, too, that a child's spotless name is while life lasts a father's truest glory and a mother's greatest joy. Young men or young women who are ashamed of their parents because the brilliancy has faded out of their eyes and the roses have fled from the cheeks are base ingrates. Amid all the successes of the noble Garfield nothing stirred his energy more than the thought of the gratification that would be given to his mother's heart. He always found time to write a letter home and to tell her all that he was doing. An old minister once said: "I have seen men die, I have seen children die, but no death ever seemed so pathetic to me as the one I have in mind now, of an aged mother. Her husband died and left her penniless with four children. She sewed, she made drawings, she taught, she gave scarcely any time to eat or sleep. Every thought was for her children, to educate them, to give them the advantages their father would have given them had he lived. She succeeded. She sent her boys to college and her girls to school. When all came home, they gave themselves up to their own selfish pursuits. She lingered among them some three years, and then was stricken with mortal illness, brought on by overwork. The children gathered around her bedside. The oldest son took her in his arms. He said: 'You have been a good mother to us.' That was not much to say, was it? It was much to her who had never heard anything like it before. A flush came over her pallid face, an with husky voice she whispered, 'My son, you never said so before.'"

Oh, friends! I pray tonight
Keep not your kisses for my dead, cold brow.
The way is lonely. Let me feel them now.
Think gently of me. I am travel worn.
My faltering feet are pierced with many a thorn.
Forgive, O hearts estranged, forgive, I plead.
When dreamless rest is mine, I shall not need
The tenderness for which I long tonight.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic For the Week Beginning June 9. Comment by Rev. S. H. Doyle.

TOPIC.—How to study the Bible.—Josh. i, 1-9.

Joshua is about to take the place of Moses as leader of God's people. God encourages him to undertake the responsible position and the difficult work by assuring him that he shall be eminently successful, and that he may be he gives him but one injunction, and that that he should "observe to do according to all the law," the law of Moses, the Pentateuch. God's word was to be his constant and only guide, and if he adhered strictly to that prosperity and success would meet him. The Bible, God's book, is still man's truest guide in all places of responsibility, and in life it is indeed a lamp to his feet and a light to his path. Notice:

1. We should study God's word. Joshua was not to merely read the law; he was to meditate upon it day and night, give it constant, thorough study and thought. There is too much superficial reading of God's word. It is read hastily and carelessly, but is not absorbed—it is not digested. The reading of a little of God's word, with study, thought and meditation, is better than much reading, which is simply a meaningless perusal of words, clauses and sentences.

2. We should study all of God's word. Joshua was to study and practice "all the law." The student of the Bible should aspire to know the Bible in its entirety. All the names of the books should be learned in their order. The history included should be studied from the beginning to the end. The historical setting of the various books should be thoroughly understood, and there should be familiarity with all the great doctrines of the Bible. Though composed of many books and written by many authors, yet the Bible is one book, and the more general our knowledge of it as a whole the more definite will be our idea of its essential oneness and sameness. Get a broad, comprehensive knowledge of the Bible as one book.

3. We should study God's word constantly. Joshua was to meditate upon it day and night. He would need its help every day, and therefore he should study it every day. A regular, systematic, constant study of God's word is the only effective way of studying it. A little now and a little then is not a good method of study. Haphazard, irregular methods of study make many failures of Bible students. Daily should we read and meditate upon it.

4. We should study God's word with the idea of observing its teachings. Joshua was to meditate upon it that he might do it. Knowledge without practice is valueless. It is worse. "To him that knoweth to do good and doeth it not it is a sin."

Study and practice bring prosperity. "For then thou shalt make thy way prosperous, and then thou shalt have good success" (Josh. i, 9).

Bible Readings.—Ps. i, 2, 3; xix, 7, 8; cxix, 9, 97-105; Prov. xxx, 6; Math. xxii, 29; Luke xvi, 29-31; xxiv, 44-46; John v, 39; Acts xvii, 11; xx, 32; Rom. xv, 4; I Tim. iv, 13-16; II Tim. iii, 16, 17; II Pet. i, 19-21; Heb. i, 1, 2; Rev. xxii, 18, 19.

The Pledge's Fulfillment.

The question may arise, "How soon shall I outgrow the pledge?" And the answer is, "Never!" So long as there is an uncurbed temper, so long as the tongue is not in complete subjection, so long as there lingers a feeling of shame at the confession of Christ, so long as a falsehood escapes the lips or the expression of countenance, so long as there remains one high thought that has not been brought into captivity, so long as every moment's action is not pleasing to the Lord and Master, the pledge's fulfillment is yet distant, and the Christian's ideal has not been reached.—Rev. Frank S. Arnold.

The Common End.

Some walk on the golden sands, others in the mire, but the same uncontrollable necessity of dying involves all. And whatever the way be, whether pleasant or doleful, yet every one passes with equal steps, measured by the same invariable spaces of hours and days, and arrives at the same common end of life.—Episcopal Recorder.

Christian Endeavor Gossip.

The Christian Endeavor society of Katsbaan, N. Y., gives $160 a year to foreign missions.

During the past year the societies of the Elgin district, Illinois, have contributed an aggregate of $1,008.99 to missions.

Although the society at Santee Agency, Neb., is composed entirely of the Indian pupils of the missionary school, it nevertheless collected $27 as its missionary offering on Christian Endeavor day.

The local union of Lansing expects to shortly organize societies in the Boys' reformatory, containing 555 boys, and in the School For the Blind.

There are now in Great Britain 2,363 Young People's societies of Christian Endeavor.

The Christian Endeavorers of the Reformed church in the United States, under the direction of their denominational board of missions, are building Christian Endeavor mission churches.

Christian Endeavor in Madagascar is not yet four years old. Nevertheless it now numbers 91 societies, with 3,377 members.

MOTHER PRINDLE WILL HELP THE WOMEN OF LONDON.

Lady Henry Somerset has decided to establish in London a woman's rescue home similar to the Florence Night mission in Bleecker street, and Mrs. A. L. Prindle, better known as Mother Prindle, matron of the Florence mission, will sail for England on June 5 at Lady Henry's special invitation.

While Lady Henry Somerset was on a visit here last year she visited the Florence mission and admired its methods. She has asked Mother Prindle to start the London Florence mission, which will be opened during the week of the International W. C. T. U. convention.

Mother Prindle is a far famed missionary worker. She has superintended rescue work for women in Buffalo, Chicago, Brooklyn, Columbus and New York, and her name is revered by thousands of outcast women.

The first notable instance of English women calling on American women for aid was when Princess Christian sought the personal assistance of Mrs. Dunlap-Hopkins of New York in starting a school of design for English women similar to the one which Mrs. Hopkins had made successful here.

Mrs. Cleveland and Ruth.

The fact that Mrs. Cleveland was accompanied to the Leiter-Curzon wedding by her little daughter Ruth should effectually set at rest for all future time the false and malicious stories that have been so long current in regard to the child, who is really an unusually bright and sturdy little specimen of childhood. The effort of the president and Mrs. Cleveland to keep their children in the background heretofore has been entirely due to their desire to keep the public from being satiated with accounts of the children, their daily doings, sayings and happenings generally. That their motive has been entirely misunderstood and grossly misrepresented to the extent of having accounts of the children's purported deformities and dullness of comprehension scattered broadcast over the United States is a condition of affairs of which the president and Mrs. Cleveland are perfectly aware.

It may or it may not have been due to the knowledge of such reports that Mrs. Cleveland finally consented to gratify the desire of the bride in allowing Ruth to be present at the ceremony, at which the entire fashionable world was in attendance.

It was certainly the knowledge of such malicious and ridiculous reports that quite recently prompted Mrs. Cleveland to make a witty little speech in the presence of some guests who had driven out to the country place at Woodley. While Mrs. Cleveland was entertaining her callers, the door of the room in which they sat opened softly, and a dainty little childish figure stood irresolutely on the threshold. For a moment the child, seeing that her mother had callers, started to draw back and close the door after her. With a little laugh Mrs. Cleveland held out her hands to the child, calling out: "Come in, Ruth, dear. If you don't, people may say that you have no legs."

African Missions.

The area of west Africa lying within the tropics covers about 1,500,000 square miles, and the populaton is estimated at 37,000,000. Frightful degradation is wrought by strong drink. It is said that rum is being taken into the country at the rate of 70,000 gallons for every missionary. Yet the result of Christian missions is cheering. The Scriptures have been translated into 35 dialects, and some knowledge of the gospel has reached about 8,000,000 people.

The Pen Woman's Club.

The Pen Woman's club of Chicago is made up of women connected with the press. The Woman's Tribune of Washington says of some of these ladies: Miss Gordon came straight from a postgraduate course at the Harvard annex to enter into journalistic work, and was editorially connected first with The Weekly Magazine and later with Unity. She is now a member of the publishing firm of Searle & Gorton, established in 1890, and the editor and proprietor of The New Order. She has recently been appointed by Mrs. Joseph Thompson, president of the board of lady managers for the Atlanta Cotton States and International exposition, press representative for Chicago and Illinois.

Mrs. Starrett began her editorial work on a daily paper published in Lawrence, Kan., and since that time has been engaged on several prominent weeklies, the last The Interior, with which she is now identified. Miss English is now writing special articles for the Chicago dailies and for periodicals published in this city and elsewhere. Mrs. Strong has long been a newspaper correspondent, for a number of years being Washington correspondent for newspapers in the northwest. She is an author and a fluent French translator. Miss Dusenberry is proprietor of the Purdy Publishing company and the editor of the Chicago Woman's News. She has recently been chosen one of the vice presidents of the Illinois Federation of Woman's Clubs, representing the Seventh congressional district.

The American Girl.

Generally the American girl has improved in strength and become less frivolous. The hardest and the cleverest students in the public schools are girls. They are entering freely into every employment that does not demand rude muscular power and rugged endurance. They are better able to take care of themselves than formerly. They are getting over nonsensical notions that dwarfing restrictions are essential to feminine attractions. They are not afraid that they can know too much or do too much. Meantime they are improving in their looks and increasing in their charm and their desirability as companions and comrades, and men are finding it out.—New York Sun.

FOR LITTLE FOLKS.

"YOU'RE IT."

It Was Brought to America With the Game of Tag by Little Cockneys.

Boys and girls, do you know why you say, "You're it!" when playing tag? Of course not. The professor didn't either when we asked him the other day, but he promised to put his entire mind upon the subject and let us know at once.

"The people who live over in England do not seem to think much of the letter 'h,' being in the habit of dropping it from the words where it belongs and putting it where it does not belong. What fun there is in it, or why they do it, no one can tell, but they have been in the habit of it for a good many hundred years.

"For this reason when the little English boys who were great-great-grandfathers years and years ago were having grand times in their games they, too, kept dropping their h's from the words they were shouting.

"So, when they played tag, as boys do now, touching each other with their hands, whenever one boy hit another he at once shouted out, 'You're 'it!' for he could not say 'hit,' you know.

"And all the generations of little boys who have since then been playing the game continued to say ' 'it,' instead of 'hit,' even after our fathers learned in America to always put their h's in every other word where they belonged.

"Now, boys, let me whisper a word of warning. Don't tell your teacher what the professor says. If you do, she'll never give you any peace, but will rap on the window at every recess and tell you to say 'hit,' instead of ' 'it.' "

The Mongoose.

In Mr. Kipling's story of "Rikki-tikki-tavi, the Mongoose," in which all young folks and a good many older ones delight, a great respect for that busy little animal is aroused. The splendid way in which he fights Nag and Nagaina, the big black cobra and his wife, is thrilling.

There is such a thing, however, as too much activity on the part of the mongoose. The people in the island of Jamaica are realizing this. They imported the mongoose in large numbers to kill the rats, which were so numerous there that they did much damage to the sugar cane. The mongoose promptly killed the rats, but when they were all destroyed it still went on killing and destroyed all the snakes, toads and crabs that are useful to eat up the stinging insects that live down there. As a result these have much increased, for the mongoose does not care for them, and not only that, but the mongoose, having about finished the rats, snakes and toads, does not find enough to feed upon and so steals eggs and kills young pigs, lambs, calves, puppies, kittens and game birds and destroys fruits and vegetables. Pretty soon the islanders will have to import something to kill the mongoose.

Peter's Peach.

Peter lived on the prairie. When he was 3 years old, the first railroad train came through. Uncle Peter carried the small boy to see it.

A train boy threw a peach to Peter. He ate it, and laughed and squealed with delight.

"Don't throw away the stone," said Uncle Peter. "We'll plant it."

Peter's chubby, brown little hand patted the soft earth over it. That first season he watched the green shoot break through and send out a few leaves. The next season it was tall enough for Peter to jump over it. The next it was so tall he couldn't.

When Peter was 8 years old, there were seven peaches on his tree, one for each of the family, and not one of them had ever tasted anything so good before. He planted all the stones.

Today Peter is a big boy. He has eight well grown peach trees, which carry health and delight to all the neighborhood. And he has a young orchard coming on which will some day bring more money than all his father's crops.—Youth's Companion.

STATE LIQUOR SHOPS

WORKINGS OF THE GOTHENBURG SYSTEM IN NORWAY.

Decreased Consumption of Spirituous Liquors, but Increased Sales of Beer and Wine—South Carolina's Dispensary Law. Immense Profit In the Rum Traffic.

So much has been written and spoken about the Gothenburg system of regulating the liquor traffic that the public ought to be well informed on the subject. There are a few points, however, which have not been made clear, but which are necessary to a full and accurate understanding of the system. A writer in a recent number of an English magazine who claims to have spent much time in Norway investigating the matter gives a description of the working of the Gothenburg method which clears up one or two of the points on which there has been some misapprehension.

The point which the defenders of the system have had the most trouble to explain is the recent increase in drunkenness in the towns and cities where the Gothenburg system is in force. One of the reasons given for this is that these towns and cities are nearly all surrounded by a cordon of prohibition districts, the people from which go to the towns and cities for liquor. This is proved by the inquiries made into the residence of the persons arrested for being drunk, a large percentage of them being nonresidents of the places where they are found intoxicated. Another reason for the increase in drunkenness is known to be the larger sales of beer and wine. But it has been asked why the sale of these liquors has not been brought under the same regulations as the sale of spirituous liquors. The answer is that the law does permit it. The sale of spirituous liquors alone is put under the Gothenburg system, and beer and wines are still sold under nearly the same regulations as in other countries. Only a vote of the national parliament can bring about a change in this method.

The Gothenburg system has undoubtedly been praised above its merits and condemned more severely than it deserves by those who have given it only a superficial study. Previous prejudice has had much to do with the light in which it has been viewed. But a few simple facts must be admitted by all. One is that it has largely decreased the consumption of spirituous liquors. Another is that drunkenness decreased with the lessened sale of intoxicants until the sales of beer and wines began to be pushed. A third fact is that from inquiries into the causes of drunkenness it is found that most of it is caused by the drinking of beer, and a fourth fact is that the advocates of temperance in Norway are anxious to bring the sale of beer under the same regulations as spirituous liquors are now sold. Judging from the success of the Norwegian system with spirituous liquors, it is only reasonable to conclude that it can be made fully as successful with beer and wine.

Some evidence as to the merits of this method of regulating the liquor traffic can be gained in South Carolina. The dispensary law of that state differs in detail from the Gothenburg system, but is the same in principle. It has been in force since July 1, 1893, but on account of the bitterness existing between warring political factions in South Carolina the law has not had a fair trial. Nevertheless a slight but steady decrease in the amount of drunkenness is reported, which would probably be much greater if there had not been so large an illicit sale of liquors. In the matter of revenue the law seems to be a success.

Definite statements as to the sales and profits are not easy to get, but it is claimed that $92,000 was recently paid into the state treasury as its share of the profits, and the city and county of Charleston received $3,578 as their share of the profits from the sales during the month of December. With a subsidence of political animosity and a longer experience in administering the law still better results can be expected.

One beneficial result of the Gothenburg and South Carolina systems is that they are showing people what immense profits there are in the liquor business. And as a large percentage of the crime and the cost of courts and prisons and pauperism comes from liquor drinking the public will not be slow to conclude that a business that is so profitable shall be made to return a larger compensation to the state and municipality for the harm it does.—Philadelphia Press.

Temperance Notes.

The best "cure" for drunkenness is the water cure.

The St. Paul Railway company has discharged 46 engineers and firemen for frequenting saloons while off duty. Thus is the "poor man's club" clubbing him.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON XI, SECOND QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, JUNE 16.

Text of the Lesson, John xxi, 4-17—Memory Verses, 15-17—Golden Text, John xxi, 17—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

4 Seven of the disciples had, under the leadership of Peter, gone afishing. But although they toiled all night they took nothing. Perhaps Peter thought of another night when they had labored in vain, but in the morning the Master filled two boats. He was now no longer with them, and perhaps it was His absence and their need that led them at this time to turn to the old occupation.

5. In the morning one stood on the shore whom they knew not and asked them if they had any meat. They were compelled to confess their emptiness and helplessness as they answered no. They should have trusted Him unseen as when He was visibly with them. But they were like ourselves, very slow to learn and full of doubts and fears and unbelief.

6. At His word they cast the net once more, and as on a former occasion when He called them to forsake all they catch a multitude of fishes. He changes not. His power is ever the same. If we would only trust Him, we might always be filled with joy and peace (Rom. xv, 13) and know somewhat of "satisfied with the favor and full with the blessing of the Lord" (Deut. xxxiii, 23).

7. John, whom Jesus loved, was the first to recognize the Lord. There must have been some unbelief about the fishing business, else he might have known Him sooner. It was unbelief on the part of Mary that caused her not to know Him (chapter xx. 14), for had she believed His words she would never have looked for the body of a dead Christ. The two who walked with Him to Emmaus and knew Him not were also full of unbelief (Luke xxiv, 25). And so always unbelief blinds the eyes (Heb. iii, 19).

8. As soon as Peter heard John say "It is the Lord," he at once cast himself into the sea to get to Jesus, while the other disciples came dragging the net with fishes. As Peter had led off in this going fishing, perhaps he wanted a word with the Lord alone, that he might take the blame upon himself and clear the others. As he had led out, he would be the first to lead back, a thing not always so easily done, as is seen in the case of Manasseh (II Chron. xxxiii 16, 17).

9. Without any efforts of theirs, and without any of the fish that they had caught, their breakfast was ready for them. They might as well have trusted the Lord to care for them, for they had testified that when He sent them without purse or scrip or shoes they had lacked nothing (Luke xxii 35). He will surely provide for all who truly serve and follow Him, according to Phil. iv 19. We wonder if the fire of coals made Peter think of another fire of coals when he got into trouble (chapter xviii, 18).

10. "Jesus saith unto them, Bring of the fish which you have now caught." As if they had done it. He wrought through them and then gave them the credit of doing it. That is the way He does still. He works in us, when we are willing both to will and to do of His good pleasure (Phil. ii, 13), and then promises to reward us for the works which we allow Him to do through us (Rev. xxii, 12). Is not His name truly "Wonderful?"

11. On the former occasion the net broke (Luke v, 6), but not so now, although it contained 153 great fishes. In II Chron. ii 17, we read that there were 153,000 strangers in the land in the days of Solomon, whom he employed to get materials for the temple. We know that the sea represents peoples and nations (Rev. xvii, 15), and that from the nations the Lord is gathering out a people for His name, to form a great spiritual temple as a dwelling place for God (Eph. ii, 21, 22), and that Peter was the first to open the door to the nations (Acts xv, 14).

12. "Jesus saith unto them, Come and break your fast" (R. V). See now why they had gone fishing. They were evidently hungry, had been fasting for some time and no one seemed to care. So it looked as if they must do something, but their somewhat was all in vain till He commanded. Without Him all our efforts will amount to nothing (John xv, 5). He was visibly before them now, and they saw His provision for their need. Their lack of confidence in Him when invisible kept them from saying much.

13. "Jesus then cometh, and taketh bread, and giveth them, and fish likewise.' He is always serving and supplying and caring for His people. The Son of Man who came not to be ministered unto, but to minister (Math. xx, 28), is still our High Priest with girded breast (Rev. i, 13,) whose love and power combine for the best interests of all who are His. "He who spared not His own Son, but delivered Him up for us all, how shall He not with Him also freely give us all things?" (Rom. viii, 32.)

14. This is the third appearance to the disciples recorded by John; see chapter xx 19, 26. While it is probably the seventh appearance since the resurrection, it is the third to any number of the disciples, the other four being to Mary, who first saw Him; then to the other women, and afterward to Peter, then to the two who walked to Emmaus, or possibly to the two before He appeared to Peter.

15. "Lovest thou me more than these?" Did He ask Peter whether he loved Him more than the other disciples loved Him because Peter had made the strongest professions of love before the crucifixion (Math. xxvi, 33, 35; John xiii, 37), or did He ask Peter whether he loved the service of Christ, even though it should involve some hunger and fasting, more than food for the body such as had now been provided? We all need to remember that man doth not live by bread alone, but by every word of God (Math. iv, 4), and that it is possible to esteem the words of His mouth more than our necessary food (Job xxiii, 12).

16. "Lovest thou me?" The second time the question comes, but He does not add "more than these." We sometimes hear people testify in public as to how much they love the Lord. I confess it always makes me feel that they would do better to testify to the great love of God to them, for our love to Him is, I fear, scarcely a thing to be talked of in public. Let us manifest our love by caring for His sheep and lambs: by doing to others as He would do were He here; by acting on John's admonition, "Let us not love in word, neither in tongue; but in deed and in truth" (I John iii, 18).

17. "Lovest thou me?" The third time the question comes, for it is a heart searching one. Would Peter think of his threefold denial? Why was he grieved? How little we think of how we grieve the Lord! Let us pray Ps. cxxxix, 23, 24, margin. Peter had offered to die for Christ. Jesus now tells him that he shall have that privilege (verses 18, 19); has he love enough for that? Have you?

GRESHAM IS NO MORE.

PATRIOT, SOLDIER, STATESMAN AND JURIST CALLED HENCE.

After Weeks of Illness the Secretary of State Succumbs to the Assault of the Grim Terror — Another Citizen Who Made a Distinguished Mark on His Country's History, Both in War and Peace.

WASHINGTON, May 28.—Walter Q. Gresham, secretary of state, and distinguished in his country's service in the field, on the bench and in diplomacy, died this morning after an illness of several weeks. He had improved so much during last week that his final recovery was confidently looked for, when on

WALTER Q. GRESHAM.

Saturday he had a relapse. He recovered partly from this, but yesterday the symptoms were more aggravated and before night he was looked upon as a dying man. After dark last night he had several rigors, and at 10:20 p. m. his physicians gave up all hope, and later informed his friends that he could not live until morning.

Their prediction was only too correct, for at 1:15 this morning he passed away to his eternal rest.

Was Conscious Just Before the End.

During the last hours of his life the secretary's wife, who had been devoted in her attention to him all through his illness, sat beside his bed reading from the Bible the passages he loved to hear. He was conscious until just before the end, spoke bravely and confidently of the great change he knew was coming and words of hope and cheer to his stricken loved ones. Thus he lay until just before 1:15, the great change came, his eyes glazed and his pulse flickered; a peaceful sleep then seemed to fall upon him and—the end had come.

MOURNING IN CHICAGO.

The City Sorrows for Her Lost Chieftain and His Comrades.

CHICAGO, May 30.—The expected arrival here this afternoon of the remains of the late Secretary Gresham cast a pall of sorrow over the ordinary Memorial Day exercises that intensified the feeling of all old soldiers and citizens alike. United States Marshal John W. Arnold were placed in charge of the local arrangements for the interment of the late Secretary Gresham. Colonel Corbin reached Chicago at 7 o'clock this morning, and the marshal and General Merritt met him on arrival and the programme was definitely arranged. It was decided that the entire garrison at Fort Sheridan, consisting of the Fifteenth infantry, four troops of cavalry and the battery of artillery should take part in the ceremonies. The cavalry and artillery left Fort Sheridan last night and marched into the city, arriving at Oakwoods cemetery early this morning. The infantry came in by train this morning.

Marshal Arnold and General Merritt had a conference with A. A. Sprague, the local representative of the Gresham family. They arranged with the undertaker to meet the funeral train with a state hearse, drawn by six black horses. The funeral train was switched to the tracks of the Illinois Central at Fordham. At Sixty-third street the remains were placed in the hearse, and the cortege moved from there to Oakwoods cemetery. The honorary pall-bearers, city officials, county judiciary, and Loyal Legion joined the escort. A meeting of judges of the United States courts and the local government officials selected a long list of honorary pall-bearers.

The list is as follows: Judges William A. Woods, James G. Jenkins, John W. Showalter, Romanzo Bunn, William J. Allen, William H. Seaman, W. G. Ewing, Robert T. Tuthill; Marshall Field, J. Russell Jones, Thomas Dent, Edwin Walker, Charles H. Aldrich, General William B. Anderson, Captain William P. Black, General George W. Smith and James L. High. The Loyal Legion was requested to furnish active pall-bearers. At a special meeting of the city council appropriate resolutions on the death of Secretary Gresham were adopted and the council decided to attend the funeral in a body.

A special meeting of the Illinois commandery, Loyal Legion of the United States, of which the late Secretary Gresham was a commander, was held last night for the purpose of making arrangements to take part in the secretary's funeral. Following were appointed active pall-bearers: General William Sooy Smith, Captain Charles H. Slack, Captain H. B. Jackson, Colonel William L. Barnum, Captain James Dunguid, Captain Myron H. Beach, General John McArthur, Major George L. Paddock, Captain Mason A. Read, Colonel Lemuel E. O. Gilman, Colonel George M. Guion and Captain James H. Bell.

MEMORIAL DAY ELSEWHERE.

Gov. Morton Overcome by the Heat at New York—Washington Ceremonies.

NEW YORK, May 31.—Memorial Day ceremonies here were centered at the Grant monument, where Governor Morton, Governor McKinley, ex-President Harrison and a large number of other prominent men were gathered. The oration of the day was delivered by Governor McKinley, and was an eloquent plea for union and patriotism. During the day there was a great parade of veterans, militia and citizens, which was reviewed at Madison square by Governor Morton and the prominent guests.

Here the untoward incident of the day occurred. The heat was intense and as Governor Morton stood bowing to the passing procession he suddenly sank to the floor of the stand overcome by the heat. Gen. Harrison was at his side in a moment and a young lady in the throng handed him a flask of brandy, which he diluted with water and held to the governor's lips. The governor revived and hearing the strains of music tried to arise, saying he must review the procession. He was restrained by General Harrison and other gentlemen, who insisted that it was impossible.

The governor, however, struggled to his feet, and as a loud cheer greeted him raised his hat in response. It was too much for him, however, and he again sunk down and was conveyed to his hotel, where he soon recovered and does not seem the worse for his attack.

Burned to Death at Bowen, Ills.

QUINCY, May 31.—Fire in the business district of Bowen, twenty miles northeast of here, destroyed six buildings, including four stores, a carpenter shop, and a dwelling. Loss, $20,000. A carpenter named Samuel Stark who lives at Mt. Sterling, ran into the shop to save his tools, the floor gave way, and he was burned to death.

This Spring.

See that your blood is purified and enriched by the use of a few bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla. Then you will not have that tired feeling, you will not be troubled with nervousness, sleeplessness and loss of appetite. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the ideal spring medicine, because it is the greatest blood purifier. It will drive the impurities from your blood, give mental and bodily strength and make you feel altogether new. Try it. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only true blood purifier prominently in the public eyes to-day. It creates an appetite and makes the weak strong. It is the best spring medicine.

MISS FLAGG'S
LATEST NEW BOOK!

"A Prisoner of Hope."

COMPLETE IN ONE LARGE HANDSOME VOLUME.

Price, $1.25.

We heartily commend this new work, by Elizabeth E. Flagg, to all our friends. The narrative originated in her personal experience, two or three years ago, when she sought relief and restoration from the results of a painful accident. In that search she availed herself of a unique healer in New Jersey, whom she graphically described, at that time, in her weekly letters to this paper. The ideas created in her mind by that experience form the basis of this well-told story, and thoughtful readers will peruse it with interest. While all may not agree with its deductions, ministers of the Gospel, students in seminaries and intelligent home circles will find it pleasant food for thought. We sell it for $1.25 per copy, postage prepaid.

NEWS OF THE STATE.

TELEGRAPHIC REPORTS OF HAPPENINGS OF NOTE.

Work of the State Lawmakers at Springfield—Bills and Resolutions Introduced, Etc.—Other State Items of General Interest to Our Readers.

SPRINGFIELD, May 29.—Both houses of the Illinois legislature adopted resolutions of sorrow at the death of Secretary Gresham. The bill to prohibit the licensing of saloons within four miles of state institutions was amended by the senate to exclude Champaign university and advanced to third reading. Littler's revenue bill was defeated, but reconsideration was moved. By the casting voto of the presiding officer the bill regulating the granting of street franchises to street railway and gas companies, etc., was defeated. The house sent Callahan's election law revision bill to third reading. A bill was introduced providing the death penalty for rape. Bills were passed: Abolishing the day of grace; appropriating $404,000 for the University of Illinois; appropriating $180,000 for two years for the militia; appropriating $55,000 for the blind asylum at Chicago.

SPRINGFIELD, May 30.—The senate refused to adjourn over Memorial Day after a long disenssion. A committee of sixteen senators and representatives was appointed on a joint resolution to attend the funeral of Secretary Gresham. Nominations to various state institution positions were received from the governor. The vote by which the bill to regulate street franchises for gas companies, etc., was defeated was reconsidered, but nothing further was done with it. Some few bills were advanced. The house passed bills: Requiring railways to maintain stations in all places of 200 inhabitants; prohibiting the use of clock, tape or slot machines; appropriating $225,000 to improve the state fair grounds; to pension school teachers.

SPRINGFIELD, June 1.—The state senate refused Wednesday to adjourn over Memorial Day, but it seems that "tired feeling" got the better of the senators and they held a perfunctory session and adjourned to this evening. The house held no meeting Memorial Day. Yesterday the calendar was cleared of all appropriation bills on first reading and the bill to tax legacies and inheritances was advanced to the order of passage. The Torren's abstract bill was discussed and amended until an amendment was reached that the friends of the bill said struck at the heart of the measure. On the vote there was no quorum and the opponents of the amendment filibustered. Adjournment was proposed, but the speaker said he would stay in the chair while the members went to dinner in hope that they might agree. Upon reassembly the bill was made special order for Tuesday next. Little other business was done and the house adjourned to Monday afternoon.

Two More Counties for Free Silver.

BLOOMINGTON, Ills., May 30.—The McLean county Democratic convention selected fifteen delegates to the Springfield convention instructed to use their influence for the free coinage of both metals at 16-to-1

PONTIAC, Ills., May 30.—The Democrats of Livingston county chose delegates to the silver convention. The resolutions demand the restoration of silver to free and unlimited coinage at 16-to-1.

"The Logan 103."

SPRINGFIELD, Ills., May 29.—The fifth biennial meeting of "The Logan 103" is in session here with about forty members in attendance. The usual banquet was dispensed with, and a business meeting was held in the parlors of the Leland hotel. William E. Mason was elected president of the association for the ensuing two years; Senator Chapman, vice president; W. F. Calhoun, secretary and treasurer, and T. C. McMillan, necrologist.

Pioneer Illinois Man Dead.

QUINCY, Ills., May 31.—Joseph C. Barlow, one of Quincy's pioneer manufacturers and head of the Barlow Corn Planter works, is dead, aged 60 years. He was a great inventor and prominent in the manufacturing world and was a nephew of Stephen A. Douglass.

UNION OF THE BLUE AND GRAY.

Memorable Event at Chicago on the Soldiers Memorial Anniversary.

CHICAGO, May 30.—The most memorable event in the history at Chicago of Memorial Day is the one that began last evening with a banquet at Kinsley's and will close the evening with a reception at the First regiment armory, and memorial exercises at the Illinois club. Forty Confederate generals and their wives and daughters are here from the south, and include Generals John B. Gordon, Wade Hampton, Fitzhugh Lee, Eppa Hunton, Butler, Heth and wife, Conrad and wife, French, Lomax and wife, Wright and wife, and H. Kyd Douglas; Mrs. Akers, Captain Littlepage and wife, Colonel Irwin, Major Hunton, Miss Armstrong, Miss Eliza Washington, Miss Cox, the Misses Mitchell and General Longstreet and his daughters.

Carloads of flowers from the south have arrived to decorate the Confederate soldiers' monument and the graves of southern dead at Oakwoods, and the quality of solemnity that should always be a prominent feature of the day was intensified by the arrival at 2 p. m. of the remains of the lamented Secretary Gresham, accompanied by the president and all the cabinet. Secretary Gresham's body will be placed in the vault at Oakwoods, where it will remain until its final disposition is decided upon. Yesterday there was a card reception at the Palmer House to the guests from the north and south who had arrived by scores.

During the afternoon the public schools held memorial exercises and the pupils were addressed by local speakers, the speaking being interspersed with patriotic songs. Last evening there was a brilliant banquet to the guests at Kinsley's, at which responses were made to many patriotic toasts by northern and southern veterans. The decoration of the graves was the feature of this morning's part of the programme. Soldiers' graves at Rose Hill, the Lincoln monument in Lincoln part, Colonel Mulligan's grave, Oakwoods and all the cemeteries had their quota of floral tributes. At 10 a. m. the exercises of dedicating the Confederate monument took place.

Here the programme was as follows: Selection by military band. Prayer by Colonel Joseph Desha Pickett, chaplain of the Kentucky "Orphans'" brigade. Introductory remarks by General John C. Underwood. Address by Rev. H. W. Bolton, D. D. Anthem by Imperial Arion Octette. Memorial poem by Major Henry T. Stanton, of Kentucky. Address by Rt. Rev. Samuel Fallows, LL. D. Consecration of the guns. Placing of the floral decorations. Requiem by the Imperial Arion Octette. Military honors. Firing three volleys over the dead by the First regiment, I. N. G. Bugle blare and taps.

It was noon when those ceremonies ended. The great parade begins at 2 p. m. An interesting feature of the proceedings in the morning was the ringing of the Columbian Liberty bell—the bell that occupied such a prominent position at the World's fair. The bell was placed on the lake front and at 8 a. m. it rang its joyous notes of peace as the guests left the Palmer House on their way to Oakwoods cemetery. The sound of the bell was the signal for battery D, under command of Captain Russell, to fire the salute in honor of the day and occasion.

The city is crowded with old soldiers, both those who wore the blue and those who wore the gray. Business is nearly entirely suspended and the holiday is nearly universal. General Longstreet's welcome was pathetic. He was met at the station by gallant soldiers who had fought with him during the dark days of the civil war, and they greeted him with great warmth and ardor.

Prominent Illinoisan Drops Dead.

CHARLESTOWN, Ills., June 1.—Colonel G. M. Mitchell, commander of the Fifty-fourth Illinois infantry during the war, warden of Chester penitentiary under Governor Oglesby, a former sheriff of Coles county and ex-postmaster of Charlestown, dropped dead from apoplexy. He had been a prominent politician all his life.

Ceremonies at the National Capital.

WASHINGTON, May 31.—The graves of the soldier dead in all the cemeteries of the city were strewn with flowers by their surviving comrades. The principal services were held at the National cemetery at Arlington, but none of the cemeteries were neglected. No services were held at General Logan's tomb in Rock Creek cemetery, but the willing hands of 100 Illinoisans, among them the widow of General Logan, banked the vault with flowers.

John Gray, a prominent farmer, living north of Homer, Ills., was found dead in the road.

At Stillman Valley, Ills., seventeen houses were entered by burglars and a great amount of money, watches and silver were taken. More than half the residents of the town are sufferers. There is no clew to the thieves.

Peter D. Peterson of Emington, Ills., has been taken to the Kankakee insane asylum, a jury before Judge Starr declaring him insane. Religion is supposed to be the reason of the unbalancing of his mind, as he is imagining himself to be a minister.

Douglass Henderson and Frank Jeffrey were hanged at Murphysboro, Ills., for the murder of James Towle at Carterville, Ills., last winter.

IRRIGATING THE GARDEN.

A Kansas Farmer's Plan In Which the Windmill Plays an Active Part.

A plan for irrigating gardens which appears to have given satisfaction presents this advantage: The water can run a long time in one continuous channel and will not wash, as it would down the slope. Land may lay quite sloping or quite level, still there is one way along its surface that is level. Find the level line and lay out your bed 18 inches wide and then a path 12 inches wide. Make your path go around one end of first bed and then the opposite end of second bed, and so on for as many beds as you want, is the advice of a correspondent who illustrated and described his plan as follows for Kansas Farmer:

I show on this plat 12 beds, each 26 feet long, or 312 feet of beds, and this, with two rows of vegetables in each bed, makes 624 feet of vegetables or plants. As the beds and paths are level from end to end of each, if your paths are 4 inches deep and you turn in 3 inches of water, this 3 inch head, with the fall it will get going around the end of the beds, will carry the water back and forth, until soon after the time the last bed is reached they will all have been soaked through and through and all of your plants be effectually subirrigated. The advantage of having only one stream of water to look after instead of several smaller streams running down the slope, where they soon reach the end of your rows and the water wastes away, is less trouble and by far more economical of water. Any man having an eight foot windmill can, by putting up a 120 barrel tank, or, better still, building a small pond, one he can build in even one day's time with team and an ordinary slip scraper, have as fine a garden as any in the land.

If at any time he wants to water any of the lower beds and not the upper ones, he can let the water run down in ditch "A" to opposite the bed needing water, and by cutting through bed No. 13, can use water where wanted. By laying out beds to left of ditch "A," strawberries, gooseberries, etc., can be planted and watered in same manner as our vegetable garden.

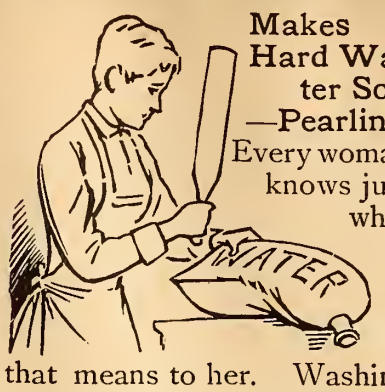
The San Jose Scale.

Professor Smith, entomologist of the New Jersey station, closes a bulletin on the subject of this dreaded insect pest with a series of recommendations, among which are: If on examination the scale is present in a young orchard, use a stiff brush and brush off the scales during the winter season. If the trees are too numerous to be treated by hand, prune back and wash the trees with a potash solution a month later. Treat the trees with kerosene emulsion.

Professor Riley, in a bulletin issued from the Maryland station, expresses doubts as to whether anything is to be gained by the stiff brush treatment urged by Professor Smith and believes that any effective winter wash will obviate the necessity for this preliminary labor. The other treatment recommended he pronounces valuable. He concludes his bulletin with this statement: "As a result of later experiments the past winter it becomes evident that any thorough spraying of the two pound to the gallon solution of whale oil soap will be perfectly effective and may be depended upon as a substitute for the treatment urged by Professor Smith."

A common fault with irrigators is the use of too much water.

The practice of dehorning cattle has come to stay.



Most coughs may be cured in a few hours, or at any rate in a few days, by the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. With such a prompt and sure remedy as this at hand, there is no need of prolonging the agony for weeks and months. Keep this remedy in your house.

Are you Going East this Summer?

Don't forget that the great summer tourist route is the Michigan Central, "The Niagara Falls Route," a first-class line for first-class travel, the popular line to Niagara Falls, Mackinac Island, the Thousand Islands of the St. Lawrence, the White Mountains, the Adirondacks. Portland by the Sea, Boston, and New England points, New York and the seashore.

Send ten cents postage for "A Summer Note Book." It will tell you all about these places and how to reach them. O. W. RUGGLES, Gen'l Pass'r and Tkt. Agt., Chicago.

Mothers will find "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" the best to use for children while teething. An old and well-tried remedy.

Makes Hard Water Soft —Pearline. Every woman knows just what that means to her. Washing in hardwater is so difficult, and the results so poor! Pearline reduces the labor, whether you use soft water or hard. But use Pearline, and it's just as easy to wash with hard water as with soft water—and the results are just as good.

Pearline saves more things than your labor, though. We'll tell you of these savings from time to time. Keep your eye on Pearline "ads."

Allyn's Ritual of Freemasonry by Avery Allyn contains the fully Illustrated Ritual of the Blue Lodge, Chapter Council and Commandery, 11 of the Scotch Rite Degrees, Several Masonic side degrees and what is termed a Key to the Phi Beta Kappa, the Orange and Odd-fellows Societies. Price in cloth $5.00.

Duncan's Masonic Ritual and Monitor. Profusely illustrated with explanatory engravings, and containing the ritual and work of the order for the seven degrees, including the Royal Arch. Though extensively used as an Instruction Book and one of the best in the market it is not as accurate as "Freemasonry Illustrated," the first book on catalogue. Price in cloth, $2 50.

Richardson's Monitor of Freemasonry. Containing the ceremonies of Lodges, Chapters, Encampments, etc. Illustrated. Although extensively used in conferring the higher degrees, it is not only very incomplete but inaccurate especially as regards the first seven degrees, and as to the higher degrees it gives but a description and general idea of the degrees rather than the full ritual. Price in cloth, $1.25; Paper covers, 75c.

Look to the East. A Ritual of the first three Masonic Degrees by Ralph Lester. Price in cloth $2.00. Notwithstanding the high price this book is very inferior in every way to Freemasonry Illustrated or The Handbook of Freemasonry at a quarter the price.

BUCKEYE REPUBLICANS.

They Meet at Zanesville and Nominate Bushnell for Governor.

ZANESVILLE, O., May 29.—Republican politicians are the principal inhabitants of this town just at present, for the most important state convention that party has ever held in the state is in session here.

It required six ballots to decide the nomination for governor, on that vote General Bushnell receiving 509; Nash, 201; Hoyt, 111; necessary for a choice, 414. The other candidates had been withdrawn or dropped during the balloting. President Woodmansee, Secretary Miller, and other officers of the Republican League of Ohio, together with ex-Governor Foraker, who was sitting on the stage at the time, telegraphed their congratulations to General Bushnell in Springfield. The nomination of Bushnell is a Foraker victory.

Ex-Secretary Charles Foster took the platform at midnight to read the resolutions, but the convention voted to give him leave to print, whereupon the convention adjourned for the day. The platform declares for protective tariff and reciprocity and on the money question for "'Honest money,' consisting of gold, silver and paper, every dollar of which shall be as good as any other dollar, and all backed by the national faith and honor." Bimetallism—the use of both gold and silver as standard—is demanded, either at an international ratio or under such restrictions as will maintain the parity of the metals, so that their purchasing and debt-paying power shall always be equal.

The rest of the document denounces the present administration for its revenue policy; for its foreign policy in Hawaii and Nicaragua; for its pension policy, and generally for everything it has done or left undone, and indorses McKinley's administration, the Nicaragua canal and Joseph B. Foraker for senator. It closes with a eulogistic indorsement of Governor McKinley for president and sympathy and condolence for the death of Secretary Gresham.

The state ticket nominated is as follows: For governor, Asa S. Bushnell; lieutenant governor, General A. W. Jones, of Youngstown; auditor, W. D. Guilbert; supreme judge, T. A. Minshall, of Chillicothe; supreme court clerk, J. B. Allen, Athens; attorney general, F. S. Monnett, Findlay; state treasurer, S. B. Campbell, Steubenville; board of public works, E. L. Lybarger, Coshocton.

LOSS OF THE COLIMA.

One of the Saved Tells How the Ship and Her People Went Down.

CITY OF MEXICO, June 3.—Of all the passengers and crew of the ill-fated Colima at this writing but twenty-seven are known to have been saved. This is authoritative. They were all picked up from pieces of wreckage or rafts, and many were badly bruised. The vessel went down in a storm that threw her on her beam ends, and then before any one could take measures for safety overwhelmed her and down she went. All the women and children went down with her, and their bodies strewed the ocean round about and were seen by scores by those fortunate enough to have gotten hold of something that would keep them afloat.

This is the story of John M. Thornton, one of the saved. He lost a wife and sister-in-law in the wreck, and with a sailor managed to get on a raft which they made themselves. They floated toward shore, but just before reaching land were picked up by the San Juan, having been in the water and on the raft twenty-two hours. It is stated by some of the saved that the vessel had a heavy deck load of lumber which shifted and listed her hours before she went over on her beam ends, but it seems that no effort was made to jettison the lumber. From advices at hand it would seem that the vessel might have been saved if this had been done. The exact number of lost is not known, but is stated at from 150 to 180.

Jockey Killed in a Race.

WASHINGTON, June 3.—Several accidents occurred in the last race at the St. Asaph race track. Dick Corbley, a white jockey, who was riding Kirkover, was killed. He had been in the rear and suddenly commenced riding hard, and was overcoming his field rapidly when the horse went down. Two horses immediately behind fell over Corbley's horse. The boy probably struck one of the fence rails, as an ugly gash had been cut in his head and his back was broken.

ANOTHER COLLISION ON THE LAKE.

Two Steamers Come Together in a Fog and Three Persons Are Drowned.

ALPENA, Mich., June 1.—The big steel steamer Norman and the Canadian steamer Jack collided on Lake Huron off Middle island in a dense fog at 1 o'clock in the morning. The Norman went to the bottom within two minutes, carrying with her the following: Mrs. Reynolds, of Bay City, wife of the steward; Nels Bernstone, watchman; Toney ——, deckhand, shipped at Ashtabula. The Jack filled, and would have also sunk had it not been for her cargo of lumber, which kept her afloat.

The survivors were picked up by the steamer Sicken and brought here. Captain Stratton, of the Norman, said: "We sighted the Jack twenty minutes before the accident. She was then off our port bow. I gave the Jack a signal of one whistle, which she answered. She then disappeared. When I sighted her again she was very close. I then gave one blast of the whistle, but this time the Jack answered with two blasts. I immediately put the Norman hard aport and thought the Jack would pass all right. Immediately after she loomed up close under our port bow, showing her green light. I heard her captain give the order to put her hard a starboard. Then she struck up amidship with the horrible crash."

The Norman was an 1,870 ton vessel and worth $160,000. It is feared that the cargo of the Jack will become so watersoaked that she will go down before she can be found.

MADE HUNDREDS OF HANDS IDLE.

Fire Destroys a Toledo Knitting Factory, Wiping Out $165,000.

TOLEDO, May 29.—Roth & Friedman's knitting factory was totally destroyed by fire early last evening. The factory was a large four-story building, and within twenty minutes after the fire was discovered the walls fell in. The factory was located in the heart of the city, and for a time an immense amount of valuable property was endangered. Several firemen were severely scorched, but none was seriously injured. A number of persons were also hurt by flying bricks when the walls fell.

The loss on the building is about $40,000; insured. Loss on machinery and stock estimated at $125,000, insured for $88,000. The fire is supposed to have originated from a bonfire in the alley at the rear of the building. Four hundred and fifty people are thrown out of employment.

Disposed of Seminary Control.

PITTSBURG, May 30.—At the United Presbyterian assembly the question of seminary control was finally disposed of. The majority report proposed that the general assembly have the veto power and also the authority to remove professors from the seminaries for unsoundness in the faith. The minority report was the same except that it stipulated that professors should not be removed without first being given a trial. A resolution was passed embodying these propositions. It also provides for the appointment of a committee to negotiate with the synods having control of the theological seminaries with a view to the adjustment of any apparent or alleged discrepancies between their action and their chartered rights. The assembly finished its business and adjourned sine die last night.

Lake Bursts Its Banks.

DENVER, June 3.—A special to The News from McCook, Neb., says: As a result of a heavy rain Curtis lake burst its banks at the place where the Burlington railroad tracks cross the embankment of the lake, and a heavy body of water is now running down the Medicine valley towards the Republican river. A number of freight cars on the track were precipitated into the Medicine valley below and the fine Curtis roller mill is in danger of being destroyed.

PULLMAN WINS THE CASE.

Moloney's Quo Warranto Proceedings Fail in Court at Chicago.

CHICAGO, June 3.—Some time ago Attorney General Moloney began a quo warranto suit against the Pullman company, alleging that its erection of a ten-story building in this city containing much more room than it needed for offices, which excess of room it rented; its sale of liquor on dining cars; its ownership of the town of Pullman; its ownership of stock in the Pullman Iron and Steel company and twenty-three acres of unused land, was in violation of its charter. The suit was begun during the excitement caused by the Pullman strike.

Judge Baker has decided the case. On every point except two he sustains the Pullman company, declaring that all its doings except the two mentioned above are in accordance with its charter. He rules, however, that the company must sell the twenty-three acres of land and the stock in the iron and steel company. The sale of liquor in dining cars is decided to be a desirable and necessary accommodation for the comfort and convenience of travelers. Judge Baker said the general rule is that a corporation may do all that is necessary in order to carry out the object for which it was chartered.

A little warm sunshine will melt an icicle sooner than a cold northeaster.

Public morality is a growth from the same seed as individual morality. The same principles that reform an individual will reform a nation.

If we would reach men most effectually in turning them from the false religion of the lodge, it must be by the "Come now let us reason together" spirit.

"Speaking the truth in love" is Paul's idea of the best method of reforming men. In the original it is a stronger expression, for it is literally truthing it in love.

Dr. Carradine, whose sermon on secret societies has had such a wide circulation, is now in California attracting large audiences and holding interesting revival services in Los Angeles and other cities.

Secret orders, in attempting to build up a brotherhood with Christ excluded, are most dangerous rivals of the church. They strike at the authority of both civil and ecclesiastical law by ruling out Christ, the author of law.

A class of three—two young men and one young woman—graduate at the Evansville (Wis.) Free Methodist Seminary, at the coming Commencement. The principal, Prof. C. N. Bertels, reports that the work of God has been going on among the students during the present school year. The pastor, Rev. R. G. Shepherd's Bible readings and sermons, have been inspiring and instructive both to the people and the seminary.

Commencement day at Wheaton occurs this year on Thursday, June 27th, at 10 A M. A class of twelve young men and women are to be graduated. Fifteen are graduating from the Preparatory school. The past year has been one of growth and general prosperity. A Woman's Building estimated to cost about forty thousand dollars is (D. V.) to be erected immediately.

The Denver Daily News says of the National Reform Convention which met in that city last week: "The reform movement represented by this association is rapidly gaining strength, and already numbers in its membership a majority of the ministers of Denver and many members of their flocks." There is a surprisingly full attendance of delegates at the R P. Synod in that city. Rev. J. M. Wylie, of Denver, was chosen moderator.

We gladly call attention to the strong resolutions on secret societies passed by the late United Presbyterian General Assembly, and which appear in Rev. W. B. Stoddard's letter this week. In them they declare that the secret society evil is on the increase; that they are sapping the life of the church, usurping the prerogatives of civil government, perverting the equity of our courts of justice, and invading the sanctity of the home. They then enjoin their sessions to vigilance in applying the law against secret societies, that the people be instructed from the pulpit in regard to them, and that they endorse the work being done by the National Christian Association, in giving light upon this important subject.

An exchange says the offices of the Carnegie concerns, at Pittsburg, were removed the first of April to a new building. The work of removal was begun at noon, Saturday, and continued on Sabbath in order that everything might be in place for the opening of business Monday morning. The Carnegie company, of course, expects its employes to give strict heed to the commandment that says: "Thou shalt not steal." But when a corporation trains its employes to violate one of God's commands, what reason have they to expect that they will respect any of the others. Destroy the authority that is behind one command and you destroy the authority behind all. Thus, he that is guilty in one point is guilty of all.

Christianity is a religion of motives. It is not so much what we do for Christ, as from what motive we do it. In testifying against secret societies our motive should be love to Christ. We seek to exalt Christ, his authority and his law above all rivals. We oppose secret societies, not to gratify any feeling of revenge or of personal wrong, but because we have the conviction that their influence is not to exalt and honor Christ. In most lodges his precious name is ignored, and even excluded from their prayers, in order that they may fraternize with his enemies. Let us keep before our minds that anti-secrecy is a gospel whose ideal is Christ in everything. And the object of this paper will continue to be to defend Christ, and plead for his rights and royal claims.

It is almost a year since the massacre of nearly twelve thousand Armenian Christians by instigation of the cruel Turks. The European powers have insisted upon an investigation. All the facts have revealed in dark colors the barbarity and duplicity of the Turk. It is only because of international jealousy that this despotic power has been suffered to exist so long. But now it seems the end is near. Leading English papers say they prefer a Russian protectorate over Armenia, or even the Russian possession of Constantinople, to the further residence of the Turk in Europe. The long-expected European war may be very near, and indications point to Palestine as the battle-ground. With some of our exchanges the war spirit is up to the fighting point. The Northwestern Christian Advocate says: "We hope to hear the cannon roar against the Sultan of Turkey, for that implies actual economy of human life."

Our motives in opposing the lodge may differ somewhat as we regard it from the standpoint of law, or from the standpoint of worship. We manifest our love to Christ by obeying his commands. This accords with the principle Christ laid down, "If ye love me keep my commandments." We oppose the lodge because we are convinced that in many ways it leads to the violation of the law of Christ. It is easy to see that it leads to much intemperance and Sabbath desecration. E. T. McIntire, a converted 33d degree Mason, says: "The number of breaches of the Sixth and Seventh Commandments that are hidden from public view by the dark mantle of the lodge, only the day of judgment will reveal." Again, we may view the lodge as robbing Christ of his worship; or as the Word signifies, of his worthship. It supplants Christ in the estimation of men by claiming supremacy, and giving the title worshipful to its Master. It tends to supplant his church by exalting itself as a religious institution capable of saving men. It robs Christ of his glory and the church of its honor by professing to dispense charity, not in the name of Christ, but of the lodge.

At the dedication of a Confederate soldier's monument in this city on Decoration day, Rev. H. W. Bolton, a high Mason and ex-Commander of Grant G. A. R. Post, presided. A speaker representing the Confederate soldiers' association presented a number of cannon to be placed around the monument. They had done service in slaughtering our brave boys in blue on the bloody fields of Missionary Ridge, Resaca, Dalton, Kensaw Mountain, Atlanta, Franklin, and other battles of the civil war. The speaker referred to the glorious record made by the guns on the battlefield, for which they were henceforth to be memorialized. No one should object to Confederate soldiers monumenting their dead, but when prominent Union soldiers, like Dr. Bolton, and others, take part in such ceremonies it destroys in the public mind the distinction between the patriotism that fought to save the nation and the sentiment that aimed to destroy it. Also when we find Masons taking a prominent part in such public displays, it recalls the time when Masonry was driven from the North it planted its lodges in the South, and in these lodges secession and treason was plotted which aimed to destroy the Union.

THE MASONIC NEW BIRTH.

BY C. A. S. TEMPLE.

In the ancient mysteries the candidate for initiation, after being duly prepared by secret rites and ceremonies, was ushered, in a state of absolute nudity, into the innermost recesses of the temple. There, unmoved and guarded by the mystic rites, he received in his bosom divine illumination, and, divested of his garments, participated, as they would say, in the divine nature. Taylor's Gamblicus, translation of Produr, in Two Babylons; page 300.

This claim for the mysteries, that by the mystic rites performed in the dark ages of the pagan temple the naked and affrighted candidate both receives divine illumination and became partaker of a divine nature, thick and black as it was with impiety and blasphemy, yet it has its counterpart in the initiations and the claims and pretensions of Freemasonry.

The Masonic candidate for initiation is at first in the ante-room divested of all his garments, his shirt excepted, in the first and second degrees; and then in the Entered Apprentice degree dressed in an old pair of lodge drawers, with his left breast and arm bare, the left leg of the drawers is rolled up above the knee, on his right foot is a slipper and the left foot is bare. In the Fellow Craft degree he is in the same plight, except that his right leg is bared above the knee, and his left foot is slippered while the other is bare. The candidate for the third or Master Mason's degree leaves all his clothes behind him, even his shirt, wearing only the lodge drawers. Both of his legs are bare to above his knees, and both feet are bare. (See Morgan, Bernard, and others.) Thus in this plight the candidate is ushered into the lodge in Masonic parlance—neither naked nor clothed, or, except in the third degree—barefoot nor shod. In each degree, too, he is blindfolded and wears a cabletow; a halter in the Entered Apprentice around his neck; in the Fellow Craft twice around his naked right arm at the shoulder. On the candidate in the Master Mason degree it is three times around his body.

To the unpracticed eye such a sad spectacle is simply disgusting, but not so with the brother of the mystic tie, to whom such scenes are familiar. Say those great Masonic Gamaliels, Pierson and Mackey, "There he stands emblematically naked, emblematically profane, in darkness, helplessness and ignorance, and covered over with the pollutions of the outer world, he comes to our door seeking the new birth. No discrimination here. All who thus come to our door, saints and sinners alike, come seeking the new birth." See Mackey's Manual of the Lodge, pp. 20, 21. Master's Carpet, pp. 254, 261.

Again, "Man cannot work or correct the irregularities of life until he is clothed with innocence in the lodge of a Mason. He then becomes a divine, spiritual man or Mason." L. Reynolds, in Masonic Trowel, pages 214, 219, 237. Says Sickels, These first degrees form a perfect and harmonious whole; nor can we conceive that anything can be suggested more which the soul of man requires. Freemason's Monitor, pp. 97, 98.

These various statements are but intimations, though strong and unmistakable, that regeneration or the new birth is communicated and wrought in the heart of man by the criminally disgusting and debasing process of Masonic initiation. But the following from undoubted Masonic authority (Mackey's Lexicon, p. 297) is a positive assertion of this false and blasphemous claim. Says Mackey: "The Master Mason represents a man under the doctrine of love saved from the grave of iniquity and raised to the faith of salvation." The monstrous absurdity, falsehood and wickedness of all these assumptions is fully exposed in that saying of Holy Writ concerning Christ, Acts 4:12: "Neither is there salvation in any other; for there is none other name under heaven, given among men, whereby we must be saved." These words are but a repetition in another form of those of Christ himself. For himself and of his mission he said, John 14:6: "I am the way, and the truth, and the life. No man cometh unto the Father but by me." He had already told them, Jno. 10:1, 2, that "he was the door," by which alone any man can enter the kingdom. How then can Masonry save?

Imagine now a group of such men as Bunyan, John Wesley, Jonathan Edwards, Whitefield, Lyman Beecher, Edward Payson, Charles Spurgeon and Moody, all standing at the lodge-door together; all duly and truly prepared; that is, all stripped, barefoot, all haltered, hoodwinked, and knocking for admittance. Then watch them as thus at the mercy of their conductors and their tormentors, the brethren, they are led into the lodge, pushed over boxes and prostrate chairs, knocked down with the gavel, and then, after a shameful rigmarole of bosh and blasphemy, raised to life on the five points of fellowship. What a spectacle! Before this each of them has put on Christ, been washed with the washing of regeneration, renewed with the renewing of the Holy Ghost; each has been for years an ambassador for Christ, and as such has boldly preached salvation through him alone. Rooted and grounded and built up in him, they have been content to walk as he walked. Hitherto all have supposed that divine illumination was the province and work exclusively of the Holy Spirit; but now they seek it through the falsehood, the profane, grovelling debasement and degradation of Masonic initiation. To add to all this, they have taken upon themselves a series of oaths which nothing but the combined ingenuity of wicked men and devils could ever have invented; imprecations, that is, invocations of penalties, bloody and cruel, which no being in the whole universe but Satan could ever have suggested to the mind of man. In this way they have attained the new birth. What would all this be for such men but an actual renunciation of Christ, of his way, his truth, his life and his salvation, for the secret mysteries of this great masterpiece of Satan? What more or less, what else can it be for any man who professing godliness, accepts the humiliation, the degradation of such an initiation? How much more, when in going through the whole disgusting process, submitting to all its debasements and taking all its horrible oaths, he then and there bows the knee at the altar of Baal. God be praised that none of the names just repeated have ever been tarnished by an act so impious, a record so black; yet the humiliating fact remains, that great numbers of their profession are now by that very means lending their influence, both publicly and privately, to the advancement of this horrible imposture.

But although the church is honeycombed with Masonry, and although though the pulpit is muzzled and even emasculated thereby, the fact remains that salvation is only by the blood of the Lamb; that the new birth is the work of God's Spirit alone, whereby convincing men of sin, enlightening their minds in the knowledge of Christ, and renewing their wills, he doth persuade and enable us to embrace Jesus Christ freely offered to us in the Gospel. Ass. Short. Cat., Quest. 31. Such is the only new birth taught by Christ, by his holy apostles and prophets, and by those later worthies of our own times, and all ministers of God.

With such facts before us it is easy to see that the claim that the new birth is attained by Masonic initiation, that initiation is a resurrection to a new life, that thereby a man becomes complete in morality and intelligence, having thus attained all that the soul of man requires, is a stupendous Masonic lie! What then can the preacher Mason be but a false witness of God? In the pulpit he is the professed preacher of that Gospel which teaches that salvation is through Christ alone; professedly a teacher of that regeneration, that new birth which is only of the Spirit. By becoming a member of the Masonic fraternity, he has practically asserted the theory of the new birth by Masonic initiation. Thus, in practice, he denies the faith he professes to preach. Masonry is a philosophical development of the ancient sun-worship. Mackey says, with the ancients the sun was Baal and Baal was the sun. Hislop, Two Babylons, p. 362. The Masonic professing Christian, by virtue of his Masonic membership, is a devotee, and if a lodge chaplain, a minister of Baal. Thus we are led back to our starting point, viz., that this Masonic theory of the new birth by initiation originated with, and in, paganism—in the ancient mysteries, which were the great training schools of the ancient Baal-worship. It is, therefore, only a relic of that ancient worship of Baal and Ashtaroth, by which Israel was led into idolatry. See Judg. 2:11–13. The same Baal-worship was also a conspicuous element in the great primitive apostacy in the Christian church, from which has come the great apostate church of Rome. That church teaches regeneration and salvation by rites and ceremonies scarcely less humiliating than those of Masonic initiation.

Like that abominable church, Masonry now essays to delude her votaries by inducing them to accept and follow such teaching and such practices as her own arrogance, impiety or caprice may prescribe. Thus, if possible, she would deceive even the very elect. The fact, as Mackey puts it, that Masonry is a philosophical modern development of the ancient sun-worship, proved, as it is, by her teaching of regeneration by her initiations, shows of itself that her chief object is the restoration of the Baal-worship of the ancient mysteries. "If Jehovah be God, serve him; if Baal, then serve him.

THE MASONIC OATH.

BY E. RONAYNE, PAST MASTER KEYSTONE LODGE, NO. 639, CHICAGO

In the Masonic ritual under the Grand Lodge of England the following question and answer occur: "What is Freemasonry? A beautiful system of morality veiled in allegory and illustrated by symbols" And in our American ritual we find this question and answer: "What makes you a Mason? My obligation."

To all who read this I would in the strongest possible manner emphasize this last quotation. It is the oath or obligation that makes a man a Mason—not the oath of a Fellow Craft or Master Mason or Royal Arch—but simply and only the oath of an Entered Apprentice or the oath he takes when being initiated into the first degree. This is the real Masonic oath, while the others above this are merely so many mutual covenants between the members of the same degree. For example: In the Master Mason's degree the candidate promises and swears that he will not "cheat, wrong or defraud a lodge of Master Masons, nor a brother of this degree"—that he "will not have illicit carnal intercourse with a Master Mason's wife, mother, sister or daughter"—that he will "keep the secrets of a brother Mason"—that he will "immediately repair to the relief of a brother," giving the grand hailing sign, etc. All these are but so many mutual covenants between man and man, while the oath of the first degree is the real Masonic oath, binding the candidate to Freemasonry at large as a system, and without having any reference whatever to any duty he may owe to his fellow members.

Now, keeping this fact fairly before us, and remembering also what Freemasonry is, or claims to be, according to the quotation above given, let us carefully examine the Masonic oath itself and see what we can find in it. But right here on the very threshold of our inquiry does it not look suspicious or at least inconsistent that horrible oaths should be administered at all under the cover of night and darkness in Masonic meetings in this free country? Such a practice as this is bad enough among thieves, ignorant and brutal dagos as in the Mafia, or among the opium eaters of China as in the Highbinders. We justly condemn the Clan-na-Gaels, the Molly Maguires, the Klu-Klux clan or the old Knights of the Golden Circle because of their horrible oaths, and their brutal death penalties, but what excuse can be offered for intelligent Americans, for ministers of the Gospel, for apparently staid and pious deacons, for professing Christians and for learned lawyers and physicians—what reasonable excuse, I say, can be offered for such men as these for binding themselves under the most terrible oaths that language can express, and for swearing to a mode of death upon the violation of that oath, the most revolting and horrible that the mind of man can conceive?

But now let us examine this awful and most terrible oath. The Masonic candidate, irrespective of who or what he is, stripped to his drawers, and with his left foot, left leg, left knee, left breast and left arm made bare, with a hoodwink over his eyes and a stout rope around his neck, kneels on his naked left knee in the center of the lodge room, and having his left hand under the holy Bible, square and compass, and his right resting thereon, repeats after the Worshipful Master the following illegal and unauthorized oath:

"I (John Doe), of my own free will and accord, in the presence of Almighty God and this worshipful lodge erected to God and dedicated to the holy Saints John, do hereby and hereon most solemnly and sincerely promise and swear:

"1. That I will always hail, ever conceal and never reveal any of the secret arts, parts or points of the hidden mysteries of ancient Freemasonry which have been heretofore, may at this time, or shall at any future period be communicated to me as such to any person or persons whomsoever, except it be to a true and lawful brother Mason or within a regularly constituted lodge of Masons. And neither unto him nor them until by strict trial, due examination or legal information I shall have found him or them as lawfully entitled to the same as I am myself.

"2. I furthermore solemnly promise and swear that I will not write, print, paint, stamp, stain, cut, carve, mark or engrave them or cause the same to be done upon anything moveable or immoveable, capable of receiving the least impression of a word, syllable, letter or character, whereby the same may become legible or intelligible to myself, or to any person under the whole canopy of heaven, and the secrets of Freemasonry be thereby unlawfully obtained through my unworthiness."

Now, will the reader please go over the language of this oath again very carefully. Take particular notice of every expression, and above all be careful to observe that in the first section of it the candidate swears to two things: 1st. He swears to "ever conceal," and 2nd, he swears to "never reveal" what he is falsely informed are Masonic secrets. But how is a Mason to "conceal" the so-called secrets of Masonry? Simply by denying the truth of what he hears said about the system. By denying all about the stripping, the hoodwink, the cable-tow, the oath, the death penalty; by denying all about the due-guard, sign, grip and password; by denying everything, or in other words, by lying about everything relating to Masonry. The only way in which a Mason can "conceal" Freemasonry is by lying about it; and therefore, I assert without the least fear of contradiction that the very first thing a Masonic candidate swears to do is to "always" lie. He swears to live and die a self-conscious liar on behalf of Masonry, and yet "Freemasonry is a beautful system of morality!" There is no way of getting over or around this; it will bear no other construction.

But once more let me call attention to the first section of this oath. Freemasons pretend that Masonry is a dead secret, and yet here at the very threshold of the order the candidate is given to understand that "the secret arts, parts and points of the hidden mysteries of ancient Freemasonry" may already have been communicated to him possibly long before he ever thought of being made a Mason. If then a man can acquire an accurate knowledge of "the secret arts, parts, and points of the hidden mysteries of ancient Freemasonry" outside of and possibly long years before he comes up for initiation, is it not really a secret how Masonry under such circumstances can be alleged to be secret? Observe the language of the oath: "The hidden mysteries of ancient Freemasonry which have been heretofore communicated to you," and yet the candidate is sworn to "ever conceal" that which cannot be concealed, and to "never reveal" that which has already been revealed again and again many long years even before he was born.

But now we come to the second section of this most wonderful oath. Here it will be noticed that the candidate is sworn not to "write, print, paint, stamp, stain, cut, carve, mark or engrave" these alleged Masonic secrets, while the facts in the case are that every Grand Lodge in the United States has these self-same so-called secrets written out and printed; that every Grand Lodge in the United States elects or appoints from its own body, from time to time, certain members called "custodians of the work." That these "custodians" have in their possession these very same alleged secrets in a written or printed form; and yet the Masonic candidate is sworn that he will not "reveal" what has already been revealed, that he will not "write" or "print" what the Grand Lodge has already written and printed; and that if any or all of this rascally business should at any time come to his knowledge that he must "conceal" it by denying that it is so; or in other words, he must lie deliberately for the sole support and benefit of ancient Masonry. Am I here stretching the point, my dear brother Mason, or am I misconstruing the Masonic oath as you and I have taken it? If you are intelligent as a Mason you know that all I have asserted here is literally true; and being true and undeniable, you must also know that your Masonic oath is a mere burlesque, and that Freemasonry itself, instead of being "a beautiful system of morality, veiled in allegory and illustrated by symbols," is a hideous system of fraud, veiled in the grossest falsehood and illustrated by its workings in our courts of justice, in our ecclesiastical circles and in the community generally

In my next letter I shall again refer to this Masonic oath and possibly compare it more fully with the oaths taken in the other degrees.

FROM WHENCE AND WHY?

BY BISHOP H. J. BECKER, DAYTON, O.

From whence comes the boasted system of secret societies? Why do they exist? Are their origin and rise the results of social and moral, of commercial and political necessities? These questions are neither impertinent nor insolent; and could they be properly answered by the votaries of the lodge, that answer would go far towards solving their destiny. The object and origin of these societies are inseparable: the object urging an appropriate organization to be, and to become, the exponent of its supremest desires, whether they be those of doctrine or duty. Should it be alleged that society is best governed, and morals more effectually enforced, by secular organization; and that commercial interests and political relations and obligations are thereby more readily brought about, then the question which pertains to the secrecy of these organizations still remains unanswered.

Social relations and moral characteristics are counterparts one of the other, be they good or evil. Has secrecy a more elevating and virtuous tendency than the exercises and conduct which are open and subject to the observation of the teachers and exemplars of morality and good society? What particular department of the commercial interest of the community depends upon secrecy? Does it lie in the schedule of prices? Then its publicity is as necessary as in the article scheduled for the mart. Is it necessary in order to form syndicate relations? What may we expect from syndicates which thrust out the men who have limited means, and consolidate those whose wealth is counted by the millions?

Is secrecy an effectual factor for the laboring man? Does not his secrecy to confront his employer with his weapons of defense (?) necessitate an organization to consolidate the manufacturing interests of the country? and is it not also necessary for the employer to meet secrecy with secrecy, lest their transparancy become the prey of the employed? Secrecy may be necessary to work "a corner in wheat;" "to arrange a schedule of prices;" to "throw out a scab;" to "order a strike;" to "administer an oath;" to "rebuke or defend a miscreant;" to "ostracise and intimidate a deserter;" to "work for the good of the order;" but when justice and equity are to be regarded, it has no mission.

Political secrecy is chargeable with scheming in the interests of dominating faction. It is inimical to good government, destructive of all the vouchsafed rights of the Constitution, and subversive of the real designs for which the patriot seeks affiliation with a political party.

What benefit accrues from commercial secrecy? Let the "Merchant of Venice" answer. We have already spoken of the "corner in wheat." The accumulation of the farmer's product for a mere stipend have crowded the shipping houses of the speculator. How? By crying and buying down the market prices of produce, concealing the object of his purchase, then holding it until his inflated herald "leaped the schedule" and made a million in a day. Has the Grange, the secret Grange, brought help? Did the abolition of the "middle men" settle the ruffled pool and heal the hurt of the "green goods man?" What benefit came from the Farmers' Alliance? There are the orders of the railroad engineers, the conductors and brakemen, the Knights of Labor, the miners' union, and a half score of other fraternities. What have they accomplished in secret cloisters? Nothing. Whenever they wish to conciliate their differences, they hold public and open counsel.

The source of every secret society claiming ancient origin, trace that origin to those ages and people whose vices led them to fraternate. They held the secret lodge in high esteem because of advantage. Modern lodges have no higher motive than that of personal selfishness. Disinterestedness is as fatal to the lodge as is the deadly nightshade to the life of an infant. When Saladin took the city of Alexandria he inquired of Mohamet Ali what he should do with the Alexandrian library. The prophet replied: "Examine it, and if you find them to contradict the Koran, burn them. If they are like the Koran, burn them, because there is no need of them." If the lodge is not like the church, it should cease to have an existence. If it is like the church there is no need of its existence; therefore let it cease to live. May its demise soon take place.

OUR FOREIGN LETTER.

Social evolution.—Working for posterity — Deserving and undeserving poor.—Instance of the Durham coal strike.

The spring-time finds the churches of this country busy in discussing the nature and measure of the work which they have done, and how their future efforts may realize the largest amount of success. Educational, social and evangelistic agencies are constantly on the increase.

Perhaps the greatest question of late has been that of social evolution. All grades of mind have treated the subject, and in some cases those who have known the least about it have dogmatized the most. Books have been written, speeches delivered, and discussions conducted. As usual there has been a large amount of claptrap and common-place remark, but the theme has also been dealt with as a liberal, devout and Christian spirit. Some very thoughtful men assure us that the "survival of the fittest" will be seen in the way the churches deal with these social problems. There are those who tell us that the mental and moral growth of mankind follows the analogy of the vegetable and animal creation; that in spite of all efforts along humanitarian lines, the inferior races, as well as inferior individuals—that is, those who lack the qualities that can make them victorious in the battle of life—are bound to die off. We are told that nature is too strong for a philanthropic science, or as some call it a coddling regime; that only the best live in spite of all our efforts to preserve the rest; that the race does not advance as the result of some rational and logical conviction, which it holds concerning life; nor because it is bribed by the expectation of remuneration from conformity to nature's laws.

When we talk of working for the good of posterity, some laugh, and ask what posterity has done for us that we should concern ourselves about it? Yet, in spite of themselves, men are being forced into the service of posterity by the moulding force of an unseen hand. They are unconsciously working on behalf of unborn generations, even though they know it not. What are we to do? Are we to leave the laggers in the race of life to struggle with an adverse fate and drop off without a helping hand? To this question the church replies: "Certainly not. We must do whatever is possible in order to secure the temporal and spiritual progress of mankind." The farmer does not leave his fields unploughed and unsowed, because some of the seed is sure to be unproductive. He knows not which shall prosper, but he toils in hope of a coming harvest. Whatever the votaries of a pessimistic philosophy may say, the church is convinced that the efforts to save men must not be relaxed. The influence of the numerous self-sacrificing laborers of the church of our day is not always as successful as we desire it to be, nor as we think it ought to be.

There are vast multitudes, not only of poor and deserving recipients of the bounty of the church, but also of many who think they ought to be helped, whether themselves act wisely or otherwise. These latter are the fungus growth of a pernicious civilization. However good their wages they never think of saving; but expect when work is scarce and poverty presses to get help from the funds of some neighboring church or philanthropic institution, and think that they are badly treated if they do not.

During the late Durham coal strike a friend of mine who was a member of the Relief Committee was waited upon one Saturday evening by a man who represented himself and family to be in the deepest distress. My friend not only promised to do the best he could for him with the Committee, but also gave him half a sovereign for present relief. My friend called to see the family on Monday morning, but finding only two children at home, asked the elder: "How did your mother spend the half sovereign I sent her on Saturday night?" 'Oh," replied the child, "she bought a turkey for yesterday's dinner." My friend then called upon the foreman of the shipyard where the man worked and enquired how much the man earned per week when in work. The reply was: "Never less than £7" "How long has he been out of work?" was the next query. "Three weeks," replied the foreman. That was but a solitary case. Yet these thriftless people think themselves badly treated if they are not petted, pitied and helped when in difficulty.

There are, however, many who are in the depths of poverty through causes over which they have little or no control. In the helping of these, strenuous efforts are made by the churches. As a sample of some of the agencies which are in operation, I may say that the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes has, in connection with his London mission, a series of agencies more numerous than most mission churches employ, yet such as are in line with the general run of aggressive methods now in use. Thousands of garments, new and old, tools, etc., are yearly distributed in addition to the vast quantities of provisions which are daily dealt out to the needy. These, together with nurses and medicines for the sick, and an abundance of healthy religious literature for all, are used to bring the people to a better and nobler life. While some of these efforts may be unproductive of good, yet it is known that thousands of people are yearly helped to a healthful, vigorous and spiritual life thereby. J. BOYES.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Gov. Greenhalge —The slums of East Boston —The city councils.—Dr. Moxom to remain in New England — Father Chiniquy.—A touching incident —June in the city.—Commencent.—The patriotic women of Boston.

Gov. Greenhalge seems to be getting himself into hot water. He attended Bishop Williams' recent jubilee and made a rather fulsome speech on that occasion, which it is to be hoped neither the spirit of Endicott or any other of our old Puritan governors was near enough to take cognizance of, as it would certainly not conduce to their peace of soul. It has lost him the votes of the anti-Romanist party who will surely keep their promise to remember it at the next election. The governor of Massachusetts hobnobbing with Satolli is not a pleasant spectacle. There are times (and this was one) when policy and principle point the same way, and it would have been well for him not to have antagonized the party whose friendliness helped to elect him. For while the A. P. A. claim that they are not a political party, everybody knows better. Their plan will be as usual to keep in the background, and make it appear that the opposition to his re-election comes purely and simply from the Republicans. He has now offended the Grand Army by vetoing the Veterans' Preference bill. Ostensibly the bill was in the interest of the old soldiers; giving the right to appointments in the public service before others; but in reality it was another instance of using our country's gallant defenders as the monkey used poor grimalkin, for a cat's paw. The bill was in direct antagonism to civil service reform. It places no age limit, and seems in all respects to be anything but a wise one. However the Senate has passed it over the governor's veto, who will probably, when the matter of re-election comes up, find that this really courageous action in the face of party pressure has rolled another stone against the tomb of his political hopes.

The Anti-Tenement House League has been making some terrible reports through its agent, which emphasizes anew the necessity for more stringent laws to break up these pestilence breeding holes. East Boston, it appears, has a large number of tenement sweat shops, and Marion street specially is unusually favored. Think of backyards into which every kind of refuse is thrown, of human beings living in a cellar, with no sanitary arrangements whatever, everything being thrown into the sink drain, with the result that even those who call this miserable shelter home, have to escape into the street from the noxious effluvia. It is not surprising to know that scarlet fever is epidemic on Marion St. These people work for the sweat-shops. Think of articles manufactured in such a place, and sold to spread disease and death in the homes of innocent buyers who purchase them because "they are bargains, and so cheap."

The bill for abolishing the Boston City Council has been rejected. This body has done many things to make itself unpopular; its make-up is foreign to a large degree, and its legislation has been in too many cases by aliens for aliens instead of the people; but with all these drawbacks it is safe for the general interest to retain the two branches, instead of vesting all the power in a single legislative body, leaving no power of appeal from bad legislation to the co-ordinate branch.

Dr. Philip S. Moxon has stated publicly that he has refused the call to the First Presbyterian church in New York, and will remain in New England. A man so liberal in his views both theologically and socially might find it difficult to fit in to a pulpit where he would feel his freedom to utter what he thought abridged. The brave veteran, Father Chiniquy, spoke in the People's Temple last Sabbath. Older than Gladstone or Pope Leo, being in his 86th year, he looks able yet in spite of his late severe illness to deal many a hard blow against the papacy. His tender Christ-like spirit is in strong contrast to that shown by too many anti-Romanist speakers. I was glad to see that he checked those demonstrations on the part of the audience which has caused pain to many Christian people who believe that patriotism is best conserved, and "Old Glory" most honored by keeping holy the Sabbath day—not by its desecration.

Last Sabbath was the hottest of the season, and the open air meetings on the Common were well attended. The Unitarians gathered about them the most orderly crowd, due in part to the fact that members of Unitarian congregations were themselves there in considerable force in order to support by their presence the new departure on the part of a denomination which has hitherto kept aloof from all such unconventional methods, being generally more willing to pay out money that the poor may be preached to than to take any personal hand in the labor. The spirit of the age, like new wine, is beginning to ferment in the old bottles into which Channing poured the ripe sweetness of his thought, and Parker the audacious heresies that are almost forgotten now in the excitement of more modern ones. We have warrant in Scripture for believing that it will burst the bottles. The poor and toiling are least able to lift themselves up, least capable of being lifted up by anything short of the lever of the divine. There is nothing like preaching to crowds made up of such, to discover the need of a definite faith by which to hold them, and the limitations of a religion which is purely humanitarian.

The sweet and simple trust of childhood was beautifully illustrated by a scene that lately took place in the Nickerson Home for destitute children. A picnic had been planned, but the weather looked dubious, and scores of anxious eyes watched the skies with as much or as little satisfaction as meterological observations under such circumstances generally bring to the observer. The day before it was noticed that a group of them had gathered in a side-room, and were so suspiciously quiet that it was thought best to make an investigation, but they were found to be praying in their childish faith for a pleasant day on the morrow.

Rosy, leafy June is here in all her glory. She is clothing the parks with verdure, and holding a very carnival of bloom and beauty in the public gardens. The beautiful clinging Boston ivy is clothing the walls of stone and brick with its lovely mantle. This is one of the things which lend an individuality to the Hub—this and its narrow streets. At this season of the year the Old Granary Burying Ground is a poem itself, and it grows on one too, if one will stop to let it. New York can import an Egyptian obelisk and set it up in Central Park, but not all her millionaires together can buy an historic landmark like the Old Granary; and I really doubt if any European city could show a more restful bit of coolness and greenness than can be seen through the iron railing which separates it from the constant stream of humanity passing to and fro. Yet the bustle and hurry and stir and din of carriages and teams and street cars rather deepen than mar the impression made by the grassy slopes and venerable gray headstones of this ancient resting place of the men and women who builded New England and made her what she is.

"Commencement" is in the air already. The baccalaureate address at Boston University was given by President Warren, and pictured the scholastic life as Athens, and the world's busy life into which the student was to go as Corinth. They were to fight the Corinthian principles everywhere prevailing, the love of gain and pleasure, and all petty pursuits that dwarf the soul; and carry wisdom and health and purity, as the natural and fitting point of the higher education, which is a dismal failure if it is of use only to its possessor. The women of Boston are already stirring in regard to the referendum which will decide next fall whether they shall be granted municipal suffrage. I attended a meeting of the ward and city committee the other day, and was impressed not by the mannishness, for there was nothing of the kind, but the intelligence and sweet womanliness of the Independent Women Voters. Their President, Mrs. E Trask Hill, has the brain of a statesman, and I doubt if there is another in America to whom could be more fittingly applied the newly-coined title which I believe has come to us by the way of Australia, of states woman.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

The Boston C. E. Convention.—Systematic Bible study.—Extent of prostitution.—How the money goes.

Washington Christian Endeavorers are daily growing more enthusiastic over the international convention to be held at Boston next month, and from present indications will send a larger delegation than went to Cleveland last year. Notice has been given by the chairman of the transportation committee that application must be made to the committee before the 15th inst., by those intending to go to Boston, or accommodations will not be guaranteed. The enthusiasm over the big convention is not, however, interfering with the regular work at home, as was shown at the last meeting of the executive committee, when the missionary committee reported that two young persons had volunteered as foreign missionaries, and that arrangements had been perfected for systematic work among the numerous cabmen of the city, which the committee had reason to hope would soon result in the formation of a society for cabmen. Among other reports showing activity among the Endeavorers was that from the committee of '96, that $8,500 of the $10,000 fund had been subscribed and the committee was confident the remainder would be subscribed before the Boston convention meets.

Dr. Gilbert, secretary of the Society of Religious Education, talked at the regular weekly meeting of the Y. M. C. A. on the systematic and topical study of the Bible. The plan submitted by him for a systematic study of the Scriptures through a regular but limited course of daily reading was, in short, to divide each book and each chapter of the Bible into topics, each of which should have a connected relation with the one following it. He told his hearers that in this manner the attention of the student was attracted and held as though reading a book of fiction, and before one was aware the book would have been gone through. But, he truly said, its study could never be completed. The student would not master the book, but the book would master him, and he would regard this mine of boundless wealth with a feeling of veneration. It would come to be the overmastering, guiding power of his whole life.

Mrs. Charlton Edholm, for twenty years engaged in active newspaper work in Chicago and New York, but who, for several years past, has devoted all her time to working with the Florence Crittenden Mission of the latter city, which is devoted almost exclusively to rescue work among fallen women, delivered an address at a mass meeting held Sabbath afternoon in Hamline church, under the auspices of the W. C. T. U.

In addition to the details of the work she is engaged in the slums of New York, she told some very unpalatable truths concerning the systemized traffic in girls in this country, and related instances in her own experience which brought tears to the eyes of many of her hearers. She said the statistics showed that every five years 230,000 inmates of houses of shame go into the Potter's Field, and to fill their places 100 recruits a day are made, which means "that on this blessed day of the Lord 100 homes are rendered desolate and 100 human souls are seized in Satan's grasp." She should have doubled the last figures, so as to include the men who lead the women astray.

At a temperance meeting Prof. Stewart presented some figures worthy of more than a passing notice. He said that in educational work, through churches, Sabbath-schools, temperance societies, and other organizations, the sum of $459,000,000 in round figures was spent each year, but to offset this it was estimated that the annual expenditures resulting from the liquor habit reached the enormous sum of $1,559,000,000. After submitting those figures he said: "The liquor men have more money than we have, but they have not more brains, more tact, or more ability, for God is on the side of temperance." He closed by saying he thought it was the duty of the churches to unite the 25,000,000 communicants of the country for the purpose of crushing out the curse of curses. At another temperance mass meeting, held in the Fifteenth Street Presbyterian church, Prof. Geo. Cook, of Howard University, spoke of the liquor habit from a hygienic standpoint. He declared unequivocally that the drinking of alcoholic beverages was an unnecessary and natural habit and that its effects were injurious, being exceedingly harmful to the physical and mental powers of men because it impairs his sensibilities and changes his whole nature.

Among the important decisions of the Supreme Court previous to adjournment was that affirming the constitutionality of the Connecticut law which requires druggists who use liquors in the preparation of prescriptions to pay a liquor license. *

REFORM NEWS.

LIGHT IN THE EAST.

BOSTON, June 7, 1895.

Going yesterday to the Boston and Albany depot, in anticipation of meeting Sister Mary Carnes from Detroit, I was surprised and gratified by a square encounter with Bro. R. D. Grant, pastor of the First Baptist church of Portland, Ore. To the editor, publisher and old-time readers of the Cynosure, Bro. Grant needs no introduction. Both old and new friends will thank God that he is "hale and hearty," and from the cordial way he gave me his hand, and the brief exchanges of a meeting in the jostling throng of eager exodus from a crowded car, I infer that he is neither ashamed of his record or of his principles, so fearlessly and eloquently avowed at our anti-lodge meetings in Boston. He is to remain for a few weeks in New England, speaking at the cosmopolitan gathering of Christian Endeavorers and at other important meetings in the interests of Christ's militant and triumphant kingdom. I hope for a more protracted interview before he returns to the Pacific slope.

Dr. Henry T. Cheever, of Worcester, is to address the Congregational ministers of Boston on Monday, the 10th inst. I have not learned the precise theme upon which he is to speak, but have no doubt of its relation to the vital questions of the hour. The doctor retains his intellectual and physical vigor in a remarkable degree, and (D. V.) your "New England letter writer" will give the gist of his address. Statistics published in the "Home Light" for May last, concerning the "widows and orphans" fund, are receiving notice, and I have been furnished by one who claims to have access to the official entries on the journal with what he claims to be a true bill. Fortunately, I have the printed report which fully sustains the "Home Light" in its assertion. As this question is being canvassed in a quiet way, I have issued an edition of 5,000 of "Pres. J. Blanchard's views of the first degree of the Independent Order of Odd-fellowship" which I propose to circulate freely. If anybody wants to help in passing them along, send an order with the postage. Fifty-five thousand is the estimated number of Endeavor visitors to our city at their approaching anniversary. With other live and wide awake societies the New England Christian Association is preparing to welcome these dwellers in all parts of the Christian world and to send them away (when they shall please to return) better informed about our work and its objects than when they came. My last outing was to Connecticut, via Worcester, spending the Sabbath with the faithful in Willimantic. Of the many encouraging incidents of this brief trip, I may speak later. Brethren in the West, "be of good cheer." There "is light in the East." JAMES P. STODDARD.

IMPORTANT RESOLUTIONS.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 30, '95.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I reached home again yesterday morning after an absence of a month. During this time I traveled nearly 2,000 miles, addressed nine congregations, secured thirty-eight subscriptions to the Cynosure, distributed many Lodge Lamps, and received contributions as follows: A. W. Sawhill, $5; D S. Ervin, $3.50; J. R. McBurney, $5; Free Methodist church collection, Rochester, Pa , $1.82; U. P. collection, Midway, Pa., $3 27; Wm. A Dickson, $1; J. P. Scott, $10; James Wallace, $5. U. P. collection, Cross Roads, Pa , $5 06; A. Y. Russell, $1; J. G. Berry, $4 25.

Rev. W. J. Graham, of Midway, Pa., kindly gave me the loan of his horse and carriage for several days' drive in Washington county, Pa. The hills in this section are many and high, but not so steep as in some places adjacent. They afford excellent pasturage. Wool-growing has been the farmer's principal industry. As there appears to be no profit in wool in present prices, cattle and other stock are taking the place of the sheep. Oil and gas has been found in paying quantities, and many of the farmers are being helped by their incomes from these sources. The recent advances in prices has stimulated production, and many new wells are being sunk. As the cost of sinking a well is about $5,000 there must be quite a product to make it pay.

I spoke Sabbath morning and afternoon to good audiences in what is known as Cross Roads United Presbyterian church, Rev. J. H. Timmons, pastor. This church has prospered during his pastorate, and is perhaps as strong numerically as circumstances would allow. The closest attention was given to the addressed, and an invitation extended to return.

During my two days' visit at the United Presbyterian General Assembly, I renewed the acquaintance of several I had not seen for years. Bro. Milligan, Pa. State Secretary, favors calling the next State convention to Beaver Falls. Considerable discussion was called forth by the overture giving the General Assembly control of the church theological seminaries. This matter has received much attention of late, owing doubtless to the Briggs' difficulty. I should have been glad to have remained and listened to the able and interesting addresses to be given, but duty seemed to order otherwise. The committee on reform had not reported when I came away. Through the courtesy of the chairman of that committee I was permitted to see the report to be presented, and copy the resolutions bearing upon our theme. The resolutions were strong, and spoke in no uncertain way on the temperance, Sabbath, and other reforms. The following was what was to be presented regarding the church and secret societies:

"We would call attention to the evil of secret societies which statistics show to be on the increase. These institutions which sap the life of the church wherever they exist within its pale, and threaten to usurp the prerogatives of civil government, pervert the equity of our courts of justice, and invade the sanctity of the home, are active and aggressive. Therefore,

"Resolved, 1. That we re-affirm our former deliverances upon this subject, and enjoin our sessions to be vigilant and faithful in the application of the law against secret societies, and that instruction thereon be earnestly and timely given from the pulpits of the church.

"Resolved, 2. That we endorse the work being done by the National Christian Association in giving light upon this important subject."

Doubtless the Assembly will see the importance of these resolutions, and adopt them as presented by the committee.

Being unable to sleep as the train flew through the darkness toward home, I meditated upon God's goodness to me, his uworthy servant. For over twelve years he has enabled me to travel, carrying the message he has given to those who may need. How he has watched over, protected, and blessed! A broken rail or misplaced switch might any moment usher into eternity. As with the train, so with time, it speeds rapidly. What we do must be done quickly, for soon the reward comes.

Father Patterson, as he was familiarly called, passed to his reward last week. He was pastor of the United Presbyterian church, New Galilee, for more than forty years; a good man, of great faith and courage in the Master's service. He was interested much in reform. Very profitable meetings were held in the church over which he was placed by the writer. He has gone home; the good he did will remain, blessing those who follow on. May God keep us true and faithful.

BEYOND THE ROCKIES.

INTERESTING MEETINGS.

SPRAGUE, Washington, May 30, 1895.

The Tabernacle meeting at Mondovi was a success in every respect. The results will reach to eternity. There were in all seventeen saved, and twenty-one added to the church, with more to follow. Quite a number were still seeking salvation. Sabbath the 26th was a day long to be remembered. The clouds began to disperse, and the weather proved all that could be desired. We preached at eleven on the Bible versus Infidelity. Three promising young men accepted the truth and gave themselves to God. We next took a collection amounting to $24, for the expenses of the meeting. I requested the people to meet at

CORRESPONDENCE.

WAR UNJUSTIFIABLE.

AN OPEN LETTER TO REV. A. S REED.

MY DEAR BRO —It is with no other feelings than personal kindness and, I trust, a due regard to the honor of Christ, that I send you this criticism on the meeting and sermon in the First Congregational church, last Sabbath night. I feel constrained to say that I was much pained at some things you said and especially at some things you did not say.

To my mind, such a meeting, under the auspices of a Christian church, was uncalled for and injurious to the cause of Christianity. Its special object was to glorify a secret society, which, notwithstanding the many excellent men it includes, is manifestly used to endorse and encourage that great net-work of secret orders which honeycombs the entire frame-work of civil society. It is used also, I believe, to secure undeserved and fraudulent pensions. Our pension appropriations exceed in amount the cost of the largest military establishments of Europe—an average tax of $11 per annum to each voter in the nation. This would be cheerfully borne were it not that many pensions are obtained by fraud.

You may not have been aware that in your congregation were two active, efficient business men, who are drawing pensions for total disability This palpable fraud is with the full knowledge and consent of the G. A. R. post of this city. Similar frauds are practiced elsewhere, and, it is believed, with the connivance of the G. A. R Its influence on the religious character of its members is most deplorable. Some have made shipwreck of their faith.

This glorification of a military organization tends to promote the military spirit, and to postpone the times when "men shall learn war no more." I fear you have never duly considered the nature and tendency of war—it horrid cruelties, its dreadful demoralizing powers, and its direct antagonism to both the letter and spirit of the Gospel You assume that "war is a necessity." This is an assumption that remains to be proved. Nothing is necessary that is wrong, and surely it is not necessary that any Christian should participate in or endorse its sinful wickedness. To tell men that war is a necessity, is to encourage them to engage in "the profession of arms," which is but another name for the profession of robbery and murder.

You doubtless did not wish to say that the fact that these men had fought for their country entitled them to special consideration from God, but many of them think so, and would be likely to draw that conclusion from your remarks.

I thought you greatly misrepresented the Bible when you said of it repeatedly, that "it is a book of war—a book of blood." This is one of those half truths which, standing alone, are the equivalent of a lie. You could with the same propriety say "the Bible is a book of sin and shame." It is true that the Bible tells of war and blood, and sin and shame, but always calls them evil—never calls them good. It points out the disease and declares the remedy. When the Prince of Peace shall have accomplished his work, then will be neither war nor blood. You were, to say the least, most unfortunate in your failure to make any discrimination in the failure of moral and physical warfare. The former is always enjoined as the duty we owe to God and to each other. The latter is nowhere sanctioned in the New Testament, but is everywhere prohibited by Christ and his apostles. This prohibition is enforced by their example, in which there is not a single instance in which physical warfare was resorted to that our Lord did not rebuke. So great was this abhorrence of war, that for 300 years the early church held it to be incompatible with Christianity.

Equally unfortunate was the use you made of Paul's moral warfare as an endorsement of physical strife. You called him a "scarred and veteran warrior." When did he, after his conversion, ever engage in physical war? His sole experience in that line was when he persecuted the church. Of this he deeply repented. For this, he counted himself "the chief of sinners." His only scars come through that passive endurance of injury which his Lord and ours enjoined and exemplified. How unlike the spirit of war are these admonitions to his brethren: "Dearly beloved, avenge not yourselves, but rather give place unto wrath, for it is written, vengeance is mine, I will repay, saith the Lord. Therefore if thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink, for in so doing thou shalt heap coals of fire on his head. Be not evercome of evil, but overcome evil with good." Rom. 12: 19–21.

You were probably not aware that you were doing a great wrong to many eminent Christian patriots when you said that "a Yankee that would not shoot an armed rebel is no friend to his country." Surely it did not occur to you that you were traducing such men as Wm. L. Garrison, Gerrit Smith and John G. Whittier—men who did vastly more to make emancipation possible than all the generals in the Union army. Did it never occur to you that the man you esteem an "armed rebel" may be quite unconscious of anything wrong—really just as honest and fair-minded as the man who shoots him? May he not, at most, be ignorant and honestly mistaken as to the nature of the conflict? Have you never thought it possible that this man may be a Christian brother, and that when you stab him with your bayonet you are stabbing the heart of Christ? Can you reconcile it with your sense of justice to inflict death upon the subordinates in an evil act, while the principals are sure to escape? Yet such is war, which you say, is "a necessity to Christian men."

I was specially sorry for the great mistake you made in the enumeration of the requirements of a Christian soldier. Had you limited your requirements to moral warfare, I should have little to complain of. But you did not. Your illustrations all pointed to physical war as the thing you had specially in mind. Your first requirement was that the soldier should "be sure to be on the right side." But do you not know that an enlisted soldier cannot sit in judgment as to the merits of the conflict? It often happens that both sides are in the wrong. It is almost always true that, even when the end seems just, the means used for its accomplishment are likely to be very unjust. Now, if the soldier, when called to do an un-Christian act, could, like a civil officer, resign and go home, it would be different. No; he must obey orders. He is sworn to do so. He must do so or die. Your second requisite was equally inconsistent with good sense and loyalty to Christ. You say "there must be implicit, unquestioned obedience." You cite the example of the officer who commanded his men to "jump out of a high window" when the result must be instant death. You praised the soldier who started on a run to obey. You quote from The Charge of the Light Brigade:

"Theirs not to question why,
Theirs but to do and die."

Surely in this you are quite correct; for this is doubtless the spirit and practice of war, but it is not the spirit and practice of Christianity. To God alone are we to render implicit obedience, but even he does not ask us to do this except as he appeals to our reason. "Come, let us reason together," is Jehovah's gracious invitation to men. Now I aver that no one can take an oath of absolute and unquestioned obedience to his fellowman, without an actual, though perhaps unconscious, repudiation of his covenant with God. A man may tell me to do wrong. God commands me always to do right. Who thinks for a moment that 600 men ought to ride "into the jaws of hell" because "somebody blundered." I am astonished that a minister of Christ should quote, approvingly, such an illustration of Christian warfare. And finally, let me say that "The Sermon on the Mount" contains better theology, and better ethics than "The Charge of the Light Brigade," or the usual sermons preached in honor of the men who are famous for the men they slew. I am sure that if we had more of the mind of Christ, we should be better able to tell men what they ought to hear. May God help us to be faithful and true.

REMINISCENCES—BOOKS ON SECRET SOCIETIES.

BY EZRA A. COOK.

Early in this battle with the secret empire it was seen to be very important to publish the rituals of the leading secret orders, that the people might see just what were their ceremonies and teachings; and at the Oberlin, Ohio, convention, May, 1872, it was voted that the original exposition of Masonry by Capt. Wm. Morgan should be at once reprinted. Orders were then and there taken for about 8,000 copies; the book was promptly issued, and is an exact republication of Morgan's revelation, with errors corrected, including the original preface and introduction, with illustrations added. Editions since the monument over his grave was erected, contain a cut of the monument and also of the author. Probably 50,000 copies have been sold. This publication was soon followed by a revelation of Odd-fellowship, and later by rituals of many of the minor secret orders. The accuracy of the first publications was vouched for by the authors and seceders only, and adhering members of the orders, notwithstanding the fact that they purchased hundreds of them, usually denied their accuracy, though evidence that they actually used them to confer the degrees frequently reached us. That some changes in Freemasonry were made after the Morgan revelation, was known; and it was also evident that the ceremonies were not fully detailed. A comparison of Morgan's book, with Freemasonry Illustrated or the Handbook, will show the deficiencies in the former volume referred to. While Mr. Ronayne's work, the Handbook of Freemasonry, was eagerly sought and purchased by the craft, denials of its truthfulness were common and emphatic.

The N. C. A. lecturers, as well as the editors of the Cynosure, had discovered that, from the published utterances of eminent Freemasons, abundant evidence as to the character and teachings of the order could be found. A further careful search convinced us that the ceremonies and even the ritual could thus be proved, by the most prominent adherents and exponents of the order, and many long, weary hours of the night were spent in culling the more than 300 extracts from standard Masonic publications, which are found in Freemasonry Illustrated.

Shortly after these extracts had been prepared we formed, through Bro. Stoddard and others, the acquaintance of Jacob O. Doesburg of Holland, Mich., who had for years been a member of the Grand Lodge of Michigan, Worshipful Master of two different lodges, and was also thoroughly versed in the Chapter degrees. He had recently been converted, as also the Senior Warden of the lodge of which he was Master. Arrangements were made with Mr. Doesburg to furnish the ritual of the lodge and chapter (first seven degrees); and he not only took the greatest care to have the whole perfectly accurate, but fearlessly added his affidavit that the ritual is accurate; and Frank Slooter, Senior Warden of Unity Lodge No. 191, of Holland, Mich., at the time Mr. Doesburg was Worshipful Master, also added his affidavit that the ritual given in Freemasonry Illustrated is accurate. These affidavits are printed in the front part of the book.

To this ritual President J. Blanchard added a historical sketch of Freemasonry—an introduction to the volume and a most masterly and critical analysis of each degree—this analysis to follow each degree; while we furnished the Masonic quotations. By these we sought to not only prove the teachings of the order but the ceremonies, even to the stripping, haltering and leading around the lodge room of "the poor blind candidates," and in this we had complete success.

We had not at first expected to be able thus to prove the horrible oaths and penalties of Freemasonry, but Grand Master Pierson came to our aid, in his most remarkable work, with the following title page: "Traditions of Freemasonry and its coincidence with the ancient mysteries, by A. T. C. Pierson, Past Grand Master, Past Grand High Priest, Grand Captain General of the Grand Encampment of the U. S. of A., Sovereign Grand Inspector General of the 33d." The author takes the different degrees in their order and, as indicated by the title page, shows the marked similarity between certain heathen ceremonies and that degree. Thus under the heading "Entered Apprentice Degree" we quote:

NOTE 60—"A most solemn method of confirming an oath was by placing a drawn sword across the throat of the person to whom it was administered."—Pierson's Traditions, page 35; Subject, Entered Apprentice Degree.

For the Fellow Craft degree we have:

NOTE 126.—"The throat was first cut across to let out the blood; the breast was next torn open to ascertain if there was any disease or malformation."—Pierson's Traditions; Subject, Fellow Craft Degree, page 138.

For the Master Mason's degree:

NOTE 144.—"Making a covenant was a solemn binding of each other to the performance of a mutual promise by outward ceremonies of cutting a beast in twain and passing between the parts thereof, as if they would say: Thus let it be done to him, and thus let his body be cut in two who shall break this covenant."—Pierson's Traditions; Subject, Master Mason's Degree, page 202.

These are quoted at foot of Freemasonry Illustrated, where the oaths and penalties of the degrees are given; and they give the penalty of each degree. Thus these proof notes actually form an outline exposition of the order, and conscientious readers, if non-Masons, who have rejected the testimony of seceders as of "perjured villains," are at once convinced that it is the lodgemen who have done the lying, and their denials no longer have weight with them.

But what is, in my opinion, of far greater importance, is the effect on members of the lodge. Seeing that the leading exponents of the order have thus, over their own signatures, divulged the precious secrets of the order, however unwittingly, they no longer consider their oath of secrecy binding. The following well illustrates the fact:

Soon after Freemasonry Illustrated was first issued, the Worshipful Master of a lodge in a suburban town on first opening the book commenced to openly sneer at what he read, when suddenly his eye caught the foot-note reference, and he read the proof note and followed that by reading four or five other notes that proved different lodge ceremonies, when he colored up and exclaimed: "It's all out then, is it?" He saw that Sickels, Mackey and Morris confirmed Doesburg, and it was useless for him to do any more lying; and thousands of others have thus had the padlock removed from their lips.

A bookseller sporting a Masonic jewel, when buying some books, said to me, "I know that I have sworn that I will not write, print, paint, stamp, stain, cut, carve, mark or engrave the secrets of Masonry, but the boys want the books and I buy them for them."

How to Clean Fruit.

Day by day it is proved that bacteria make the larger proportion of the air we breathe, the water we drink. Caution, however, is another matter, and belongs to all who own common sense, and it is specially required in dealing with modern dirt, which is in many cases synonymous with bacteria at their worst. The human animal is unluckily an extremely dirty one, and the fruit which has passed through the hands of the great unwashed may better never be eaten without cleansing. Street dust itself holds foul forms of dirt, and when to this is added the handling of scores of people, it is plain that these surfaces unwashed are not for any rational human stomach. Even strawberries cannot be exempt, but they must never soak. Only let water run on them, a wire basket being the best method of securing its immediate passing off. Grapes require the same treatment, but in either case only enough should be done at once for a meal.

How Deafness Often Develops In Soldiers.

In battle the auditory nerves, having been unduly excited by the firing of guns, etc., the soldier on coming out of an engagement very frequently suffers from temporary deafness, though no organic or structural disease is developed. Artisans who are engaged in boiler making become in time quite deaf from the same excitement of the auditory nerve produced by the hammering of the iron to which they are subjected, and in their case deafness becomes unfortunately chronic, the auditory nerve being destroyed.

HALF FARE TO CHATTANOOGA AND RETURN.

FOR THE EPWORTH LEAGUE CONVENTION IN JUNE.

On June 25, 26 and 27, 1895, the Monon Route will sell tickets at rate of one fare for the round trip from all points on its line to Chattanooga and return on account of the SECOND INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF THE EPWORTH LEAGUE. These rates and tickets will be open to all. Tickets will be limited to return fifteen days from date of sale, but can be extended fifteen days by depositing with agents of Q & C. or Nashville & Chattanooga R'ys before June 30.

A choice of routes via Cincinnati, the Blue Grass Regions of Kentucky and the mountains of Tennessee, or via Louisville and the Cave Regions of Kentucky, with side trips to Mammoth Cave at a nominal expense, makes the Monon Route the most desirable line between Chicago and Chattanooga, Tenn.

The day trains of the Monon Route both via Louisville and Cincinnati, carry parlor cars and dining cars, serving meals same as at a first-class cafe. Patrons can order what they want and need only pay for what they get.

The evening trains carry luxurious palace sleeping cars from Chicago to Cincinnati or Louisville. The sleeping car rate from Chicago to the Ohio River, or from the Ohio River to Chattanooga, is $2.00 per berth, whether occupied by one or two persons.

Parties wishing to view the mountain scenery of the South should leave Chicago on the evening trains, so as to make the trip from Cincinnati or Louisville to Chattanooga by daylight, arriving at Chattanooga for supper. Those wishing to visit Mammoth Cave should leave Chicago at 8: 32 P. M, arriving at Louisville for breakfast, and at the cave for dinner, remaining at the cave until next morning, leaving at nine o'clock, and arriving at Chattanooga for supper.

The side trip from Glasgow Junction to Mammoth Cave will cost but $1.25; hotel bill and cave fees will be very reasonable. The guides go into the cave between two and three o'clock P. M., and at eight o'clock in the evening, thus giving those who wish a chance to make two trips in the cave the same day.

Further information with time tables, maps and pamphlets, will be furnished on application to any agent of the Monon Route, or by addressing

REV. M. A. GAULT, - - - EDITOR.
WM. I. PHILLIPS, - - - PUBLISHER.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JUNE 13, 1895.

The Dean of the medical department of the Michigan University writes us, emphatically denying the story published so largely by both the secular and religious press that a student had been forced by brutal jokers to eat human flesh in the anatomical laboratory. He says that so far as he can ascertain, the story was without foundation. He gives a printed letter from the expelled student who started the report, saying that he found that he had been grossly misinformed.

An active W. C. T. U. lady writes from Nebraska that she fears for the future of that organization in the State. It is losing its influence through affiliation with secret societies. At a recent district convention she attended, the State president presided at a question box, and answered the question, Should a W. C. T. U. lady belong to a secret lodge? She said, "I belong to the Good Templars, and many of our ladies belong to the Eastern Star." The district treasurer added, "To exclude secret society members would shut out the W. R. C., and so the question was passed.

C. G. Fait, of Mononga, N. D., writes that wheat in that State can never be raised again with as little labor as in the days when the Russian thistle was unknown. The coming of this pest has increased the cost of raising wheat from twenty-five to thirty per cent. So that farmers are sowing much less wheat and turning their attention to corn, potatoes and stock-raising. Does not this fact suggest that since the wonderful growth of secret lodges in this country, which so largely absorb the vitality that should go to sustain the church of Christ, the minister's labor in saving souls has been made much more difficult. They should lend all possible assistance to aid the Christian Association, whose object is to purge the church of this soul-destroying evil.

More than ninety-five churches out of a hundred are afraid to open their pulpits for the discussion of the lodge question. Many pastors are in sympathy with the anti-secret movement, but dare not identify with it. They know that many of their members belong to the lodge, and have money, and if they are offended their support is withdrawn. The people must be a unit in order to support the pastor. They give him to understand that he must not touch this question; that his business is to preach the Gospel and save souls; and the purest Gospel in their estimation is that which does not interfere with a man's secret societies, with his politics, his business, or even his religion. Their idea of saving souls is like Francis Murphy's idea of saving drunkards, by not interfering with the saloon-keeper, but only to pledge men not to drink. It would be as rational to permit batteries to shell towns, and then try to save people by teaching them how to dodge.

We often think the only process by which reform can work in the overthrow of the lodge, is from the individual to the mass; that we must first convert the individual and he in turn will convert others, until the mass is leavened. But we must admit that God employs other methods in reforming nations. How did God convert the Israelites from the sin of idolatry? How did he reform France a century ago from the oppression of a false religious aristocracy, and Great Britain from the oppression of the American colonies, or our government from the crime of American slavery? Was it by the conversion of individuals, and these in turn making other converts? Was it not rather by war and national revolution that these governments were converted, and then their influence and power was brought to bear upon the individual? How long would it have taken the Abolitionists to abolish slavery by converting individual slave-holders? But when God by the civil war converted the nation, and its influence was brought to bear upon the individual slave-holder, the process was rapid and complete.

By the same process we believe God will convert the nation from the modern idolatry of lodge worship. The indications are that such secret organizations as Jesuitry and the American Protective Association will soon come in collision and crimson the streets of our cities with blood; and likewise the capitalistic secret forces, and the secret labor organizations are approaching a collision which will shake the nation and the world.

In the meantime all the friends of good government should double their diligence in the work of agitation, that the people when these revolutions come may know what to do. Agitation is an indispensable factor in the triumph of reform.

FORTS IN THE LOCUST GROVE.

The battle of Franklin was one of the most bloody battles of our late war. Gen. Hood, who commanded the Confederate forces, had his headquarters on a prominence overlooking the field. As he walked up and down with his artificial limb—for he had lost a limb in a former battle—he could see the line of battle and hear the booming of the cannon and the rattle of musketry. Every time he looked down the lines he saw a Federal battery in a locust grove hewing down his ranks by the hundred. Calling for one of his adjutant-generals, he ordered him to go and present his compliments to Gen. Chatham, and tell him that he asked at his hands the fort in the locust grove. The adjutant soon returned and told him that Gen. Chatham could not be found, and they feared he had fallen on the battle field. Gen. Hood saw the battery in the locust grove was making fearful havoc among his men, and again called the adjutant and directed him to present his compliments to Gen. Claiborne and tell him that he asked at his hand the fort in the locust grove. Again the adjutant loped off down the lines, and in a few moments returned and informed Gen. Hood that Gen. Claiborne was dead on the field of battle. The tears rained down Gen. Hood's face as he still saw the fort mowing down his men. He again called the adjutant, saying: ,'Go and present my love to Gen. Cockrell, and tell him I ask at his hand the fort in the locust grove." Gen. Cockrell, at the head of the First Missouri brigade, charged upon the fort and captured it.

What is illustrated by this war narative? There is a great moral conflict going on in this world between the friends of Christ and his enemies. There are many forts in the locust grove, from behind which the forces of anti-Christ are pouring their destructive fire into the ranks of the Lord's army! None of these are more destructive and dangerous than the great secret lodge system. No other evil is doing so much to paralyze the church's power. Their Christless brotherhoods, and rituals and ceremonies are closing the only door by which sinners can find access to God. They are dividing and scattering the power of God's holy people. The great Captain of our salvation has his eye upon the battlefield, and asks at our hands this fort in the locust grove. It will require resolute, brave and determined men to take it. The conflict will be desperate. But this fort must be taken and its guns silenced before Christ's cause can triumph. Brethren, who will join us in the charge upon the fort in the locust grove?

ODD-FELLOWSHIP VERSUS THE CHURCH.

J. H. Yaukey, of Fayettville, Pa., sends us his reply to a letter he received from an Odd-fellow friend to whom he had loaned "Odd-fellowship Illustrated." His friend says that Odd-fellowship is progressive and ever changing to suit the requirements; that from his knowledge acquired by being connected with the order, and which one cannot possibly get unless he is a member, he can say that very much of the criticism contained in the exposition is unfair and unjust. He offers to hand Bro. Yaukey the constitution and by-laws by which his order is governed, for his perusal.

The following is Bro. Yaukey's open letter in reply:

DEAR SIR:—Odd-fellowship has been revised and amended. This is true, but the very latest emendations are to be found in the latest edition of "Revised Odd-fellowship," which is for sale by the National Christian Association, 221 West Madison St., Chicago. The edition which I handed you, I have been assured by an adhering Odd-fellow, is correct. May I ask you what are some of the things in "Odd-fellowship Illustrated" that you claim are unfair and unjust?

Some of the teachings and principles of your order we may know by observation of your public demonstrations. When a member is buried by the order, they say he has gone to the Grand Lodge above, by which we understand heaven. No mattter whether he professed Christianity or not, or what was his character, whether profane, a drunkard or libertine, yet at his funeral service you always land him in the Grand Lodge above. Thus your public teaching is that membership in the lodge insures his salvation at death. This is contrary to the teaching of Christ, who said: "No man cometh unto the Father but by me," "There is no other name given under heaven or among men whereby we can be saved but by the name of Jesus," "He that entereth not in by the door but climbeth up some other way the same is a thief and a robber." And the New Testament closes with the warning that if any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book; and if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city.

Christ has established his church in the world to teach that there is no other way of salvation except through himself, and no other standard of morals than his law. Christ will reject any other institution that assumes to save men or set up any other standard of morals. In proportion as we desire to save souls we will love and honor the church of Christ. We will accept Christ for ourselves, and seek from him regenerated hearts and thus become fit subjects for membership in the church of the living God. If we are not true to Christ in his church, we cannot, in the best and truest sense, be successful in leading our fellow men from darkness to light. Give me the church that God has established and which Christ has purchased with his blood, in preference to any man-made institution for the salvation of men. I could give you very many reasons why I believe all secret organizations are dangerous rivals of the church of Christ. I believe any Christian greatly imperils his soul belonging to them, or any one of them.

I will read your constitution if you send it, but I know by personal observation and actual knowledge enough to forever deter me from becoming a member of any secret society. God has established three divine institutions: the family, the church and the state; and in his Word he has prescribed laws for their regulation. Men cannot improve on these Institutions. They are plants of his right hand's planting. And God's Word says, "Every plant which he hath not planted shall be rooted up."

WHO IS RESPONSIBLE?

This is a ruined soul.

This is the rum that ruined the soul.

This is the saloon-keeper who sold the rum that ruined the soul.

This is the license that permitted the saloon-keeper to sell the rum that ruined the soul.

These are the lodges that dictated the nominations of the men who signed the licenses, that permitted the saloon-keeper to sell the rum that ruined the soul.

These are the men that voted for the officials that issued the license that permitted the saloon-keeper to sell the rum that ruined the soul.

At the judgment day who will be held responsible for the drunkard's ruined soul?

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Rev. C. Powers is much encouraged as to the prospect for a good anti-secrecy convention in Jackson, Tenn., on the 17th of July next. Pray for him.

—Rev. W. T. Hogg, editor of the Free Methodist and president of Greenville College, is now on his way to Europe in quest of rest and health. The new publishing house of the Free Methodist is a model of elegance and convenience.

—Rev. S. R. McClurkin, of Fairgrove, Mich., spent several hours with us last Tuesday on his way to Denver. Ever since his college days when he took an active part in a movement against college secret societies he has been a strong friend of the anti-secret cause.

—Among the Cynosure friends who visited the office last week in passing through the city were Elder Wylie, of Fairgrove, Mich.; Rev. R. J. Gault and Elder E. F. Thompson, of Delhi, N. Y., and Elder J. H. Curry, of Bloomington, Ind.

—Pres. Wm. G. Frost, of Berea College, Ky., addressed the Congregational ministers at the Y. M. C. A. last week. He was called to this reform center of Kentucky from the Chair of Greek at Oberlin, after twenty years of erudition labor, and five years travel in foreign lands.

—Mr. L. E. Reynolds writes to Secretary Phillips of his work in Washington, D. C., where he now resides, and where his missionary labors have been fruitful in arousing the opposition of the Masons. He hopes they have been also fruitful in opening the eyes of the slaves of the lodge, and warning many who have not yet come under its power.

—Rev. J. C. McFeeters, who preached the sermon as retiring moderator at the opening of the Reformed Presbyterian Synod in Denver, Colo., last Thursday, was a welcome visitor at the Cynosure office on Tuesday the 4th. He gave the address of welcome at the State Anti-secret convention of Pennsylvania, which met in his church in Philadelphia last spring.

—Bishop Wm. Dillon, of Salem, Ore., passed through Chicago with his son last week on their return home from Ohio. He found time to stop and cheer us at the Cynosure office. He is president of the Pacific Coast National Christian Association, and was the former editor of the Conservator. Among all the denominations there are few, if any, more thoroughly devoted to the cause of anti-secrecy than Bishop Dillon.

—Rev. Henry Clay Gray, of Texas, who is associated with Secretary J. E. Roy in the work of the American Missionary Association, is now visiting Congregational churches in Wisconsin. He was a welcome caller at this office last week. He was present at the chapel exercises in Wheaton College on Thursday, and in his address to the students, said that the lodges in the South were doing for the colored people what the Catholic priesthood had done for Mexicans on our Southern border. They were destroying their spirit of enterprise, industry, intelligence and Christianity. They were ruining their manhood and self-reliance, by enabling scheming, unprincipled leaders to use them as mere tools in the lodge, and by squandering their time and money in attending lodge meetings and picnics.

CHIPS FROM THE SAME BLOCK.

THE CLAN-NA GAEL OATH.

Under this oath Dr. Cronin, of Chicago, was murdered.

"I, (name in full), do solemnly swear, in the presence of Almighty God, that I will labor, while life is left me, to establish and defend a republican form of government in Jsfmboe. That I will keep strictly secret the name and everything connected with this C'e from all not entitled to know such secrets.... That I take this obligation without any mental reservation, holding the same forever binding upon me, and that any violation thereof or desertion of my duty to the B'd. is infamous, and merits the severest punishment. So help me God."

THE MOLLIE MAGUIRE OATH.

Under this oath hundreds have been murdered in the State of Pennsylvania, including John P. Jones and Benjamin F. Yost.

"I, (name in full), having heard the objects of the order fully explained, do solemnly swear that I will, with the help of God, keep inviolably secret all the acts and things done by this order, and obey the constitution and bylaws in every respect. Should I hear a member illy spoken of, I will espouse his cause, and convey the information to him as soon as possible for me to do so. I will obey my superior officer in every thing lawful, and not otherwise. All this I do solemnly swear."

THE KU-KLUX KLAN.

Scores of white and black men of the South were murdered by this secret organization.

Statement of principles adopted by a general convention of the order at Nashville in 1867:

"1. To protect the weak, the innocent and the defenceless from the indignities, wrongs and outrages of the lawless, the violent and the brutal; to relieve the injured and the oppressed; to succor the suffering, and especially the widows and orphans of Confederate soldiers.

"2. To protect and defend the Constitution of the United States, and all laws passed in conformity thereto, and to protect the States and people thereof from all invasion from any source whatever.

"3 To aid and assist in the execution of all constitutional laws, and to protect the people from unlawful seizure, and from trial except by their peers in conformity to the laws of the land."

THE JESUIT OATH.

Under this oath the saints were murdered in the days of the Inquisition, and in Mexico and South America are still suffering secret martyrdom.

"I, (name in full), now in the presence of Almighty God, the blessed Virgin Mary, the blessed Michael the Archangel, the blessed St. John the Baptist, the holy apostles St. Peter and St. Paul, and the saints and the sacred host of heaven, and to you, my ghostly fathers, do declare from my heart, without mental reservation, that his Holiness, Pope Leo XIII., is Christ's Vicar-General, and is the true and only head of the Catholic or universal church throughout the earth; and that by virtue of the keys of binding and loosing given to his Holiness by Jesus Christ, he hath power to depose heretical kings, princes, states, commonwealths and governments, all being illegal without his sacred confirmation, and that they may safely be destroyed.... All which I do swear by the blessed Trinity and blessed sacrament which I am now to receive, to perform on my part to keep inviolably; and do call all the heavenly and glorious host of heaven to witness these my real intentions to keep this my oath."

THE MASONIC OATH.

Under this oath many have been murdered, including Sam. Pritchard, who wrote an expose of Masonry in 1730; Wm. Miller, of Belfast, Ireland; and in this country, Wm. Morgan, of Batavia, N. Y.; Noah Smith, of Manchester, Vt.; Wm. Michnor, of Jenkinstown, Pa.; Ariel Murdock, Loring Simonds, Oliver Gavit, David Brownlee, and others.

"I, (name in full), of my own free will and accord, in the presence of Almighty God and this worshipful lodge, erected to him and dedicated to the holy Saints John, do hereby and hereon (here the Master places his right hand on that of the candidate) most solemnly and sincerely promise and swear that I will always hail, ever conceal and never reveal any of the secret arts, parts or points of the hidden mysteries of Ancient Freemasonry, which have been heretofore, may at this time, or shall at any future period be communicated to me as such, to any person or persons whomsoever, except it be to a true and lawful brother Mason, or within a regularly constituted lodge of Masons, and neither unto him nor them until by strict trial, due examination or legal information I shall have found him or them as lawfully entitled to the same as I am myself.

"I furthermore solemnly promise and swear that I will not write, print, paint, stamp, stain, cut, carve, make or engrave them, or cause the same to be done, upon anything movable or immovable, capable of receiving the least impression of a word, syllable, letter or character, whereby the same may become legible or intelligible to myself or to any person under the whole canopy of heaven, and the secrets of Freemasonry be thereby unlawfully obtained through my unworthiness.

"To all of this I most solemnly and sincerely promise and swear, with a firm and steadfast resolution, to keep and perform the same without any equivocation, mental reservation or secret evasion of mind whatever, binding myself under no less a penalty than that of having my throat cut across, my tongue torn out by its roots and buried in the rough sands of the sea at low water mark, where the tide ebbs and flows twice in twenty-four hours, should I ever knowingly or willingly violate this my solemn oath or obligation as an Entered Apprentice Mason. So help me God, and keep me steadfast in the due performance of the same."

The seceders are now so numerous that the lodge does not dare to kill every one. Among these are the following named gentlemen, living witnesses of the truthfulness of the exposes of the secrets of Freemasonry. They are men well and widely known: E. Ronayne, 104 Milton Ave., Chicago; Dr. J. O. Doesburg, Holland, Mich.; Rev. A. G. Johnson, Huntingdon, Ind.; John Sutcliffe, Wheaton, Ill.; Rev. Stephen Merritt, 210 8th Ave., New York City; E. T. McIntire, 110 Bower St., Boston.

the Tabernacle promptly at seven for an altar service before the address on the lodge question.

At the appointed time, the large tent was comfortably filled. Fourteen came forward for prayers, eleven were saved, and seven united with the church. Then I started in on the lodge subject at nine o'clock. The people sat and listened with marked interest till after ten o'clock. And when they were dismissed they seemed loth to leave the place. I secured here twenty subscriptions to the Cynosure, and five to the Lodge Lamp.

Monday the 27th Father Kenoyer brought me to Reardon where I took the train for Spokane. Rev. F. W. Cathey, of the Free Methodist church, met me at the train and took excellent care of me. I spoke at night in his hall to a small congregation. They appreciated the address. Some signed our constitution, and one took the Cynosure. Bro. Cathey is doing a good work in Spokane. He goes on the streets every Sabbath evening and speaks to hundreds of people. Some who enter no church get to hear the pure Gospel truth in this way. May the Lord bless him.

The next day I had an opportunity to look over the city. I visited the Spokesman Review building. The manager took me all through it. When we got to the dome we had a fine view of the entire city.

On the 28th I ran down to Tyler and spoke to a good audience in the Free Methodist church, Rev. E. W. Achilles, pastor. He is a true man of God, and will succeed here. I am sure he is building up the church on the right foundation. Four took the Cynosure A few signed the constitution, nearly all having signed it before under Rev Jas. C. Scott's labors. Bro. R M. Hale is a merchant at this point, who will neither sell tobacco, cigars or cigarettes. He also gave up the postoffice because it required him to open it on the Sabbath. I wish we had many more such business men. I am now at Sprague waiting for a conveyance out to Rock Lake camp. If we cannot get into some of the cities, we can draw many of their people out to hear us in the tent.

P. B. WILLIAMS.

SUNSHINE AND CLOUD.

SEATTLE, Washington, May 25, 1895.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—I heard Rev. P. B. Williams, your Pacific Coast agent, lecture twice in this section—once in the city and once just outside of the city, and I most heartily and cordially endorse his method of handling the secrecy question. His arraignment of secret societies as to the falsity of its boasts, and promises that it does not interfere with a man's duties to his family, his country or his God, and his arguments and array of facts sustaining his well formulated charges are convincing and unanswerable.

He is doing a splendid and a supremely important work and needs and deserves the financial support which cannot be secured on this lodge-ridden Pacific Coast Many of the so-called anti-secrecy churches and their diletante preachers of this coast are of no earthly service to the anti-secrecy cause. But the Norwegian, Danish, Swedish and German Evangelical Lutheran churches are uncompromising in their opposition to secrecy and may be depended upon at any time to furnish an appreciative congregation.

A WICKED PRACTICE.

SWEARING A PREVALENT VICE AMONG AMERICANS.

From the Highest to the Humblest There Is Shameless Guilt In This Matter—Five Reasons Why God's Name Should Not Be Used In Vain.

At the Bloomingdale Reformed church Sunday, June 23, Rev. Madison C. Peters chose for his topic "America's Popular Sin." The preacher's text was Exodus xx, 7, "Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain, for the Lord will not hold him guiltless that taketh his name in vain." The preacher said:

A traveler in Russia was judged to be a clergyman because he was not heard to swear, all other Americans being supposed to be addicted to this wicked practice. After Dr. Scudder's return from India he heard a person using profane language in the presence of his son, and accosting the swearer the great missionary said, "This boy was born and brought up in a heathen land, but in all his life he never heard a man blaspheme his Maker until now." The man apologized and moved away ashamed. This vice has become so prevalent as to deserve the distinction of being called a national characteristic.

Its Brazen Impudence.

This vice flaunts itself before us with brazen impudence. The slanderer slyly watches for an open ear and enjoins secrecy, the thief is too cunning to steal in the presence of witnesses, the lecherous man crawls to the house of shame after dark, but men swear publicly, boldly and undauntedly.

Now we have five reasons why the name of God should not be used in vain:

First.—It is useless. Will swearing pay? Is it a real value in character? Does it deepen confidence? Why should an honorable man have to add oaths to confirm his word? Does swearing recommend a merchant's goods? Where is the foreman or superintendent who acquired control over and respect of his workmen through profanity? Does it aid the physician in forming a more correct diagnosis? Does it enlarge a lawyer's practice or better analyze his cases? Did curses ever take the meanness out of a customer? Did they ever collect a bad debt? Did they ever accomplish anything?

Second.—It is cowardly. There was once a man who swore dreadfully in the presence of others, but was rebuked by a gentleman, who told him that it was cowardly for him to do in the presence of others that which he did not dare to by himself. "Ah," said the man, "I am not afraid to swear at any time or in any place." "I'll give you $10," said the gentleman, "if you will go in the village graveyard at 12 o'clock tonight and utter the same oaths you have just uttered here when you are alone with God." "Agreed," said the man. "It's an easy way of earning $10." "Well, you come to me tomorrow and say that you have done it, and the money is yours." He was impatient for the midnight hour. When the time came, he hurried to the graveyard. Darkness and silence were brooding like spirits o'er the still and pulseless world. Beneath him the many dead, above him pitch darkness. The words, "alone with God," came over him with mighty power. A deep sense of his monstrous folly and heinous wickedness fell upon him like the sudden pealing thunder of the midnight storm. His further endeavors were thwarted by the Invisible One. He could go no further. Instead of carrying out his purpose, acting rudely and saucily with God; instead of blistering his mouth with hot and sulphurous oaths, he was humbled and, trembling, cried with a loud voice, "God be merciful to me, a sinner." The next day he went to the gentleman and thanked him for what he had done and said he had resolved never to swear another oath as long as he lived.

Third.—It is impolite. I am reminded of that incident of Abraham Lincoln, who said to a person sent to him by one of the senators, and who in conversation uttered an oath: "I thought the senator had sent me a gentleman. I see I was mistaken. There is the door, and I bid you good day."

Profanity indicates low breeding. It detracts from the grace of conversation. It is an evidence of a weak brain and limited ideas.

Fourth.—Swearing is wicked. It springs from a mere malignancy of spirit in man against God, because he has forbidden it. As far as the violation of the command of God is concerned the swearer is equally guilty with the murderer, the unchaste person, the robber and the liar. Whose is this name which men roll off the lips of blasphemy as though they were speaking of some low vagabond. God! God! God! Yes, men swear by the name of God. God! in whose presence the highest and purest seraphim veil their faces and cry in notes responsive to each other: Holy! Holy! Holy! Lord God of Hosts!

Fifth.—Swearing is dangerous. The third commandment is the only one in the decalogue to which is affixed the certainty of punishment, "For the Lord will not hold him guiltless that taketh his name in vain." It was a capital offense under the Levitical law (Leviticus xx, 10). The New Testament reiterates in paragraph after paragraph and chapter after chapter that profane swearers are accursed now and are to be forever miserable.

An Eternal Echo.

The oaths that you utter may die on the air, but God hears them, and they have an eternal echo. I beseech you, I conjure you, break off this useless, impolite, cowardly, wicked and dangerous habit ere the brittle thread of life breaks and you are plunged into eternal misery. Oh, let your oaths be turned into supplications! Swearer, can you ever again blaspheme such a God and Saviour as this? Does not your conscience cry, God forbid? Even so. Amen.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic For the Week Beginning June 16. Comment by Rev. S. H. Doyle.

TOPIC.—The proof of our allegiance to Christ.—I John, iv, 1-21.

In this chapter John warns his readers against false teachers and gives them tests by which they may distinguish between the true and the false. These tests may not only apply to others, but to ourselves, and in their light we may learn whether we are in God and may judge of our allegiance to Christ.

The first and most important test to be applied was confession that Jesus Christ had come in the flesh (verses 2, 3). "Every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God, and every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is not of God."

Confession of the incarnation of Christ is thus made a test of true discipleship. This confession would, of course, be based upon a belief in it. Belief in and confession of the incarnation of Christ, or practically His divinity, may also be made a test of our loyalty to Christ. Do we believe this? It should not be difficult of belief. God testifies to it. The words, actions and character of Christ all go to prove it. If we believe it, we should also confess it, and if we believe and confess it this is the proof that the spirit of God dwells in us, and that we are the children of God.

Another test suggested is obedience to the word of God (verse 6), "He that knoweth God heareth us; he that is not of God heareth us not." The apostle spoke for God, and in hearing him they heard God. God speaks to us in all His word. If we hear and obey, this is another proof that we are of God and loyal to Christ. Christ himself makes obedience to His commands a test of our love and loyalty, for He says, "If ye love me, keep My commandments." Obedience is here made the test of our love. Do we then hear the word of God, no matter in what form it comes? Do we obey it? "Not every one that sayeth unto Christ. 'Lord. Lord.' shall inherit the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of his Father in heaven." The true child of God hears word and obeys it. If we do this, it is another proof of our allegiance to Christ; if we do not, a proof of our disloyalty.

Another test given is brotherly love (verse 12), "If we love one another, God dwelleth in us, and His love is perfected in us." Brotherly love is thus made a test of the indwelling of God. Do we love one another? Do we love the brethren? Do we love all men? And do we express it by trying to help, uplift and elevate them? Are we sacrificing for them? Are we bearing their burdens? This is practical brotherly love and the kind that Christ manifested toward all men and the kind that proves our likeness and loyalty to Him.

Bible Readings.—Ps. i, 2; Math. vii, 16-23; xii, 33; xxii, 35-40; Mark viii, 27-29; John viii, 47; x, 27; xiii, 35-38; xiv, 15-21; xv, 10; Rom. viii, 14-17; II Cor. i, 20-22; v, 5; x, 7; Gal. ii, 20; v, 16-18; Eph. i, 13, 14; Col. i, 9-12; I John ii, 3-6; iii, 9, 10, 24; v, 1-3.

Christians, Look Upward!

Christians, it is upward that you must look for light and strength. The tempests may beat against you; men may reject you; prejudice, jealousy and malice may league against you; slander may cast its poisoned dart at your feet, and you may hear the stinging hisses of bitter calumny. All this may well cause you to suffer, for it is inexpressibly bitter to feel one's self misunderstood, misjudged, and for a heart longing for sympathy this isolation is full of anguish and often of terror. But you must endure, and above the gloom of the present hour, with eyes turned heavenward, you will see Him who is invisible and whose love will never fail you.—Rev. Eugene Bersier.

Proved Its Worth by Good Work.

A true Christian Endeavor society, loyal to its own church, will do more to discourage criticism of the movement than anything else. We have just heard of a pastor in Wisconsin who, upon coming to a new church a year ago, roundly denounced Christian Endeavor. The society in his new charge, however, did such noble service during the year that on Endeavor day he came out with a strong Christian Endeavor address, in which he gave warmest praise to the work and workers.—Golden Rule.

Cumberland Presbyterian Pin.

Cumberland Presbyterians now have a distinctive Christian Endeavor pin made for them by the United Society of Christian Endeavor. This is the same as the ordinary pin, with the exception that the monogram includes the letters "C. P." In this way Cumberland Presbyterian Endeavorers will be able everywhere to recognize one another.—Exchange.

Japanese Mission Fund.

The Japan Christian Endeavor missionary fund of the Reformed church in the United States has now reached the sum of $1,520 the greater part of which is in annual shares, which the societies agree to pay every year.

The Night Wanes.

Watch! For the night is coming!
Morn holds her gates ajar,
Light on the gloom is stealing,
Watch for the Morning Star.

Wait! Till with golden banners
Hung on the glowing sky,
Gleams with celestial brightness,
The Dayspring from on high.

Hope! For the working shadows
E'en now are on the wing.
Hope! The Sun of righteousness,
The glory day will bring.

Pray! Lest the wily tempter
Woo thee to careless sleep!
Day must succeed this twilight.
Yield not, but vigil keep.

Watch for the Lord's appearing!
Wait for His welcome call!
Hope for the glorious rapture!
Wait for the tempter's fall!

What She Will Be.

There is one woman in New York who looks for the new woman to be a person with both eyes wide open and her eyeteeth cut, figuratively speaking, and her mental and moral digestion as good as her physical digestion needs to be in order to live at all. From her knowledge of life I look for her to evolve a philosophy, an optimism and a sentiment that can carry self reliance to others, even as she divines it for herself. It has been a comparatively simple matter for women, shielded as they have been in the home, to propound theories and worship their ideals and have the worship all by themselves without knowing it. The new woman must learn conditions, and then her theories will be less ethereal and therefore more practical and sympathetic. A woman's theory founded on an ideal is the most absurd thing in the world. The feminine mind is capable of great optimism and therefore of the purest sentiment. When condition finds it worth while to live up to theory that is founded on truth and not on the ideal, as it certainly must in time not far hence, we shall have a truer, better status of society. It will be the era of the new woman.—Haryot Holt Cahoon in New York Recorder.

A Summer Parlor.

The artistic mistress of an old fashioned house has recently arranged a summer parlor so prettily that a description may incite others to go and do likewise. The porch, which was a very broad one, ran under the drawing room windows, one of which she had cut to the floor, and by taking off the "trim" made it wide enough for two glass doors to open out on the veranda, the end of which she inclosed with wire netting. This made quite a room, which she proceeded to furnish all in blue and white. The floor she covered with white matting and blue and white jute rugs. The divan she upholstered in the way described, but as she could not find canvas with the designs and coloring to suit her she took unbleached sheeting, and with a pot of prussian blue painted a conventional delft pattern, carrying out the idea in the cushions, which she boldly decorated with prussian blue Dutch landscapes on the unbleached sheeting, a quaint old set of plates serving as models. Two wrought iron standard lamps had blue and white shades. A white table for periodicals, a couple of white wicker easy chairs, with blue and white cushions, and four big blue and white flowerpots, with tall plants, completed the furniture of one of the prettiest little outdoor rooms imaginable.—New York Tribune.

New York's Woman's Building.

Work has begun on the Woman's building to be erected in New York. The house, which is to be for the exclusive use of women, will be very handsome and fitted up with every luxury. In the basement, baths, hair dressing rooms, manicure shops, etc., are to be located. Club, reading and assembly rooms, as well as library, offices and a restaurant, will occupy the first floor. The upper floors are to be divided into apartments, single rooms and suits. The building will cost $750,000.

COUNTRY HOUSE TABLE.

A Useful and Pretty Article That Can Be Made In Many Styles at Small Cost.

A charitable woman, who uses her artistic talents for the benefit of others, utilized her Lenten leisure this year in making tables for country houses, which she has placed for sale at the woman's exchanges, and which are so pretty and dainty that a description may be welcome. They are of various shapes and colors and are entirely covered with linen. The blue denim ones, trimmed with white braid, resembling the blue and white delft which is the latest popular fad in china, are perhaps the prettiest, although the rose or yellow duck are lovely with certain colorings.

All white ones are also very effective, trimmed with blue and white braid and tassels, also touched with blue, with blue nails, the latter being covered with fine Bolton cloth. The white linen braid and tassels may be made to match the material by working in cotton of the same color as the covering. The sketch represents a tall table for a palm pot. The low tea tables may be made after the same design; the legs may be either round or square. Old rose linen, white linen braid, white buttons of Bolton cloth and a design embroidered in white cotton on top are the materials used in this table.

Dainty Toilet Accessories.

Turnover collars and cuffs of sheerest white swiss, tucked with insertions of yellow valenciennes lace, and narrow frills of the same lace are much worn with dark costumes. The effect is pretty and dressy. Swiss can be bought by the yard, all ready to be converted into these modish accessories. The same combination of sheer material and yellow lace can be bought by the yard, wide enough to make the full vests which are a feature of this season's styles.

Double box plaited ruches of wide, satin striped grenadine ribbons threaten to supersede feather boas for warm season's wear at least. These ruches can be made at home, or can be purchased by the yard, an advantage, since those sold in the stores are frequently too short. The grenadine ribbons keep their semi-stiffness, are as becoming as the feather boa, afford a light protection for the neck in case of draft and do not get that draggled and utterly dejected look common to feathers exposed to dampness.

Yokes made of Dresden ribbons, cut in star shape, the points outlined with frills of beurre colored lace, with English eyelet holes and a deep net top, are new and pretty.—Philadelphia Times.

Variety the Word.

The chief characteristics of fashion's present charming show are its infinite variety, its designs, colorings and endless phases, affording an almost unlimited choice of models suited to special peculiarity of face, form or feature. Liberty reigns supreme, and the great dictator in dress is no longer a despot. On the contrary, the fiats of fashion are now very often vetoed, and personal choice and individuality in gowning are everywhere apparent. This was notably shown in the putting down of crinoline proper two years ago. It is, however, again making very unmistakable bids for favor, and it is to be hoped that it will again meet its former fate. Consistence is another characteristic that is receiving especial attention, and gowns and garnitures, jewels and laces appropriate to their own particular time and place appear, the entire costume in perfect accord both with the hour, the occasion and its wearer's surroundings in life. It is also perfect in small details, from the crown of the wearer's bonnet to the tip of her dainty shoe.—New York Post.

A Worker In the Tenements.

Mrs. Lillian W. Betts, whose editorial and miscellaneous work on The Outlook is well known to a large circle of readers, is still a young woman, slight of figure, mentally and physically active and alert and deeply interested in the benevolent enterprises of New York. The causes of the working girl and of the dwellers in tenement houses are especially dear to her, and for these she toils and writes unceasingly. A vacation home in the country for poor girls, recently opened, is largely the result of her determined effort.

A Plucky Bride.

All the world loves a lover, even a soulless board of education. That stolid body in Atlanta has reinstated Miss Laura Morgan, one of the principals of the Girls' High school in that city, whose position was forfeited by marrying her sick lover to nurse him. In addition the bride has been granted one month's leave of absence, with full pay, to enjoy her honeymoon. All honor and praise to the gallant board!—Exchange.

An Able Woman.

Mrs. Schuyler Van Rensselaer is to be a member of the New York school board, by appointment of the mayor. Mrs. Van Rensselaer has been a conspicuous opponent of equal rights for women; but, like some of our most prominent Massachusetts "remonstrants," she has no objection to holding public office herself. She is an able woman and will be an acquisition to the school board. Her experiences as a member of it may convert her to woman suffrage.—Woman's Journal.

Michigan Women School Officials.

Among the women just elected as county school commissioners in Michigan are Julia A. Inglis, Sterling, Arenac county; Emma Sherman, Newbury, Luce county; Flora Beadley, Hastings, Barry county; Mrs. D. E. W. Hall, Manistee, Manistee county; Mary McKenzie, Ludington, Mason county; Melinda L. Mills, Midland, Midland county; Cora M. Goodenow, Berlin, Ottawa county.

She Is an Expert.

Several of the departments of the leading mercantile houses in New York city employ woman buyers. Their discrimination in regard to style and effect makes them invaluable employees. Mrs. Jeannot, the buyer of notions and novelties for a large Broadway firm, is a connoisseur and expert in her chosen vocation.

Proved Her Worth.

The woman who was business manager of the women's edition of the Cleveland Plain Dealer showed such remarkable business ability that she has been offered and accepted the position of advertising agent on a big daily, with a splendid salary, and is doing work required in a satisfactory manner.

It isn't called "women's rights" or "women's suffrage" any more. It is "equal rights" in the new parlance.

When putting away furs, fold them with the fur side out.

ABSTAINERS AND DRINKERS.

Chances of Long Life Are Very Much In Favor of the Teetotaler.

A noted statistician of England, after long and careful investigations, comparisons and observations, has established the following facts, published in the New York Witness some time ago:

Between the ages of 15 and 20, where 10 total abstainers die, 18 moderate drinkers die. Between the ages of 20 and 30, 10 of the former and 31 of the latter. Between 30 and 40 years, 40 moderate drinkers to 10 abstainers die.

That is, a total abstainer 20 years old has a fair chance of living 44 years longer; a moderate drinker has a chance of living only 15½ years longer.

At 30 years a total abstainer has a chance of living 36½ years longer, a moderate drinker at the same age only 13½ years.

At 40 a total abstainer has a chance of living 28 years more, and a moderate drinker only 11⅔.

We may talk and write as eloquently as we will about the "$1,500,000,000" annually spent in our own nation for intoxicating liquors, but half the truth is not told unless we add the actual money value of the wasted mental and physical resources of thousands of otherwise noble and useful citizens destroyed by that insidious enemy of man—moderation.

DISTRUST OF DRINKING MEN.

Total Abstainers In Demand For Places of Responsibility and Trust.

Recently a chairman of a hospital board refused to confirm the appointment of a noted physician on the staff of the hospital because it was found that he was a moderate and continuous drinker. He gave as a reason that his pecuniary interests had always suffered when placed in the care of drinkers, and he could not consistently vote to give larger and more sacred responsibilities to the care of similar persons.

This sentiment distinctly outlines the growing conviction in all business circles, outside of moral considerations or theories.

Within a few years a great change has taken place in all the eastern cities concerning the competency of men who use spirits. The manufacturer, the jobber and the retailer, and even the distiller, brewer and retail liquor dealer, demand total abstainers to do their work. This is seen in the Business Men's Moderation society, where pledges are taken not to use spirits or any strong drinks until after business hours. On the great ocean steamers total abstinence was the rule when at sea, but recently several large companies have enforced rigid laws, making it part of the officer's qualifications that he be a total abstainer. Should he be seen drinking anywhere on duty or off duty he is to be discharged at once. The mayor of an eastern city announced to the common council in his first message that he would oppose every nomination of officials who were not total abstainers. He also said that for years he had refused to employ drinking men in his business, and the public was entitled to the same careful service. These examples are increasing yearly in every part of the country and are above all sentiment and are simply the dictates of bitter experiences and facts that have only one meaning.—Lancet Clinic.

Why Drunkards See Double.

The reason that a man sees double who has gazed too long on the wine when it is red is that the nerve centers are changed by the action of the alcoholic poison. There is a want of harmony in the action of the muscles which move the eyeballs. Consequently instead of both eyes being focused simultaneously on an object, one eye receives an impression independently of the other. The two impressions are communicated to the brain, and the object is seen twice. The inflamed condition of and loss of energy in the brain centers from overdoses of alcohol also account for the staggering gait of an intoxicated man.—New York World.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON XII, SECOND QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, JUNE 23.

Text of the Lesson, Luke xxiv, 44-53 (Missionary Lesson)—Memory Verses, 45-47. Golden Text, Math. xxviii, 19—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

44. "And He said unto them, These are the words which I spake unto you while I was yet with you, that all things must be fulfilled which were written in the law of Moses and in the prophets and in the Psalms concerning me." This was on the evening of the resurrection day, after the two returned from Emmaus and were telling the gathered disciples what they had seen. Jesus Himself was suddenly in their midst, showed them His hands and feet and ate fish and honeycomb before them, then spoke as in this verse. After the resurrection, as before when He was with them in His mortal body, He insisted that the Scriptures must be fulfilled. He included all Scripture, the law, the prophets, and the Psalms, and never even hinted at the possibility of any portion being fallible or unreliable. He also added that all Scripture concerned Himself. He is the Alpha and the Omega, the beginning and end of all the book and of every part of it.

45. "Then opened He their understanding, that they might understand the Scriptures." Without a knowledge of the Scriptures which He expounded (the Old Testament) we cannot understand the New Testament, for the story of each is "the kingdom" yet to be set up, with Israel, all holy, as its center, Jerusalem their capital and Jesus of Nazareth their King, but the beginning of the story is in the law, the prophets and the Psalms. The Spirit who wrote the book is dwelling in every true believer, ready to guide the humble and teachable into all truth and to open all eyes that are willing to be opened, but mere human wisdom can never help any one to know or understand a book which came from heaven, and which is forever settled in heaven (I Cor. ii, 14).

46. "And said unto them, Thus it is written, and thus it behooved Christ to suffer and to rise from the dead the third day." See how He continues to call attention to what is written, and to the necessity of His fulfilling all that was written, for He came to fulfill all righteousness. Whatever of Scripture has not yet been fulfilled will surely be fulfilled, for the mouth of the Lord has spoken it. They did not believe that He would die and rise again, although the Book plainly foretold it, as in Ps. xvi, 10; Isa. liii, 9, 10. With a similar hardening of heart many of His professed followers will not now believe that He is coming again for Israel's conversion and to establish His kingdom. But He will come (Isa. xxv, 8, 9; xl, 10; lxvi, 15, 16; Zach. xiv, 3, 4, 9).

47. "And that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in His name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem." It is not for us to know the times and the seasons when this kingdom shall be restored to Israel (Acts i, 6, 7), but it is the privilege of every believer to do somewhat to proclaim through all the world the forgiveness of sins, through Jesus Christ and by virtue of His finished work (Acts xiii, 38, 39). The glad tidings are to be made known to every creature (Mark xvi, 15), so that the elect church, the future rulers of this world, may be gathered out of all nations (Acts xv, 14).

48. "And ye are witnesses of these things." And so also is the Holy Spirit whom God hath given to them that obey Him (Acts v, 32). Angels would gladly bear the tidings, as they did at His birth (Luke ii, 9, 10, 13), and as an angel will do again (Rev. xiv, 6), but the high honor is given to weak and unworthy mortals who have been redeemed by precious blood to tell it out to others to earth's utmost bound. The cry from Father, Son and Holy Spirit still is, "Whom shall I send and who will go for us?" Let many a willing heart say, "Here am I; send me" (Isa. vi, 8), and His command will quickly come to every one who is willing and ready to be a faithful witness. "Go and tell" (Isa. vi, 9; Math. xxviii, 7, 10).

49. "And behold I send the promise of my Father upon you, but tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high." Or as in Acts i, 8, "Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you, and ye shall be witness unto me." They had been with the best teacher that ever lived for two or three years, and yet were not thus qualified for service, for in addition to knowledge there must be power. Fuel is not sufficient to warm one; there must be fire. There is power in gunpowder and in dynamite, but something must make it manifest. These men were truly saved, but the Spirit must take control of them specially for service.

50. "And He led them out as far as to Bethany, and He lifted up His hands and blessed them." The R. V. says "until over against Bethany." It is always blessed to follow where He leadeth. When He putteth forth His sheep He goeth before them. But we must not forget that at one time He was led by the Spirit into the wilderness to be tempted of the devil (Luke iv, 1, 2), and at the end of His ministry He was led as a lamb to the slaughter (Isa. liii, 7). The disciple is not above his Master, and a faithful witness must fear nothing, not even death (Math. x, 28).

51. "And it came to pass, while he blessed them, he was parted from them and carried up into heaven." In Acts i, 9, it is written that "a cloud received Him out of their sight." So the last they saw of Him was with hands outstretched in blessing. What words He used we are not told, but it may have been the benediction of Num. vi, 24-26. Anyway it was the blessing of the Lord which maketh rich, and to which toil addeth nothing (Prov. x, 22, R. V., margin). He had given them His peace, and His joy, and all the glory which the Father had given unto Him (John xiv, 27; xv, 11; xvii, 22), and now He adds that He will be with them all the days until the end of the age (Math. xxviii, 20, R. V., margin). Their only business was to abide on earth wholly for His pleasure.

52. "And they worshiped Him and returned to Jerusalem with great joy." When they were so saddened by His death, how could they be so happy now that they actually saw Him ascend up to heaven, and the kingdom had not come, and He had not told them when it would come. The answer to this must be found in the testimony of the two angels whom He sent back to comfort them. See Acts i, 11, and believe every word of it for yourself just as it is written.

53. "And were continually in the temple praising and blessing God. Amen." May our days begin and end with praising and blessing God and our hearts keep singing, "I will bless the Lord at all times" (Ps. xxxiv, 1). He shall not fail nor be discouraged. He shall see of the travail of His soul and shall be satisfied (Isa. xlii, 4; liii, 11). We have only to dwell with Him for His work, and let Him work in us both to will and to do the things which are pleasing in His sight (I Chron. iv, 23; Phil. ii, 13; Heb. xiii, 21).

GUESSERS WERE OFF.

NEW ATTORNEY GENERAL WAS NOT ON THE LIST

Of Those Who Do the Guessing for the Newspapers—Judson Harmon, of Cincinnati, Appointed—Olney Named for Secretary of State.

WASHINGTON, June 8.—The president late yesterday afternoon announced the following cabinet appointments: For secretary of state, Richard J. Olney, of Massachusetts; for attorney general, Judson Harmon, of Cincinnati. Harmon has been for a long time judge of the common pleas court, and is a man of about 50 years of age, one of the most conspicuous lawyers in the west. Upon the retirement of ex-Governor Hoadley from his Cincinnati firm upon his removal to New York, Harmon took his place at the head of the firm of Harmon, Colston, Goldsmith & Hoadley, the last named being a son of ex-Governor Hoadley, of Ohio.

Cincinnatians Highly Elated.

A dispatch from Cincinnati indicates that the appointment is very popular in that city. The telegram says: "When the appointment of Judge Judson Harmon became known here attorneys from the courts and offices rushed to the office of Harmon, Colston, Goldsmith & Hoadley to congratulate the new attorney general and ask for a date for a farewell dinner from the bar. Judge Harmon said he had received a letter from President Cleveland yesterday and replied to it by wire. He went to Columbus last night on personal business and does not know when he will go to Washington. Judge Harmon is not only recognized as one of the foremost lawyers and jurists of this state, but as one of the most popular citizens.

One of the Men Who "Greeleyized."

"He was born near this city 49 years ago, has always lived here, and is known by all. His father, Rev. B. F. Harmon, was a Baptist minister, well-known throughout the Ohio valley. Judge Harmon was graduated at Dennison university, a Baptist institution at Granville, O., in 1866, and began the practice of law in Cincinnati in 1869. He was a Republican till 1872, when he "Greeleyized." He was elected superior judge in 1878, re-elected in 1883, and when ex-Governor George Hoadley went to New York in 1887 Judge Harmon resigned from the bench to become the head of the firm of Harmon, Colston, Goldsmith & Hoadley, which represents several railways and other large corporations, and with which firm he will continue his connection.

Social Phase of the Appointment.

"When Judge Harmon resigned in 1887 Governor Foraker appointed Judge William Taft, now United States circuit judge, and formerly solicitor general, to the vacancy. Mrs. Harmon is an accomplished lady, the daughter of the late Dr. Scobey, of Hamilton. They have three daughters, Mrs. Edman Wright, Jr., of Philadelphia; Miss Elizabeth, a recognized society leader, and Marjoria, the youngest of the family, who is 14 years old."

The announcement of the transfer of Attorney General Olney to the head of the state department created no surprise here, as it has been well understood for several days that Olney would succeed Secretary Gresham. The appointment of Judge Judson Harmon as attorney general, however, came in the nature of a surprise. His name had not even been canvassed as among the probabilities.

CONFIDENCE REMAINS UNABATED.

Outlook in the World of Trade, According to Bradstreet's.

NEW YORK, June 8.—Bradstreet's says: The speculative spirit which seemed to dominate both commercial and financial circles until within a week or ten days past is still less conspicuous in all lines. Demand for staple goods in a number of instances is smaller, notably at Boston, Pittsburg, Chicago and Kansas City, particularly in dry goods, demand for which at first and second hands has declined, as is customary at this period. While business throughout the country may, therefore, be characterized as quieter, the tone of staple markets continues strong and confidence in a good demand when the fall season opens next month remains unabated.

The feature of the week, as heretofore, is the continued long list of advances in prices, notably those for iron and steel and the upward movement of bank clearings. Statistics show a decrease of over 17,000,000 bushels in available stocks of wheat in the United States and Canada during May. Last year we reduced stocks 1,000,000 in May, while Europe's available supplies practically stood still. Interior stocks of Russian wheat fell away 2,000,000 bushels during May. Heavier shipments of wheat to Europe, with increasing available stocks there mark the latter's confidence in the relative permanence of a higher range of prices for wheat.

Killed in the Kickapoo Rush.

GUTHRIE, O. T., June 8.—A sad seuuel to the wild rush into the Kickapoo reservation was viewed in this city, when a man named Valchester, from southwestern Kansas, drove through the city en route to his old home there, having in his wagon a coffin containing the body of his wife and 1-year-old child, who were both killed in the rush for claims at the recent opening. In the first wild dash Valchester's wagon struck a stone, was partly overturned, throwing out the wife and little one, who were trampled to death by a score or more of horses.

Cigar Firm in Trouble.

LANCASTER, Pa., June 7.—Execoutions for $46,556 have been issued against H. S. Kirk & Sons, proprietors of the Stevens cotton mills and manufacturers of cigars. It is understood that the failure is a very heavy one. In addition claims for over $3,000 have been filed, and other suits are expected to follow. Abram Hirsch, dealer in millinery, has also failed, executions having been issued against him for $22,000.

Got It Right This Time.

ST. LOUIS, June 6.—It now seems that the exact position of Archbishop Kendrick was not properly explained yesterday; that he has not been "retired," but "translated." This means, in this case, made archbishop of an extinct on non-existent see in the far east, thus allowing the aged prelate to die with his office on him, but not its duties.

Turners End Their Meeting.

KANSAS CITY, June 4.—The Turners have brought their annual meeting to a close with a grand ball last night. During the afternoon the prizes in the various contests were awarded, St. Louis carrying off most honors. The ball was kept up into the "wee sma' hours." The meeting was very successful in every respect.

Curfew Rings at Lincoln, Ills.

LINCOLN, June 8.—Under the direction of the city council the curfew is sounded each evening at 9 o'clock to warn all children under 14 years of age that it is time for them to be home, and unless accompanied by their parents, they are taken in charge by the police.

MISS FLAGG'S
LATEST NEW BOOK!
"A Prisoner of Hope."
COMPLETE IN ONE LARGE HANDSOME VOLUME.
Price, $1.25.
We heartily commend this new work, by Elizabeth E. Flagg, to all our friends. The narrative originated in her personal experience, two or three years ago, when she sought relief and restoration from the results of a painful accident, In that search she availed herself of a unique healer in New Jersey, whom she graphically described, at that time, in her weekly letters to this paper. The ideas created in her mind by that experience form the basis of this well-told story, and thoughtful readers will peruse it with interest. While all may not agree with its deductions, ministers of the Gospel, students in seminaries and intelligent home circles will find it pleasant food for thought. We sell it for $1.25 per copy, postage prepaid.

NEWS OF THE STATE.

TELEGRAPHIC REPORTS OF HAPPENINGS OF NOTE.

Work of the State Lawmakers at Springfield—Bills and Resolutions Introduced, Etc.—Other State Items of General Interest to Our Readers.

SPRINGFIELD, June 5.—Attached to a long report which condemned in entirety the whole system of department stores the Salomon committee added several bills, one of which declares a store a nuisance when it sells more than one class of goods. Another classifies the goods, and another provides for a city cumulative tax on such stores. The first two bills were advanced, without reference, to second reading. The house contested election bill was passed. In the house the discharge of all committee clerks, policemen and janitors was announced. A number of appropriation bills were passed, aggregating about $1,500,000, for state institutions principally. A provision in the pharmacy bill requiring proprietary medicines to "give themselves away" was stricken out and the bill sent to third reading. Adjourned to tomorrow afternoon.

SPRINGFIELD, June 6.—The senate adjourned after less than an hour's session. It confirmed the governor's appointments, passed one bill and advanced a number of others. The bill passed appropriates $425,000 for Champaign university. Adjourned, to "take in" the silver convention.

SPRINGFIELD, June 7.—The senate laid on the table the Aspinwall pool-selling bill. This kills the bill. The bill appropriating money to collect data looking to the building of a ship canal from Lake Michigan to the gulf was sent to third reading on hearing that the bill had been reported unfavorably to the house. The house oleomargarine bill was put on the calendar on order of third reading. The food inspection bill was defeated, the department store bill sent to third reading and the fire insurance patrol pension bill passed. The house passed appropriation bills aggregating $65,000, $20,000 of which was for a home for disabled mothers, wives, widows, and daughters of disabled or dead veterans; also the bill for civil service reform in Cook county.

SPRINGFIELD, June 8.—The senate advanced to second reading the bill prohibiting children under 14 years of age from appearing as performers in any show. A number of other bills were advanced. Bills were passed: To establish a vaccine farm at the State university; to appropriate $25,000 for surveys for a ship canal from Lake Michigan to the Mississippi river. Adjourned to Tuesday. The house passed the bill taxing gifts, legacies and inheritances exceeding $20,000. The wheelmen's road bill was postponed to Wednesday, which means that it is dead. Bills were passed making it the duty of highway commissioners to destroy noxious weeds, and appropriating $15,000 for a state exhibit at the Atlanta exposition, Buehner, colored, of Cook, protesting, saying that a colored citizen of Illinois could not buy a glass of lemonade at the Georgia World's fair building. Adjourned.

REPORT ON ILLINOIS WHEAT.

Condition Drops in a Month from 92 to 62 Per Cent.

SPRINGFIELD, June 8.—In repiy to many inquiries concerning the condition of the growing wheat crop the following bulletin is issued by the state board of agriculture: "On the 1st of May the prospect was all that could have been wished for, when the general condition over the state was fixed at 92 per cent. About this time a severe drought set in and did great damage. The damage done by the Hessian fly and chinch bug has been great in every locality where wheat is extensively raised. Many fields have been plowed up and planted in corn and other crops. In a tour extending over forty counties not one single county can be reported above 75 per cent., while the general average for the wheat belt is not greater than 62 per cent."

GOT HIS CHECK ALL RIGHT,

But Failed to Get the Money and Landed in the Bastile.

SPRINGFIELD, Mo., June 6.—A. H. Chitty, keeper of a hotel at Willow Springs, went into the office of Joseph Fisher, capitalist and extensive property-owner of this city, locked the door and threatened to kill Fisher if he did not give him $1,000. Fisher wrote out a check for the sum, but payment was stopped and Chitty arrested. He blames Fisher for foreclosing on his property and says his wife was worried to death by financial reverses.

Pension Fraud Fined.

SPRINGFIELD, Ills., June 5.—Matilda E. Brayfield of Perry county was arraigned in the United States district court charged with presenting a fraudulent pension claim, and upon a plea of guilty was fined $1,000 and costs. She applied for a pension on account of the service of her husband, when, as a matter of fact, he was not in the army at all.

Horrible Death of Judge Patson.

CARBONDALE, Ills., June 6.—City Judge Irvin C. Patson, while crossing the Illinois Central railrod track on Main street in this city, was run over by a freight train backing up. The car wheels crossed his body about his hips, severing them from his body.

Chicago Drainage Bill a Law.

SPRINGFIELD, Ills., June 5.—The Chicago drainage bill has become a law. Governor Altgeld handed over the bill last night to Secretary of State Hinrichsen. It becomes a law without his signature.

HORRIBLE NEWS FROM CHINA.

Reported Massacre of English, French and American Missionaries.

LONDON, June 10.—A special despatch from Shanghai says that it is almost certain that a massacre of all the persons connected with the English, French and American missions at Chengtu has occurred. Neither men, women nor children have been spared, according to the report.

It is admitted that telegrams have been intercepted by the government, the object being to conceal the news of the massacre. A French gunboat is en route to Wuenchang to investigate the report.

KENTUCKY REPUBLICANS.

They Table an Invitation to Attend the Memphis Convention.

LOUISVILLE, June 6.—The Republican state convention convened at the Auditorium, which place, seating 5,000, was filled to its full capacity. Prayer was offered by Rev. J. B. Collier. Hon J. W. Yerkes, one of the candidates for senator, as chairman of the state committee made a strong speech on the existing conditions in Kentucky and introduced as temporary chairman Judge George Denny. After Judge Denny's speech the usual committees were appointed, the one on resolutions being as follows: John W. Lewis, Walter Evans, C. M. Barrett, W. H. Holt, George Denny, N. T. Hopkins, S. T. Moore, C. M. Brown, W. G. Hunter, Charles Blanford, George D. Todd, W. H. Lyons, C. H. Talbott, John Bennett, Samuel J. Pugh, W. Zitz, D. G. Colson. This committee includes all the Republican congressmen-elect from Kentucky.

Representative Walter E. Evans offered a strong resolution for a gold standard. It was referred to the committee on resolutions. An invitatton to appoint delegates to the free coinage convention at Memphis was tabled. Congressman Evans was made permanent chairman and Samuel J. Roberts, editor of the Kentucky Leader, secretary. It was ascertained that the committee on resolutions was having difficulty on the free silver plank. Colonel Bradley and other leaders appeared before the committee and insisted on a compromise silver plank. The convention remained in session to 5:30, filling in with speeches, when it took recess till 7:30, awaiting the report on resolutions.

On reassembling speech-making was indulged in until the platform was ready. It was read and adopted, and then W. O. Bradley was nominated for governor by acclamation. Bradley made a speech in which he indorsed the platform fully and then proceeded to denounce the Democracy very vigorously. For an hour nearly he poured out a philippic on the national and state administrations, and his speech was punctuated all through with applause.

The Kentucky Republicans nominated W. J. Worthington, of Greenup county, for lieutenant governor; Samuel J. Stone for auditor; secretary of State, Charles J. Finley, and for treasurer George W. Long.

The substance of the platform adopted is a declaration in favor of protection to American industry and against the Wilson bill, which is charged with the business depression; opposition to the state bank system and denunciation of the Cleveland foreign policy. On silver the platform says: "We are opposed to the free and unlimited coinage of silver, believing that is would involve the country in financial ruin. We believe in a sound currency and in the use of both gold and silver for coinage, provided always that a dollar in one is made as valuable as a dollar in the other.

FARM AND GARDEN

POTATO DISEASES.

The Potato Blight or Downy Mildew, the Macrosporium Disease and Potato Scab.

Among the many fungous diseases affecting Irish potatoes three are especially considered in a farmers' bulletin issued from the United States department of agriculture. The potato blight attacks the leaves, stems and tubers. Generally the first noticeable effect upon the leaves is the appearance of brown areas, which soon become soft and foul smelling. So sudden is this disease that a field may appear green one day and within the next day or two become blackened as though swept by fire. The spread of the disease is dependent in large measure upon certain conditions of moisture and heat. A daily mean or normal temperature of from 72 degrees to 74 degrees F. for any considerable time, accompanied by moist weather, furnishes the best conditions for the spread of the disease. The potato blight fungus seldom occurs to any serious extent in sections where the mean or normal daily temperature exceeds for any length of time 77 degrees. The tubers affected with the disease in question show depressed, dark colored spots on the surface, while within are seen blotches and streaks of a brownish or blackish color.

The macrosporium disease attacks the leaves and sometimes the stems, but never the tubers. It appears at any time after the plants are from four to six inches high. At first the older leaves show gray spots, the affeoted parts becoming hard and brittle. At the end of two weeks half the leaf may be brown and withered, while the rest is of a pale yellow color. Finally all the leaves succumb, and the tubers stop growth and are practically worthless.

Potato scab is too familiar to require description here.

For blight and the macrosporium disease nothing so effective as the bordeaux mixture has been found. For the treatment of potato scab a solution of corrosive sublimate has given best results, and for the macrosporium disease apply the bordeaux mixture, beginning when the plants are about six inches high, and continuing at intervals of 12 or 14 days, until five or six applications in all have been made. If the season is rainy, make the treatments every ten days, the object being to keep the plants at all times covered with the fungicide. By adding four ounces of paris green to each barrel of the bordeaux mixture the treatment will not only prevent the diseases under consideration, but keep in check the Colorado potato beetle and other insects as well. Before adding the paris green to the bordeaux mixture the former should be made into a thin paste by mixing with a small quantity of water.

The success of this work depends in large measure upon the thoroughness with which the fungicides are applied. To reach all parts of the plants above ground with a fine spray requires a good force pump and a suitable nozzle. The knapsack sprayer now on sale in nearly every section of the country will be found one of the most useful machines for spraying fields of five acres or less. For larger plantations more powerful machines should be used.

Millet and Hungarian Hay.

When grown on a good soil, through a long season, the large headed German millet is the best variety, according to A. A. Crozier of the Michigan agricultural college. The pointed headed common millet is adapted to poor soils or late sowing. On fertile soils the small, slender headed Hungarian grass will yield a large amount of good hay in moist seasons. Millet can be sown as a catch crop for hay when it is too late to plant corn, or when insects or a hard winter have destroyed the clover, or whenever a seeding of permanent grasses fails. For hay plant half a bushel per acre; if for seed, sow one peck. It is especially adapted to new lands and good, sandy soil. The thick stems cause it to cure better if bunched in the field when partly dried, like clover.

The census report makes it appear that large farms are decreasing in number and the small ones increasing.

One authority claims that a bushel of wheat will make 17 pounds of pork; a bushel of corn, 14 pounds.

It is the wise stockman who makes liberal provision to feed with alfalfa at critical periods.

Sugar beets are good for sheep; mangels are better.

Bulletin No. 56 from the Ohio experiment station of Worcester treats of the San Jose scale.

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00. Paper covers, 75 cents. First three degrees (376 pages), in cloth, 75 cents. Paper covers. 40 cents.

Knight Templarism Illustrated. A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery. A book of 341 pages. In cloth, $1.00. Paper covers, 50 cents.

Scotch Rite Masonry Illustrated. The complete illustrated ritual of the entire Scottish Rite, in two volumes, comprising all the Masonic degrees from 3rd to 33rd inclusive. The first three degrees are common to all the Masonic Rites, and are fully and accurately given in "Freemasonry Illustrated." Vol. I. of "Scotch Rite Masonry Illustrated" comprises the degrees from 3rd to 18th inclusive. Vol. II. of "Scotch Rite Masonry Illustrated" comprised the degrees from 19th to 33rd inclusive, with the signs, grips, tokens and passwords from 1st to 33rd degree inclusive. Price per volume, paper cover, 65 cents each. In cloth, $1.00 each.

Hand-Book of Freemasonry. By E. Ronayne, Past Master of Keystone Lodge No. 639, Chicago. Gives the complete standard ritual of the first three degrees of Freemasonry. New edition, 274 pages. Bound flexible cloth covers. 50 cents.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished. 25 cents each.

Allyn's Ritual of Freemasonry by Avery Allyn contains the fully Illustrated Ritual of the Blue Lodge, Chapter Council and Commandery, 11 of the Scotch Rite Degrees, Several Masonic side degrees and what is termed a Key to the Phi Beta Kappa, the Orange and Odd-fellows Societies. Price in cloth $5.00.

Duncan's Masonic Ritual and Monitor. Profusely illustrated with explanatory engravings, and containing the ritual and work of the order for the seven degrees, including the Royal Arch. Though extensively used as an Instruction Book and one of the best in the market it is not as accurate as "Freemasonry Illustrated," the first book on catalogue. Price in cloth, $2 50.

Richardson's Monitor of Freemasonry. Containing the ceremonies of Lodges, Chapters, Encampments, etc. Illustrated. Although extensively used in conferring the higher degrees, it is not only very incomplete but inaccurate especially as regards the first seven degrees, and as to the higher degrees it gives but a description and general idea of the degrees rather than the full ritual. Price in cloth, $1.25; Paper covers, 75c.

Look to the East. A Ritual of the first three Masonic Degrees by Ralph Lester. Price in cloth $2.00. Notwithstanding the high price this book is very inferior in every way to Freemasonry Illustrated or The Handbook of Freemasonry at a quarter the price.

Ecce Orienti. The Complete Standard Ritual of the First Three Masonic Degrees in Cypher, with complete Floor Charts of Initiating, Passing and Raising a Candidate. Pocket size, Full Roan, Flap, $2.50.

HISTORY OF A WEEK.

Tuesday, June 4.

Emily Faithfull, whose death is announced, was a pioneer in the advocacy of wider field and more remunerative employment for women. She interested Queen Victoria in the matter and obtained her approval generally, and particularly for a printing office she established in which the compositors were all women.

Archbishop Kenrick, of St. Louis, has been deposed by the pope and the Most Rev. John J. Kain has been appointed in his stead. Kendrick for some time has been incapable, on account of the infirmities of age, of managing the business of the archdiocese.

Letters from sixty-two of the 114 country Democratic central chairmen in Missouri show that fifty-eight are unqualifiedly in favor of the free coinage of silver and gold at the ratio of 16-to-1; one is against sush coinage and three are noncommittal.

Wednesday, June 5.

George Dashman, aged 28, was shot three times and mortally wounded by Mrs. Susan Foster, of St. Louis, whose daughter Dashman had betrayed and refused to marry.

The treasury circulation statement for May shows that on June 1 the circulation of all kinds of money in the United States aggregated $1,606,175,556, an increase since May 1 last of $6,745,402. The decrease in circulation since June 1, 1894, is $60,490,000. The per capita circulation on June 1, 1895, based on an estimated population of 69,753,000 is $23.02.

The latest report is that Howard Gould is engaged to marry Katherine Clemmons, the actress.

L. L. Williamson, of Rockford, Ills., went to Chicago two months ago. He has not been heard from since, and his friends fear he has been murdered.

The South Carolina dispensary law will again come before the supreme court of the United States next October for examination of the relation it bears to the interstate commerce clause of the constitution.

Thursday, June 6.

The republic proclaimed a few days ago in Formosa has collapsed and President Tang has escaped. The Chinese forces in Formosa are disorganized at the approach of the Japanese.

At the annual meeting of the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railway company the old board of directors was reelected and R. R. Cable continued as president.

J. Roosevelt, secretary of the United States embassy, will represent the United States in the international railroad congress, which will begin at London on June 26.

Charles Cecil, a young man residing east of Muncie, Ind., was almost instantly killed by a bolt of lightning while he was coming out of a barn.

To call a man a German spy is in France a sure way of securing his arrest, and it is said to be the only form of calumny for which there is no legal redress.

Friday, June 7.

E. R. Cassett, president of the First National bank at Pella, Ia., has been arrested by a United States marshal, charged with bank wrecking and misappropriating $60,000 of the bank's funds.

Edward Moyes, engineer; Elias Botts, conductor, and William Klease, fireman, were killed on the Philadelphia and Reading by a rear end collision between their freight train and a coal train near Shamokin, Pa.

Just thirty persons who took passage on the ill-fated Colima were saved from the wreck.

A cloudburst in the Black forest, Germany, in the Wurtemburg district, swept away many houses and drowned so far as known fifty-six persons. The loss of life will be greater when all is known.

The Standard Oil company and the Scotch Oil company have concluded an agreement, which is to last three years, for an advance in the price of candles.

The Denver board of supervisors has appropriated $50,000 for the Mining and Industrial exposition to be held in Denver next year.

The council at Jeffersonville, Ind., has taken to action arrest, if possible, the persons who have been filling the town pump with broken glass.

Saturday, June 8.

Arthur George Van Sittart, secretary of the British legation at Munich, has been gazetted British consul at Chicago in succession to J. H. Sadler.

President E. R. Casset, of the First National bank of Pella, Ia., was arraigned. He waived examination on the charge of bank wrecking and embezzling $60,000. He is unable to give $10,000 bonds, and being too weak to be placed in jail he is guarded in his hotel by a deputy marshal.

All the "trust" distilleries are now under guard of United States marshals because, as alleged, of fear that the old owners will seize them if the supreme court of the United States forfeits the charter of the trust.

President Cleveland has refused a pardon to George M. McDonald, of Chicago, sent up for eleven mouths and fined $1,000 for carrying on an alleged fraudulent business.

Florizel, the Prince of Wales' horse, was the winner of the £2,000 cup at the Manchester (Eng.) races. Dwyer's Banquet II. "also ran."

Monday, June 10.

Forty persons are known to have perished in the flood at Robersdorf, Hungary, and thirty are still missing.

Representative Hitt continues to show a slight improvement, and it is hoped will soon be strong enough to be removed from Washington to some health resort.

At Koavy, Laurel county, Ky., T. D. Moore and "Tip" Sterm, brothers-in-law, shot each other to death. Jealousy.

The correspondence left by Miss Harrington, who was murdered so mysteriously at San Francisco, shows that she and ex-Senator Buck were lovers. One letter was signed: "Ever Your Darling Nell." That is all they develop.

William R. Castle has been appointed minister to the United States from Hawaii vice Thurston.

BLAST AGAINST THE WHEEL GIRL.

Woman's Rescue League Wants Her Teetotally Abolished.

BOSTON, June 10.—The Woman's Rescue League has adopted resolutions declaring that the bicycle woman and the coming "mannish" woman are productive of "much harm and no real good, and that the "sporting woman," the "mannish woman" and the "bicycle woman" bring disgrace on the true woman. The league condemns bicycle riding by young girls and women for these reasons:

"Thirty per cent of the 'fast girls' that have come to the Rescue League for aid were bicycle riders at one time. It is resolved that since the closing up of the houses of ill-repute in Boston the sporting girls are taking to bicycle riding because they can better ply their vocation on account of the opportunities given as cyclists." An appeal is made to the prominent clergy of the United States for the suppression of bicycle riding by young girls because of the tendency to encourage immorality.

RESOLUTIONS OF SILVER MEN.

They Demand Unlimited Coinage of Both Metals at the Old Ratio.

SPRINGFIELD, Ills., June 6.—The free silver convention of the Democratic party was called to order by Secretary of State Hinrichsen. All around fluttered banners with the war-cry "16 to 1" emblazoned on them and the seats of all the delegates were full, with a large crowd of more or less interested on-lookers on the floor and in the galleries. There were but few gold men in the legislative chamber when the hour for calling the convention arrived, and they acted as spectators and not as participants in the proceedings. "Buck" Hinrichsen was received with a volley of cheers as he wielded the gavel and called the convention to order. His speech was a clarion call to the Democratic party for the adoption of the free silver policy.

Hinrichson devoted himself mainly to a defense of the action of the Democratic state committee in calling the convention, and in the course of his remarks he took occasion to make a few sly thrusts at the national administration and the "gold bug" members of the party. In accordance with the arrangements of the state central committee the following temporary organization was named: Chairman, Judge Monroe C. Crawford, Union county; secretary, Hon. A. C. Bentley, Pike county; assistant secretaries, William J. Cochran, Cook county; W. P. McDowell, Vermilion county, James D. Breckinridge, Fulton county; Robert J. Hunt, Macon county; William Stoeffel, McHenry county; H. T. Eberlein, Green county; sergeant-at-arms, Thomas Manion, Jefferson county.

The speech-making being ended the resolutions committee reported its work and it was adopted with a rush and a whoop. The resolutions declare that gold and silver have been the honest and recognized money of the world for a thousand years; that the demonetization of silver is the cause of all our woes; that the constitution prohibits any state from using anything but gold and silver as legal tender.

Therefore, resolved, That we demand the free and unlimited coinage of gold and silver at the ratio of 16 to 1 without waiting for any other nation, and that all contracts for the payment of money, whether made in gold or silver, may be discharged by the payment of silver. Democratic congressmen are instructed to vote for this policy.

After a long debate a resolution was adopted requesting the Democratic national committee to call a national silver convention not later than Augnst next, and if that committee refuses Democratic state committees are asked to take independent action to that end.

Governor Altgeld was indorsed with enthusiasm and after passing complimentary resolutions the convention adjourned.

One of the first developments of the morning was a meeting of the "honest money" delegates, at which it was decided on the part of those present not to go into the convention. Among those who attended this meeting were Senator Palmer, Washington Hesing, Adams A. Goodrich, Frank Walker, J. H. Hopkins, J. W. Sutton, ex-Judge Vincent, Rivers, McNeili and about ten others. The first intention was that Senator Palmer and his friends should offer a substitute platform to the convention and make a big fight, but the point was raised that this might only create additional bitterness among the majority, and probably bring about a strong denunciation of President Cleveland and the administration.

The delegates-at-large to the proposed national convention are John P. Hopkins, of Chicago; Secretary of State Hinrichsen; George B. Fithian, of Jasper county, and General L. B. Parsons, of Clay.

FIRE AT MILWAUKEE.

The Cream City Suffers to the Extent of $400,000.

MILWAUKEE, June 10.—Fire broke out in the yards of the Foster Lumber company, on East Water street, at 2 o'clock this morning. The flames spread to the coal yards of B. Uhrig & Co., and to the steamer Raleigh, which was moored at the coal docks. The Raleigh was entirely destroyed and the schooner Lucy Graham was set on fire. She was loaded with a full cargo of coal and lumber. The fire then spread to the Gallun tannery and Schlitz's brewery barns. At 3 a. m. the fire was under control, and the Gallun tannery did not burn. The entire loss will probably reach $400,000.

The largest loss is that at Uhrig & Sons' coal yard, which was not far short of $200,000. The Forster Lumber company's loss is total and will not be far from $25,000. The sailors of the Graham had a narrow escape for their lives, and with difficulty attached cables and dragged their vessel with her deck load of lumber on fire away from the blazing lumber dock. The Brodesser elevator plant is damaged several thousand dollars by smoke and water.

Iowa Free Silver Democrats.

DES MOINES, June 7.—Free silver Democrats met here in conference. Ex-Lieutenant Governor S. L. Bestow, of Chariton, presided. After many speeches a working committee consisting of a state chairman and one vice president from each congressional district was appointed. The resolutions passed declare that gold and silver are the constitutional money of the country, and declare free and unlimited coinage of both gold and silver on the terms of equality at a ratio of 16 to 1 to be a cardinal principle of the Democratic faith. The working committee will strive to fill the coming state convention with free silver Democrats.

Bankers Oppose Free Coinage.

ROCK ISLAND, Ills., June 7.—The Illinois Bankers' association adjourned sine die yesterday afternoon. Resolutions were adopted pledging the association to support every effort put forth for the enlarged use of silver, favoring the use of gold and silver for money under regulations which will insure the parity of gold, silver and paper money, but declaring opposition under the present conditions to the unlimited coinage of silver at the ratio of 16-to-1.

Four Men Suffocated in a Tunnel.

PEKIN, Colo., June 10.—Smoke from an engine suffocated four men in the Alpine tunnel. Their names were W. M. Flavin, superintendent; N. Matinez, engineer; Michael Burns, fireman, and Oscar Cammann, miner. The bodies were brought here.

Wedding in High Life.

LENOX, Mass., June 6.—There was a known wealth of $801,000,000 represented at the marriage here of Florence Adele Sloane to James Abercrombie Burden, Jr., which took place in Trinity church. The guests were the Vanderbilts, Astors, Mills, Goelets, Shepards, Belmonts, and other multi-millionaires—who own the above noted sum—and dozens of others who are simply millionaires. The wedding presents aggregated in value $700,000. One entire hotel was rented for three days exclusively for guests, and a special train brought the Gotham people here to attend the wedding. It was the swellest affair for years.

Great Relay Race Ended.

NEW YORK, June 8.—The great relay bicycle race of the red and the blue between Chicago and this city was finished at 1:56 o'clock this morning. The actual time of the race was 65 hours, 53 minutes. This break's all American records for a relay race. General Miles and Postmaster Dayton were at the end of the line to receive the messages. The great race, which had its start at Chicago at 9:30 o'clock last Wednesday morning, was begun after months of the most careful preparations.

Guarded by a Dead Man.

CINCINNATI, June 8.—A dead man kept guard over the Osbourne Chemical works at Eggleston avenue. John Nelson, the night watchman, died of apoplexy in his chair in front of the open door early in the night, but his watch was effective and the place was undisturbed. Brother officers who passed during the night saluted Nelson and it was not till morning that he was found to be dead.

Have you any neighbors to whom you have not given a copy of the Cynosure and whom you have not asked to subscribe?

"The wicked flee when no man pursueth," but they flee a good deal faster if they know some law and order league is after them.

"Bring Another," the motto on the wall of a Chicago Mission, would be a good motto for each Cynosure reader this year, "Bring Another Subscriber."

Was there ever such an age for reform organization? The enormity of sin in the nation has aroused its reserve force of righteousness as never before.

The reform platform that does not include opposition to the great national peril of secret societies, is narrow—too narrow for an all-around reformer to stand upon.

We earnestly request all friends of the cause in Tennessee to prayerfully consider the question how can we make the anti-secret convention at Jackson July 17th a grand success.

The true power of a reform movement depends not upon the number enlisted in it, or the amount of money in its treasury, but upon the amount of truth in its platform. It is in the truth of God that the power inheres.

One of the most radical branches of the Presbyterian body is the Associated Presbyterian church, whose synod met May 22nd at Unity, Butler Co., Pa. They have four Presbyteries, Clarion, Northern Indiana, Iowa and Kansas. An important question on which this synod's advice was asked was "Whether persons carrying insurance in societies having grips and passwords can be retained in the fellowship of the church?" The synod answered that no one shall be retained in the communion of the church who shall not renounce all connection with such secret orders as are condemned by the law of the church.

Is there any better way you can help on this reform than by inducing others to take and read the Cynosure? From the beginning of this movement the interest of its friends has been quickened and kept alive by reading this paper.

As the great system of telegraph wires has no value except as the electric current from the battery flashes along them, so our words printed or spoken will be powerless for good unless the divine electricity of the Holy Spirit quicken them.

We call special attention to the strong article on Masonic death penalties, by Edmond Ronayne. No one is better qualified to reveal the deep wickedness of the Masonic system because he writes from convictions intensified by his own experience in the lodge.

There are very many churches in the same deplorable condition as the one described by the colored brother, who, when asked how old Zion church was getting along, replied: "Old Zion church ain't gettin' long at all." "Why, what is the matter with Old Zion?" "De 'cieties am gettin' away with it." "Why, how is that?" "Well, dare is de order of Red Men dat meets on Monday night. Tuesday night am de time when de Woodmen meet. Wednesday night am G. A. R. night. De order of Maccabees meets on Thursday night. Friday night belongs to de Masons, and Saturday night is lodge night for de Odd-fellows. Then on Sunday night de Good Templars hab to meet, so dar is no time for meetin's in Old Zion church. De 'cieties get all de corn, and dar is nuffin left for Old Zion but just de bare cob."

Our standing charge against the Masonic lodge is that its members largely control the press of the country. An experience of two years in an Indiana city, where were two daily papers, convinced me that the same charge was equally true of the Jesuits. Some of them were on the staff of either reporters or compositors and everything unfavorable to Romanism was carefully excluded. "Washington in the Lap of Rome" is not altogether a myth, and we fear is not even an exaggeration. These secret emissaries of Rome are at the national capital using and abusing the government for its purpose. Joseph Cook says that the men sent from Boston to Washington to investigate in regard to Romanism reported that "there does not go out of the capital of this nation any telegraph dispatch over the lines of the Associated Press touching Roman Catholic interests, without being first submitted to a Roman Catholic official."

In the biography of the late Rev. George E. Flower, of the Disciples' church, by Isaac Errett, we find this testimony as to how the lodge destroys the interest in the church and prayer meeting. Thus he tells of a visit to one church that had invited him to preach for them: "I had a very muddy ride for ten miles and got there just in time for night meeting. I found many of the male members had gone to the Masonic and Odd-fellows' lodges—which only strengthened me in the belief that these societies are doing much to retard the progress of Christianity, for we find, almost without exception, that Christians who belong to them have more interest in their success than in the success of the church. They can miss prayer meetings, but not their lodge meetings. I wish that, as a Christian people, we could be more forcibly impressed with the grandeur and surpassing worth of Christianity, remembering that it is perfect, and that anything added to it decreases its power."

The Journal of Hygiene makes this sensible remark: "The Grand Army of the Republic is taking considerable credit for their instrumentality in introducing military drill into many public schools. They propose to do so into all of them if they can. For our part, we think they are doing harm in this rather than good. Military drill is not a good system of physical culture. It is no substitute for a thorough course of instructions in gymnastics; it does not train all the muscles equally. It does not produce an even development of the body, but a one-sided development. In all the countries of the world where soldiers are trained it is necessary to supplement military drill by gymnastic training to get the results required. Not only is the physical effect bad, but the mental is also bad. The drill suggests war, not peace. The true patriot will fight for his country when there must be fighting, but he will use all peaceful means first. In a great majority of cases they will be all which are required."

This paper has been criticised as being too much of one idea. They say, give us something besides anti-secrecy; for one does not relish a dinner that is all of one dish. If these friends would only take time to read the Cynosure, they would find that not one-half of it is devoted to the lodge question. Prohibition, the Sabbath and other reform questions, together with current news, occupies much of our space. But no apology is needed if anti-secrecy does occupy the most of our attention. It is a great vital question, involving more than any other the rights and liberties of citizens. It involves as no other the interests of human life and property. It vitally concerns the church and the state, and every interest of society. Besides, there are but very few papers that dare to speak out upon this question. It is very largely suppressed in pulpit, on the platform, and by the press. The Cynosure is a special witness for this great and important truth. A great trial is in progress in our world, one involving the destinies of nations and of immortal souls, for time and eternity. We see that other witnesses, for fear of the people, are withholding this testimony on the lodge question. Shall we not, then, when called to the stand, ring the changes upon this truth, which has such a vital bearing upon the case, and in regard to which almost all the other witnesses are silent?

ONLY AN AMERICAN.

BY JOSEPH HOUSTON.

In the early days of the Republic, and for many years after, the cravings of ambition for glory were supplied in the name American. Our writers and orators, inspired with a generous enthusiasm, allowed no rivers or boundary lines or color of skin to limit their theories of what constituted an American. They boldly asserted the truth that all men are created free and equal.

It is true our statesmen, at the framing of the Constitution, did allow and recognize Negro slavery in some of the States; but they all thought and hoped that it would be of short duration. Almost all admitted it to be wrong and only justified by necessity. These wholesome truths took deep root in the hearts of the American people, and were exemplified in their lives. Morality and education were the only distinctions in society, and the meritorious filled the offices from the highest to the lowest. Justice was meted out without fear or favor. They wanted the people to be free and equal, and no privileged or servile classes. It is said that when the question, What shall we call our chief executive? came before the convention, they would not allow of any name that sounded like royalty, and simply called him president.

They prohibited our officers from accepting gifts or titles from foreign governments. In those halcyon days it was honor enough to be an American. But soon parties formed which divided and vexed us. Swayed by the partisan spirit, we would not vote for any one who did not belong to our party; we selected our candidates not from the whole nation, but often from less than the half.

Bad as the partisan influence has been, it still left us comparatively free and equal. It is secret societies that have made us unequal, divided and debased us as a nation. The whole trend of such societies is to make distinctions not only in society but amongst themselves, not based on virtue or intelligence but on wicked oaths and clannishness. They aim to get special advantages, and are the privileged classes. They have royal and hierarchical titles for their officers. The list of adjectives is taxed severely to supply the wants of those bastard and despotic orders. "Noble Grand," "Grand High Priest," "Most Worshipful," etc. Through combination and secrecy they have managed not only to get nearly all the offices, but they protect the criminals so that the people who are only Americans furnish nearly all the convicts, for no others can be convicted.

But the inequality does not stop here. The man who is only an American can not get a day's work or a job that a society man wants; in fact, he is called scab, and subjected to all kinds of abuse, and also anyone who employs him. A society man can drop a job for months, and still claim it as his; and they seem to think they are doing right all the time. So the name American is debased, and the most miserable person in all the land is he who is only an American.

McCracken, Pa., June 11.

WHY NOT?

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

The following is clipped from the Sabbath Recorder of June 6th. It illustrates the influence of secret societies on our boys. If men may unite in a Masonic lodge, swearing "to always hail, ever conceal and never reveal," "under no less penalty than having my throat cut across, my tongue torn out by the roots," etc., why may not the boys unite in a similar covenant?

"An urchin eleven years of age was recently arrested on Halstead street, Chicago, who proved to be the leader of a gang of boy thieves. Their latest exploit had been the robbing of a pawnshop, in which they secured jewelry and other valuables to the amount of $600. After a course in the 'sweat-box' the three boys who were caught confessed their crimes and explained their methods. They had a regularly organized 'Boys' Thief Club,' with an oathbound law, a grip, passwords, and a sinking fund for indigent members. Said the little eleven-year-old: 'We each 'un swore wid his han' on a gun an' a dirk in his belt 'at we'd be true to de club an' kill any member 'at "minches" on club secrets.' The 'blood and thunder' stories seldom mature their fruit so soon, but they are never without their effect."

"Blood and thunder stories" may have had some influence in making such a club possible, but the example of their fathers and elder brothers was far more pointed and pernicious. Will not our worthy contemporary call attention to the baneful influence of the lodge system, and especially to the corrupting force of example? So long as professed Christians take oaths under a death penalty, it will be hard to keep the boys from forming clubs that shall not only be the schools but the shields for crime.

Oberlin, O., June 7, 1895.

THE BLUE LAWS OF CONNECTICUT.

BY ALBERT M. PAULL.

In a recent issue of the Weekly Inter-Ocean is this sentence: "There is some good obtainable even out of the spirit of the old-time blue laws." Evidently this has reference to the popular impression so widely prevalent that the State of Connecticut, particularly the city of New Haven, had some time in the seventeenth century a code of laws which forbade kissing, running, etc., on the Sabbath day, and such like absurdities. There never was a code of laws of that character in the archives of New Haven or any other place in Connecticut, and all this talk about the blue laws of Connecticut is a libel on the character of the State. Notwitstanding, New Haven has, in accommodation to the popular idea, dubbed an old parchment-covered book of demi-royal paper, "The Blue Book;" but were one to read it, he would find nothing in it differing materially from the statute-books of to-day. Judge Smith, in his continuation of the History of New York, published in "N. Y. Historical Collections," Vol. IV., says he carefully read this book, and winds up by saying "so far is the common idea of the blue laws being a collection of rules from being true, that they are only records of convictions consonant in the judgment of the magistrates to the Word of God and the dictates of reason." The American Cyclopædia, Vol. II, p. 758, reads: "The existence of such a code of laws is fully disproved. The only authority in its favor is Peters, who is notoriously untrustworthy."

In the History of New England, by John Gorham Palfrey, Vol. II, p. 31, we read: "The earliest code in Connecticut related only to offences. Adopted a year later than the Massachusetts Body of Liberties, it is in great part a verbal copy from the instrument. Even the same Scripture authorities are quoted. There is a transposition of the second and third articles (blasphemy and witchcraft), and there are some substitutions. The Massachusetts code punished manslaughter and adultery with death; that of Connecticut omits these crimes, and puts in their place rape and incest. The articles which they have in common relate to idolatry, blasphemy, witchcraft, murder, unnatural crimes, man-stealing, perjury endangering life, and treason against the colony. Neither before nor for several years after the confederation of the colonies, had New Haven any body of statutes. During this time the courts were guided in their decisions by what they received as the rules of equity and Scripture. The fundamental order on this subject was: "The judicial laws of God as they were delivered by Moses, and as they are related to the moral law, being neither typical nor ceremonial, nor having any reference to Canaan, shall be accounted of moral equity and shall generally bind all offenders, and be a rule to all the courts in this jurisdiction in their proceedings against offenders till they be branched out into particulars hereafter," This "Blue Law Code" fabrication originated in the highly imaginative mind of Doctor Samuel Peters, and was published in his General History of Connecticut, a work regarded by many as a burlesque history.

Palfrey, in the same volume, page 32, says: "Most readers have heard of the blue laws of New Haven which has been precisely described as making 'one thin volume in folio' embracing the following among other provisions: 'No one shall travel, cook victuals, make beds, sweep house, cut hair or shave on the Sabbath day. No woman shall kiss her child on the Sabbath or fasting day. No one shall read common prayer, keep Christmas or saint days, make mince pies, dance, play cards, or play on any instrument of music except the drum, trumpet and jews-harp. Every male shall have his hair cut round according to a cap." This is from Peters' General History of Conn., pp., 65, 66, 68, 69, 82. It is not perhaps known that these statements are without historical foundation. In the primitive age of the colony the discretionary action of the magistrates sometimes resembled the discipline of the head of a family rather than a formal legal administration, but the existence at any time of a code containing provisions such as are quoted above is a mere fabrication, nor is there any record of so much as single judgments pronounced agreeably to the tenor of those provisions. The anonymous work which first vented the fiction was published in London in 1781, and a second edition appeared the following year. The author was Samuel Peters, a loyalist and refugee. He was a college contemporary of Trumbull, the conscientiously exact historian of Connecticut, and is said to have been a native of the same town. Trumbull said of him, that "of all men with whom he had ever been acquainted, Dr. Peters, he had thought from his first knowledge of him, the least to be depended on as to any matter of fact." (Kingsley's Historical Discourse, p. 84.) The reader at all acquainted with Connecticut history may satisfy himself concerning Peters' credibility by five minutes' inspection of his work.

His "Blue Laws," so readily accepted by many, is simply historical untruth, and of a piece with those other historical untruths which just now we hear repeated over and over, viz.: that it was not religious persecution that drove Roger Williams from Massachusetts Bay, but he was sent away as a disturber of the civil peace; that the Roman Catholics of Maryland planted the principle of soul liberty in this country, and even preceded Roger Williams from two to five years; and other like fictions which we will not stop to mention. All lovers of truth, of whatever bias otherwise, should lend their influence to correct all such misrepresentations, and to eradicate them from the minds of the people; for all error, however small and seemingly insignificant, hinders by so much our effective service for God and humanity.

"CHRIST IS ALL."

Sometime since I was led to visit a section of Chicago adjacent to the World's Fair site, and when my business was done, I was impressed to call at Dr. Dowie's home. The exact address I did not know. The Spirit suggested, Ask a postman. As I turned to look, I saw one coming from a cross street, and waited till he came up.

Do you know Dr. Dowie?

Yes.

What do you know about him?

My friend—naming him—was dangerously sick with inflammatory rheumatism, and Dr. Dowie came and prayed with him and he was healed, and is a well man to-day.

Are you a Christian?

Yes, I am.

Where does Dr. Dowie live?

6020 Edgerton Avenue.

Thank you.

As I came in sight my heart was thrilled by seeing displayed, above the cornice of the beautiful three-story stone building, the words

"CHRIST IS ALL."

The visit that resulted was so satisfactory, that a little later I came again with my wife, and remained during the entire services in the tabernacle on the Lord's day. Since that time we have attended the week-day meetings as we have had opportunity.

Dr. Dowie's plain denunciation of sin has aroused much opposition from those who have not yet exalted Christ high over all. After my first visit, I told a friend of my intention to go again with my wife and remain over Sabbath.

I wouldn't go, if I were you.

Why not?

Well, he is a man I wouldn't advise anyone to hear.

Why not?

I have been acquainted with him for a number of years, and he has said things that are very hurtful.

What did he say?

He hired the First Methodist church of Chicago, and standing there in one of his meetings said, These walls are leprous with sin and iniquity.

Notwithstanding the warning, we went, and when we heard among other things Dr. Dowie's condemnation of secret societies, and remembered that on one of the large upper windows of the First Methodist church of Chicago, fronting on Washington street, are inscribed "I. O. O. F.," we thought we knew at least one reason for his saying, "These walls are leprous with sin and iniquity."

Dr. Dowie preaches the plain and full Gospel, and can say with Paul, "I have not shunned to declare unto you the whole counsel of God." Repentance toward God and restitution to men is emphasized. Absolute, unconditional surrender to God on our part, and obedience to his righteous law, is first necessary, and then the power of Jesus Christ is graciously manifested to save, to heal and to sanctify. When he was leading out his chosen people, he revealed himself as Jehovah-rophi, or "I am the Lord that healeth thee." When he was present with us in the flesh, he declared, "I am the way, the truth and the life," and he forgave sins and healed the sick. In his resurrection body he spoke these gracious words: "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." The Holy Ghost, speaking through the apostle, declares "Jesus Christ the same, yesterday, to-day and forever." Dr. Dowie says: "Because he is unchangeable, and because he is present, in spirit, just as when in the flesh he is the healer of his people."

The appearance of the witnesses impresses one with the truthfulness of their testimony. They comprise all classes, young and old, men and women, rich and poor, and their faces beam with joy as they give glory to God for what he has wrought. Space will not permit as full a statement as I would love to give, but a better one than I can write can be obtained by sending to Dr. Dowie for a copy of his "Leaves of Healing," not forgetting to enclose stamps, for the Chicago postoffice has excluded this paper from second-class rates. KEEP CHURCH AND STATE SEPARATE.

The Canada trouble may soon be ours; but we have had one rebellion and Canada has had two. Will she have another? Probably not; but what is the trouble about? Separate schools or the right of Catholics to have schools in which their creeds are taught, supported by a share of the taxes raised to support the public schools. This is really as important a question for the great United States as for the Dominion of Canada, whose territory could comfortably domicile every family now under the stars and stripes. Annexation may possibly, but not yet, if ever, probably, become the great question; and how would the Catholics vote in each country be given? No doubt in the way that would be thought best for the future growth and welfare of their church. Might we not fear that our time-serving politicians would surrender Canada to Romanism, etc., in her schools, if thereby they could gain her vast dominions? Would not this be about as good as the connection of chruch and state, so dear to Rome and her daughters?

The great object of Rome in Canada and in these United States is to have her full share of the public school taxes, seeing she cannot have her church directly so supported in either country. In the province of Quebec Romanism is taught in all her public schools, and this she wants done in Manitoba. In Quebec, when a minority is too weak to have a separate school the children, if attending school, must daily hear the teachings of old mother Rome.

The Dominion government was induced, no doubt, by priestly influence to recommend the restoration of separate schools in Manitoba. The Manitobans nobly resented it, and the question of right at once arose, Which is in accordance with the Constitution? The case may thus be stated as a combat between the two parties, for, of course, neither party entertains the idea of rebellion at present. Let us first hear the claimant for the separate Catholic schools and their share of the taxes:

Priest—We have the right because we had the power to do so by the Constitution from the first organization as a province.

Citizen—Perhaps you had. But surely we have the right to legislate according to the will of the majority of the people, and the majority is now against you.

Priest—Yes; but our right existed before your majority, and therefore we are entitled to our share of the taxes for the public schools. And in this the Dominion government agrees with us or they would not recommend you to restore our share, although we are now in the minority.

Citizen—Aha, friend! But the Dominion government has made a mistake and will find it out!

Priest—Nay, nay, no mistake! Don't you know that the Supreme Court and Privy Council of the old country are with us? Yes, and the——

Citizen—Hold on—not so fast. I deny it. Moreover, it has just been found out that "the Manitoba act says nothing about separate schools!" The bill of rights sent by the convention at Manitoba is the basis of the Manitoba act, passed by the Dominion parliament. Thus "Separate schools cannot be read into that act."

Priest—Yes, it can. Don't you know that Father Richot, Judge Black and A. H. Scott were the delegates from the people of Red River desiring that our schools should have public pay and our religion taught in them? And what but refusing such rights caused the Red River rebellion of 1869–70 at the cost of $8,000,000?

Citizen—Yes; but your claim cannot be sustained in accordance with the Constitutional act of Manitoba; and the system in operation in the province of Quebec has no more authority in the Constitution of the Dominion than slavery in the Southern States had in the Declaration of Independence when its record is "That all men are created equal and endowed by th ir Creator with certain inalienable rights—among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness."

If slavery was the main cause of our civil war what may follow the success of Rome if she could establish her rights to a share of the public school taxes all over this continent? Church and state connexion has ever been fraught with "trouble" to the people governed and governing. It is a system quite foreign to the fundamental American principles of civil and religious liberty as well as to the principles of the New Testament church of Christ. T. H.

LINE UPON LINE.

So many arguments against the lodge have been used that it is not easy to write or speak without repeating the ideas of others. But that is no reason why we should be silent. Probably no better tracts on lodgery will ever be written than those by Dr. J. Blanchard, who was the best writer the reform has ever had. But because these things are so it is as necessary to say something now as it was twenty years ago. Therefore we must let our light shine, notwithstanding all that has been said and written. There will be time enough for silence on the lodge question after the prophecy of Jesus is fulfilled, viz.: "Every plant which my Heavenly Father hath not planted shall be rooted up."

There are many other very important texts of Scripture relating to secret societies which we should study and use in our warfare against the kingdom of darkness. Here are a few: "Jesus answered him, "I spake openly to the world; I even taught in the synagogue and in the temple, whither the Jews always resort; and in secret have I said nothing." "And this is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light because their deeds were evil. For everyone that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest his deeds should be reproved. But he that doeth truth cometh to the light, that his deeds may be manifest that they are wrought in God." "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers, for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness? And what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? And what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? For ye are the temple of the living God; as God hath said, I will dwell in them and walk in them, and I will be their God and they shall be my people. Wherefore come out from among them and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty." "And have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness but rather reprove them. For it is a shame even to speak of those things which are done of them in secret."

GAIN THROUGH ONE-SIDEDNESS.

Symmetry has its advantages and disadvantages. It looks well, but it does not always do well. A perfect sphere is symmetrical, and it pleases the eye; but it lacks point, and it requires exceptional force to give penetration. A well-rounded man rarely does so effective work in life as an angular man. The man who accomplishes most is usually a one-sided man, or a man of many angles. He is not admired for his evenness of life and his symmetry of character, but, while his fellows are criticising his angularity, he is pushing through the crowd, and making himself felt in the direction of his main purpose. If we are perfectly balanced, we can be set up on a post and admired for the beautiful finish of our characters; but if we are one-sided and sharp-angled, we may do something in the world, while enduring the harsh comments of those who would like to be let alone in life.—*S. MASONIC FUNERAL SERVICES IN CHURCH.

Some time ago in the Homiletic Review a correspondent asked the question, should permission to hold Masonic funeral services in church be granted or refused? T. F., of Woodbridge, Ont., Canada, answers as follow:

"In reply, I say without the slightest hesitation, 'Refused.' Freemasonry knows nothing whatever of Christ as a Saviour. The Grand Lodge in France knows nothing whatever of even a Creator. But with that exception Freemasonry distinctly acknowledges belief in one. It refuses to receive an avowed atheist into its membership. But it makes no distinction between 'Jehovah, Jove and Lord,' Allah and Brahm. It boasts that it welcomes Christians, Jews, Mohammedans, and pagans. Of course, then, it knows nothing whatever of the Lord Jesus as a Saviour, as I have already said. Hence his name is most carefully kept out of all its prayers. They always end with these words, 'So mote it be.' It would be in utter violation of the principles of Freemasonry to use in any of its prayers such an expression as this, 'For Christ's sake.' Now, I ask, is it not dishonoring to Christ to allow funeral services in which there is not the slightest reference to him to be held in a building professedly set apart for his worship? 'I speak as unto wise men, judge ye what I say.' For the same reason I am as strongly opposed to the laying with Masonic ceremonies of the corner-stone of a church.

"Of course I do not consider the fear of offending certain wealthy members of the congregation a valid reason for granting the privilege described in the question which I have answered above.

"I admit that there are some excellent Christians in the Masonic body, but I judge Freemasonry on its own merits."

TESTIFYING AGAINST EVIL.

One of the great weaknesses of men and churches in the present day is, that while they stand for, or favor a great many good things, they have not the courage to stand against, or oppose many of the evil things. But true Christianity as well as true manhood is destructive as well as constructive. It tears down as well as builds up. It roots out as well as plants. The two processes must go together in order to any real and permanent progress in this evil world. The kingdom of Satan must be torn down, or overthrown, that the kingdom of Christ may be built up, or established.

The overlooking of this fact is one of the great weaknesses of present day civilization and evangelization. The attempt to build up good government without overthrowing the evil institutions now recognized and fostered by government; and the attempt to propagate and establish Christianity and at the same time preserve and recognize as legitimate and in a sense divine and good, other, and false religions, as was done at the World's Parliament of Religions, must, in the very nature of things, be a failure. It is too much like one trying to lift himself by his bootstraps, or trying to bring into harmony two things that are naturally antagonistic and mutually destructive.

We care not how much a church may stand for; if it stands against nothing it is of very little real practical value to the world, and the same is true of an individual. We are not only to favor the good and the right; we are likewise to oppose the evil and the wrong. We have a goodly number of both men and churches that are for the right, but we have by far too few of either that are against the wrong.—Christian Conservator.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Flower Sunday at the Cambridge jail.—Rev. Henry T. Cheevers at the Congregational ministers' meeting.—The Christian Endeavorers and the Knights Templar.—Dr. Strong's address at Worcester on Christsan ethics applied to the labor question.

Last Sabbath was Flower Sunday, and exactly what it should be—a typical June day. As I stood in the neat reception room of the Cambridge jail, the air loaded with the perfume from huge baskets of flowers, and watched the prisoners, some four hundred in all, as they slowly defiled into the chapel, I realized as never before the full beauty of this unique charity, and the large place which it occupies in the world embracing work of the W. C. T. U. Christianity is the only religion which seeks out the man incarcerated for crime, and tries to make him feel that however he may have fallen under the strong grip of temptation and inherited evil tendencies, he is still a man and a brother. Most of them showed a foreign nationality in their faces, and without doubt the great majority were brought there by strong drink. The saddest part is that when they go out as free men the same irrepressible and irresponsible drink demon will be lurking at every street corner to drag them down again, and make their latter end even worse than their beginning. The last report of the Legislative committee on prisons shows that our nineteenth—almost twentieth civilization—is far from perfection. The revelations there contained will shock future generations, much as we are shocked when we read the lives of those prison philanthropists, John Howard and Elizabeth Fry.

Mrs. E. Trask Hill, the State Superintendent of of Jail and Almshouse work in the W. C. T. U., lead the services, and gave a brief account of the life of Jennie Cassidy. A quartette of singers, and three little girls who recited some appropriate "pieces" very prettily, greatly added to its attractions; and Mrs. I. J. Lansing, who is president of the W. C. T. U., spoke very sweetly and touchingly to the prisoners of the lessons conveyed by the flowers,—the lesson that they were not cast off but still embraced in God's divine Fatherhood, and more an object of his solicitude than the ninety and nine who lead safe, respectable lives, and never go astray. One very pleasant feature of the occasion was the presence of our dear anti-secret friend, Mrs. Mary Carnes of Detroit, who celebrated her 81st birthday by participating in this Christ-like ministry.

There were about forty women prisoners with whom we had a separate service by themselves, a proportion of one to ten of the sex that cannot vote against the sex that can. One sweet human flower, fairer than ever grew in any earthly garden, held in the arms of its mother, was an unexpected and sad sight. I did not learn the mother's offence, but without doubt King Alcohol brought her there. Surely the state ought to step in and rescue all children of drinking mothers from the terrible environments of what they call home. For the majority of such even a jail is an improvement, for there at least they receive some protection and care.

They all took reverently the floral messengers which told of the Christ-like pity reaching out to save them, and doubtless that Sabbath was the turning-point in more than one wretched life that had drifted far from God, yet not too far to say with the returning prodigal, "I will arise and go to my Father."

Rev. Henry T. Cheever of Worcester, gave a very able and interesting address to the Congregational Ministers' Meeting on Monday, being a critical review of President Fairbank's recent work, "Christ in Theology." There are three sources of knowledge, said Dr. Cheever, concerning Deity, the Father, Son and Spirit. We must learn of the Father through the Son, and of the Son through the Spirit. The Heavenly Father by the ethical necessity of his nature must become our Saviour, yet this does not make his action in saving us less free and gracious, but more so. God from a beautiful necessity is love. Out of the pressure of that necessity came the Christ.

We must know the reality by personal experience. We must handle and be handled by it. No one can be a living Christian until he has had a personal vision of the living Christ; till the Holy Spirit has taken his words and shown them to us in all his richness and infinite depth of meaning. To the question "Where is Christ's place in Theology?" we would answer with Tennyson who was walking in his garden when the query was put to him, and for reply simply stooped down and plucked a flower growing at his feet. "What the sun is to that sweet flower," he said "Christ is to my soul."

It was not a very large gathering—the summer always brings a diminution of attendance—but it was a representative one. Probably as great a proportion of learning, talent and piety were gathered in that small audience room as one could find in any part of the world, and rightly, for they were the apostolic descendants of the Cottons and Eliots and Mayhews. No one needs to be told that the Congregational clergy of New England are very conservative as a body, but out of their ranks have come the Cheevers, and the Beechers, and the Lansings. The old volcanic fire still exists under the ashes, as any one may be convinced who has listened to the burning eloquence of the latter, as he handles without gloves the social questions of the day, and launches his thunderbolts of indignation against wrong in every guise.

The venerable brother, Dr. Geo. B. Cheever, in spite of his years, still gives the tribute of his pen and voice to every good cause, and opposes the lodge and saloon as strongly as ever, for one does not think of him as so many years old but as so many years young.

It is announced that Sankey will lead the singing at the Christian Endeavor convention, which is to meet here next month. All the tickets to the full chorus rehearsal in Mechanics' Hall on June 20, have already been sold. The prospect now is that Boston will be thronged as never before. It will be interesting to notice the points of difference between this crowd and the one which is expected in August. The Most Eminent Grand Commander not long since issued a mandate against the Most Christian Knights wearing their badges into saloons and other places of questionable resort, but I have not yet heard of Father Clark issuing any such order to his army of Christian Endeavorers.

Dr. Josiah Strong read a paper the other day before the Congregational Club in Mechanics' Hall, Worcester, which was like a mild electric shock to his audience, many of whom were moneyed men, who thought his utterances sounded dangerously like socialism. But there were others who greeted with joy such words as these from one of the most advanced thinkers of the day:

"The law of service is fundamental, not only to Christianity but to the universe.....The title of Mr. Stead's book, "If Christ Came to Chicago," is startling and suggestive. It startles because it is a sort of concrete application of the law of Christ to modern life.....We have no more business to compromise with any sin or evil in society than in our own character. Such compromise is disloyalty to the kingdom....A thousand social evils persist simply because good men salve their consciences and excuse their moral laziness by saying, Theyr'e bad, but we can't help it; they've come to stay.

"We need more of the Puritan iron in our blood. We need to return to the Puritan faith in the kingdom of heaven, and its coming on the earth. We need a revival of the Puritan faith in the practicability of righteousness, doubt of which is the great skepticism and weakness of the church to-day."

Dr. Strong pointed out one fact which I think has never before been noticed, namely, that "in apprehension of Christ's law of service the industrial world is far below the professional world. ....The soldier, the teacher, the physician, the artist, the minister whose supreme motive is pecuniary gain, is unworthy of his profession, but we take it for granted that the object of a man in going into business is to make money..and very few have perceived that the great object of every legitimate business is not gain but service."

Will our rich men heed the cry of such prophets as Stead, and Prof Ely and Dr. Strong; or will they go on rejecting every warning till the inevitable comes in strife and revolution and bloodshed? ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

A minister's son honored.—Children's Day in the churches.—Anniversary of the Y. M. C. A.—Missionary news from China.

Attorney-General Harmon, the new member of the Cabinet, is another living refutation of the idea, once held by a considerable number of people, that preachers' sons are, as a rule, ne'er do wells. Hon. Judson Harmon is a Baptist minister's son, and he is proud of it and devoted to his father, who is still living, although the infirmities of age have placed him on the superannuated list. Instead of being classed as a ne'er do well, Attorney-General Harmon, who will not be fifty years old until next February, must be credited with having done exceedingly well. He graduated from Denison University, a Baptist institution at Granville, Ohio, in 1866, and three years later graduated from the Cincinnati Law School. He has long stood in the front rank of Cincinnati's lawyers, and has twice sat upon the bench in that city; and now before rounding out his half century of life finds himself a member of the President's Cabinet and entrusted with the management of the judicial affairs of this great government. Surely he and President Cleveland, who is also a preacher's son, must smile whenever they think of that erroneous idea about preachers' boys.

Last Sabbath was observed as "Children's Day" in a number of our churches. It is somewhat difficult to get up anything original in this line, but that does not prevent trying; and the good-natured rivalry among the churches always results in interesting programs at all of them. At Hamline M. E. church, the decorations, principally growing plants, were profuse, topped off with a great arch, in front of the organ, inscribed, "A Golden Gate." A pretty feature of the services was the greeting extended by a child, in the character of "Guardian," to other children who appeared as "Duty," "Truth," "Wisdom," "Service," "Culture," and "Life," who laid wreaths around the arch and were presented with a golden key, inscribed: "Sincerity, humility, love, endeavor, and self-surrender," the whole concluding with "The Golden Gate" hymn, sung by hundreds of white-robed children. Almost exactly the same program was carried out at McKendree and other Methodist churches. The program at the First Congregational church was almost entirely musical, and included exercises entitled: "Living for Jesus Day by Day;" or "Love, Peace, Obedience and Jesus Christ." At the Eastern Presbyterian church patriotic recitations and singing were a special feature. The special features at the Church of the Covenant were, the presentation to each child of a large bouquet, choir-singing, and addresses by adults. The pulpit of the Metropolitan M. E. church was literally covered with American flags, and the church was crowded to see the children go through their singing and recitations. At the New York Avenue Presbyterian church the program prepared by Rev. Dr. Worden, of the Presbyterian Board of Publication, was followed, and at its close came the presentation of the children's offerings for the Sabbath-school missions. At Mt. Vernon Place M. E. church, the Sabbath-school was divided into three divisions of the "Methodist Army Corps," the first representing missionary work, the second church extension, and the third educational work, and speakers from each told what its division was doing and trying to do. At All Soul's church a unique feature was introduced by hanging canary birds among the floral decorations, and you may be quite sure that the feathered choristers did their part of the singing. All in all it was a very successful celebration of the day.

Sabbath afternoon special services were held in commemoration of the forty-third anniversary of the Y. M. C. A. in Washington. The address was delivered by Rev. Dr. J. G. Butler, pastor of the Luther Memorial church, who was not only a pioneer in Y. M. C. A. work in Washington, but was one of the first workers in its behalf on this side of the Atlantic. His address was largely devoted to the history of the local association and its future prospects. He specially called attention to the fact that while there were generous rich men who would give thousands or hundreds of thousands for special charities and worthy educational institutions, the bulk of the support accorded the Y. M. C. A. was from the pockets of its members and friends who were not wealthy. A larger celebration of the association's forty-third anniversary will be held next October.

The State Department has received no official advices concerning the reported destruction of missionary property and massacre of missionaries by a mob at Chengtu, China; but authentic private news is that the property was destroyed, but the missionaries escaped with their lives. It is probable that the government will make a demand upon China for the value of the property as soon as the necessary data can be collected.

MASONIC DEATH PENALTIES.

BY E. RONAYNE, PAST MASTER KEYSTONE LODGE, NO. 639, CHICAGO.

In my last paper I gave the Masonic oath in full, but intentionally omitted the death penalty attached thereto, and I endeavored to emphasize as strongiy as I could the fact that that first oath administered in a lodge of Freemasons is the real. The genuine oath of a Mason binding him to the system of "ancient Freemasonry" so-called, and without any reference, whatever, to any personal duty he may be called upon to owe to any member of the "craft." This oath refers exclusively to secrecy. The candidate swears in the most solemn manner possible to keep inviolate the secrets of "ancient Freemasonry"—not the secret business of the lodge nor the secrets of a brother Mason, but he swears to keep Masonry itself a secret, and for a violation of this oath the penalty prescribed is death—death by assassination.

In the Masonic system there are four modes of punishment laid down, namely, reprimand, suspension, expulsion and death. The three first are public and administed in presence of the entire lodge. The last being inhuman, atrocious, and contrary to law must of course be administered in secret and as in the case of William Miller, Wm. Morgan, Brownlee, and others, is simply nothing more or less than death by assassination. Now it makes no difference whether Freemasons deny this last accusation or not, the fact remains the same, and there is no getting over it. They have sworn to "ever conceal," and hence, of course, they are bound under their Masonic oath to "conceal" this; but it is there and it is true nevertheless. If a Master Mason violates any of the covenants of the Master Mason's degree, as for instance, if he reveals the secrets of a brother, if he cheats or wrongs a brother Master Mason or a lodge, if he violates the chastity of a Master Mason's wife, mother, sister or daughter (and this is by no means uncommon), charges are preferred against him, he is tried in open lodge and is either reprimanded, suspended or expelled, as the nature of the case may demand, and the lodge decide; but if he violates the first or real Masonic oath, if he divulges the secrets of Freemasonry itself, and thus does all he can to destroy the very life of the institution, then, by so doing, he forfeits his own life, and the punishment attached to his crime is death by assassination.

Secrecy is the life of Masonry; destroy that secrecy, expose the hollowness and sham and hypocrisy of that vile and villainous system of pagan blasphemy and you kill it for all time; but the Mason who does this forfeits his own life in return, and his punishment as set forth in the Masonic ritual is death—death in the most horrible and inhuman manner. Here is the penalty of death as prescribed in the Masonic ritual.

"Binding myself under no less a penalty than that of having my throat cut across, my tongue torn out by its roots, and my body buried in the rough sands of the sea at low water mark," etc. Now, the administering of the oath with this horrible penalty attached means something or it means nothing at all. If it really means what it says, then, unquestionably, the Mason who divulges the alleged secrets of Masonry must be secretly assassinated; and hence, the Masonic institution is simply a monstrous conspiracy against human life and ought to be at once suppressed by law; but if it does not mean what it says, then Freemasonry is a monstrous blasphemy, a hugh burlesque upon intelligence and common sense, and Masons, themselves, are far below the level of fools. A most horrible death is threatened any Mason who dares to disclose its true character and lay bare its palpable falsehood and shallow mockery. Are you afraid to speak out? In the Fellow Craft degree the penalty is to have "the left breast torn open, and the heart plucked out," and in the Master Mason's degree the mode of death is to have "the body severed in twain and the bowels taken from thence and burned to ashes."

According, then, to these three penalties the Masonic executioner can take his choice as to which way he will dispose of his victim; he may cut his throat and tear out his tongue, cut his left breast open and tear out his heart, or he may cut his body in two and tear out his bowels. It is all cutting and tearing, tearing and cutting, inhuman butchery, to compel its poor swindled dupes to "silence and secrecy," that the Masonic knaves in its upper and exclusive circles might ride into political power and prey upon the rest of the community. And now, my dear brother Mason, perhaps you have never looked at this subject in this light before. You know these horrible death penalties just as well as I do, but have never examined them thoroughly as I have done. And now, as an honest citizen, what do you think of it? Surely you know there is no secrecy in Masonry, but yet do you know of any such thing in Freemasonry as a sick benefit or a death benefit? Is there any such thing in any Masonic by-law in the country? You know there are any number of death penalties, but you need not fear these. If you speak the truth Masonic vengeance cannot hurt you. They dare not take your life, though they may try to destroy your character; but if you're a true man, you can have nothing to fear. Then give up the miserable humbug. Come boldly out of it and be a free American rather than a Freemason.

REFORM NEWS.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

FINDING MANY FRIENDS.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 13, 1895.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Never did the country around Philadelphia appear more beautiful to me than during the visit from which I have just returned. All nature is in festive garb. A view of the magnificent country residences that nestle among the hills, clothed in all the beauties which God has created, could scarcely fail to inspire in the mind of the thoughtful praise to the Author of every good and perfect gift.

I had planned to have gone further than Oaks, Pa., to spend Sabbath, but Bro. J. T. Myers, pastor of Green Tree German Baptist church, requested that I remain and address his people. Bro. Myers is vice-president of the Pennsylvania State Association and an active worker in reform. I could scarcely decline this request, especially as it was seconded by a promise to visit his strawberry patch, that was laden with the choicest in that line. I was given a cordial welcome by the friends to whom I spoke Sabbath morning. Several referred to the former lectures and addresses I gave here and in Port Providence near by a little over one year ago. Fruit was evident from that seed sowing. Sister Griffin had many interesting experiences to relate. She has been doing mission work, forwarding her Cynosure to others after she had read. Bro. J. Z Gottwals, an elder of this congregation, testifies by sustaining the Cynosure and its work. Bro. Myers paid for N. C. A. literature for home use. I stayed over night at the home of Bro. John Reiff. He kindly remembered our work with a contribution. Others subscribed for the Cynosure. In my visit to Graters Ford and Schwenksville I renewed the acquaintance of some, added to the Cynosure list and arranged for a future lecture.

It has been my desire for some time to meet Rev. W. S. Gottshall, pastor of the Eden Mennonite church, having heard of him as an aggressive reformer. His reception was very cordial. Unless our arrangements fail I am to address his people the last Sabbath of this month. Some years since I made the acquaintance of Bro. B. K. Hausman and son, W. S., of Philadelphia. These brethren are connected with the M. E. church. They became anti-secretists by observing the working and effect of the lodges on church members. Their convictions have been strengthened by reading the Cynosure and N. C. A. publications. Bro. W. S. Hausman recently arranged for a discussion of the question in the literary society composed of the young men connected with his church. The attendance was large. Bro. Hausman's supporter had been connected with some six secret societies, and could therefore speak from experience. There were three judges. Two belonged to the lodge and decided in its favor. The third decided in the negative. It was thought that a majority of the audience favored the opposition to the lodge. Some who personally favored it said that the argument of those opposed was the stronger.

Bro. Hausman felt confident that he could arrange for me to address these young men the 27th of this month. Pray that God may bless this discussion to the enlightenment of many.

The Beacon Light Mission here is reaching and enlightening those from different parts of the earth.

A few days since an M. E. minister from Great Barrington, Mass., called, purchased a stock of books, and engaged in earnest conversation for some time. He has gone South. On his return he promises another visit. Who knows but God may lead him to be a worker together with us.

It is a pleasure to note the growth of the German Baptist Mission in this city. Bro. Lyon, pastor in charge, is outspoken on all reforms. To-day I witnessed the baptism of five who will become members of this church. Some who have recently left various minor secret societies have told me of the follies in which they engaged. I thought to write an account for the Cynosure, but as my letter is already long I must wait until another time. Suffice it to say that much of the initiation into the American Mechanics, the Golden Eagles, and such like societies would be regarded as too foolish for child's play were it in public. Many seem to enjoy "putting through" their companions. The greater the indignities the more coarse sport it affords the looker-on.

W. B. STODDARD.

A man may well think there is something wrong with his nature when he begins to think there is some easier way of gaining a dollar than by squarely earning it.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE REVISED RITUAL OF ODD-FELLOWSHIP —REMINISCENCES.

BY EZRA A. COOK.

In 1880 the "Sovereign Grand Lodge of the Independent Order of Odd-fellows" met at Toronto, Canada, and most of the session seems to have been occupied in revising the ritual.

One of the delegates to this meeting, while on his way home, wrote to us that the principal reason for changing the ritual was the extensive sale of the exposition of that order which we issued a few years previously, and he asked if we were willing to pay $100 cash for the new ritual, which he would furnish us as soon as the Lodge and Encampment he governed received the new "Charge Books" (rituals), which were promised them Jan. 1, 1881.

We promptly accepted his proposition and began preparations to issue this ritual in the same style, as regards proof notes, that had proved so wise in Freemasonry Illustrated; and we put the Sovereign Grand Lodge, Rev. A. B. Grosh in his Improved Manual of Odd-fellowship, Paschal Donaldson in his 'Odd-fellows' Pocket Companion and Minstrel" and John H. White in his "Digest of the Laws, Precisions and Enactments of the R. A. Grand Lodge of the United States, I. O. O. F.," on the witness stand to such good effect as to encourage frankness in the membership and the withdrawal of thousands from connection with the order. Some three years later an officer of the order wrote me from Canada calling attention to the fact that the Sovereign Grand Lodge, not satisfied with revising the ritual so recently, had "Amended" it, making here and there a few alterations. He proposed that I should come to Canada, when he would vouch for me as an Odd-fellow in good standing and take me into the Lodge and Encampment. I answered this by a proposition that he furnish me the "Amended" Charge Books, which he did. Later I purchased the charge books of the Patriarchs Militant or Canton (Military Degree) and the Revised and Amended Charge Book of the Rebekah Lodge, all of which are incorporated in Revised Odd-fellowship Illustrated, which has a constantly increasing sale.

SCOTCH RITE MASONRY ILLUSTRATED.

Shortly after issuing Freemasonry Illustrated, I received a letter from a thirty-three degree Mason, proposing to sell me the ritual of the entire Scotch Rite; 3rd to 33rd degrees inclusive.

I wrote him that if the ritual of these degrees was given to me, I would not go to the enormous expense of publishing it. But he persisted and gave a detailed account of how he came to have the ritual. The official ritual, belonging to Ed. B. Hayes, most Puissant Grand Commander of the Northern Jurisdiction, which manuscript ritual was used in conferring the degrees, had been for a considerable time in his possession, and he hired a good penman to carefully copy each degree. We were finally prevailed upon to purchase this ritual, which proved to be written in a remarkably plain hand, and was evidently written with great care, even to the name of Hayes, which was signed at the close of each degree. The issue of this work was a great undertaking for us.

We employed a draughtsman and wood engraver for months on the illustrations, before beginning the type setting. The culling out of more than four hundred quotations from standard Masonic authors, besides the nearly four hundred others in Freemasonry Illustrated, was a great task for the publishers; but we took more than a year's time for it, and it is no exaggeration to say that he who wishes to know the character, claims and teachings of Freemasonry in general, and Scotch Rite Masonry in particular, will find in these quotations the cream of a great Masonic library; while every Christian patriot will be both charmed and edified by the masterful logic as well as historical research evinced in the preparation of the Historical Sketch of the order, Introduction and Critical Analysis of the degrees, by President J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College.

"Knight Templarism Illustrated," giving the three Council and three Commandery degrees, was issued as soon as possible after the disgraceful "Triennial Conclave of the Grand Commandery" which met in Chicago in the summer of 1880. Although it is arranged the same as Freemasonry Illustrated and Scotch Rite Masonry Illustrated, with 154 proof foot-note quotations, as President J. Blanchard was sick at that time the publisher did the best he could at analyzing the character of the different degrees, as well as preparing a historical sketch of these degrees.

The four volumes on Masonry which have been described, give the entire ritual of the York Rite, thirteen degrees, and the Scotch Rite, thirty-three degrees; forty-three different degrees only, as the first three degrees are common to all the rites.

As has been stated, these foot-note quotations have been powerful in the promotion of candor among members of the order, and in hundreds of orders they expressly state that they want the rituals for lodge use, and the seal of the lodge is frequently affixed to such orders.

On one occasion, I received an order for the four volumes that comprise the York and Scotch Rite, bound in cloth, and a full Russia leather case, with lock and key, made to order, just large enough to hold them. In his order he stated that he was Deputy District Grand Master of the State. The business of such an officer is to look after the different Masonic lodges, Chapters and Commanderies of the State, assist in installing officers and see that they confer the degrees correctly.

Previous to the adoption of the new Knights of Pythias Ritual, by the "Supreme Lodge of the World" at Kansas City, Mo., in August, 1892, I received from each of the two Grand Chancellors, orders for 1,000 copies of my "Knights of Pythias Illustrated," provided I would, in printing them, simply leave out the criticisms of the order. I declined both orders on the ground that a man could not innocently sell poison without putting on a warning label.

Possibly this refusal influenced in the adoption of the new ritual; but they might as well have saved the extra expense, for I purchased and issued the new ritual and it is having a rapid sale. I estimate that fully ninety per cent of my sales of rituals are to members of the orders.

Possibly some may say, If, as claimed, your rituals are extensively used for conferring the degrees, are you not helping secret societies? The best answer would be found talking with the officers and members who use my rituals. "How do you like the analysis of the degrees?" I asked a gentleman who told me he was secretary of an Odd-fellows' lodge and wanted six more of my books, which he said he had been using. "That is the best part of the book," he answered.

He evidently was sincere in this statement and not unlikely continued to hold office in the lodge, as did Judge Whitney for a time, that he might prevent rather than do harm.

The circulation of my rituals has resulted in the non-affiliation of tens of thousands.

PURGE THE CHURCHES.

EL PASO, Ill., June 10, '95.

I have been a subscriber and reader of the Cynosure almost from its first issue, but circumstances have prevented my being much of a helper in the good cause. I have watched the progress of secret societies for the past fifty years, and they appear to be in their glory in our day. I must say that I think the churches and some of the ministers have been very much to blame. I think the Christian church will have to adopt a new plan in dealing with members of oath-bound secret organizations, and admit none to church membership or the Lord's table who are members of such societies, where they are foresworn to obey the lodge, whether right or wrong. They are not true Christians, nor can they be until they renounce the hidden things of dishonesty, including idolatry, blasphemy and lying. Of course it will reduce the number in the church, but greatly increase its purity and righteousness. We must separate ourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly.

It is a poor rule that will not work both ways. I have refused to fellowship in churches where Christ is denied by some of the partakers of the emblems of the body and blood of the Saviour. Let the church take her stand and make a law, not a rule, and enforce it. The churches have acted the part of nurses for secret lodges long enough, and all for the sake of gain which is not godliness. When secretists find themselves on the outside they will begin to repent and want to return to the fold, but not till then.

J. W. THOMPSON.

LITERATURE.

BOOKS.

Rev. H. L. Hastings, of Boston, has recently issued a small book entitled "Fourteen Nuts for Skeptics to Crack." It is one of his Anti-Infidel Library Series and is full of the most practical points in answer to the current misrepresentations of Christianity. It is sold for five cents at No. 47 Cornhill, Boston. There is no American writer who has done more than Mr. Hastings in defense of Bible truth against the attacks of infidelity.

Another book of the same series just out is "Atheism and Arithmetic," by H. L. Hastings. It is a most remarkable argument to prove that our God is a God of order, by showing mathematical law in nature. We have read scraps of testimony from eminent physicians and scientists proving arithmetic in vital action, as for instance the law of sevens ruling all life; and have long been looking for just such a book as this last by Mr. Hastings. As a sample of the book we copy this from the 57th page: "The skeptic may think lightly of the command that assigns to man one day in seven as a periodic rest. He may prefer the Decade of the French Revolution, or the occasional summer vacation; but when he has toiled on, regardless of physical and divine law, until at last he comes down upon the sick bed, with the typhoid fever; as his physician stands by his side and counts his pulse and reckons the passing days, he will learn that his only hope of recovery and life depends upon a favorable change which can only occur on the seventh, the fourteenth, the twenty-first, the twenty-eighth, or at the utmost limit, the thirty-fifth day of his sickness. He may disregard the law of sevens in health, but it rules him when he is sick. France could abolish the Sabbath and introduce the Decade, but all the physicians in France could not make a typhoid fever conform to their decades, nor cure a patient except in accordance with this law of sevens."

MAGAZINES.

John Muir, the California naturalist and geologist, has written for the June Century an account of the discovery of the largest glacier in the world, in Alaska, which bears his name. Mr. Muir made his voyage at the beginning of the winter season, and was accompanied only by a missionary and a party of Alaskan Indians. They were called upon to endure many hardships, and not a few dangers. Mr. Muir thinks that the rate of recession of the glaciers is much more rapid than is generally believed. He holds that the great Glacier Bay is entirely the growth of this century, as Vancouver's chart, made a hundred years ago, has no trace of it. Josiah Flint, whose personal studies of tramp life in America and Germany are familiar, has written an account of the experiences of a companion and himself among the tramps of England and Scotland. While Mr. Flint pays tribute to the invariable kindness with which he was treated by the tramps of Great Britain, and their readiness to share food and shelter with him, he has small praise for their ability as mendicants. In England simple and artistic begging is by no means as well done as in America. The English "mocher" begs all the time, to be sure, but continually relies on some trick or other for success. Generally he dresses in a way that in America would be thought indecent and in Germany criminal. Tramping with children and babies is a fad in English vagabondage. Edinburg, Mr. Flint says, is one of the best cities for begging that he ever visited.

The June number of The Preacher's Magazine appears with its usual rich store of readable and instructive articles. The Rev. T. G. Selby, whose name is famous, discourses upon "The Springs of Christ's Authority." The Rev. Alfred E. Myers presents a succinct account of "The Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip." The articles which have awakened attention, entitled "In the Banqueting House," by Rev. Mark Guy Pearse, are continued under the sub-title of "A Sacramental Meditation." Another in the series of "Suggestive Sermon Titles," by Rev. Dinsdale T. Young, citing the titles of Philips Brooks', T. G. Selby's and Canon Liddon's sermons, is pleasing and helpful. Jan Mclaren (the Rev. John Watson) has a sermon on "The Power of Other Worldliness," full of good thoughts. No more full and fresh Homiletical Department has ever been furnished the readers of this estimable magazine. Of Notes and Illustrations a variety are given. "The Brief Sermon for Busy Readers," by Joseph Parker, D. D., is pungent. "The Children's Sermon," by Rev. J. Reid Howett, and the Notes on Sabbath School Lesson, by Rev. William E. Ketcham, D. D., the editor, are of striking interest. Outline Addresses by the same author are valuable, and Prayer Meeting Talks, by the late Dr. Deems, are valuable aids to the preacher. This magazine is winning its way to still greater popularity and meets a felt want by a very large class of clergymen. 15 cents per copy; $1.50 per year. Wilbur B. Ketcham, publisher, 2 Cooper Union, N. Y.

The Literary Digest contains articles of interest on "The Debs Sentence," "Marriage and the Social" Evil, "Malaria and Drinking Water," "Experimental Evolution," "Secularizing Tendencies of the Day," and "The Taxation of Church Property." These two articles are of special value; also an article on "The Reliability of the Gospels," "Before Grant won his Stars" and "A New diet wanted" are instructive reading. The whole number is rich in interesting matter.

How to Make Lobster Cutlets.

For every cup of boiled lobster take a large tablespoonful of flour, a tablespoonful of butter and one-half tablespoonful each of milk or cream and chopped parsley; the yolk of an egg and salt and pepper to taste. Scald the milk, rub the butter and flour well together until smooth, add to the milk and stir until it thickens; add the beaten yolks, stir for a moment, and remove from the fire; add the seasoning to the lobster, and mix the custard. This must be done very carefully, that the cutlets may not be pasty. Put it away to cool, and when cool form into small cutlets. Roll in egg and bread crumbs, and fry in smoking hot fat. Garnish with lemon and parsley.

How to Make Cold Cream.

Take 2 ounces of oil of almonds, half an ounce of spermaceti and a dram of white wax. Melt together, and while cooling add 2 ounces of rosewater, stirring until cold. Another recipe is as follows: Four ounces of unsalted butter, 4 ounces of white wax and an ounce of vaseline. Melt together and perfume with oil of bergamot. The more cold creams are stirred and beaten while cooling the whiter they become.

How to Make Caramels.

Caramel, so much used to color sauces, gravies, etc., is made as follows: Heat half a pound of brown sugar in a small kettle and stir until it is a smooth, dark brown butter, but be careful that it does not burn; add gradually a pint of hot water, let it simmer while the sugar, which is escaping from the kettle, dissolves; then bottle and cork.

HALF FARE TO CHATTANOOGA AND RETURN.

FOR THE EPWORTH LEAGUE CONVENTION IN JUNE.

On June 25, 26 and 27, 1895, the Monon Route will sell tickets at rate of one fare for the round trip from all points on its line to Chattanooga and return on account of the SECOND INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF THE EPWORTH LEAGUE. These rates and tickets will be open to all. Tickets will be limited to return fifteen days from date of sale, but can be extended fifteen days by depositing with agents of Q. & C. or Nashville & Chattanooga R'ys before June 30.

A choice of routes via Cincinnati, the Blue Grass Regions of Kentucky and the mountains of Tennessee, or via Louisville and the Cave Regions of Kentucky, with side trips to Mammoth Cave at a nominal expense, makes the Monon Route the most desirable line between Chicago and Chattanooga, Tenn.

The day trains of the Monon Route both via Louisville and Cincinnati, carry parlor cars and dining cars, serving meals same as at a first-class cafe. Patrons can order what they want and need only pay for what they get.

The evening trains carry luxurious palace sleeping cars from Chicago to Cincinnati or Louisville. The sleeping car rate from Chicago to the Ohio River, or from the Ohio River to Chattanooga, is $2.00 per berth, whether occupied by one or two persons.

Parties wishing to view the mountain scenery of the South should leave Chicago on the evening trains, so as to make the trip from Cincinnati or Louisville to Chattanooga by daylight, arriving at Chattanooga for supper. Those wishing to visit Mammoth Cave should leave Chicago at 8: 32 P. M, arriving at Louisville for breakfast, and at the cave for dinner, remaining at the cave until next morning, leaving at nine o'clock, and arriving at Chattanooga for supper.

The side trip from Glasgow Junction to Mammoth Cave will cost but $1.25; hotel bill and cave fees will be very reasonable. The guides go into the cave between two and three o'clock P. M., and at eight o'clock in the evening, thus giving those who wish a chance to make two trips in the cave the same day.

Further information with time tables, maps and pamphlets, will be furnished on application to any agent of the Monon Route, or by addressing

The Christian Cynosure.

REV. M. A. GAULT, - - - EDITOR.
WM. I. PHILLIPS, - - - PUBLISHER.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JUNE 20, 1895.

The Cynosure Publication Committee, consisting of P. W. Raidabaugh, E. A. Cook, T. B. Arnold, and the editor and secretary of the N. C. A., held a meeting to consider matters referred to it at the last annual meeting. A plan was adopted to secure well-known anti-secret editors to write articles for the Cynosure, and also to have our Sabbath-school department edited by some well-known writer. The Lodge Lamp was considered not a hindrance but a help to the Cynosure. The next meeting of the committee will be June 21st.

John N. Stearns, the corresponding secretary of the National Temperance Society and Publication House, died May 21, in the 66th year of his age. He was the leader of the non-partisan method of dealing with the prohibition problem. But his chief notoriety was as leader of secret temperance organizations. No Good Templar was as devoted to the lodge. In 1848, as early as his age would permit, he joined the Sons of Temperance. He was afterwards Worthy Patriarch of the Grand Division of Eastern New York; then he was prominently connected with the Temple of Honor, and for two years was Most Worthy Templar of the Supreme Council of North America.

When his Masonic standing and titles are added to the above, we have an illustration of the power of the secret empire in our religious and reform work. The representative of the great American Bible Society at the World's Fair was a Freemason, proud of his Masonic badge, and who lauded the Christ-dethroning institution of Freemasonry while representing the church of Christ. God's Word directs us to choose for important trusts in the church and state men full of the Holy Ghost, and men fearing God and hating covetousness. But the order in our times is usually to choose men full of high-sounding titles, such as Worthy Patriarch, Most Worthy Templar of the Supreme Council, Most Puissant Grand Sovereign, etc., etc.; and without these it is difficult to get an appointment.

Notwithstanding his high-sounding titles, it seems that Mr. Stearns left the National Temperance Association $10,000 in debt, and a strong appeal is now being made to its friends to save it from disorganization.

In these days, when the empire of secrecy is being bolstered up by the names of leading educators, it will be well to read again these telling words from the pen of the late Philo Carpenter, written in 1871:

"History, at the present day, makes rapid progress, and the utterances and testimony of great and good men of a past generation are liable to be forgotten.

"Believing these historic facts important and especially interesting to those churches which delight to honor the revered memory of Prof. Moses Stuart and his colleagues, this testimony is given to the public.

"A few years after the abduction and murder of Capt. William Morgan, Professor Stuart used the following language: 'For a long time I neither knew nor cared much about this subject; but recent attention to it has filled me with astonishment; and as to some things contained in it, with horror. The trifling with oaths and with the awful name of the ever blessed God is a feature which I cannot contemplate but with the deepest distress.'

"This saint of God, like the old prophets, was satisfied with the institutions and ordinances of God's house, and consequently did not give his influence or aid in supplementing the same with human ordinances and worldly alliances; in other words, he was opposed to secret, oath-bound societies, into which many good men, and even clergymen, have been and are being 'ensnared.'

"In 1834 Moses Stuart, D. D., Leonard Woods, D.D., Ebenezer Porter, D. D., and Thomas H. Skinner, D.D., of Andover Seminary, together with twelve hundred citizens of Massachusetts, presented to the Legislature of that Commonwealth a memorial, using the following language: 'Praying for a full investigation into the nature, language, ceremonies, and form of rehearsing extra-judicial oaths in Masonic bodies; and if found to be such as the memorialists describe them, that a law may be passed prohibiting the future administration of Masonic, and such other extra-judicial oaths as tend to weaken the sanctions of civil oaths in courts of justice; and praying also for the repeal of the charter granted by this commonwealth to the Grand Lodge of Masschusetts.'

"The memorial was received and referred to a committee composed of Hon. Heman Lincoln and others, and after long and patient investigation, and the examination of witnesses, recommended the action suggested by the memorialists. The report and the action of the Legislature on the subject can be found among the archives of the State, as published in 1834.

"Please allow me to quote the following from the report. The committee say: 'Freemasonry, as a distinct, independent government within our own government, and beyond the control of the laws of the land, by means of its secrecy and the oaths and reglations which its subjects are bound to obey under penalties of death, has occupied much of the attention of the committee.' And the committee close their report by saying: We believe, in the language of the Edinburgh Review, that all secret societies are justly deemed odious, wherever the government is tolerably free, and can only be excused where the existence of arbitrary power, foreign or domestic, leaves no other means of escaping from hopeless slavery."

THE MORNING COMETH.

If a Christian poet, sixty years ago or more, could sing:

"The morning light is breaking,
The darkness disappears," how much more now in the light of such intelligence as this from a recent issue of Life and Light:

"A new and most remarkable epoch seems to have dawned in the missionary work in Japan in the distribution of Bibles among the soldiers.

"Rev. Mr. Loomis, an agent of the Bible Society, describes, in the Japan Evangelist, the arrangements by which a copy of a portion, or the whole, of the New Testament shall be in the hands of every soldier and every sailor in the empire, including the Imperial Guard. This is done with the consent, and in many cases, with the cordial co-operation of military officials, both high and low, and the books are received with much gratitude and interest by the men themselves. Chinese soldiers in Japan, as prisoners of war, and in the hospitals, are included in the distribution, and are eager to receive all that are given them.

"Hitherto, the work of the Bible societies and all missionary bodies has been looked upon by many of the people as an intrusion that was without official sanction, and simply tolerated. Now, it is placed on an entirely different basis, which, in a country like this, marks a new era in all Christian work.

"From this time on, hundreds and thousands of the young men will no longer be restrained from the study of God's Word, by military or other restrictions, and permission will be to them the evidence that the religion of Jesus Christ is approved by the highest authorities in the land."

HEWING NEAR THE LINE.

George R. Scott, one of the editors of the New York Witness, hews very near to the anti-secret line in giving some good advice to an enquirer. Though he does not quite venture to name the secret order referred to, yet it is easy to see what organizations are meant in this editorial from the last Witness:

"A correspondent, writing from Seattle, Wash., is in doubt as to whether or not he should unite with an organization which he describes. Some of the members inform him that in it 'God's name is rarely mentioned, except in jest or blasphemy, and that the name of Jesus is positively prohibited from any official document.' He also gives other objectionable features, and winds up by saying: 'Can a Christian unite with such a body and still maintain his integrity?' As he asks for my personal views, here they are: 'An earnest Christian has all he can attend to to take care of his family, his country, his needy neighbors, and his own soul, without getting mixed up with organizations that do not tell him what they want of him until after he has joined. The truth is that most good men spend too much of their time in being organized and organizing others. There are but twenty-four hours in the day, and most men are aware of the fact that life is too short to spend any part of it in going over and over any set of rules and regulations that may be good enough once, but get to be very stale, flat, and unprofitable. In my younger days I received such a dose of 'constitution and by-laws' that a short visit to a lively prayer meeting was a luxury—not a dead meeting, where the participants looked as if they were to be hung the next morning. And I might as well be frank, and say that too many bright and intelligent men are so bound up with organizing machinery that they have no time to think out or do anything that is good 'on their own hook.' Let every man and woman reserve a portion of their time to give the Lord as seemeth them best, and thus get the credit or blame for some acts of their own."

JACKSON (TENN.) ANTI-SECRET.

Rev. C. Powers reports progress in his arrangements for the anti-secret convention at Jackson, Tenn. He had secured the endorsement of Dr. Key and Dr. Sanders, permitting the large Tabernacle to be used for the convention. The president of the committee having the Tabernacle in charge, had previously promised him that he might have it if the consent of these gentlemen could be obtained, as they were both Masons. In the meantime Bro. Powers is getting signatures to the call, and arranging the program, and has seven speakers already engaged. Let us entreat the friends of the cause throughout the State to make special efforts to attend this convention. And let special prayer be offered that the Holy Spirit may be present in this important meeting.

FROM OUR LIBERTY SINGER.

It is seldom that a man lives so long to battle in as many reforms as Bro. Geo. W. Clark, of Detroit. After spending his best days in the battle against American slavery, he has lived to give many years of valuable service to the anti-secret and prohibition reforms. In a recent letter he says his health is quite feeble, and he feels that his work is almost done. He sends us the following strong testimony which he says "is my latest, and may be my last, earnest protest against the iniquitous liquor traffic. He has dear relatives who give their influence to corrupt license parties, and he desires to warn them before he goes hence:

"Editors and speakers of the old license parties are alike fearful, and fail to say a word or strike a blow at the legal hydra-head of this deadly upas tree, the saloon itself, the saloon per se, or the criminal license that legalizes and perpetuates it, or the criminal responsibility of those who go to the ballot-box and deliberately vote the old pro-license ticket.

"They may continue to play their old license and 'regulation' racket until doom's day, and talk about the 'irregularities' of the saloons forever, but so long as they continue to plant, ground and root their main trunks by license, their pretended 'regulations,' restrictions and limitations will be futile, mere ropes of sand, a most ridiculous nullity! The saloons will go on with their diabolical work the same forever! Men who are so utterly destitute of moral principle as to engage in the gross, sensual and devilish liquor traffic at the present day with all the knowledge of its physical, moral, social and political evils, may not be expected to have any regard for either human or divine laws. They know that the license laws are made in the interest of the liquor-mongers and their co-partners, Uncle Sam's 'Revenue Department,' and they are bound to make the most out of the nefarious business regardless of its demoralizing and deadly effects. And what care they for a paltry fine now and then of five or ten dollars when the profits of an evening's run of their drunkard-making 'gin-mills' will more than pay the trifling fine imposed, with costs. The prosecution gives their gin-doggery notoriety besides.

"What a travesty is all this! God has ordained law to be a terror to evil-doers and a praise to them that do well. Was ever such another deadening and damning farce played off upon the world as this license scheme? That a civilized, not to say a Christianized, people should not only tolerate the existence but actually legalize in their very midst a traffic universally known and admitted to be the direct cause of eight-tenths of the pauperism, insanity, crime and misery, the disgraceful rows, riots and robberies, the frightful casualties and ghastly butcheries with which the community is being constantly shocked, is indeed one of the most unaccountable anomalies of the age in which we live."

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Oscar M. Fulwider, President of the Y. M. C. A., of Bloomington, Ind., spent last Sabbath with the editor at Wheaton.

—Rev. Thomas Banfield, of Lewiston, Fulton Co., Ill., who has been engaged in revival work in the Free Methodist church, was in the city last week, and visited the Cynosure office.

—Rev. Samuel F. Porter is settled for a time at Lidgerwood, N. D., and has two preaching charges, Dexter and Genessee. We trust the blessing of God will still follow, as in the past, the labors of this untiring brother.

—Rev. S. Collins, D. D., sends us a neat eight-page document giving his best thoughts on the question "Should Christians Observe Easter Sunday?" It was read before the U. P. Ministers' Association of Pittsburg, Pa., April 8, 1895.

—Rev. Chas. R. Hunt, formerly our yoke-fellow in reform work, is now pastor of the Presbyterian church in Union City, Pa. He writes that he expects to attend the Boston Christian Endeavor Convention, and visit his old-time friend, Secretary J. P. Stoddard.

—Prof. Simpson Ely, so long professor in Fairfield College, Neb., writes that he will remove this week to Kirksville, Mo., where his address will be in the future. He has regular work as contributor for several papers. He promises that we will hear from him in the Cynosure whenever he has time to write.

—Rev. W. M. Howie, of the Third U. P. church, Chicago, has resigned. He is a strong friend of the anti-secret cause and our prayers go with him. Expressions of sincere sorrow and tokens of high appreciation were extended to him and his wife at a farewell meeting of the congregation, Friday evening, June 7th.

—Rev. N. R. Johnston, of Oakland, Cal., was a delegate at the late meeting of his Synod in Denver, and writes us that it was probably his last Synod. He sends us an address he gave at the Sabbath Convention in Oakland, April 11, 1895, which is a clear, practical sixteen-page tract entitled, "Civil law and the Sabbath."

—A correspondent from a New York town writes: "This is the last place in the world for anything but 'Progressive Orthodoxy,' 'Advanced Theology,' 'The Higher Criticism,' and Freemasonry. Possibly a lecturer like President Blanchard, or the Stoddards, whose trumpet blasts might wake the dead, would arouse some few of them to ask 'the time o' night,' but doubtful."

—Mrs. Narcissa White Kinney, of Astoria, Ore., who for so many years was one of the most effective prohibition speakers, is now President of the Oregon W. C. T. U. She is a friend of the anti-secret cause, and we are glad to hear that the Ministerial Association of Astoria has invited her to occupy each of the city pulpits in rotation in the interests of temperance and other reforms.

—A minister who is laboring as missionary in New Mexico, writes that his missionary society has left him without financial support, which makes it necessary for him to drop his papers, including the Cynosure. Would that the Lord might move the heart of some one to provide the means for sending the paper to such missionaries. We have many opportunities to use funds in this way.

—Rev. T. M. Chalmers returned to the city recently after a month's absence lecturing and preaching in southern Illinois and at other points. Surely God is strengthening this brother, for he spoke twenty-eight times in as many days. In a previous tour he gave twenty-seven addresses in fourteen days. He has severed his connection with the Hebrew Mission, but expects to continue in the work of Christianizing the Jews of Chicago.

—Elder A. B. Lipp, one of our veteran workers at Sidney, Mo., sends a new subscriber and reports quite a stir among the lodge-members in that vicinity, because some of them have been counterfeiting and defrauding each other. The wicked are thus made to testify against themselves, and the lodges to destroy one another because of their inherent corruption. This may be one effectual way by which these works of darkness will be eventually overthrown.

—Rev. Henry Clay Gray of Texas, laboring in the interests of the American Missionary Society, has appointments in Wisconsin as follows: Berlin, June 16, Appleton 19, Oshkosh 23, Ripon 26, and Fond du Lac 30. Bro. Gray is in deep sympathy with the anti-secret cause, and often in his lectures gives strong testimony on the evil influence of the lodge in the South. We hope the friends in Wisconsin will give him every assistance possible in arranging his meetings.

—The supervisors of Ontario county, N. Y., have recently sold the old jail at Canandaigua. Its chief distinction was derived from the fact that William Morgan was confined in a cell in the building and taken from there by Freemasons, upon the order of the Masonic authorities, and drowned in Niagara river, after being confined in a fort for some time. The newspapers of the country, in noting the fact of the sale, refer to Morgan as being "the author of a book claiming to expose Masonry." Morgan truthfully exposed Masonry, and was most cruelly murdered by order of the fraternity, and the stain of his blood and many others is upon the order.

NO COMPROMISE WITH THE LODGE.

The following is the report on secret societies, adopted by the Reformed Presbyterian Synod at Denver, Col., last week:

There are two most important principles which ought to be kept in sight on the question of secret societies. First: That the church of Jesus Christ, in her purity, is most unchangingly opposed to secret orders. Second: That the church, in her exercise of discipline, effectually purge herself from complicity with such orders.

In regard to the first, we say in our testimony, Chap. XXII, Sec 5:

"Christians should walk in the light. Their doctrine and purposes and manner of life, their rules of action and conduct, should not be concealed. The formation of secret associations for the prosecution of ends, however good professedly, is inconsistent with the requirements of Christian principle." In the last paragraph of Sec. 2, of the Covenant of 1871, we say: "We reject all systems of false religion and will-worship, and with these, all forms of secret oath-bound societies and orders, as ensnaring in their nature, pernicious in their tendency, and perilous to the liberties of both church and state; and pledge ourselves to pray and labor according to our power, that whatever is contrary to godliness may be removed, and the church beautified with universal conformity to the law and will of her divine Head and Lord."

With these Scriptural and authoritative utterances placed before the world, and made binding upon us by the oft-repeated sacramental renewal, and our solemn formal oath and covenant of the past, it becomes our duty to keep these principles constantly before our people, and to prevent the evil against which we lift our voice from gaining a foot-hold among us. We will not enter upon an argument against the secret orders. This has been done so often that it is not necessary here to repeat it. The report submitted at our last annual meeting is an admirable and convincing argument against the entire secret system.

We would rather call attention to the danger which threatens the church. We do not stand in any immediate danger from what are known as the major secret orders. But we are in danger from the minor orders. We live in the age when the "image of the beast" is worshiped by the mass of men. Secretism is rife everywhere. In many places, business and trades are so completely hedged about by "orders," "unions," etc., that a man cannot engage in certain legitimate callings unless he will join the order by which the business is controlled. He must be able to give grip and password before he can buy or sell. In the so-called industrial strikes, men who do not belong to the striking body are mobbed if they attempt to take up the work.

So completely have all trades and many lines of business passed under the control of the secret orders, that men tell us, "we cannot be employed at our trade unless we belong to the union." This form of the evil that menaces the church today is not confined to the city, or town, but lays its grasp upon the agrarian members as well, holding forth alluring inducements to join the order that has been formed for the special purpose of securing to him his rights.

And who has not heard the loud-sounding encomiums spoken in praise of the insurance orders. Even the women have been overtaken by the mania, and many orders have sprung up lately, to the sacred altar of which only women can be admitted.

In these minor orders, exhibiting some object good in itself, that may be quite laudable; but including a formal initiation, and an obligation to secrecy; in these we see our present peril. They are the entering wedge. Stroke by stroke the church will be divided, or forced to surrender her position upon the whole question. But our testimony, founded upon the Word of God, will justify us in the exclusion of secretism, no matter what the form may be. The experience of other churches that have temporized with the minor orders, warns us that there is peril in the first step toward toleration of this evil. We therefore recommend the following action:

1. That the entire church be urged to identify herself with the movement in opposition to secret orders, and that co-operation with the National Christian Association be encouraged.

2. That sessions be enjoined to exercise the utmost watchfulness over their respective congregations, and by candid, by practical and well directed help, and, when necessary, by vigorous discipline, defend the church against the minor secret orders.

3. That the church be urged to a more energetic and practical use of this part of her testimony. While we are not more than holding our position, the enemy is active, bold and aggressive. Their number is legion. And when we remember that the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty to the pulling down of the strongholds of Satan, we should use these weapons constantly. We will yet overcome. But it will be "by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of our testimony."

4. That the cause be recommended to the liberality of our people.

Respectfully submitted,
(Rev.) T. P. ROBB,

" A. KILPATRICK,

AN APPEAL TO THE CHURCHES.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Private letters which I have myself seen, from a number of American residents in Turkey, of unimpeachable character, have fully confirmed the worst reports of the recent massacre of Armenian Christians by the Turks and Kurds. This is only the climax of a systematic course of heart-sickening oppression and persecution extending over many years.

It is only under the pressure of aroused public opinion that governments take action. After the Bulgarian massacres, four hundred public meetings of protest were held in England. I would therefore earnestly urge that every Christian minister devote one Sabbath evening meeting to a consideration of the situation of the Armenian Christians in Turkey, and that the meeting pass resolutions of protest, similar in general tenor to those lately adopted by the Evangelical Alliance.

Ministers intending to preach on the subject, or anyone wishing to secure the passage of resolutions by any club or society, can be supplied with documents and data, free of charge, by addressing Mrs. Isabel C. Barrows, 141 Franklin St., Boston, Mass.

Let us "remember those in bonds as bound with them."

COME TO THE WATERS

WHOEVER THIRSTS MAY DRINK AT THE FOUNTAIN.

Rev. Madison C. Peters Speaks of Denominational Bigotry—Salvation Limitless as Christ's Dying Love—Every Human Being an Object of the Father's Care.

"The Living Water" was the title of Rev. Madison C. Peters' impressive sermon at the Bloomingdale Reformed church, New York, Sunday, June 2. He took for his text Isaiah lv, 1, "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters." The following is from the preacher's discourse:

The figure is oriental. Ho! is a cry arousing attention. It brings up the image of the hot, sandy waste, and, by contrast, that of the cool, bubbling fountain. What can better symbolize salvation than water? Water cleanses. It is of a fructifying nature; it softens and mollifies the earth. There is healing virtue in it; it is the one thing we cannot live without; it is the only thing that absolutely quenches our thirst; it is free and easy to come at; it is a common element from which none is barred.

The Living Water.

"Ho, every one that thirsteth." There is an exclusive and sectarian bigotry, in a measure common to all churches, which talks rather of the church than of Christ, of sacrifices rather than of the sacrifice, and which practically regards the grace of God as flowing in the channels of its own exclusive ordinances, and the healing power of the living water as abiding rather in the earthen chalice than in the sparkling spring.

To hear these men talk of ordinations and confessions and baptisms and confirmations one might think that this fountain of salvation were like a mineral spring at some fashionable watering place, inclosed and appropriated and surrounded by liveried water dippers, so that the soul that will not drink from these particular denominational cups must needs perish in agony. To be told that salvation is to be found only or even especially in any one church is blasphemous bigotry. The church altogether, in its different denominations, is only a company of thirsting men, who must come and drink each man for himself. "Every one," no matter how unlovely, no matter how lost, wherever there is a lip to thirst and an ear to hear, free as the air, impartial as the sun, limitless as the dying love of the Saviour that opened it, there flows the priceless fountain unto the thirst of the world.

There is not a human being in the world who is not an object of the Father's love. A father said to his son who came back a fourth time: "No, I forgave you three times. I will never forgive you again." And the boy went off and died—away from the father's house. But God takes back his children a thousandth time as cheerfully as the first. As easily as the schoolboy with a sponge wipes off the figures on his slate God will wipe out all our sins.

The God We Can Love.

When the broken hearted, bereaved mother had worked herself into a frenzy over "the horrible decree" of the God of Calvin, Edwards and Hopkins, the old colored nurse gathered the pale form to her bosom and said: "Honey, darling, ye ain't right. Dar's a dreffal mistake somewhar. Why, de Lord ain't what ye t'ink. He loves ye, honey. Why, jes' feel how I loves ye—poor, old black Candace, an I ain't better'n him as made me. Dar jes' ain't but one t'ing to come to, an dat ar's Jesus. Jes' come right down to whar poor, old black Candace has to stay allers. It's a good place, darlin. Look right at Jesus! Dar's a God ye can love."

God requires no austerities, no penances, no pilgrimages to secure salvation. There is a religion of forms and a religion of faith, of piety and of phariseeism, of penitence and penances, of ritualism and of righteousness, a religion of the crucifix and a religion of the cross. In this they differ: The one is a religion of free grace. the other a religion of merit. Away with these false coins of spiritual currency wherewith man would sell to man the living water. My tears and blood cannot mingle meritoriously with the tears and blood of the Lamb of eternity.

The spread table is God's own table, and we are to be receivers of his fullness and grace, "without money and without price." God cannot sell his love, his mercy, his restoration of his erring children. He does not meet us on the ground on which a creditor meets his debtors. He frankly forgives us all. "Buy without money" impresses us with the worth as well as the freeness of the thing obtained.

A ship was sailing in the southern waters of the Atlantic, when the people on board saw another vessel making signals of distress. They bore down toward the distressed ship and hailed them, "What is the matter?" "We are dying for water," was the response. "Dip it up then," was the answer; "you are in the mouth of the Amazon river." There those sailors were thirsting and suffering, hoping and praying for water, and supposing that there was nothing but the ocean's brine around them, when, in fact, they had sailed into the mightiest river on the globe and did not know it. Though to them it seemed they must perish with thirst, yet there was 100 miles of fresh water all around them, and they had nothing to do but to "dip it up." You have no atonement to make for your sins—it is already made—the fountain is opened; the water is flowing around you; you are in the midst of it; there is nothing for you to do but to dip it up. Nothing to do, but something to take—the water of life—freely.

A Gentleman Never Swears.

A real gentleman never swears. I have often heard it said of a very profane man, "He can be a gentleman when he wants to be." A man who can be a gentleman when he wants to be never wants to be anything else.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic For the Week Beginning June 23. Comment by Rev. S. H. Doyle.

TOPIC.—The world for Christ; our worlds for Christ.—Acts xi, 1-11. (A missionary topic.)

The Jews divided the world into two classes of people—those who were Jews and those who were not Jews, whom they called gentiles. They thought that all of God's grace and favor was reserved for themselves alone. But in the incident narrated by Peter in our topical reference God taught them differently; that the gospel was to be preached and the Holy Ghost given to the gentiles as well as to the Jews. The middle wall of partition between them was fallen to the ground. Then was no more Jew and gentile, circumcision and uncircumcision, but all men one in Jesus Christ. Jew and gentile for Christ meant the world for Christ.

The world justly belongs to Christ. He made it, He sustains it, and He died for it. Christ died for the whole world and not for a part of it. This was the lesson that God taught Peter and the Jews. The benefits of the gospel were not to be confined to the Jews alone, but gentiles as well as Jews were to be the recipients of its blessings. Christ wants the world. He gave His disciples command to preach the gospel throughout all the world. This should be sufficient for every Endeavorer. It should be our great joy and delight to satisfy all the desires of Christ, and particularly this desire for the salvation of the whole world.

The world wants and needs Jesus Christ. No sooner had Peter seen the vision teaching him that the gospel was for the gentiles than three men stood before him ready to direct him to the place when the representatives of the gentile nation were ready to receive him and the gospel. The world wants the gospel. The time was when many parts of the world were closed to Christ, but it is no longer so. Every door is open, and from every clime and nation comes the Macedonian cry, "Come over and help us." The world is ready for Christ. Souls are hungry for the bread of life. Open doors, open hands, open hearts, stand ready to receive Him. The world is ready. Are we ready to send Christ to the world? The world needs Christ. He is the only one who can satisfy it. God has made the human soul for Himself, and it is restless until it rest in Him in Christ. There is no true peace until Christ speaks peace. He is the only one who can save the world, for there is salvation in none other.

To win the world for Christ our worlds must be for Christ. We must have our affections centered upon Him alone and consecrate ourselves entirely to Him. We must be ready to sacrifice and deny ourselves in order that we may send Christ to all the world.

A Household Endeavor Society.

What is probably the only society of its kind in the world is in existence at Nalpa Station, Australia. Nalpa Station is 60 miles from Adelaide, on the shores of Lake Alexandria, and it is therefore cut off from the usual opportunities for Christian fellowship. But the members of the household of Mr. Joseph Bonnin have organized themselves into a Christian Endeavor society. This unique organization has been in existence for more than a year, and it has proved an entire success in developing the Christian lives of its members and in promoting fellowship in the household. Six active members are now on the roll. This little society takes up a missionary collection at every consecration meeting, and in other ways does good work for those in the "regions beyond." There are three committees—prayer meeting, lookout and music.—Australian Christian World.

Christian Endeavor Notes.

Five hundred Michigan Endeavorers for Boston! The Boston 1895 committee is arranging for a special vestibuled train to leave Detroit and go right through to the convention city.

The Baptist juniors of Houlton, Me., have given a window to the new church.

The Congregational society of Calais, Me., conducts a prayer service at the city poorhouse on Sundays, alternating with the Milltown (N. B.) Congregational society.

Fifty of the 60 members of the First Presbyterian society of Santa Rosa, Cal., give to missions according to the 2 cents a week plan. Twenty-seven associate members united with the church during the year.

Fifteen hundred invitations are distributed every Sunday afternoon on the streets, in theater entrances, hotels and restaurants by the young people of the First Baptist church of Kansas City. Many souls have been won through this work.

A unique feature of the Boston convention will be the special state headquarters, located in Machinery hall. The space will be portioned off among the various state unions, and each will be asked to decorate and fit up its own share in a characteristic manner.

"Andromania In the Green."

There has been quite a sudden development in this generation of what are known as female colleges, writes the Rev. Charles H. Parkhurst, D. D., in The Ladies' Home Journal. This movement is, in part, considerate and reasonable, and in part it is a "fad." A great many girls are going to Vassar, Smith, Wellesley and Barnard because they want to be educated, and others are going because young men go to college, and it is nice to do what young men do—what might be called "Andromania" in the green. There is another contingent of young women who are motived in this by their desire to get on to an independent footing and to be in a situation to make their own way in the world, with something like an expectation that they will earn their living by their brains. and that husband and children will be to them always a terra incognita—using the college in that way as a means of helping them to escape the proper destiny of their sex.

The institutions referred to are known as female colleges, and there is something in that mode of distinction that involves an amount of wisdom that is not always suspected nor intended by those who use the designation.

Shirt Waists and Deuteronomy.

One of the most significant signs of summer is the reappearance of the shirt waist. It is worn by all classes and conditions of women.

Age or size is no bar to it. Comeliness or homeliness are equally susceptible to its attractions. It has come with bigger sleeves, brighter colors and more extreme styles. In its latest form it is an exact copy of a man's shirt except that it has a drawing string around the belt and is endowed with the privilege of separating from the garment that supplements it.

This prevalence of the shirt waist is a token of the religious laxity of the times. Its hold upon feminine favor shows that the Bible is not read or heeded as in the days of our grandmothers. In Deuteronomy xxii., 5, are these words: "The woman shall not wear that which pertaineth unto a man, neither shall a man put on a woman's garment. For all that do so are an abomination."

As the women are putting on not only the shirt waist, but the collar button, the studs and the four in hand ties, which pertain unto a man, it is very evident they do not take Scriptural injunctions very much to heart.—Denver Times.

Skirts and Waists.

There is a curious "shimmering" effect in many of the silks which is very soft, pretty and becoming. A pale yellow ground, with a pattern of roses, will have a silvery sheen over the whole thing, which makes it almost impossible to tell just what the exact shade of color or colors really is. These silks are now all the rage for the fancy waists, and also for the full fronts to be worn with gowns made with jacket effects.

It is not necessary to have skirts and waists of the same silk. For instance, a fancy silk skirt, in which there is any one predominating color, can be made with a silk waist of a plaid color, or with an all lace waist over the same color as the skirt. The advantage of this is that the plain silk waists covered with lace can be worn with all sorts and varieties of gowns, while the silk waists which match some one costume are, generally speaking, only pretty with that particular costume. Fancy effects are so much the order of the day that it is really worth while to make the best of this economical fashion when we have it with us.—Exchange.

Miss Peel's Bridesmaids.

The bridesmaids at Miss Peel's wedding in London counted seven. The four young women wore gowns of white silk, whose bodices of puffed white chiffon were divided from neck to waist with trails of shamrocks. The elbow sleeves were of the silk, with collars and sashes of white satin, both tied at the back in large loops. Their hats were of drawn chiffon, the brims edged and the crowns covered with forgetmenots, from which stood up pink roses and bows. The three children wore white satin slips, with overfrocks of white chiffon, the yokes trimmed to match the bodices of the older bridesmaids, with trailing shamrock. Their bonnets were quaint, close fitting affairs copied from a Dutch picture, faced with forgetmenots, with a cluster of shamrocks at one side. All carried shower bouquets of pink roses and mignonette.

Nahida Remy.

Nahida Remy is a sublime woman. Ten years she spent in the study of Jewish literature, history and character. She read, studied, inquired and wrought herself into a state of enthusiasm and lofty admiration of Judaism, all of which she poured forth in most beautiful forms in her two volumes on "Prayer In the Talmud" and "The Jewish Woman." Never before was the liturgy of the Jews and woman in Israel so enthusiastically presented to the world by a Protestant lady as was done by Nahida Remy. And now she embraces Judaism with one of the greatest living Jewish philosophers, Professor Lazarus, Ph. D., D. D., the septuagenarian savant whom she has recently married.—American Israelite.

Women Elect Officers.

Mrs. Sarah A. Thurston was chosen president of the Woman's Republican association of Kansas at its recent annual meeting in Topeka. Mrs. Lewis Hanback of Argentine was chosen vice president; Mrs. Edward Gaylord, Topeka, secretary; Mrs. Best of Rosedale, treasurer. Mrs. Inez M. Stinc, state organizer for the last year, was unanimously re-elected.

Professor Max Muller, who used to be a strong opponent of girls' colleges, now concedes that such institutions are of great use in the world. He says they tend wonderfully to the improvement of the whole of woman's character.

A new device for petticoats is the removable flounce. This is a muslin lace trimmed flounce and is attached to a silk petticoat of the same color without sewing, by means of narrow inter-threaded ribbon.

Where a bathroom is infested with croton bugs repeated use of a sulphur candle will stop their multiplication. These are bought at any apothecary's or grocer's and bear on them careful directions for use.

A thimbleful of powdered borax in a teacupful of water is good for dandruff Brush and then rub the scalp. Do this every day for a week.

As "readers" for publishing houses and magazines, women are said to show a remarkable instinct in the ability to discover talent.

The Obedient Egg.

Take a glass and half fill it with salt water—the water must be very salt—then fill the balance of the glass with fresh water.

Now take an egg and place it very gently in the glass, and it will float. By shaking the glass so that the fresh and salt water mix the egg will sink. Of course you make your preparation previous to exhibiting the experiment and inform your auditors that you can cause the egg to float or sink at command. It is a neat experiment, and any one can perform it and so create no little amusement in a large company.—Exchange.

The Way It Happened.

Said Toddlekins to Waddlekins,
A very homely pup:
"See, there's a sleeping pussy cat.
Suppose we eat her up."

They ne'er had seen the like, I ween,
But then they thought, you see,
That such a soft and sleeping thing
No fearful foe could be.

But something strange, an awful change,
Came o'er that furry ball,
And what it was that happened next
They never knew at all.

Ah, how they flew, those noble two,
That most heroic pair!
Said Toddlekins to Waddlekins,
"It must have been a bear."

—Churchman.

DANGER OF BEER DRINKING.

An Insidious Enemy That Is Invading Respectable Homes.

Every kind of intoxicant sold by the liquor saloon and sought after by the debauched appetite is drunk for the sake of the alcohol there is in it. Leave alcohol out of lager beer, and a man would as soon suck a faucet from an offal wagon as to touch the nasty stuff. It is for the alcohol that is in it that the drinker is willing to swallow the slop.

There is no greater delusion than that the popular saloon drinks are aids to physical development and of food value. A great German chemist, after many years of thorough experiment, says that he has proved with mathematical accuracy that the amount of nourishment you may take upon the point of a table knife inserted into a sack of flour contains absolutely more nourishment to the physical organism than the nourishment contained in eight quarts of the best Bavarian beer, and that if a person is able to drink two gallons of beer each day in the year he would get about the same amount of nutrition from the beer in 12 months that he would by consuming a five pound loaf of bread or three pounds of lean meat.

I press this question of beer home upon your attention because I am satisfied that there is more danger at this point for young men—and young women, too—than at any other. Since I became pastor of this church in Brooklyn I have had the excuse made to me by a respectable young married woman for not giving me her church letter that she had become so accustomed to drinking beer that she did not feel she could get along without it. She began to drink it because she thought it gave her new strength and energy when she was tired with the care of her babe. Alas! that she could not have heard the words of a great physician, who says, "To stifle the feeling of fatigue in order to be able to work on is like forcibly closing the safety valve so that the boiler may be overheated and explosion result." I am satisfied that this insidious enemy is making fresh inroads into respectable homes and needs to be met by the repeated statement of the truth and the setting forth of the facts with the greatest possible clearness.—Rev. Dr. A. L. Banks.

DOWNED BY STRONG DRINK.

Only One of the Thousands Who Yearly Meet Their Doom.

H. S. Jameson, a printer who has been connected with the press of Illinois for 50 years, called at The Chief office last week. He published the Chillicothe Independent in 1856 and published the first Republican newspaper in Springfield over 50 years ago. The curse of strong drink downed him, although now he is a sober man, but drink has made him a wanderer on the earth. He is a bright conversationalist, and we spent a pleasant hour with him.—Tiskilwa Chief.

An old gentleman giving the same name and telling substantially the same story as that above called at The Standard office last Wednesday, and although we did not learn why it was he was turned out in his old age yet we are not surprised to learn that strong drink is responsible for it. Like all who have met with a similar misfortune, he looks to those for help who had nothing to do with his downfall. We gave him a few hours' employment, and if those who helped to bring about his ruin could have stepped into our pressroom and seen the man of gray hairs at the case their consciences, if never before, certainly would have then given them a prodding.—Galva (Ills.) Standard.

Evil of Moderate Drinking.

Moderate drinking in some men brings on the disease of drunkenness, and in view of our present social customs it is very hard to condemn in a sweeping way all moderate drinkers, and yet if there were no moderate drinkers there would be no drunkards. There is not a walk in life, an occupation or profession where persons are free from the evil of moderate drinking. Politicians, merchants, lawyers, even clergymen are addicted to it, and there has been and is a good representation of all of these professions at the Keeley institutes in the United States today.—Banner of Gold.

HORRORS OF THE DRINK HABIT.

Eternity Alone Can Reveal the Misery Wrought by Alcohol.

One of the last products of the pen of W. Jennings Demorest was a study of the liquor problem in his magazine. In it he says: "We are fully aware of the fact that it is impossible to exaggerate the horrors and the extent of the misery produced in the homes of a large proportion of the people by this drink habit. We know that we cannot fully estimate the loss and injury that the community suffer on account of its awful tax on the resources of labor. Nor can we fathom all the crime and degradation that are the direct outcome of this terrible appetite for strong drink.

"No amount of regret can atone for the wail of a mother's awful agony over her lost son, no amount of good intentions will compensate the wife of a drunken husband, no tears of anguish or even real repentence will ever repair the broken hearts or stifle the cries of homeless, starving children who have been made worse than fatherless by the toleration, and even protection, that the liquor traffic has obtained through votes. Eternity alone will reveal all the horrors that this traffic in alcoholic poisons has produced."

The Gothenburg System.

The London Times' correspondence from Gothenburg has aroused considerable interest in temperance circles by its report of the workings of the Scandinavian system of government control. The law applies only to the sale of distilled spirits and not to wine or malt liquors. The result is, of course, the increased sale of the latter in far greater proportion than the decrease in the former, the amount of drunkenness remaining about the same. The result of the inquiry naturally is that the cure of drunkenness is not to be found in the Gothenburg plan of regulation.

Score Another For Temperance.

The latest report of an English life insurance company is another evidence in favor of total abstinence. Comparing the general section with the temperance section, it is found that in the former the percentage of actual deaths during the past year as compared with the expected deaths was 79.34 per cent, while in the temperance section the same comparison showed a per cent of 54.67.

Rough on Lord Russell.

An amusing story is told anent Lord Wriothesly Russell, canon of Windsor, who became an abstainer late in life. In giving the reason for his conversion to teetotal ideas before a recent meeting he assigned as the cause for his change that "for 40 years as a parish clergyman he had been trying to cure drunkards by getting them to indulge in moderation, but had never once succeeded." His amazement may be imagined when the next day he read in the newspaper that he himself had been trying "for 40 years to drink in moderation, but had never once succeeded!"

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON XIII, SECOND QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, JUNE 30.

A Comprehensive Review of the Lessons of the Second Quarter—Golden Text, Heb. xii, 2—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

LESSON I.—The Triumphal Entry (Mark xi, 1-11). Golden text, Mark xi, 9, "Hosanna, blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord." His knowledge of all things and His control over all things may be dwelt upon with great profit. Even the untamed ass' colt is perfectly submissive to Him. His entry into Jerusalem in this manner, which was a liberal fulfillment of Zech. ix, 9, teaches us to believe that the other prophecies of Zech. ii, 4, 12; vi, 13; viii, 3; xii, 10; xiv, 3, 4, 9, and many such like, shall be just as liberally fulfilled.

LESSON II.—The Resurrection—An Easter Lesson (I Cor. xv, 3-14). Golden text, I Cor. xv, 20, "Now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept." Unless Christ had risen from the dead there would have been no salvation, no forgiveness of sins, no gospel to preach. But during the 40 days between His resurrection and ascension He was seen and talked with by many people who were His disciples on at least ten different occasions, and after He ascended visibly to heaven he was seen by Saul and Stephen and John.

LESSON III.—Watchfulness (Math. xxiv, 42-51). Golden text, Mark xiii, 33, "Take ye heed, watch and pray." This is called a temperance lesson, and if received into the heart would greatly tend to make us temperate in all things. There is nothing so purifying and separating and inspiring as to be constantly watching for the coming of the Son of Man. Three essentials of a good servant are given—ready, faithful, wise. Ready to meet his Master at any moment, faithful to his Master's affairs at all times, and wise in his watchfulness and faithfulness, his lamp filled and brightly burning.

LESSON IV.—The Lord's Supper (Mark xiv, 12-26). Golden text, Luke xxii, 19, "This do in remembrance of me." We have here another instance of His omniscience and of the subjection of willing hearts unto Him. An appropriate and helpful word in connection with the lesson is the association of I Cor. xi, 26, with Luke xix, 13, "Ye do show the Lord's death till He come," therefore "occupy till He come." And how can we better occupy than by dying constantly to self and living unto God, yielding fully to Him for His pleasure?

LESSON V.—The Agony In Gethsemane (Mark xiv, 32-42). Golden text, John xviii, 11, "The cup which my Father hath given me, shall I not drink it?" Not even the favored three could in any sense appreciate the awfulness of this hour, but while He agonized they slept. This agony He only could endure, and it was all for me. How meekly we should bear our greatest trials, which are so small when compared with His (II Cor. iv, 16-18).

LESSON VI.—Jesus Before the High Priest (Mark xiv, 53-64). Golden text, Isa. liii, 3, "He is despised and rejected of men." Meekly submitting to be bound and led away, He patiently endures this mockery of a trial, falsely accused of many things, but guilty of nothing. Silent because there was nothing to answer, until He was pointedly asked, "Art thou the Christ?" to which He replied, "I am," and added that He should yet be seen on the right hand of power and glory.

LESSON VII.—Jesus Before Pilate (Mark xv, 1-15). Golden text, Mark xv, 5, "But Jesus yet answered nothing, so that Pilate marveled." What a night it was, what torture, and so prolonged! His disciples at first all forsook Him, John afterward returned, and Peter followed afar off. Alone, in communion with His Father, He bore it all. If this fellowship was broken because of His being our sin bearer, as it seems to have been on the cross when forsaken by God, how undescribably awful His condition was. Let each one say, "All for me."

LESSON VIII.—Jesus on the Cross (Mark xv, 22-37). Golden text, Rom. v, 8, "While we were yet sinners Christ died for us." Here is matter enough for a whole review, the center of the whole Bible story. "His own self bare our sins in His own body on the tree" (I Pet. ii, 24). Numbered with the transgressors, a murderer released because He was sacrificed, the great work of atonement finished. Note His seven sayings on the cross, and remember that this event was the topic of conversation by Moses and Elijah on the Mount of Transfiguration (Luke ix, 30, 31).

LESSON IX.—The Resurrection of Jesus (Mark xvi, 1-8). Golden text, Luke xxiv, 34, "The Lord is risen indeed." And now we have an Easter lesson in midsummer, but the great fact of His resurrection, and ours because of His, should be ever before us. See how the zeal of the women was misguided because, although it was loving, it lacked faith, and without faith it is impossible to please Him. If we are risen with Christ, let us set our affections on things above and live to tell of redemption through a risen Christ.

LESSON X.—The Walk to Emmaus (Luke xxiv, 13-32). Golden text, Luke xxiv, 32, "He opened to us the Scriptures." The thought of the golden text seems to be the main one of this lesson. These disciples were in doubt and darkness because they did not believe the prophets concerning the literal death and resurrection of Israel's Messiah, and many are in darkness today because they do not believe the prophets concerning the return of Christ to sit on David's throne and reign over the house of Jacob and over the whole earth and to restore all things of which the prophets have spoken.

LESSON XI.—Peter and the Risen Lord (John xxi, 4-17). Golden text, John xxi, 17, "Lord, Thou knowest all things; Thou knowest that I love Thee." We have here an apparent lack of faith because of an unseen Lord and a consequent fruitless attempt to supply their need in the old way ere they left all to follow Him. We have also His loving kindness and gracious provision for their need, with the gentle rebuke to Peter. Those whom He calls to feed His sheep and lambs need have no care about their own welfare, for He will surely see to that.

LESSON XII.—The Saviour's Parting Words (Luke xxiv, 44-53)—A Missionary Lesson. Golden text, Math. xxviii, 19, "Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations." Again, He opens to them the Scriptures and then commissions them to become His witnesses, preaching repentance and the remission of sins in His name, the power for this service being the Holy Spirit, and the encouragement His coming again, according to Acts i, 11. Let us be obedient to His command, filled with His word and Spirit, and ever waiting for His return.

NEWS OF THE STATE.

TELEGRAPHIC REPORTS OF HAPPENINGS OF NOTE.

Work of the State Lawmakers at Springfield—Bills and Resolutions Introduced, Etc.—Other State Items of General Interest to Our Readers.

SPRINGFIELD, Juno 13.—The sonate passed the following biiis: To license and tax department stores (Salomon's); providing for the safety of coal miners; appropriation for Chester penitentiary; giving each supreme court justice a stenographer; appropriations for Pontiac reformatory and Joliet penitentiary; authorizing all drainage districts to issue bonds; forbidding cemeteries nearer than three-quarters of a mile from any town; to pay 5 per cent. interest on municipal warrants. The house arbitration bill was amended and postponed. Salomon's bill to classify goods in department stores was passed.

The house passed the bill to submit liquor licenses to vote in cities, villages and towns of less than 15,000 inhabitants, and a number of others of less importance. The Salomon department store bill was ordered to second reading. The committeo on convict labor reported in favor of the abolition in prisons of all competitive labor; that infirm convicts be sent to Chester to make articles needed in state institution, and able-bodied ones be utilized in construoting publio works.

SPRINGFIELD, June 14.—The senate passed the Lowenthal bill regulating the grant of franchises to gas and street railway companies, etc., and the Littler rovenue bill, which will fail in the house. The governor's veto of the bill prohibiting the making of cigars by conviots was rejected, only Barnes, Campbell of Hamilton, Craig, Ford, Higbee, Leeper, Mahoney and Paisley voting in favor of the veto. Torrens' land title bill was agreed to with house amendments.

The house passed the same bill; also the general appropriation bill, but refused to pass over the governor's veto the convict-made cigar bill. The bill prohibiting domestic animals running at large was passed; also those providing relief for indigent soldiers and families and creating a pension fund for disabled fire insurance patrolmen. The senate referred the house arbitration bill, which kills it, and passed a uumber of bills of less importance. Thore was much confusion in the house during the day.

SPRINGFIELD, June 15.—The two houses of the Illinois legislature adjourned at midnight last night, there being the usual rush of business at the close, and some confusion in the house owing to the antics of a drunken janitor. The senate passod a number of bills at the closing session, among them: To prevent the use of slot machines, etc.; providing the necessary revenue for tho state; resolution for a joint committee on statutory revision; for the expenses of the state charitable institutions; Crawford's elevated railway bill—over the governor's veto; to compel paymont of wages in bankable currency; tax levy bill.

The report on convict labor was adopted. Other bills passed were: Shutting up barber shops on Sundays; flag-on-public-buildings bill; requiring the destruetion of noxious weeds; to protect laborers in coal mines. There were columns of other bills passed and at 12:30 this morning the senate adjourned sine die. The house was full of spectators and the scene was a lively one. All the the appropriation bills were passed, including one for a survey of a ship canal from the lake to the Mississippi. The Miller frontage bill, vetoed by the governor, was laid on the table.

The flag-on-public-buildings bill was passed. The joint resolution for statutory revision was lost, as was the bill making train robbery punishable with death. Salomon's department store bills failed to pass. A bill was passed providing for free scholarships in the University of Illinois. There were a host of bills that got left in the closing scramble and at midnight the house dissolved and today the members are on their way home for good.

TRAIN WRECKERS BAFFLED.

Wanted to Throw the Pay Car from the Track and Rob It.

CINCINNATI, June 15.—An unsuccessful attempt was made to wreck the Louisville and Nashville pay car between Visatia and Oaklawn, Ky., about twelve miles from Covington. Ties were firmly fastened on the track at the approach to a high trestle. The pay car was expected to follow a through freight. The freight train found no obstruction at the trestle, but a passenger train from the south came along before the pay car reached that place from the north and the obstruction was removed. The obstruction could be easily seen by a train going north, but not by one going south, owing to a curve. The pay car is said to have had $50,000 in it and was delayed some time. There is no clew. No suspicious characters were seen in the neighborhood.

Cuban News from Havana.

HAVANA, June 17.—Unofficially, it is reported here, on the plantation of Senor Romeilo, near Guantanamo, Firmeza hanged a number of citizens, soldiers and two miners. In this instance, as in many others, the insurgents mutilated the bodies of the dead in a horrible manner.

He Refused to Support His Family.

PRINCETON, Ills., June 17.—Three months ago August H. Heap, of Spring Valley, for trifling reasons refused to contribute toward the support of his wife and child, and for so doing he was fined in the county court here $200 and sentenced to jail for two months. The case is said to be the first in the state under the new law compelling husbands to provide support for their families.

Illinois Bank Closes Its Doors.

METROPOLIS, June 13.—The banking house of Brown & Bruner has closed its doors and made an assignment to D. W. Helm and E. P. Curtis for the benefit of its creditors. The liabilities will be about $100,000, with assets about $140,000.

Notes of the State.

The Toluca and Marquette Coal companies purchased 5,000 acres of coal land in the southern part of Bureau county, Ills., and will lay out a new town four miles north of Putnam.

Governor Altgeld granted papers restoring the rights of citizenship upon H. S. Sydensteieker of Champaign, who has served one year at the Chester state prison for burglary and larceny.

Guy A. Henshaw, a brakeman, was killed at Marblehead, Ills., in trying to make a flying switch.

Otto Boehme, surrogate judge of La Salle county, Ills., married Miss Clara de Stwolinsky at the suburban home of the bride's mother at Fort Soott, Kas. The wedding was a fashionable one.

Barney Brewington, whose alleged headquarters are at Litchfield, was arrested at Greenville, Ills., charged with receiving goods under false pretenses.

Fire-damp in a well near Monticello, Ills., caused the death of Jesse Carnell Prar and James.

Carlisle Speaks at Louisville.

LOUISVILLE, June 15.—The large personal following of Secretary Carlisle in this city and the keen interest felt by all classes in the currency question filled Music Hall last evening with such a crowd as Louisville never before saw congregated on a similar occasion. Carlisle was heartily received and made an extended and eloquent speech on the great question at issue.

Ohio Populist Convention.

COLUMBUS, O., June 15.—The Populist state convention has been called to meet here Aug. 1 and 2. There will be about 700 delegates in it. J. S. Coxey, of the commonweal army fame, will probably be the candidate for governor.

One of the Inalienable Rights.

SPRINGFIELD, Ills., June 17.—Assistant Attorney General Newell renders an opinion in which he holds that aliens residing in this country are subject to taxation the same as naturalized eltizens.

Everywhere we go we find some one who has been cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla. It is the greatest curative agent. It is the one great blood purifier and nerve tonic.

MISS FLAGG'S LATEST NEW BOOK!
"A Prisoner of Hope."
COMPLETE IN ONE LARGE HANDSOME VOLUME.
Price, $1.25.
We heartily commend this new work, by Elizabeth E. Flagg, to all our friends. The narrative originated in her personal experience, two or three years ago, when she sought relief and restoration from the results of a painful accident. In that search she availed herself of a unique healer in New Jersey, whom she graphically described, at that time, in her weekly letters to this paper. The ideas created in her mind by that experience form the basis of this well-told story, and thoughtful readers will peruse it with interest. While all may not agree with its deductions, ministers of the Gospel, students in seminaries and intelligent home circles will find it pleasant food for thought. We sell it for $1.25 per copy, postage prepaid.

Holden with Cords. OR THE POWER OF THE SECRET EMPIRE. By E. E. Flagg, author of "A Sunny Life," etc. This is a thrillingly interesting story, accurately true to life because mainly a narration of historical facts. In cloth, $1.00; in paper, 50 cents.

TRUST IS A CORPSE.

THE WHISKY COMBINE KILLED BY THE SUPREME COURT.

Leaving Two Parties Interested to Fight Over the Remains—Sweeping Decision by the Illinois Jurists Declaring the Trust Illegal.

CHICAGO, June 14.—By a decision rendered in the Illinois supreme court at Springfield the charter of the Distilling and Cattle Feeding company—known as the whisky trust—is annulled, and the legal existence of the corporation is ended. The decision sustains the judgment of the circuit court of Cook county, and amounts to a substantial victory for Attorney General Moloney, who instituted the proceedings two years ago last month. The opinion was written by Justice Bailey, and has the unanimous approval of his associates The decision contains a sweeping and emphatic condemnation of trusts, monopolies, and combines. In effect it is a denunciation of the management as well as formation of the whisky trust. Judge Gibbons' finding is upheld throughout.

Two Factions Battling for Control.

The reorganization committee claims that the decision is a help and not a hindrance to its plans, and the receiver is rallying his forces and preparing to resist any attempt that may be made by original owners to regain possession of the properties. A corporation having a capital of $35,000,000 is deprived of its charter. Two factions are battling for control of the vast assets of the concern. On the one hand is Joseph B. Greenhut and his allies, with their suits and counter suits, fighting for $500,000 of the stock and nearly $1,000,000 of the company's bonds. Greenhut and every vestige of the old management are repudiated, but they are still able to complicate affairs legally. On the other hand are R. B. Hartshorne, S. W. Rice et al., of the reorganization committee, now directing the management in co-operation with the receiver.

First Owners Get Out Their Clubs.

But in the background stand the first owners of the distilleries, with clubs in their hands ready and anxious to get a chance at their old properties. The former owners of the distilleries are the people who are expected to make trouble. For weeks past they have been expecting the decision. The supreme court having declared the charter of the whisky trust void, the original owners claim that the distilleries revert to them, and to that end are warring. Marshal Arnold had a conference with Receiver McNulta and took precautions to meet any possible move on the part of the distillers. Marshal Arnold has sixty special deputies at the Shufeldt, Riverdale and Calumet distilleries, and his office was crowded with reserve men and others seeking appointment as special deputies for the expected raid on the distilleries.

CHAMPIONS OF SILVER.

They Gather in Force in Memphis to Boom the White Dollar.

MEMPHIS, June 13.—Friends of silver representing twenty states of the south and west began a two-days convention in this city yesterday. Fifteen hundred delegates, comprising Democrats, Republicans and Populists, but with "honest money" as the slogan of all, filled the lower floor and a large portion of the balconies at the Auditorium when the gathering was called to order. On the stage, besides the officers of the Central Bimetallic League of Memphis, under whose auspices the gathering is held, were with very few exceptions all the leading advocates of the free coinage of silver in the United States. They included Senators Bate and Harris, of Tennessee; Jones and Berry, of Arkansas; George and Walthall, of Mississippi; Marion Butler, of North Carolina; Tillman, of South Carolina; ex-Governor Prince, of New Mexico; Senator Turpie, of Indiana; Governor John G. Evans, of South Carolina; ex-Governor Eagle, of Arkansas; ex-Representative William Bryan, of Nebraska; General A. J. Warner, of Ohio; C. S. Thomas and Alva Adams, of Colorado; Alexander Delmar, of California, and congressmen and bankers from Tennessee and adjoining states by the dozen.

The number of people in the Auditorium did not exceed that which greeted Secretary of the Treasury Carlisle upon his appearance here on May 23, but the demonstration was equally as imposing and enthusiastic as the one witnessed on that occasion. A permanent organization was effected, and addresses were delivered by Chairman Turpie and Alexander Delmar, of California, in the afternoon, and by Congressman Sibley, of Pennsylvania; C. S. Thomas, of Denver, and Aaron Wolcott, of Indiana, in the evening. Today will be devoted to speeches by some of the most distinguished of the visitors and the consideration of the report of the committee on resolutions, of which Senator Jones, of Arkansas, is chairman.

MEMPHIS, June 14.—The free silver convention completed its business yesterday and adjourned. From the beginning to the end it was an enthusiastic gathering, and its conclusions were stated in a declaration that was kept well within the object of the meeting as stated by Senator Harris. The platform dealt with the money question and that only. It is a clean cut demand for the free coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1 without consulting any other nation. There was a good deal of speechmaking during the day, and all the speakers were applauded vigorously and enthusiastically.

MOLONEY STILL AFTER PULLMAN.

Believes He Will Down the Magnate in the Supreme Court.

SPRINGFIELD, Ills., June 14.—Attorney General Moloney in discussing the decision of the supreme court in the whisky trust case said: "It is plain also from the language used by the supreme court in this case that the Pullman Palace Car company will meet with the same fate at the hands of this court that the whisky trust met with. The supreme court has expressly decided that corporations organized under the laws of this state have only such express powers as are granted to them, and that their powers must be strictly construed, and all that is not given to them in express language is denied."

The words of the supreme court are: "It should be remembered that grants of powers in corporate charters are to be construed strictly, and that what is not clearly given is by implication denied. The defendant is authorized to own such property as is necessary for carrying on its distillery business and no more. Its power to acquire and hold property is limited to that purpose."

This language, it is claimed, clearly sounds the death-knell of the Pullman corporation when it reaches the supreme court. It is what the attorney general has always claimed the law to be, and Judge Gibbons in the whisky trust case agreed with him, but the circuit judge in the Pullman case differed from both as well as from the supreme court.

Iowa Soldiers' Home Squabble.

MARSHALLTOWN, June 14.—The pension controversy in the Iowa Soldiers' Home is developing into a fierce and bitter squabble. One of the commissioners declared that the pension rule would be adhered to regardless of the temporary injunction issued by Judge Hindman, the defendants having recourse against the state if they win the case. The soldiers in the home are in a state of violent commotion, and the contending factions at white heat.

MARSHALLTOWN, June 15.—Daniel O. Ball, principal plaintiff in the pension case against the Iowa soldiers' home commissioners, has made affidavit stating that a former affidavit against the commissioners was obtained through deception and threats by Adjutant Longley, and was untrue. The controversy is now wrought up to such a pitch that about 100 members of the home are on the point of almost open revolt.

Ohio Prohibition Ticket.

SPRINGFIELD, June 12.—The Prohibition state convention has completed its labors. The financial plank demands free silver and that government establish banks as it does postoffices. The following ticket was named: United States senator, R. S. Thompson, Springfield; governor, Seth H. Ellis, Springborn, Warren county; lieutenant governor, J. W. Sharp, Mansfield; attorney general, W. C. Bates, Columbus; auditor, A. S. Caton, Coshocton county; treasurer, J. W. Hawkins, Steubenville county; supreme court judge, John T. Moore, Jackson county.

Death of a Prize Stallion.

LACON, Ills., June 15.—"Light of the West," an imported shire stallion valued at $10.000 owned by Burgess Bros., is dead of mesentric hernia. The horse took the first premium at the World's Columbian exposition. It was the best known stallion in America, having been exhibited in every American horse show since 1890.

Student Ohl Dead.

PRINCETON, N. J., June 12.—Frederick Ohl, the student who was shot by the negro, Collins, Saturday night, is dead.

Suspended for Sunday Bike Riding.

CHICAGO, June 15.—The Young Men's Christian Association Athletic Union has taken action in reference to the wheelmen who rendered themselves liable to its discipline by participation in a Sunday run. As a result fifteen members, eleven from the Ravenswood and four from the West side departments, will be suspended from the rights and privileges of membership in the union for the next three months. This does not involve a loss of membership in the association.

Des Moines Is a "Dry" Town.

DES MOINES, June 14.—Judge Spurrier has signed the decree closing all the saloons. The muict petition being insufficient, he said, the old prohibitory law is fully in force again. The saloonmen have appealed to the supreme court.

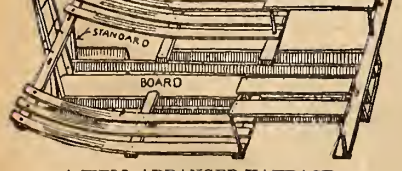
FARM AND GARDEN



A NEW IDEA IN HAYRACKS.

It Is Free to Everybody, and the Inventor Tells All About It.

A new idea in hayracks which emanated from the brain of a Pennsylvania farmer was originally sketched and described by him for Rural New Yorker, as follows:

I invented a hay rigging implement which my neighbors all think is good. I say I invented it, as it is the first one of the kind I have ever seen. The sketch, I think, will give a very good idea of it. The one just finished is built of 2½ by 5 inch hemlock bed sills, 16 feet long for the two center ones, 16 inches apart; two of the same size 10 feet long 6 inches from the same fill the bolster behind; two in front of the same size 3 feet long fill the front bolster; one arm behind is 2½ by 5 inches, 8 feet long, running clear through on top across the bed sills; one in front, 1¾ by 6 inches, 8 feet long, of hard wood, is mortised to receive the standards, which are 2 by 6 inches, 16 inches long to the shoulder, bolted between the two bed sills, the same bolts receiving the ladder.

The front has a 1 by 3 inch piece of hard wood at each end of the short bed sills bolted on the bottom of the same and long ones also, and a 1¾ by 5 inch piece at the fore end of the longer short bed sills and under the short center arm also. One of the same size is under the short arm forward of the hind wheel one-half inch bolts, which tie it strongly. The brackets which hold the boards over the hind wheels are 11 and 12 inches high and 18 inches long, and made of good old wagon tire 1¾ inches wide. The forward end standards I let stand back so the boards lie flat on the arm. This rigging is designed for a western built wagon. The bolsters are 3 feet 2 inches, and there is a high wheel for a low wheel. The standards and the brackets could be shortened or varied. If deeper bed sills were used, the brackets would be shorter.

Suggestions For Better Crop Reports.

The convention of business men and statistical experts which met in Washington last month submitted a number of suggestions for the improvement of crop reports, among which was the following:

"That arrangements be perfected with the United States consular service for sending by cable to the department on or about the 9th of each month a statement giving the best available information concerning prospects for crops of grain and cotton in their respective districts, to be published in connection with the domestic crop report when issued."

Another suggestion of the conference was:

"That the department, instead of having a principal correspondent and three assistants in each county, as at present, make an effort to secure the regular service of one or more reporters in each township, all to make their reports directly to the department at Washington."

Crimson Clover In Kansas.

We have grown small areas of Crimson clover for several years, and the effort has invariably resulted in failure. Being an annual plant and a reputed nitrogen gatherer, it was thought expedient to introduce it in one of the rotations under experiment, but it was found to do so poorly and yield so little that it was practically worthless. It can neither stand our dry summers nor the cold of our winters. When sown in late summer, as is the practice in the east, where this plant is in favor, we found that only a small per cent would survive until spring. In no case has it compared favorably in yield or hardiness with the common red clover. In the eastern counties of the state it may do better, but even there I should not expect it to be worth cultivating, when red clover is so much surer. This has been the tenor of the answers given to numerous correspondents, who, having read the glowing reports of this plant from the east, were anxious to learn what it would do here.—Kansas Station, Manhattan.

The advantages of wide tires for both the team and the road are thoroughly demonstrated.

Are you Going East this Summer?

Don't forget that the great summer tourist route is the Michigan Central, "The Niagara Falls Route," a first-class line for first-class travel, the popular line to Niagara Falls, Mackinac Island, the Thousand Islands of the St. Lawrence, the White Mountains, the Adirondacks. Oh! What a difference in the evening—when a woman has cleaned house all day with Pearline, instead of the old-fashioned way. It's so much easier. There isn't a thing anywhere about the house (that you'd take water to) but Pearline can save you time and work on it. Saves that wearing rubbing on your paint and wood work, too. And what a difference to every one in the house when the cleaning is done quickly and easily and without any fuming and fretting! You men ought to get together and insist on Pearline.

Beware Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you, "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled; if your grocer sends you an imitation, be honest—send it back. 443 JAMES PYLE, New York.

SCARCITY OF SEALS.

Report of the Commander of the Cutter Fleet in Bering Sea.

Washington, June 15.—Captain Hooper, in command of the cutter fleet in Bering sea, has reported to the treasury department that observations south of Unalaska convince him that the seal herds moving north are far less numerous than formerly. This scarcity, it is believed, is entirely due to the indiscriminate slaughter of the last two or three years. While patrolling the waters of the north Pacific Captain Hooper has boarded and searched a number of sealers, both Canadian and American, but there was no evidence of unlawful killing and hence they were allowed to proceed. In case Captain Hooper's observations in the open sea hold good at the islands it is very probable that the maximum catch of the North American Commercial company will be materially reduced even from last year, when it reached only about 13,000 skins.

COXEY LOSES HIS DAUGHTER.

Ex-"Wealer" Carl Browne Marries Her Secretly, but It Leaks Out.

Philadelphia, June 17.—"General" Coxey, the organizer of the "Commonweal" which marched to Washington last year, has been in this city, but started for home at Massillon, O. Here he heard news he did not like. It seems that his daughter Mamie, the "Goddess of Peace" of his "army" last year, has gone and got married to Carl Browne, the "general's" chief aide in that freak. It also appears that the marriage was a secret one, the couple pledging their faith on the quiet before a justice of the peace and then going their way, expecting to create a spectacular sensation by announcing the news at Washington on the Fourth of July. But it leaked out. Miss Mamie is 19 and Browne 45.

Before he left here Coxey was told the news and said: "I shall not make any trouble when I reach home. My decision on this question was reached some time ago. I told Mr. Browne three weeks ago that he should provide a home for his wife and support her there. I have advised her as to the steps she has taken. In an interview I had with my daughter in this city I advised her to postpone her marriage until such time as he proved his ability to care for her. She has chosen to overlook my advice, and there is absolutely nothing more that I can say except that my home will be open to her at any time in the future, should she repent of her bargain."

DEBS IS NO LONGER MISSING.

He Appears at the Marshal's Office Thirty-One Hours Behind Time.

Chicago, June 13.—Deputy marshals spent the whole morning yesterday trying to find Eugene V. Debs, who had failed to keep his parole at 4 p. m. Tuesday, and could not therefore be taken to Woodstock jail to serve out his sentence. The marshal was almost in despair, when at 11 o'clock the missing man, accompanied by Lester C. Hubbard, editor of Housewife, made his appearance at the marshal's office and said he had been taken sick while at Hubbard's house and had gone to sleep. His host had concluded not to awaken him and he had slept all night and missed his appointment with the marshal.

Debs was taken into the marshal's private office and later placed in the custody of a deputy, who put him to bed. Marshal Arnold said: "I will let him go to bed until nearly train time and nobody shall bother him. He will be taken to Woodstock at 5 o'clock this afternoon in company with Director M. J. Elliott, who arrived from the east this morning." The reporters for the afternoon press here who saw Debs when he showed up are unanimous in the statement that the A. R. U. president had been toying with that which "biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder."

Yesterday afternoon at 5 o'clock Debs was taken to jail at Woodstock, and Howard taken one hour later to Will county jail, Joliet.

OFFER FOR WHISKY TRUST PLANT.

Reorganization Committee Wants to Buy It for Nearly $10,000,000.

Chicago, June 15.—The reorganization committee offers to purchase the plant of the whisky trust for $9,800,000, provided the court orders the receiver to allow as consideration such a proportion of the sum total as would be divided among 347,067 shares of stock held by the reorganization committee. This offer is made in a petition for the judicial sale of the trust's effects, which was filed in the United States circuit court clerk's office last evening.

The petitioners set forth as reasons for an immediate sale the fact that the business under the receivership does not tend to any permanence and the retention of the regular trade in the face of sharp competition is impossible, and that further control by the receiver tends to the ultimate injury of the stockholders. The petition will be called up next week and be attacked by all the opposing interests.

POPULISTS OF IOWA.

The Convention at Des Moines Nominates a State Ticket.

Des Moines, June 12.—At the session of the People's party state convention E. H. Gillette, ex-representative, was made permanent chairman and I. W. Ivory permanent secretary. After several speeches the following nominations for state offices were made: Governor, Sylvester Crane, of Davenport; lieutenant governor, A. R. Sterrett, Humbolt; supreme judge, I. W. Ivory, Mills county; superintendent of instruction, E. J. Stason, Sioux City. The following is the platform adopted:

First—The People's party of Iowa in convention assembled reaffirms the principles of the Omaha platform.

Second—We denounce the late decision of the supreme court on the income tax, the recent acts of government by injunction in the interests of corporate wealth and the issue of interest-bearing bonds.

Third—Recognizing with satisfaction the expression of individual opinions among citizens irrespective of party in favor of the restoration of silver to its constitutional place in the coinage of the country at the ratio of 16-to-1, we extend the right hand of fellowship to all men who are willing to join us in the dethronement of the money power of Wall street and Europe and the emancipation of the producing classes of the world.

Fourth—We declare for the adoption of the initiative and referendum.

Fifth—We further demand that until such time as a government system of finance can be established that all banking institutions, national, state and private, be required to give security to depositors for all moneys received for deposit.

Sixth—We demand that the legislature of Iowa shall provide by adequate legislation for the inspection of all workshops and factories where more than ten persons are employed, that the physical and sanitary conditions may be improved and the lives, limbs, health and convenience of the employes be better guarded.

Seventh—The salaries of our public officers being far in excess of the returns from productive industry, we demand of the next general assembly a readjustment of the salaries of all public officers on a basis to correspond with the reduced prices received for the products of labor.

Eighth—We believe that the expenses of government should be borne in proportion to the ability of the citizens to pay them, and to this end we favor a graduated state tax upon incomes, also a state inheritance tax similar to those of New York and Illinois.

Ninth—We demand a state tax of 10 per cent. upon all future contracts made payable in gold, the same to be paid by the holder.

INDIANA TOWN SWEPT BY FIRE.

All Except Six of the Business Buildings Totally Destroyed.

Decatur, June 13.—The town of Geneva, in the southern part of this county, was almost entirely destroyed by fire. The fire was first discovered in Julius' grocery store and spread rapidly to adjoining buildings. The town has no fire protection, and owing to the drought all the cisterns and many of the wells were dry, leaving the town at the mercy of the flames. The entire business portion of the place was burned, excepting about six business rooms.

The thing that saved the Shamrock hotel and the bank building was the blowing up with dynamite the saloon building adjoining the Shamrock before the flames reached it. The aggregate loss on buildings and stock will reach over $100,000. In no instance was stock saved from the burning buildings. Several people were seriously injured during the fire, but no fatalities have been reported. There was not over $10,000 insurance carried by merchants in Geneva, making everything a total loss and leaving several business firms almost penniless. Four fine residences with all their contents were also consumed. The fire department in this city was sent for, but could not reach the fire in time to save anything.

Will Fight the Anti-Gambling Law.

Butte, Mont., June 15.—The proprietors of the gambling houses throughout Montana have decided to fight the anti-gambling laws which go into effect on July 1. The Atlas gambling house in Helena will remain open until after the law goes into effect and the case will at once be taken before the supreme court, which, it is said, consented to hear the arguments without delay. Ex-Senator Sanders has been engaged by the gamblers to conduct the contest.

Four Killed by an Explosion.

Fall River, Mass., June 15.—Four persons were killed and a half score were injured by the explosion of a new boiler in the Langley harness shop, while the building was completely wrecked. The names of the dead are: Adele Dube, Lelia Horton, Adolph E. Bellefuille and Robert Murray. The seriously injured are: Thomas Barry, will undoubtedly die; Mattle Duroches, fatally; William Russell, Alice Tremblay and Ida Lepage.

Wholesale Robbery of Ore.

Lake City, Colo., June 15.—It has been discovered that the Golden Fleece Mining company has been robbed for an unknown number of months of its high grade ore. The amount taken monthly is estimated at $40,000 in value.

Wheaton College graduates twelve students this week.

The excellent program of the Tennessee State Anti-secret Christian Conference at Jackson July 17, 18 will be published next week.

College students who plot in secret fraternities against their fellows, will do the same when they go out into society, and thus become dangerous citizens.

The student who learns to depend for promotion in college upon a secret fraternity, will naturally confide in the help of secret orders in active life.

Archbishop Kain at St. Louis endorses the pope's decree that men cannot belong to the Roman Catholic church, and secret societies not dominated by that church, at the same time.

The Baccalaureate sermon in Wheaton College Chapel last Sabbath, by Dr. Hulbert, of the Oak Park Congregational church, was the strongest sermon it has been our privilege to hear for some time. It was a powerful plea for the preaching of the old fashioned Bible doctrines as the only salvation for men and nations.

We leave our readers to judge of what must be the moral and intellectual influence upon the members in a lodge where the time is spent in exercises such as are indicated in the following from a Nebraska paper: "Last Monday night our officers were installed, which together with voting on forty-two applications and initiating two candidates in the Junior and four in the Workman degree, kept us pretty busy until near midnight. The boys all reported a glorious time, and are anxiously waiting for the next meeting. Our goat is in excellent trim and does fine work. Has the bucking process down to a fine point. He has been taking lessons of the worst bronco that we could find."

The National Christian Citizenship League, with headquarters at 153 La Salle street, is sending out requests for 100,000 Christian Citizenship sermons on Sabbath, June 30. Favorable responses are coming in from ministers in all sections. We hail with gladness every such movement that will lead ministers to preach the much neglected Gospel for the nation.

It is a fearful charge that no public evil exists, except by consent of the churches; that is, the influence of the church, if only combined, is strong enough to crush out such evils as intemperance or the lodge. In the anti-slavery agitation it was said: "Every man consents to slavery who does not exhaust his strength in endeavors to prevent it." The same is true of the secret lodge question; every man consents to the secret lodge who does not exhaust his strength to prevent it. Are we doing all we can to resist this enemy of Christianity?

At a recent Baptist Congress in Detroit, President Harper, of the Chicago University, and President Andrews, of Brown Uuiversity, advocated the Higher Criticism, saying that the last twenty-seven chapters of Isaiah were written by some other man. Prof. Howard Osgood, of Rochester, replied, by reading a criticism on Isaiah, in almost the same language as was used by Prof. Harper. He then exclaimed after a long pause: "The author of this criticism was Thomas Paine." The effect was wonderful and brought down the house with ringing applause.

Rev. Dr. Rogers said in a sermon last Sabbath at the Church of Our Father: "Look at the great gathering that will meet in Boston—40,000 young people all rallying about the standard of Christianity. They recognize no lines of church nor sect, but only the name and example of the man Jesus Christ. And in their very meeting they have recognized the onward progress of the times, for, to speak in political terms, they have put an ethical plank in their platform by declaring for good citizenship as one of the necessary accompaniments of religion. This is but another example of the widespread application of practical piety."

The drift of our colleges in some quarters toward liberalism and skepticism is a fearful sign of the times. A year ago we heard the president of an Indiana college preach the Baccalaureate sermon for the State University. He was an evolutionist of the advanced school, and impressed the students that the decalogue and much of the Bible was behind the times as a standard of morality. A few days ago Dr. Lyman Abbott, Henry Ward Beecher's successor, gave an address in much the same strain in the commencement exercises at the Northwestern University, in which he apologized for his Darwinian theory of creation with the flippant remark, that he "would as soon have an ape for an ancestor as a mud man." We think it high time that parents should be warned against the peril of sending their sons and daughters to such institutions.

The public school board of Osceola, Iowa, has enjoined teachers to discourage dancing and card-playing among pupils because it is injurious to morality. This example should be followed by every school board and college faculty. But dancing cannot be suppressed among students where secret college fraternities exist. We are convinced by several years' residence in a university town where college fraternities are popular, that their halls are chiefly used as dance-halls; and by concealment behind tyled doors and blinded windows they defy both college and church authorities.

Dr. P. S. Henson, speaking of the Higher Criticism, says: "The devil does not walk abroad as he used to, with horns and hoofs, and a forked tail, and breath that smells of brimstone; but he comes in the guise of a gentleman with eye glasses on his nose, encyclopedias under his arms, and the learned lingo of philosophy on his lips. He does not squarely and impudently affirm that there is no God, but shakes his sapient head, and shrugs his shoulders and says, he doesn't know, and he rather suspects that nobody knows. He does not deny that the Bible is of divine origin, but he suggests that while there is doubtless much truth in it, yet allowance must be made for the errancy of the human element in it, and for the fact that it was written under very different sociological and scientific conditions, when the faculties of men were clouded by ignorance and fettered by superstition.

A Nebraska correspondent writes that the German Lutheran church, at Bruning, has been much agitated of late by the secret society question. This denomination has strong rules against the admission of secret society members. Yet members of some of the minor orders crept into the congregation, and when they were called to account they sent for a lodge minister to preach for them, threatening to divide the congregation. An M. E. minister from Strang, who was a member of the lodge, came to the defense of the secret societies, defending them with all his might. But the result was the congregation has reaffirmed its conviction that all connection with secret societies is sinful, and that members of such minor orders as the Modern Woodmen, and the A. O. U. W., also the G. A. R., cannot be members of the church, entitled to voice, vote or election to office in the congregation. This experience of the church at Bruning is an illustration of the agitation that will yet shake nearly all the churches in our land. No compromise with even the minor orders is the only safe ground. When such orders as the G. A. R. or A. O. U. W. are received into church membership, then the testimony of that church against secret organization is silenced. Any giving way to even these orders, like the breaking away of a portion of the levee along the lower Mississippi, it opens the way for the whole desolating tide of secretism.

NECESSITY OF REPENTANCE.

Why is it that one church has distinctive principles which another does not have? Is is not because of the error tolerated in some churches which, as accumulated rubbish, hides the true foundation of a hope in Christ? Much that covers up this foundation and hides it from sight is an imperfect understanding of the words: "Lo, here is Christ, or, lo, there is Christ." "If they tell you he is in the secret chambers, believe it not." This direction is ignored by thousands of professing Christians, and this calls loudly for churches and Christians to have distinctive principles on this line, in order that they may contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints on the secrecy question.

Christ Jesus the Lord has commissioned his ministers to preach "repentance and remission of sins in his name." If the lodge ignores the name of Christ, it is the minister's duty to preach repentance for the sin of being identified with it. It is well known by many that the lodge rejects Christ "in the secret chambers," but a large majority are deceived and made to believe, "lo, here is Christ." They are commanded by the Lord to "believe it not," and to show their faith in this line by having "no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness." All who disobey and would "rather" not "reprove them," thereby showing that they sympathize with the lodge, should be called to repentance by the ministers. It is because repentance has not been preached on this line, that the foundation of a hope in Christ is so obscure to many. "If we offend" in one point we "are guilty of all." The reason why reform churches holding distinctive principles are necessary, is plain; young converts are in danger of receiving error into their tender hearts, in the name of truth. The devil knows the heart of young converts are open to the truth, so he first tries to plant the seed of error. It is necessary for the light of the Holy Spirit to shine on every line. There is power enough in Jesus' name to save men from the lodge, and it is as necessary, as to be saved from any other sin. "Other foundation can no man lay."

De Kalb, Ia., June 18th. CYRUS SMITH.

FROM THE JERUSALEM JEWISH MISSION.

How many Jews have called on me to hear the message of redeeming love, or to discuss the evidences of the Messiahship of the Lord Jesus, since our return, I cannot tell, for I keep no record—I have no leisure for such details. Rarely a day passes without some one calling, two, four six, or more—for they usually come in pairs or groups, and frequently stay for hours; and on Saturdays and holidays seldom less than eight to twelve, and sometimes over twenty. I may, however, say that now it is mainly those who are desirous of hearing more of the Gospel of salvation that call most frequently; some several times a week. They come at all hours of the day, but more numerously in the afternoons; and in order not to disappoint any, I seldom go out except when duty compels.

That they come more numerously and more frequently than the Rabbis like is proved by the wave of persecution that is now raging against this mission. The inquirers—I should call them converts, though they are not baptized—have been sent for by the chief Rabbi and remonstrated with severely. Last Saturday two of his emissaries were watching the door of this house, one on each side. All the while four young men of the highest families were in this study; and we saw from the window a group of young Rabbi and three others were deterred from coming in on seeing the chief Rabbi's emissaries watching the door. One of the above four was made to promise that he would not enter that door again; and the same day he came, entering by the back door of the house! The effect, so far, is to inspire some with courage to declare their convictions publicly. I have had plenty of experience of this sort of persecution, both in Spain among Roman Catholics, and the Jews in other countries, and I expect, as in those instances, a larger influx, by and by, than heretofore. The cause is the Lord's, and he can make even the wrath—envy and opposition—of man to praise him.

The English services on the Lord's day, morning and evening, are held only during the traveler's season, which begins in October and ends in May. They are intended for non-Episcopalians, not accustomed to Liturgical worship. Natives—Jews, Greeks, Catholics, etc.—attend sometimes. These services furnish an opportunity to brother ministers of the Evangelical churches to testify for the Lord Jesus in the city of Redemption, though it is rare that I hear of their presence in time, and most frequently I have to preach myself. They have been held on twenty-four Sabbaths, but I have no record of the numbers present at each service.

Until I get an efficient assistant I may have to relinquish this branch of the work. We solicit the prayers of our friends and supporters for God's blessing on all our labors, to his own glory and praise and the advancement of his kingdom.

Jerusalem, May 3, 1895. A. BEN OLIEL.

A ROMANIST ON MASONRY.

A writer in the Catholic Review quotes this instruction from the Pope's encyclical letter: "In the first place tear from Freemasonry the mask with which it covers itself; in the second, instruct the people." He then proceeds to carry out these instructions as follows:

"Tear off the mask!" It is founded on fraud, deceit and studied falsehood. "Instruct the people," for its ultimate object is to destroy all religion, and especially the Catholic religion. It is essentially an educational institution, perfection in every degree being made the test for advancement to a higher class. It is, in this respect, like a well-organized army: the members are advanced or promoted from one degree to another according to their aptness, their diligence, their zeal to promote the interests of the service. There is this difference, however: that a member of an inferior degree knows no more of what passes in the lodges above him, than those who are not Masons; and members of the higher grades swear that they will not show the rules, nor reveal any of the secrets, signs or passwords to anyone in the lodge below him. There are general signs by which all Masons recognize one another. The Master Mason does not know that, if he is ever a candidate for the Knight Templar's degree, the "Most Eminent Commander" will address him: "Pilgrim, the fifth libation is taken in a very solemn way." "To show you that we here practice no imposition, I give you this pledge." He drinks wine from a skull; fills again and tells the candidate that the fifth libation is called, among Masons, "The Sealed Obligation." Nor will he, until he is initiated in the "Ancient Scottish Rite," know that the Grand Master will place a dagger in his hand and tell him to pierce the tiara resting on a skull, and repeat with him: "Hatred and death to Religious Despotism!" The tiara of course, represents the pope, and the pope is supposed to represent "Religious Despotism," or the Catholic church. Then, every Mason of the thirtieth degree Scottish Rite has, as he swears "of his free will," assassinated the pope, at least in intention.

BIBLE VERSUS SECRET SOCIETIES.

Article 15 in the Testimony of the United Presbyterian Church is, "We declare that all associations, whether formed for political or benevolent purposes, which impose upon their members an oath of secrecy or an obligation to obey a code of unknown laws, are inconsistent with the genius and spirit of Christianity, and church members ought not to have fellowship with such associations."

1. It is not secrecy simply considered that we and the Bible condemn. Prov. 11:13: "A talebearer revealeth secrets; but he that is of a faithful spirit concealeth the matter."

But second, that which the Bible and we condemn is the fact of a person giving an oath or promise that he will not make known to others matters which are to be subsequently communicated to him, or that he will obey a code of laws with which he is not made acquainted until after the oath or promise be given by him. (1) Such an obligation is inconsistent with our subjection to the law of God. Gal. 3:10: "Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them." Isa. 8:20: "To the law and to the testimony, if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."

2. Such an obligation is enslaving and ensnaring to the conscience. 1 Cor. 7:23: "Be not ye the servants of men."

3. It is contrary to the example of Scripture saints. See Gen. 24:2–9.—Abraham's servant. 1 Sam. 20.—Jonathan and David.

4. It is contrary to the example of Jesus. Jno. 18:20: "In secret have I said nothing."

5. It is contrary to the example of the apostles. 2. Cor. 4:2: "But have renounced the hidden things of dishonesty, not walking in craftiness, nor handling the Word of God deceitfully: but by manifestation of the truth, commending ourselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God."

6. The Christians are forbidden to act upon this principle. (a) By Jesus. See Matt. 5:14–16: "Let your light so shine before men." Matt. 24:26: "Wherefore if they say unto you, 'Behold, he....is in the secret chamber; believe it not.'" (b) By the Spirit. Eph. 5:11,12: "And have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them, for it is a shame even to speak of those things which are done of them in secret."

7. This principle of secrecy is represented as a favorite one with the wicked. John 3:19: "Men loved darkness rather than light because their deeds were evil."

8. Membership in, and fellowship with, such societies is inconsistent with that principle of separation from the world which is so repeatedly and explicitly enjoined upon us in God's Word. 2 Cor. 6:14–18: "....Come out from among them and be ye separate, saith the Lord."—Rev. A. K. Strane.

A PRACTICAL QUESTION.

There is something radically wrong when those who work most get least, and those who work least get most. This fact forces itself home to every thoughtful mind.

In New York, "fourteen people sleep in one bedroom, without light or air; 17,000 people are crowded on 30 acres of land, and 15,000 children and 60,000 men and women without homes wander in the streets by day and sleep in them by night, under any shelter they can find;" while in the same city a daughter of capital sits upon a $2,000 piano stool, plays upon a $15,000 piano, lives an eternal summer within a $4,000,000 palace, surrounded by brick and iron walls, upon the outside of which are militia of the State for its protection! The cry of our forefathers was, "Millions for defense, but not one cent for tribute." That was the cry which gave liberty to them; the cry which gave in answer, out of bloodshed and sacrifice, a free republic. To-day put your ear to the ground and listen to the tread of millions of children going over the hills to the poorhouses, crying "give us this day our daily bread," and then hear the blood-curdling slaves' cry; "Millions for tribute to Lombard street bankers and Wall street brokers, but not a cent for defence of home and child liberty."

The power of bonds to rob labor, and produce the dangerous extremes of poverty, woe and wealth, may be illustrated in the following manner: James is a producer, and represents the people; John is a capitalist and represents the bondholding class. James is the laboring people; John is the capitalist. Twenty years ago John had one thousand dollars in greenbacks; it was a surplus thousand, and he invested it in a government bond drawing 6 per cent interest. James also had one thousand dollars of the same kind of money at the same time; but it was all he had, and he was obliged to invest his in land from which he could gain a livlihood for self and family. Each invested their money as circumstances permitted. Now John's bond is not liable for any purpose whatever; but James' land is taxable. Look—you see the non-taxable bond system gives John this advantage over James: John can invest his money so as to escape taxation, while James' poverty excludes it; but in the condition he now is, you see he must add his labor to it. Look down the line farther, please, at our imported, untaxable bond system. I will say (with Mr. Willey) that had all the wealth of the nation been taxed equally for those twenty years, taxes would have averaged 2 per cent, or twenty dollars on the thousand; but John's bond not being taxable, James must pay the $20 in John's stead. What John gets rid of paying, James must pay.

Now John's bond not being taxable he has saved $20 which he ought to have paid in taxes. But, you see, it has fallen that much heavier on James (the laborer), and John has saved $20 which he ought not to have been permitted to save. So far James has only paid John's taxes; he must now pay his own, which will require another $20. The comparative difference may then be stated thus: James has paid his own and John's taxes, which has taken $40. John having escaped taxation can count himself $20 ahead. He now has $1,020. Look at the opened gap of $60 between them in one year on a $1,000 investment.—Sel.

RESTING WEARY NERVES.

There is nothing which will give a chance for rest to overtired nerves so surely as a simple religious faith in the overruling, wise and tender Providence which has us in its keeping. It is in chafing against the conditions of our lives that we tire ourselves immeasurably. It is in being anxious about things which we cannot help that we often do the most of our spending. A simple faith in God which practically and every moment, and not only theoretically and on Sabbaths, rests on the knowledge that he cares for us at least as much as we care for those who are the dearest to us, will do much to give the tired nerves the feeling of the bird in its nest.

Do not spend what strength you have, like the clematis, in climbing on yourself, but lay hold on things that are eternal, and the peace of them will pass into your soul like a healing balm. Put yourself in the great everlasting currents, and then you can rest upon your oars, and let those currents bear you on their strength.—Anna C. Brackett.

CHURCH AND STATE.

1. The church and state, when considered in their relationship to one another, must both be taken to be organized bodies. It is clear at first sight that the state is an organized body, for a state is a nation organized into a government having a definite authority, which all citizens are asked to acknowledge, and having officers and laws. If then the union of the church and state is to be considered, the church must also be an organized body, else no union would be possible. Two things in a different scale or order of being could not in the nature of things be united. If a person enters into a union, it must be with a person, as in marriage. If an organized body enters into a union, it must be with an organized body. If, therefore, a state, which is from its nature an organized body, enters into a union, it must be with an organized church.

2. A union of church and state must therefore be a union of some particular state with some particular church. This statement is in accord not only with the principle founded in nature just given above, but with the facts of history. In England the union is between the state and some particular organized church, viz: the Episcopalian; in Scotland, between the state and the Presbyterian church; in Prussia, between the state and the Lutheran church; in Austria, between the state and the Roman Catholic church. In ancient heathen nations, where there was but one form of religion, the state was in union with the organization of that belief, as in Egypt and Assyria. When the Roman emperors proposed to take the Christian church into union with the empire they began at once to unite the organizations, to make laws for the organized church, and control the appointment of her officers. There is now, has been, and can in the nature of things be, no union of church and state except between the state and some particular organized church. The union must be between the state and what we call a denomination.

3. That church and state may not be united, it is necessary only that their organizations be kept separate. If, when united, it can be only as organizations, it is clear that when the organizations are not united there is no union. That organizations may be kept separate, there are three things to be considered:

a. Independent choice of officers. In England the higher officers of the Episcopalian church are appointed by the civil power. In many places in the whole kingdom the land owner or the patron has the power to select pastors for the congregation made up of his tenants, even when he chooses one contrary to their wish. Bismarck quarreled with the pope some years ago on the ground that no Roman Catholic bishop should be allowed to enter on his office until he had taken a certain oath of allegiance to the Prussian government. In such cases there is not an independent choice of officers and consequently there is a union of church and state.

b. Independent power of making laws. The English Parliament makes laws for the Episcopalian church. In the Revolution Settlement of 1888 the Parliament decided that the Prelatic persecutors should be admitted to the Presbyterian church. The Roman emperors made laws for the church, both pagan and Christian. This constitutes a union of church and state.

c. Independent means of pecuniary support. Whoever controls the money will assuredly undertake to control an organization which the money supports. This is a principle which has been found true in every relationship since the world began. That either church or state then should not have independent means of support would inevitably take away its independence.

These three things make up an organization, officers, laws, and means of support, and when these are independently provided for, organizations are not united.—Rev. W. J. Coleman.

STOP THE RUM.

A few years ago, in a lonely hut in Central Africa, a wornout man died upon his knees, praying in the fervor of a consecrated, loyal soul, "Oh, let thy kingdom come!" He had opened, he thought, the great Dark Continent to the onward march of Christian civilization and the light of God's truth. Christendom shouted for joy, and the procession started across the sea. Watch it; one missionary, 70,000 gallons of rum; one missionary, 70,000 gallons more of rum; another missionary, another 70,000 gallons; and so on it goes, rum and missionaries, missionaries and rum. Thus we touch the great Congo State. Watch again. One convert to Christ, a hundred drunkards; one more, a hundred more. The missionary's heart grows sick: it cries out, "Oh Christians at home, for the love of Christ, stop the rum!" But, as the climate does its exhaustive work, and one by one the brave workers sink beneath the burning sun, hearts at home are discouraged, and the next ship goes only with rum —without the missionary. Under the madness of intoxicating liquors sent from Massachusetts, two hundred of those people (of Congo) slaughtered each other in a single day. Again we are told of a single gallon of this drink causing a fight in which fifty were killed. Judas sold his Lord for seventeen dollars, but America hurries fifty souls to the bar of God for ninety cents.—Selected.

ARE WE A CHRISTIAN NATION?

The Christian amendment to the United States Constitution is necessary to the consistency of this as a Christian nation. There is a sense in which we are a Christian nation. We are a union of States, nearly all of which have made in their constitutions explicit reference to God and religion. We are regarded as a Christian nation by all the civilized world, and we are pleased with this reputation, and highly esteem ourselves as thus distinguished from the people of China, Japan, India and the Mohammedan nations.

But here is the inconsistency that we are not a Christian nation in effect, or to any purpose. In the paper which I hold in my hand, Chief Justice Strong speaks as follows: "All the laws of this country in favor of a Christian morality are enacted and enforced outside of the Constitution. They rest only upon the basis of what is called common law. We have strictly no oath, no law against blasphemy, Sabbath breaking or polygamy that has any better foundation." Such are his words.

Here, then, is a great inconsistency. If you had a neighbor who was gratified to pass for your friend, and was your friend in the sense of spending a leisure evening at your fireside now and then, and exchanging hospitalities with you, but who is wanting and declines to go a step further as soon as an emergency arises that requires him to write himself your friend, to accept the responsibility, to meet the danger or the odium of being your friend, you would feel that his claim to friendship for you was at least hollow and inconsistent. And such seems to be the position of the American nation in the matter of which we are speaking. She is a Christian nation by the courtesy of mankind, and she is pleased with the title; but never can she be consistent with herself and become a Christian nation in truth till with her own hand she writes herself a Christian nation; till she accepts the responsibility of that position and commends herself to the duty of using her authority for ends corresponding to the character to which she pretends.—Rev. S. P. Herron.

FEARFUL WEAPONS OF WAR.

Since the American civil war weapons of destruction have changed so much their character that an army using such guns as we employed then would be wiped out as quickly as the Chinese have been, if fighting with a foe equipped with the latest cannon and rifles. It is not greatly to our credit as a nation that our own little regular army was the last one to be furnished with the new guns.

The change has been made, however, and the United States army is now nearly up to the times. The new weapons with which it has been supplied are described in the Century by Victor Louis Mason. At the time of the war we had only smooth bore iron cannon and mortars, muzzle loading. These have been replaced by breech-loading steel rifled cannon and mortars which are "marvels of power, endurance and accuracy." A great revolution in army tactics was wrought with the invention of smokeless powder. With the use of this, each army will be able henceforth to see the enemy's evolution and flank movements. The United States army has not yet been supplied with this smokeless powder, but will shortly be. In place of the old fashioned single loading infantry rifle, sending its big, broad bullets crashing and slashing into things, we now have an infantry rifle with a caliber of only three-tenths of an inch. It is a far more deadly instrument than the old arm was. The small caliber ball has an accuracy, a penetration and a range unknown to the world thirty years ago. The new infantry arm is also a magazine rifle or a single fire rifle at will.

The largest cannon are for coast defense, and they are now guns of twelve-inch caliber. Bigger mouthed cannon than that have been made in England, as large as 16.25 inches across, but they were failures. Inventions have been made since our war that enable artillery officers to get the range of an enemy's guns with far greater accuracy than was possible then. Perhaps in future wars so much lead and powder will no longer be wasted. Besides the great twelve-inch cannon we now have machine guns that will fire by electricity 1,800 shots a minute. The powder with which the infantry will be supplied is a much higher explosive than the old kind of black powder was.

The new weapons are carefully selected from the latest and best models in use among European nations. The board of experts took the best wherever they could find it.—Selected.

A MACON PRAYER.

"O Lord, we pray that the excursion train going east on the Hannibal and St. Joseph railroad this morning may not run off the track and kill any church member that may be on board. Church members on Sunday excursions are not in a condition to die; and in addition to this, it is embarrassing to a minister to officiate at the funeral of a member of the church who has been killed on a Sunday excursion. Keep the train on the track and preserve it from any calamity, that all church members among the excursionists may have opportunity for repentance, that their sins may be forgiven; we ask it for Christ's sake," was the prayer offered by Rev. W. F. Mc Murry at the M. E. church, South, Sabbath morning.—Macon Times.

"I would do almost anything in my power to help on the work of rescuing all Christian men from the 'grip' of Masonry and all other secret and un-Christian societies. I believe that Masonry is an incalculable evil and essentially anti-Christ in its principles and influence."—From Dr. George F. Pentecost's Letter to Conference of Christians on Secret Societies, Chicago, 1887.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Masonic patriotism.—The death of Dr. A. A. Miner.—The Junior Christian Endeavorers in Boston.—The Military Order of Foreign Wars.—Serious charges of a Connecticut minister against her Legislature.—The periodical sea serpent.

There is one fault in our American holidays; they all come in a lump together: the 19th of April, Decoration Day, the 17th of June and Fourth of July. One gets surfeited with noise and patriotism. It is not alone "the small boy" with which these terms are synonymous, but multitudes of larger growth. The quiet, undemonstrative patriotism which no more thinks of making a parade of that quality than the honest man does of his honesty, is just now at a discount. Five thousand Masons were in line at Charlestown to commemorate the anniversary of the erection of the Gen. Warren monument, and as the papers stated, "was an imposing event, happily blended with the other features of the day, taking place between the morning carnival parade, and the afternoon military and civic demonstrations." Trust the Masonic lodge for getting the best places every time. Gov. Greenhalge made the chief speech, greeting his brother Masons in the usual laudatory terms, and alluding to Masonry as "one of the patriotic orders which to-day have proved their loyalty by flying in the wind the great standard of the republic." As a matter of fact De Molay Commandery did actually carry "a beautiful silk American flag" in the parade, the first time such a thing was ever done by the Knights Templars in Massachusetts. In their eagerness to catch the tide of popular favor which is setting so strongly in the direction of everything "patriotic," it looks as if Masonry was forgetting one of its ancient landmarks; which as interpeted by the Grand Lodge on more than one occasion, is to have nothing to do with forms of government, forms of religion or forms of social life.....brethren to each other all the world over, foreigners to all the world beside."

Grand Master Holmes eulogized Masonry as the champion of the public schools, though he omitted to state any special instance; and particularly as a defender of the flag. Grand Secretary Nickerson dwelt especially on the beauties of the mystic tie which makes all Masons brothers, and gave some examples of their fraternal feeling as manifested by Southern and Northern Masons during the late war, which were hardly consistent with the loyalty claimed for it by the previous speaker. But a thousand will accept on trust the arrogant assumptions of Masonry where there is one to think for himself. At all events the lodge had another opportunity to glorify itself in the eyes of the public, and improved it to the utmost.

The sudden death of Dr. A. A. Miner came with a shock and keen sense of loss to the entire city. He died in the harness, having spoken his last words to a colored church but a few hours before. It was fitting that it should be so, for he knew no class or race, except as his sympathies were peculiarly with the oppressed and the downtrodden. The beautiful words written by O'Reilly for Wendell Phillips, might with equal truth have been written of the stalwart moral reformer:

"From the midst of the people is stricken a symbol they daily saw,
Set over against the law-books of a higher than human law;
For his life was a ceaseless protest, and his voice was a prophet's cry
To be true to the truth, and faithful, though the world were arrayed for the lie."

His record for prohibition, his part in the anti-Romanist battle as chairman of the Committee of One Hundred, and his firm advocacy of woman suffrage are known and read of all men, but he was also a champion in less popular lines of reform. He was opposed to the lodge and willing to say so; an upholder of the Puritan Sabbath, and of every righteous institution and principle which lies at the foundation of American liberty, civil and religious. He was an all-around reformer, a Puritan of the Puritans in his practice whatever he was theologically. His orthodoxy was all in his life, his heretedoxy all in his creed; and his last message when the hand of death so suddenly touched him, to those with whom he had so long associated in sympathy of work and interest, concentrated in its few touching words the very essence of his grand character: "Give them my love, and tell them to be faithful." A prince and a great man has fallen;—one whose place cannot and will not be filled, in spite of the common saying to the contrary. The work may go on, but by the law which so guards our individuality, that it can never be reproduced again when the mold is finally broken by death, among all the myriads who will people the earth in the generations to come, the worker's niche is never filled, but I like to think is sacredly kept for him, —"Launcelot and not another's." There can never be another Dr. Miner.

This reminds me to say that Dr. Gordon's place in the Clarendon Baptist church is still vacant. Some one will eventually be called to that pulpit; without doubt a learned, spiritual and devout man, but he will not be Dr. Gordon.

The Junior Christian Endeavor societies in the United States and the British Provinces have a membership of nearly half a million, of which enough delegates will come to Boston to make a grand showing on July 13, when they will parade, and have a meeting of their own in Mechanic's Hall, with a unique exercise called "The Children's Crusade." The roll of the nations will be called by the leader, and in response thirty children from nine different foreign countries will enter, wearing the red cross, and carrying their respective national flags, while the choir sings, "Our eyes behold an army of young soldiers of the Lord." Among the most interesting things will be the reading of bona fide greetings from native societies in heathen lands. The message of the Turkish Junior Endeavorers has already been received signed with the name of the secretary, Huranoosh Bagdasarian. It is simply John 14: 15, done into Turkish: "Tete zis gu sirek im badvi—ranneruss bahetzeck." One is quite willing to believe the testimony of missionaries that Turkish is one of the most vilely gutteral of modern languages, and generally speaking an unmitigated part of the curse of Babel.

The lodge would have to change very essentially if it did not seize on the prevalent military craze, as it has already seized on more worthy if not more popular lines, and work it for all it is worth. The latest thing is "The Military Order of Foreign Wars." It is said to be rapidly making progress in different States, and is the first military order created in this country under the act of Congress of 1891, which is national in scope, embracing the entire war period from the Revolution to the Rebellion. No one is admitted unless he is a veteran commissioned officer in his own right of service, or a direct lineal descendant of one who did service in one or more of the four wars of this government with foreign powers, namely: The Revolution, the war af Tripoli, the war 1812, and the Mexican war. Commanderies are being organized in Massachusetts, Vermont and Connecticut. The person admitted must bear the surname of the officer from whom he claims descent, and furthermore hold a high social position in the community" before he can wear the formidable lengthy title of Companion of the Military Order of Foreign Wars of the United States. Unless it forms adoptive degrees, it can never become a very large organization, but the tendency of such an order is not only towards intensifying the military, but the caste spirit. It is aristocratic but not patriotic, and is thoroughly un-American and anti-republican. A thoughtful student of the times can hardly help watching these straws floating on the current of our national life with some anxiety.

The charges of Rev. Mr. Mason against the Connecticut Senate for wholesale venality and general corruption have created a decided sensation. Whether he can substantiate his charges remains to be seen, but it is certain that Connecticut legislators have recently passed some very strange laws, such for instance as the local option gambling bill, which according to the Norwich Bulletin "is simply a measure to permit the towns for a fee to license crime and share in the profits of it." If gambling is criminal it should be killed and not "regulated." When law makes compromise with crime they must not take hardly the insinuation, even when made from the pulpit, that they were paid for it.

The season set in some time ago if we may date it from the periodical appearance of the sea-serpent, who is the same terrible monster with the flowing mane, big mouth, and demonical glaring eyes so often described, and which makes one feel when reading it profoundly thankful, even on the hottest day in July, that the human race was not made to inhabit the same element.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

New university president.—Installation of new pastor.—Epworth League Convention.—Good advice to high school graduates.

The annual meeting of the corporation of the Columbian University, held this week, was an unusually important one. It elected a new president of the university, to succeed Rev. Dr. Green, who has been acting president, in addition to performing his duties as pastor of Calvary Baptist church, since the death of Dr. James C. Welling, who filled the position for many years; and the financial condition of the university being reported better than ever before, it authorized an expenditure of $75,000 for improvements and new buildings. The total number of students enrolled during the school year just ended was 999. Rev. Dr. B. L. Whitman, now president of Colby University, is the new president of Columbian University, and his selection is well received by friends of the university, both in and out of the Baptist church, as he has many friends in Washington. Although one of the youngest men—he is only 32—ever put is such a responsible position, no doubts are felt of his making a good president. Dr. Whitman was born in Nova Scotia, educated at Browne University and Newton Theological Seminary, and was, when called to the presidency of Colby University, pastor of the Free Street Baptist church, Portland Maine. It is a coincidence that the late Dr. Welling, when he first thought of retiring, expressed the wish that Dr. Whitman might be his successor.

Although Rev. Dr. Wallace Radcliffe, formerly of Detroit, has occupied the pulpit of the New York Avenue Presbyterian church for some weeks, his formal installation as pastor only took place last evening. It was an interesting occasion, presided over by the moderator of the Washington Presbytery, Dr. Luccock, recently called from the Presbyterian church at Bloomington, Ind., who propounded the constitutional questions. President Patton, of Princeton College, preached the sermon; Rev. Dr. Hamlin gave the charge to the pastor, and Rev. Dr. Chester the charge to the congregation.

The first annual convention of the Epworth Leagues of the Washington District M. E. South was held this week at Epworth M. E. church, and a mass meeting was held yesterday evening at Waugh M. E. church. Both were successful, as was the larger League mass meeting held at Metropolitan M. E. church earlier in the week, to hear talks from leaguers who attended the recent Philadelphia convention. At the latter, President Matthews, referring to the announcement of the formation of a separate league by the Southern M. E. church, said that while all would regret the loss of the chapter from Epworth church, which had withdrawn to join the new league, he believed there was nothing but the best feelings towards the new organzation. As though to enforce the president's expressions of good will the meeting unanimously adopted resolutions expressing friendly feeling and good wishes for the new league.

Those who doubt the utility of teaching manual training in our public schools ought to have visited the training-school of the Washington High School which was this week thrown open to the public for several days. Their attention would not fail to have been attracted by the fourteen-horse power engine and dynamo, used to furnish electric lights for the work-rooms, every part of both having been made and put together by the pupils of the school.

Hon. M. M. Parker, ex-Commissioner of the District of Columbia, in an address to the graduates of the Business High School, gave the young people some advice which, coming from a successful business man, is worthy of the attention of every young man or woman starting upon a business career. "You should always remember," said Mr. Parker, "that sobriety, integrity, attention to business and to the interests of your employer, accuracy, honesty and punctuality are all indispensable to success in the business world; and that a business man should associate himself with some house of worship. Money should be got honestly or not at all, and riches, if won, should be spent often and freely in benevolence. National pride should be strong within you, for upon such as you the nation depends." *

REFORM NEWS.

IN EASTERN PENNSYLVANIA.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 21, 1895.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I am at home to receive my father, who writes of his intention to stop over Sabbath, as he is en route for Berea, Ky., where he is called as trustee of the college there.

Last Sabbath evening I took part in a meeting at the Central Union Mission in this city. Bro. Johnston, a returned missionary from Africa, was the principal speaker. He spoke of experience and incidents connected with work in the dark region where he has been led to establish a mission. I am sure every Christian who listened to this address will feel a greater interest in the work being done by these consecrated ones, who gladly sacrifice personal comfort that they may win some for Christ. Bro. Johnston belongs to the Cynosure family. He was a co-worker with Bro. Bailey in the opening of our work in this city. He was sent out by the Wesleyan Methodist church, whose position of opposition to secret societies is well known. Our friends will be glad to welcome this brother and his family during their stay in this country and aid them as they may be able.

After a three hours' ride behind the iron horse I found myself about seventy miles from home in the county of York, Pa. I went to the home of Israel Gable, where I knew from past experience I should find encouragement and support. This brother is eighty-two years of age. His schoolmates are mostly gone; but one, so far as he knows, remains. His long experience and observation has led to the belief that the secret society system is of the devil, and not required for any good purpose. His horse and carriage were at my disposal. There are three country congregations of United Presbyterians in York county. Time permitted me to visit but one. Several acquaintances were renewed and Cynosure subscriptions obtained in the Hopewell congregation, Rev. John Jamison, pastor. The death harvester has been especially active in this congregation during the year. Several of the older members have been taken. In the departure of Cornelius Collins, an elder of this congregation, the Cynosure loses a warm supporter, the church an earnest, faithful attendant, and many reforms an able advocate. As a shock of corn fully ripe, he has gone to "the recompense of his reward."

I took dinner with Bro. D. M. Collins. As his name would indicate, he belongs to the reform family. He is supported in his reform views by his devoted wife. She was a Wallace. As a rule these Scotch-Irish names stand for a good deal of grit. If right to start with, you always know where to find them.

I regretted that time did not permit a visit to the home of Dr. Samuel Jamison, at Muddy Creek Forks. I learned that he was in good health and still keeping the reform banner flying. Bro. Aiken, at Airville, still takes the Cynosure, as he should. Wish he would get more of his congregation to subscribe. Why should not all the pastors who believe in the Cynosure and its work secure one or more readers in their congregations? Let us all push together.

I arose Wednesday morning with the sun and birds to take an early train to Baltimore. This city, like most all large cities, is flooded with secret orders. I am glad to report that the tide of opposition is rising. There are several strong Lutheran churches here that stand as a stone wall against lodge encroachments. The Missouri and Ohio Synod of the Lutheran churches are growing. It has been but a few years since the first mission of the Ohio Synod was started, Rev E. L. S. Tressel, pastor. They now have six churches. I met Bro. Tressel on the train. He told of the large church they are building and expressed a desire that I give them a lecture in the new lecture room that is being constructed with the church. Rev. Snapp has a magnificent building and location for his new church. If his people are as good as their surroundings he may have great reason for gratitude. Rev. Kuehn, who has recently come to be pastor of the church where Rev. Johannes labored, expressed pleasure in making the acquaintance of your agent and subscribed for the Cynosure, of course. Pastor Johannes was one of our special friends and helpers. He has gone to a large church in Erie, Pa.

I met a gentleman on the street whom I supposed to be a minister, but found on inquiry he was a member of the German Baptist church. He invited me home and we attended a meeting in his church at Woodbury, a suburb of Baltimore. I stayed with a Bro. Smith over night. The way is open for lectures there. I read an announcement of my visit to the Baltimore Corn and Flour Exchange in the morning paper. Bro. Michael, who renewed for the Cynosure, secured me a ticket of admission and introduced me to some of the brokers.

When I secured the renewal of Bro. J. J. Dobler to the Cynosure, last year, he was an attorney at law. He has since been elected judge. His exalted position don't seem to have made him proud. He received your agent as cordially as ever. The people of Baltimore are to be congratulated in his election. W. B. STODDARD.

REPORT OF INTERESTING MEETINGS.

BY THE COAST AGENT.

PORTLAND, Ore., June 17, 1895.

The camp meeting at Shiloh was a success. Quite a number were saved and thirteen were added to the church. The preaching and work were all on the straight Bible line. Bishop Dillon arrived on the last Friday of the meeting, and added much interest to the meeting. Coming, as he did, from the conventions at Chicago, he gave the lodges some warm blows in his discourses, as he did also other prominent evils. I am glad we have a bishop here who does not cater to public opinion, but deals out the truth faithfully. This meeting was well attended by ministers, sometimes as many as twelve being present, including a young M. E. preacher, Rev. Chas. Fuller. He is opposed to secret orders. Rev. J. R. Hopkins is the pastor here. He deserves great credit for the good work done during the year.

Elder Kenoyer was with us all but two days, and rendered excellent service. Rev. I. H. Wilson and wife, both ministers, came Wednesday of the last week and preached with acceptability. Rev. H. O. Kerns and wife, of Elberton, stayed three nights with the meeting. Bro. K. is a real live, earnest preacher and worker, that no church need be ashamed of. He always has revivals. His wife is a grand helper in every respect.

Revs. Griffin and Brink, from Mondovi, came toward the closing of the evening, as did a number of lay brethren and sisters from that field, and they all added strength to our forces. I had a peculiar experience at this meeting. One very stormy night I was sleeping alone in the Tabernacle. I had dropped to sleep when I was aroused by some animal sniffing the air close by my face. When I was sufficiently awake to take in the situation, I could see the thing not four feet away. I hissed, and as I did the animal crouched as if to spring upon me, but I did the leaping myself. As I left my cot, I yelled at it, and it shot past me like lightning. It proved to be a huge wild cat. I think the cat was frightened. I occupied the Tabernacle alone again next night and slept soundly.

The last Sabbath of the meeting was a busy day. Love feast at ten, led by Bro. Wilson; preaching at eleven, by Bishop Dillon. I asked the congregation for $20 to defray expenses of camp meeting. I received $23.70 in a very short time. At 2 P. M. I spoke on the lodge question to about 650 people, who paid strict attention. One minister present, who wore the three links, came in for his share. Some lodgemen confessed that what I said was true; others denied it; so we will let them fight it out. At the close we took a respectable missionary subscription. Sister Wilson led an excellent praise meeting at seven. Bishop Dillon preached again at eight. One came forward and about sixteen arose for prayers. Two united with the church. Thus closed a very successful meeting, where truth gained over error by a good per cent.

Next morning we started to conference at Elberton. We stopped Monday night at "Nigger Creek" school house, and listened to a discourse from Sister Wilson. Then Tuesday we made forty miles across the country, over very dusty roads, stopping over night with Rev. J. A. Kenoyer. The next morning we passed on to Elberton, where I again received mail, and was glad to see the face of the good old Christian Conservator and Cynosure. What friends!

Conference was called to order promptly by Bishop Dillon. Rev. F. L. Hoskins was elected secretary. A good number of the ministers and lay delegates were present, and participated heartily in the work. One minister was received from the Liberal United Brethren, Rev. A. J. Sherrod, of Tekoa; and Rev. Hon. J. I. Mitcham, of Kendick, Idaho, was again received into the conference, after an absence from it since the division in the church. Six persons were received from their respective quarterly conferences, and three more were recommended, but failed to get to conference. Your agent was introduced and invited to address the conference.

We lectured on secret societies Thursday night to a full house, after which Elder Kenoyer took an expression of the audience. "All who feel that they have been helped or benefited by the address, stand up." A very large majority arose. I preached to the conference again the next day at eleven, and then bid them good bye, and started home, arriving here at Portland Saturday morning at 7:30, after an absence of one month.

At the Shiloh camp meeting I secured fifteen subscriptions to the Cynosure, and at Elberton annual conference twelve, making fifty-two during the month. I am home over Sabbath, then on to Philomath to our annual conference, where I hope to plan some for future permanent work. I am billed till the middle of January, 1896.

CORRESPONDENCE.

WORDS OF COMMENDATION.

The modest publisher of this paper, whose excellent business management and indefatigable labor for so many years has been the chief factor in its success, received some months ago the following letter from the agricultural editor of the Farm, Field and Fireside. We take the liberty at this late date to insert the letter for the encouragement of our readers as well as the publisher:

GLEN ELLYN, March 12, 1895.

W. I. Phillips, Publisher Cynosure:

MY DEAR FRIEND:—For years I have admired the mechanical makeup of the Cynosure and the clearness of the type on most of the pages. These, added to the wise selection made in the home and young people's departments, have made it, to my mind, one of the best gotten-up family papers that come to my home.

For some weeks I have noticed that a few pages of the matter used have not been set up in the Cynosure office, and I have been pleased to see the same care made in the selections used as when the paper was all "home print."

I write this because when one is doing well I think he ought to be congratulated by being told so.

I am glad to see you get out so good and so good a looking paper. Fraternally,

W. B. LLOYD.

SERVING TWO MASTERS.

WENONA, Ill., June 13, 1895.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Since your paper affords a platform from which all can speak who advocate the reform it represents, I wish to briefly reply to a speech in favor of Freemasonry, by Rev. S. E. Steele, of Wenona. He started out with a text of Scripture which has never been heard of since. It either got away from the speaker or he got away from it. He then made the broad assertion that "the best men in the country are Freemasons," and in proof of this informed us that: "Washington was a Freemason, Lincoln was a Freemason, but Booth was not; Garfield was a Freemason, and Guiteau was not." The logical conclusion then is that to be a Freemason is to be a good man; to be a non-Mason is to be a bad man. Bro. Steele is the only Freemason in our congregation. The balance of the people are not. What a deplorable condition we are in. His argument makes us out worse than Sodom, for there were more than one righteous person in that city. In commending Freemasonry as a benevolent organization he said: "If I were a stranger in California and needed help and applied to the M. E. church, it is doubtful if I would get it." (Not likely he would if he had been disparaging the church as he then was.) "I am sorry it is so; but it is too true." Did I apply to the Masonic lodge they would telegraph to Illinois, and if they found I was in good standing, as a Mason, I would be sure to get help." No wonder that many in the congregation expressed indignation at that sentiment, and accused the speaker of placing the Masonic lodge above the church as a benevolent organization. It may be news to Bro. Steele to learn that many are refusing to pay on his salary because of that as well as other extravagant statements he made. They very properly wish him to take a dose of his own medicine, by testing the liberality of his great Masonic panacea here at home, which he assures us would be such a potent remedy in the far-off regions of California. Due candor would have led him to have stated that Masonic benevolence reaches none but Masons; and to no Mason, even, who is not in good standing. That is: the Mason must have paid up all past dues. Then they will generously (?) give him back part of the money he has paid into the Masonic coffers. Bro. Steele ought to know that the M. E. church, as well as all Christian churches, extend aid to the needy, irrespective of whether they belong to a church or have paid anything into the church treasury. That was a pathetic story about the boy in blue, captured as a spy in the rebel army; sentenced to be shot; but saved at the last moment because he was able to give the grand hailing sign of distress. "Is it not a good thing to save life," the speaker enquired, after relating the incident. Well, it is gratifying to learn that Freemasonry does sometimes save the life of a worthy man. But even this incident only shows the selfish and treacherous nature of Masonic principles. In addition to the case cited, why did he not refer his hearers to the scores of murderers who have been saved from paying the penalty of the law by Masonic judges and jurymen. He could have referred to the motley crew made up of Masonic ministers, doctors, lawyers, etc., who caused the murder of Morgan for revealing the secrets of Freemasonry. He knew it would never do to ask his congregation if it is not a good thing to save life in such cases. They would say no! He next labored to prove the fidelity of Masonic ministers to the Christian church. That is: that a man can serve two masters, by referring to his own experience. A revival effort had recently been made at Lostant, a church comprising a part of his charge; a traveling evangelist had done the preaching. Bro. Steele informed his hearers that, during those meetings, he had a great desire to attend the initiation of a young friend into the Masonic lodge at Tonica, a neighboring town. But, said he, in commendation of himself: "I stuck to the meeting and did not go." "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." Where your treasure is there will be your heart also. By thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned. Absent in the body at Lostant, but present in the spirit at Tonica. Such must be the conclusion.

Again, he endeavored to prove that Masons were very liberal in paying the preacher, by claiming that he had found it so. No doubt that may be the invariable experience of Masonic ministers. But why? Is it not because they shape their preaching to suit the Masonic lodge? That the church is made to act as the handmaid of the lodge. Is it not then their zeal for Masonry and not for Christianity that inspires them? If not, then, why is it Freemasons so often refuse to support ministers who oppose the Masonic lodge? He claimed again that Freemasons are in favor of free speech. But alas, the speaker had to contradict that statement before he left the platform, by refusing to allow a reply to his sermon then, or at any future time in the church in which he was speaking. Bro. Steele is credited with justifying himself in preaching the sermon in question, by claiming it was done in self-defense. Now, it is true that the subject of Masonry has been under discussion in the region of Wenona for many years. It is also true Gospel ministers have been sharply criticised for identifying themselves with the lodge. There are many men and women who are striving to keep their own families out of the secret lodge. And, as they are governed by the unselfish spirit of Christian benevolence, they would seek to save their neighbors from the same snare. Bro. Steele well knew this state of affairs. He came into our community a comparative stranger. He claims to have a call from Christ, who plainly tells us: "In secret I have said nothing," to preach Christ's Word. Disregarding the rights of these parents to protect their own children from the enticements of the secret lodge, he steps forth as the champion of secret societies and uses his best effort to persuade our young people that Masonry, in some respects, is better than the Christian church. Have we no right to protest? We certainly have; and, acting from convictions of duty, we refuse to support Bro. Steele, either by paying upon his salary or listening to his preaching. Another charge made by the speaker was: that Anti-masons encroach their opinions upon the people. This is true; and they have a reason for so doing. Their opinions are sound and will bear inspection. They are just what the people need. But, "Physician, heal thyself." That is what Bro. Steele did when he lugged his Masonry into the pulpit. He had no right to do it, and is generally condemned for having done so. It is true, as another M. E. minister has said, who is also a Mason: "He injured the church, he hurt Freemasonry and he hurt himself." Now, how can such calamities be avoided? The remedy is simple. Let these brethren either get out of the lodge or get out of the pulpit. "No man serveth two masters."

S. J. WHITE.

CASCADE, Iowa, June 14, 1895.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Recently Mr. Williams, the Baptist minister of Cascade, Iowa, preached a faithful sermon against adultery, which he said prevails to an alarming extent in America under the law of divorce and marriage after divorce. The regular Baptists of America make immersion a term of communion—and I think rightly—but adultery is no objection, at least in the Western States, if it can be managed according to law—not the law of Christ, Mark 10:11, 12—but the law of the land which ignores the law of Christ. Adultery is no bar to communion in some religious denominations. I have known several ministers to put away their wives, or to be put away from their wives, and to marry others, and yet their standing was not affected either in their own churches or the association with which they were connected. And if ministers be thus indulged, I need not say that private members enjoy similar privileges. This is open communion with a vengeance.

A TESTIMONY.

718 E. 9TH ST., DES MOINES, Iowa.

I was an Odd-fellow once myself. I found it contrary to Christianity. When I consecrated myself to the ministry of Jesus Christ I gave it up as the vilest sin. Would to God that the exposure was in everybody's hands. God speed you on your courageous, God-given mission.

Yours for the truth, A. L. GOLDEN.

REMINISCENCES.—EXPERIENCE WITH CHRISTIAN WORKERS.

BY EZRA A. COOK.

It may be inferred from my former article that I was active in Christian work. Some time before I started in business I became identified with a mission school in the northwest part of the city, and a little later took a leading part in organizing a small Congregational church (Bethany church). I was elected senior deacon and a little later became treasurer and chorister. The other deacons were good men, though one of them was nominally a Mason. I was very outspoken on the secret society question and was, I presume justly, charged with making it a hobby. But the Spirit of God (or some other spirit) impelled me to pray about it and to speak of it nearly every time in our weekly prayer meetings of which I was frequently the leader, and it was far from agreeable to members or defenders of secret orders who were present. On one occasion when the deacons were having a consultation a man by the name of Meppin came into the room and said that he would like to join the church if Deacon Cook would stop talking about secret societies in prayer meeting. Before I had an opportunity to assure him that I proposed to continue to oppose all sin, Deacon Miller said: "I am a Mason, Bro. Meppin, but I believe in Christian liberty, and certainly would not ask Bro. Cook to stifle his convictions, especially as he pays four or five times as much as any other member of the church"

I was quite well acquainted with Mr. Meppin, and he impressed me as a conscientious, honest man, whose eyes the lodge had blinded.

On one occasion an intelligent outspoken Freemason who had just moved into the neighborhood sought to join the church, and naturally made his wishes known to the deacons. Before his case came before the church for action he was induced to discuss the secret society question, Freemasonry in particular. In the very words to be found in every Masonic Monitor, he endorsed lying pretensions of Freemasonry as to moral teaching and character. In answer to the question whether he would give up the lodge or church connection, he said if he had to give up Masonry or the church, he would give up the church connection. As Deacon Miller even admitted frankly that his Masonic brother was unfitted for church membership if he put the lodge before Christian obligations, he withdrew his application for membership before it came before the church.

Shortly after the organization of Bethany church the deacons spent nearly an entire night discussing the question of communion wine. One of the deacons, Bro Jewell, got it into his head that nothing but fermented (intoxicating) wine was genuine wine for a long time. It seemed in vain to show him how very careful Christ usually was to speak of the "fruit of the vine" without even using the term wine, and to his expression "until I drink it new in my Father's kingdom," showing that newness certainly was a a prime requisite.

There was then no pure grape juice in the market, and it was proposed to buy the so-called wine sold by druggists. I pointed out the fact that the chances were ten to one that this would not be genuine grape juice, which he had so stoutly maintained was necessary. To the argument that it was wicked to use, and so cultivate an appetite for intoxicants at the Lord's table; and a most fearful thing to drive a reformed man back to the gutter by the so-called cup of the Lord, which I held was the cup of devils, if it contained an intoxicant, he advanced the oft-repeated statement (and lie in fact) that we were not responsible for such consequences. I at last persuaded him to allow me to furnish at my expense pure grape juice for the first communion, by boiling raisins and expressing the juice, and the question proved to be settled, for it was palatable and genuine grape juice; "of the fruit of the vine," without possible question.

How to Make Bread Meringue.

Beat the yolks of 4 eggs light, add gradually a cup of granulated sugar, beating all the while, and the grated rind of a lemon. Mix a pint of bread crumbs with a quart of milk, pour this on the eggs and sugar. Mix well and bake in a moderate oven until stiff. When done, make a meringue of the whites of 2 eggs and 4 tablespoonfuls of powdered sugar. Heap on the pudding and brown in a quick oven. When using cake crumbs, use the yolks of 2 eggs and one-half cup of granulated sugar.

How to Make Cocoanut Pudding.

One quart of stale bread should be broken up fine and soaked for two hours in 2 quarts of cold milk. At the end of that time beat 4 eggs with one-half cupful of sugar and 2 teaspoonfuls of salt and stir into the bread and milk. Then add a cupful of prepared cocoanut and one-half cupful of finely cut citron. This may be baked in a pudding dish for three-quarters of an hour or may be cooked in the steamer one hour. Serve with creamy or hard sauce.

How to Make Cloth Waterproof.

Dissolve an ounce of isinglass in a pound of soft water, an ounce of alum in 2 pounds of water and a quarter of an ounce of soap in a pound of water—all separately. Strain the solutions, mix them and let them simmer for some time. Brush the preparation while hot over the cloth, and when dry brush it well and lay on another coat, all on the wrong side. The cloth will be fit for use in two or three days.

HALF FARE TO CHATTANOOGA AND RETURN.

FOR THE EPWORTH LEAGUE CONVENTION IN JUNE.

On June 25, 26 and 27, 1895, the Monon Route will sell tickets at rate of one fare for the round trip from all points on its line to Chattanooga and return on account of the SECOND INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF THE EPWORTH LEAGUE. These rates and tickets will be open to all. Tickets will be limited to return fifteen days from date of sale, but can be extended fifteen days by depositing with agents of Q. & C. or Nashville & Chattanooga R'ys before June 30.

A choice of routes via Cincinnati, the Blue Grass Regions of Kentucky and the mountains of Tennessee, or via Louisville and the Cave Regions of Kentucky, with side trips to Mammoth Cave at a nominal expense, makes the Monon Route the most desirable line between Chicago and Chattanooga, Tenn.

The day trains of the Monon Route both via Louisville and Cincinnati, carry parlor cars and dining cars, serving meals same as at a first-class cafe. Patrons can order what they want and need only pay for what they get.

The evening trains carry luxurious palace sleeping cars from Chicago to Cincinnati or Louisville. The sleeping car rate from Chicago to the Ohio River, or from the Ohio River to Chattanooga, is $2.00 per berth, whether occupied by one or two persons.

Parties wishing to view the mountain scenery of the South should leave Chicago on the evening trains, so as to make the trip from Cincinnati or Louisville to Chattanooga by daylight, arriving at Chattanooga for supper. Those wishing to visit Mammoth Cave should leave Chicago at 8: 32 P. M, arriving at Louisville for breakfast, and at the cave for dinner, remaining at the cave until next morning, leaving at nine o'clock, and arriving at Chattanooga for supper.

The side trip from Glasgow Junction to Mammoth Cave will cost but $1.25; hotel bill and cave fees will be very reasonable. The guides go into the cave between two and three o'clock P. M., and at eight o'clock in the evening, thus giving those who wish a chance to make two trips in the cave the same day.

Further information with time tables, maps and pamphlets, will be furnished on application to any agent of the Monon Route, or by addressing

IS PROF. HERRON RIGHT?

The pastor of the First Congregational church, San Francisco, Rev. C. O. Brown, D. D., has publicly protested against the teachings of Prof. George D. Herron, who has recently been upon a lecturing tour along the Pacific Coast. He pronounces Prof. Herron's lectures as anarchistic in substance, but he does not quote him in connected passages, only in detached sentences. The following are declared to be typical and representative of the general strain of the teaching to which he objects:

"Our boasted liberties were born not in the Puritan faith of our fathers, but of the atheism of France. Society is moving quickly to revolution."

These words of Prof. Herron remind us of those we heard expressed by the late Dr. Jonathan Blanchard in his address at the Monmouth National Reform Convention in 1871. He said: "France, trained for centuries to hate English Protestantism and constitutional liberty, now helped us to establish both, in order to weaken her hated rival....French democracy, too, was then at its zenith like a cold and fickle Aurora Borealis, dazzling the dark heavens of all Europe. What American Puritans had done by faith in Christ, the French Democrats undertook to do in contempt of him....But France had not worked this sum through to its answer. French democracy looked lovely when our Constitution was framed, and many of our people were charmed with it.

"Such were the people and such the causes which gave us a Constitution containing no recognition of God, except its date, to distinguish us from Africans, who worship a baboon. Nor were gratitude to the French and the reaction of their sentiments the sole, perhaps not the chief, causes which made the terms of our Constitution neutral respecting Christianity. American party politics began before the Constitution was born. It was foregone that if there was to be a President, Washington must be he. The Puritan John Adams followed; and Jefferson, who excelled as statesman and demagogue, both stimulated French principles and used them for his elevation to the Presidential chair. True, he had said in the Declaration of Independence that God had created all men equal; but he was careful to insert that after God had created men, he left them to themselves; so that 'governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed;' though it is presumable that he never saw one of his sheriffs obtain consent of the man whom he was hanging, during his whole administration. But French infidelity had made rapid progress since July, 1776, and in the eleven intervening years had become strong enough to exclude the very name of God from our national Constitution in 1787."

MODERN WOODMEN, ETC.

In the last Free Methodist Bro. H. M. Hugunin makes some excellent points against the order of Modern Woodmen, and other minor orders that just now are giving some of our anti-secret churches some trouble. The danger from these orders is that they are claimed to be so largely mutual benefit organizations and to have so little secrecy that many are tempted to say as Lot in asking permission to flee to Zoar, "Is it not a little one? wherefore let me flee thither:"

"The Modern Woodmen of America is a secret society of considerable prominence. Why it is so called I do not know. Its name suggests tall forests, sharp axes and stalwart men; but it is an open question whether a majority of its members can properly handle an axe, saying nothing of their ability to cut down and cut up huge trees.

"This society originated in the United States in 1880. Its history tells us that its 'original and pleasing ritual' was formed by a distinguished Mason and based on pagan mysteries of the 'inner vale.' On the same authority, it is stated that this ritual is 'pronounced by 32-degree Masons as credible to the author.'

Now the 'inner vale' of pagan mysteries is the very last place, except the pit of hell, where we should look for anything to honor the Father, the Son or the Holy Ghost. It is there that we should expect rather to find a godless crew loving darkness rather than light because their religion and the deeds which it inspires are evil and not at all in harmony with Christ and Christianity. Members of this order tell us plainly that its ritual is adapted 'to the Jew, the Gentile, the Catholic and the Protestant, the agnostic and the atheist.' The professing Christian who can embrace such a ritual as that must be a 'professor' indeed—a hypocrite—a traitor in the camp of Christian soldiers.

"But the Modern Woodmen of America differ only a little, if at all, from the Independent Order of Odd-fellows in their religion. Grosh's Manual of Odd-fellowship has received the commendation and endorsement of the grand officers of the Odd-fellows' Grand Lodges in twenty-seven of the United States. On pages 92–96 of that book it is stated that an institution of this character always existed in Egypt. It is known as the Egyptian Mysteries; and in uniting with it its members are declared to be 'born again.' On pages 186–188 of Grosh's Manual, Odd-fellows' chaplains are taught how to pray so as not to offend Jews, deists, Mohammedans and other 'liberal' religionists; and the Supreme Lodge of the order has since supplemented these instructions by explicitly forbidding the mention of the name of Christ in any of the lodge prayers. Yet the Odd-fellows quote freely from the Christian Bible in their ritual and public services, and this serves to deceive many ignorant persons and give them a good impression of the character of Odd-fellowship. But a Christian, as I know by experience, is strangely out of place in its lodges.

"How about the secret temperance orders—the Good Templars and Sons of Temperance? A very prominent business man in Portland, Ore., told Rev. P. B. Williams that he, as a 'worthy chief' of the G. T., had initiated many men into the order, but had yet to see the first one saved from intemperance by the lodge; while he could point to many who had been made drunkards by the social qualities of Good Templarism. Mrs. Rockwood, one of the vice-presidents of the Women's Christian Temperance Union in New England, writing of the Morgan Masonic murder, which closed up 1,500 lodges, remarked: 'Secrecy seems to have received its death-blow; but it rallied. I met it in the Sons of Temperance, and said, But why secret?.....If good, why love darkness rather than light? I have yet to see that these societies, with their high claims to advantage in temperance work, and with all their high-sounding titles, do as effective work as did the open, earnest temperance societies of my youthful days, that brought about the best time in temperance we ever had in this country.'

" 'Woe unto them that call evil good and good evil; that put darkness for light, and light for darkness; that put bitter for sweet, and sweet for bitter!'—Isaiah 5: 20."

BACCALAUREATE DAY AT WHEATON COLLEGE.

DR. HULBERT, COL. DAVIS, AND OTHERS.

The Baccalaureate sermon before the graduating class of Wheaton College was preached yesterday morning by Rev. Dr. Hulbert, of Oak Park. His theme was, The Relation of Morals to Doctrine. Dr. Hulbert is one of the new men in Chicago, having recently come from the Collegiate church of New York City. He is a powerful speaker, and his discourse was one long to be remembered. After the conclusion of the sermon Pres. Blanchard briefly addressed the class as follows:

TO THE CLASS OF '95.—YOUNG LADIES AND GENTLEMEN OF THE GRADUATING CLASS:

The years which in the providence of God we were appointed to spend together are ending—a few swift, fleeting hours, and they are done. It is custom that on such occasions I say to those leaving us, a few words of commendation and farewell.

It is easy on this occasion to do the former, for you have been so Christian in your lives, so faithful in your work, so true to the institution which is glad and proud to call you her children, that words of praise come naturally and unbidden to my lips.

The latter duty is less pleasant, for though your mates who even now press on to fill your places are also dear to us because of what they are and have done and shall yet do, yet you shall long be remembered and missed. Not that we shall sit idly by to mourn that you are no longer here. Life is labor and battle, and we should sadly fail to divine its purpose were we to do so. But often in the pauses by the way, the moments when memories of departed days come thronging over us, your words and faces will return, and as we turn again to the present duty we shall find our hearts going across the vanished years to the happy hours we have spent in company.

I do not know that there is anything more for me to say. You are all professed followers of Jesus Christ, and we believe are sitting daily at the feet of that great Teacher, having chosen "the good part which shall not be taken from you." You have pledged yourselves to him and his service, no matter what of earthly ill that promise may involve. You have been crucified with your Saviour, that being dead to the world, you may live unto God eternally. This insures to you victory over sin and death and hell, and makes it sure that your lives can never be fruitless of good.

If there were any one truth which I should care once more to urge upon your memories, I think it would be this, viz.: That only as men come to your Lord and Saviour, can they be essentially improved or benefited. Amid the clanging cries for new education, sociological reform, political and industrial change, etc., you need never become confused. There is only one Redeemer for man or nation. The individual, the family, the town, the State which will receive Jesus Christ will be saved; all others will be lost.

Test all proposed changes, all new teachers and institutions by their attitude toward the man who died on Calvary, and the Book which reveals him to men. Hold fast everything which breathes his Spirit and builds on his Word. All that honors him will abide; all that neglects or opposes him must perish; and we are glad that you know, love and serve him, and so with good hope and with many prayers for your largest usefulness, we bid you God-speed and farewell.

In the evening addresses were made by Rev. S. A. Manwell of Michigan, and Col. J. D. Davis, for about thirty years a missionary in Japan. Mr. Manwell is an exceptionally bright and capable man, an alumnus of the college, a faithful pastor, and an orator of more than ordinary power. Col. Davis has not only national, but international reputation. There are over thirty in the volunteer mission band of the college, and the evening was greatly enjoyed by them and the many others who are interested in that work. On Friday evening, the literary societies held their meeting of farewell to the senior class. The program interested a large audience until 10 o'clock.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Supt. M. McNeil, of the Sailors' Christian Mission, Chicago, was a welcome caller at our office last week.

—Asa W. Bulter, brother of M. N. Butler, called at this office Monday. He is at present engaged in the newspaper business in this city.

—Elder Ebenezer Milroy, of Northwood, O., and Elder Wm. S. Turner, of Waukesha, Wis., were visitors at the Cynosure office last week.

—Bishop Dillon some time ago delivered a lecture in Hartsville College chapel on the theme, "Immortality." After the lecture he gave an interesting talk on, "Oregon and the Coast."

—We are glad to learn that our veteran reform worker, Elder Rufus Smith, is again in the field. He recently held some meetings at Gainsville, Florida. He expected to sail for New York June 20th.

—Dr. David McAllister, L.L. D., editor of the Christian Statesman, of Pittsburgh, Pa., and Rev. R. C. Wylie, editor of the Christian Reformer, of Allegheny City, paid the Cynosure office a friendly visit on their return from Denver last Friday.

—J. N. Lloyd, of Jessup, Iowa, writes for a back number to complete his file of the Cynosure, which he says he has kept for years. We are glad for such devoted friends of the paper who could easily restore the file in case the office was burned. Years ago while in the reform field we recall a pleasant visit at Bro. Lloyd's home.

—Rev. H. Siemiller, of Blockton, Iowa, in sending his renewal writes, "We are so attached to the Cynosure that we feel it a great loss to lose one number. God bless you in your labor of love."

—Rev. J. R. Wylie, of Blanchard, Ia., writes bidding us God-speed, and expressing his appreciation of the paper. He says: "Stand by the Lord before whom all your enemies shall be scattered, and those that hate him shall flee before him."

—Rev. Anthony S. Shelly, pastor of the Mennonite church at Bally, Pa., is to address an anti-lodge meeting in Berne, Adams county, Indiana, Friday evening, July 5th. He is to give a temperance address in the same place, on July 4th. The people there are taking an active interest in both these reforms.

—Bro. J. E. Wolfe, evangelist, closed a series of meetings in Wheaton last Sabbath, and expects to attend the conference of Christian Workers at Niagara, on the lake, Ontario, Canada, which begun yesterday. His "preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the spirit, and of power," and the Lord has richly added his blessing. An account of the work which the Lord has called him to in the Indian Territory will be found on this page.

A GREAT MISSION FIELD.

It is a clearly observable fact that the Indian Territory of to-day bears but a faint resemblance to the Indian Territory of half a decade ago. The wand of the magician, civilization, has been waved over this fair land, and presto, change! the face of the whole country wears an entirely new aspect. This is more especially true of the five civilized tribes or the land they inhabit.

The old fable of the camel intruding his humped and homely body into the tent of the Arab, is a fair illustration of what has transpired in the Indian nation. The white man has been crowding himself upon these Indian people by way of permit, in the capacity of teachers, doctors and missionaries (as well as by inter-marriage also), for so long a time that the situation has become one most puzzling and perplexing. Indeed, our ablest statesmen, who have given the Indian question the most thorough consideration, are at their wits' end, utterly unable to unravel the tangled skein of circumstances. However, it is not the purpose of the writer to enter upon a discussion of the secular feature of affairs, but to lay before the reader a sort of outline of the field and its needs, hoping thus to quicken an interest in the souls of both Indians and whites, for if ever a section of the United States needed faithful missionary work or evangelization, this one does.

There are, according to Indian Agent Wisdom's recent report, 26,000 Cherokees by blood, inter-married white, and adopted citizens; Chickasaws (exclusive of Negroes), 6,000; Choctaws, by blood, inter-married white, and Negroes, 20,000; Creek, by blood and Negroes, 15,000; Seminoles, 3,000, making a total of 70,500 citizen population within the bounds of the five nations. Now, add to this the non-citizen population and you have nearly, if not quite, 300,000 people in our country. This non-citizen class are mostly renters or tenants of the soil, and, as the rental fees are not large, white men come into the Territory, occupy Indian lands and pay rent therefor, and actually make more money than they did in the States where they were owners of the soil.

Of the five nations the Cherokees take the lead in civilization. Their schools are numerous and prosperous, and according to the population and resources, expend more money for educational purposes than any community in the United States. Yet, with all this to rejoice over, we are burdened and cursed with a rotten and corrupt Indian government. A very small percentage of our Cherokee people are real Christians, although a great deal of valuable missionary work has been and is being done by the various evangelical denominations. The large majority of the people are still unevangelized. And what may be said of the Cherokee people may be said with greater emphasis of the other four tribes.

Along with the respectable whites that have come into the Territory are great numbers of desperadoes and criminals of every shade of wickedness until it has culminated in a reign of terror, the like of which has never, perhaps, been surpassed even in the far western territories in their earlier days of pioneer experience. This, however, has a redeeming feature in it. It will culminate in the United States government allotting the Indians' lands and breaking up the tribal system of government, thus bringing some sort of order out of the chaos and disorder that reigns now. All of which God grant may soon become an accomplished fact.

But now is the time to plant the banner of the

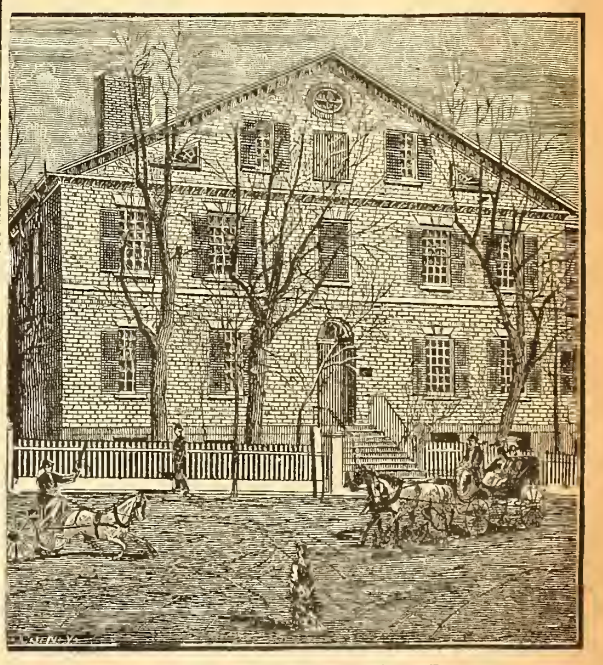
MR. AND MRS J. E. WOLFE.

Cross in this beautiful land. The circumstances are right for it. Now is the auspicious hour in which foundations may be laid that will mean blessings for the millions who will soon populate this God-favored country.

Evangelist J. E. Wolfe has been for about eleven years doing missionary work and evangelistic work in the Indian Territory. He has preached the Word in nearly every principal town in the four chief nations, and with God's blessing many hundreds of souls have been saved. There is no country where the real Gospel of the Son of God carries more weight and power with it than here. This assertion is made from the basis of experimental knowledge.

Some six years ago it was the good fortune of Brother Wolfe to secure as a wife and true helpmate a Cherokee lady of one of the oldest and best known families of the nation, a Miss Kate Timberlake, who had taken a student's course of four years at Mr. Moody's school, at Northfield, Mass., and who, at the time of their marriage, was a teacher in the Worcester Academy, Vinita, I. T. Shortly after this happy marriage they opened the doors of their humble home for the admission of Indian orphan children. Without any salary from other governments for Home Mission Boards, a work of faith in behalf of these neglected waifs was begun. The little cottage in Vinita soon became too straitened for room, and a claim five miles west of Vinita was purchased, and for some three years these workers have been living in one of the most delightful and healthful localities to be found anywhere in that beautiful country.

The money necessary to the erection of a commodious orphanage building has come in answer to prayer. A wood-working plant has been established, in which it was purposed to give the boys a trade. A little monthly paper is also published at the orphanage. It is christened "John Three Sixteen." In the printing office any of the girls or boys who may desire to learn the art of type-setting can have their wishes gratified.



During the school season they have about forty scholars in attendance, but had they a larger and more suitable school building many more school children could be accommodated and an influence for Christ exercised over the youth of the Indian nation of incalculable benefit. For a building of this character they are now praying, and we have faith to believe that God will, in his own good time, answer their prayers. It will cost $3,000 to build one that will answer for school and chapel, and dormitories for forty students. There are many things in the way of farming and gardening utensils, for instance, needed. A good kitchen and dining room is also one of the necessities. This could be built for $500. But Phil. 4:19 stands sure and true, and they are patiently waiting on the Lord, knowing that all their needs will be supplied.

We can conscientiously commend this worthy institution to our readers, realizing it to be just what has long been needed in the Indian Territory in order to educate and Christianize these children and send them forth by and by as missionaries among their own people. In connection with the work for children they have also thrown open the doors of the Home for young men and women who have not the means to pay for a college education—a sort of training school for Christian workers, where practical instruction may be obtained for active missionary work among the masses. God has already abundantly blessed this branch of the work. A number of earnest, consecrated Christian men and women have gone forth from the Home to both the foreign and home mission fields.

The cruel military phrase, "the only good Indian is a dead Indian," is a base falsehood of inhuman or satanic origin. Take for instance the little children they have rescued from a life of sin and shame and destitution, and compare them now with what they were several years ago when first taken into the Home, and it must be admitted that it is far better to save and civilize them than to have them grow up to become targets for military practice, or, to say the least, lost wrecks on the shores of time.

All these six years Brother and Sister Wolfe have been proving God's promises to be true. Having no support, either from mission boards or the government, as we have said, still our Heavenly Father has supplied all their needs through the ministry of friends of Jesus who have become acquainted with their work.

The prayers of the reader are earnestly requested in their behalf, that grace and wisdom may be granted them, and that larger facilities may be afforded them for gathering in more of their lost Indian waifs, and sending forth more laborers into the Master's vineyard.

THE OLD MORGAN JAIL.

The above cut represents the old Ontario county jail, which is now a thing of the past. It was truly an historic building as it contained the cell in which Wm. Morgan was imprisoned just previous to his murder by Masonic vengeance, for revealing the secrets of the order. The old building was recently sold at auction, the purchaser being obliged to remove it to make room for another. The memorial tablet and also the cell in which Morgan was confined have been preserved by the county as historical memorials of a tragedy of world-wide interest—one that did more to reveal the murderous character of Freemasonry than any other. Thus God preserves the memory of martyrs for his truth. As the years accumulate, so do the memorials of this first martyr to the cause of anti-secrecy.

IN ROBES OF BEAUTY.

GOD CLOTHES ALL HIS WORKS IN GLORIOUS GARB.

Rev. Madison C. Peters Says No True Woman Will Neglect Her Appearance. Simplicity Best Displays Loveliness—Life Is Not a Doll to Be Dressed.

A large congregation heard Rev. Madison C. Peters' sermon to women at the Bloomingdale Reformed church, New York, Sunday, June 9. The subject of his theme was "Dress" and his text Matthew vi, 25 "The body is more than raiment." He said:

Many people read this passage Hebrew-wise—backward—and thus the general conviction now is that raiment is more than the body.

God is a lover of dress. He has put robes of beauty and glory upon all his works. Who can doubt that he will smile upon the evidence of correct taste manifested by his children?

Elegance Fits Woman.

No true woman will be indifferent to her appearance. Elegance fits woman. The love of beauty in dress belongs to her. She ought to take pride in herself and be solicitous to have all her belongings well chosen and in good taste. A sloven is abominable. Rudeness is sin.

Female loveliness appears to best advantage when set off by simplicity of dress. A woman is best dressed who so conducts herself that those who have been in her company shall not recollect what she had on.

I have no sympathy with the "dress reformers" who glory in their outlandish apparel, and who are more proud of being "out of fashion" than others of being in.

To love dress is not to be a slave of fashion; to give dress your first thought, your best time or all your money is the evidence of such slavery.

The Tyranny of Fashion.

Fashion tyrannically rules the world. She pinches the feet with tight shoes, or squeezes the breath out of the body by tight lacing.

To be "in the fashion" has made the most famous frauds of the day and keeps hundreds of men struggling for their commercial existence.

Fashion dwarfs the intellect. Virtue gives up the ghost at her smile.

Fashion is the greatest of all liars. She has made society insincere. She has turned society into a great showroom. She has made the poor poorer and the rich more avaricious.

Fashion is New York's leading undertaker and drives hundreds of hearses to Woodlawn and Greenwood.

Dress is a lower beauty for which the higher beauty should not be sacrificed. The holiest duty is to wear the richest dress on the soul.

Woman, with her strong and rich powers, her bold and daring genius, was made for a higher purpose, a nobler use, a grander destiny, than to waste herself on the finified fooleries of fashion. Care more for what you are than what you appear. Let an empty brain, hollow heart and useless life throw you into a hysterical fit quicker than an old fashioned bonnet or an ill fitting dress.

Let not fashion close your ears to the appeal of Christ's church and your eyes to the outstretched hand of his poor.

Let not fashion demand of you a style of dress insufficient to keep out the cold and rain and that will imperil health.

Submit to no style which will compromise your modesty. Wear no costume which suggests impure thoughts to the beholder.

Adorn For God.

It is the instinctive propensity in human nature to decorate, it is right to adorn yourself for your own eyes, for the eyes of your husband, if you are a true wife, if you are a maiden, for the eyes of suitors and companions, but first of all strive to adorn yourself for God's eye. "Whose adorning let it be the hidden man of the heart in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price."

It is worthy of remark that Plato, the loftiest of all the Grecian sages, has a passage which strikingly resembles that of the apostle. "Behavior, and not gold, is the ornament of a woman. To courtesans these things, ornaments and jewels, are advantageous to their catching more admirers, but for a woman who wishes to enjoy the favor of one man good behavior is its proper ornament, and not dresses, and you should have the blush upon your countenance, which is the sign of modesty, instead of paint, and worth and sobriety instead of gold and emeralds." Paul to Titus says, "That they may adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things." Even the great truth of Jesus Christ is here represented as being susceptible of decoration on the part of those who profess it. Adorn the gospel by useful lives.

Live for Christ, and with the light and glory of a true womanhood fill every day with usefulness as a June day fills the air with redolence of the roses.

You were made for a better companionship than of those of whom it is said:

Their only labor is to kill time,
And labor dire it is, and weary woe;
They sit, they loll, turn o'er some idle rhyme,
Or saunter forth with tottering step and slow.

Life is not a toy to be played with, a doll to be dressed, an ornament to exhibit, not a bubble to float in the air, nor an insect to dance on the wave until some wind overtake it. It is not to be a low or dreamy indulgence, not a plague that wastes. Life is a great gift of God, a single opportunity with possibilities vast enough to fill time and eternity with the beatitudes of God, the joy of angels, the praise of men. Goethe said, "To be useful, that is life." To be useful! How noble, how vast, how sublime, how Christlike! Henceforth let your life be such as the poet sings:

I live for those that love me,
For those that know me true,
For the heaven that smiles above me
And waits my coming, too;
For the cause that lacks assistance,
For the wrongs that need resistance,
For the future in the distance,
For the good that I can do.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic For the Week Beginning June 30. Comment by Rev. S. H. Doyle.

TOPIC.—Faith in God; what it is; what it does.—Heb. xi, 1-7, 32-40; xii, 1, 2.

In the close of the preceding chapter Paul's great watchword, "The just shall live by faith," has been quoted, and to prove that faith is the true principle of life a long and brilliant array of holy men and women of old are cited, and their wonderful achievements by faith are recalled.

The writer, however, introduces this array of witnesses by defining faith, or more particularly by giving a description of faith, for, while virtually a definition, yet these words are not in the strict logical form of one. The faith referred to is not saving faith in Christ, but is general belief or faith in God.

Two statements are made here descriptive of faith. First, it is the substance or assurance of things hoped for. It makes the things hoped for in the future real to us in the present. It is a laying hold of the future in the midst of the present, of the eternal in the midst of time. Second, faith is said to be the evidence or the test of things not seen. In the physical world we believe because we see; in the spiritual world we see because we believe. The Bible has well been called the eyeglass of faith, for it is through it that faith sees, and faith itself is the eye by which we pierce the veil of the future and are convinced of the realities of the things that do not yet appear. Such a faith, one that makes the future as real as the present, though in a different way, is one of the best gifts that God can give to us. When we see what it does, we will believe this to be true.

Faith in God explains the origin of this present world (verse 3). Human theories concerning the origin of the universe are mere conjectures, eternal existence of matter, the making of what is seen by what now appears will not satisfy human reason. But faith tells us that an all wise, all powerful, self existent, eternal God has made the universe by a simple edict of His will. "By faith we understand that the worlds have been framed by the word of God." Thus faith relieves us of the greatest mysteries in the universe.

Faith in God furnishes us with the true principle of life (verses 4-7, 32-40). What was the ruling, acting, living principle of this long list of ancient worthies who "subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness," etc? It was faith. By faith all these things were done. Faith is still the only true principle of life.

Faith unites us to Jesus Christ. This is saving faith (xii, 1, 2). Christ is the author and perfector of our faith, and by beginning and completing faith in us Christ unites us forever to Himself. Have we such faith in God?

Cultivate the True Spirit of the Gospel.

If we are true Endeavorers, we shall be very careful in our Christian and social intercourse of those who may be regarded as the weaker or less favored members of the society. We shall be careful not to wound their sensibilities, and we shall count it a pleasure to do what we are able to promote their progress and their happiness. We shall not assume an air of superiority or of condescension, but we shall extend to them such courtesy and exercise, such gentleness and kindness, as we should wish to receive were the circumstances and conditions reversed.—National Presbyterian.

Endeavor In Mexico.

A convention of Sunday school workers is to be held in San Luis Potosi, Mexico, during the early part of June, and at that time the Christian Endeavor leaders are hoping to have a convention of Christian Endeavorers and secure a national organization of the 20 or more societies that already exist in Mexico. They believe that this convention will result in the formation of many new societies. Christian Endeavor enterprise is not limited to the United States.

Give Them a Chance.

It would be interesting to know how many Endeavor societies make use of their honorary members by obtaining from them contributions for the regular support of the society. They should at least be given an opportunity to do their share with the active members in this work for Christ and the church.—Golden Rule.

Rescued From Slavery.

Some English Endeavorers have become slaveowners! Hearing of a young Chinese maiden whose parents were going to sell her as a slave, they gave to the London Missionary society enough money to buy her, so that she could be trained in Christian liberty. The price of this Chinese girl was £3 10s.

Our Creed.

Our creed is not what we have thought, but what our Lord has told us. The true creed must come down from above and not out from within. Make your creed simply and broadly from out of the revelation of God, and you may keep it to the end.—Phillips Brooks.

A Prayer.

I pray the prayer of Plato old.
God make thee beautiful within,
And let thine eyes the good behold
In everything save sin!
Imagination held in check
To serve, not rule, thy poised mind.
Thy reason, at the frown or beck
Of conscience, loose or bind.
No dreamer thou, but real all,
Strong manhood crowning vigorous youth.
Life made by duty epical
And rhythmic with the truth.
—John Greenleaf Whittier.

In Siam when a funeral is passing the women take down their hair and unfasten their beads, and the men fumble around in their pockets for a little piece of metal to hold between their teeth.

WOMAN'S WORLD.

A YOUNG CHICAGO WOMAN WHO IS A BUSINESS SUCCESS.

"I am entirely a self made man," said Miss Bertha Eppstein, who has charge of the 41 flats and some other property near the corner of Indiana avenue and Twenty-second street, as she laughingly turned from her big office desk and prepared to chat of the work which brings her in a plethoric income.

"You see," she continued, "I was left an orphan when I was a little child. It hasn't been quite so easy as it might have been to make my own way, for I am absolutely incapable of filling a position save when I am in authority. It isn't that I don't want to, but that I cannot. I really am not worth 5 cents a day in a subordinate position. But I have forged ahead, for I have always believed I could do what others have done, and I have never taken a back step. I have kept books and have done various other things, but it was not until I undertook my present work that I found my congenial vocation. Why, do you know I like my present work so well that I cannot think of anything I would prefer to it."

Miss Eppstein says that there is nothing she is more proud of than that during the last year, when so many buildings have stood empty, not one of her 41 flats have been unoccupied a whole month and that she has not in that length of time lost 1 per cent of her gross receipts. She devotes her whole time to her work, and although she is thoroughly businesslike she does not make it wholly a matter of business. She is like the head of a large, conglomerate family, and it is the common habit of her tenants to come to her as freely for advice and sympathy in regard to the sick baby and other family affairs as about leaking steam pipes or falling plaster. In speaking of this she said:

"I am sure my tenants like me, and I am sure I want them to, but while I hold myself always ready to serve them I never accept social attentions from them, and above all I discourage gossip. I try to put myself in their place and as near as possible do for them what I would like to have done for myself. I never promise a thing that I do not do, and I see to it that the small things upon which the comfort of a family so greatly depends receive attention."

Miss Eppstein believes that the work she is doing is admirably suited to the capacity of many women—in fact, that they would be much more successful than most men in renting and caring for flats from the fact that they are, as a rule, more willing to give attention to details than men, and upon such attention the success of large apartment buildings depends. In her work Miss Eppstein is quite unrestricted. The collecting, advertising, hiring and discharging help and the bookkeeping are all her care, and yet she is as enthusiastic and buoyant as if she had not a responsibility in the world.—Chicago Tribune.

How Mrs. Lemcke Boned a Shad.

A number of your readers here are greatly interested in the reports of Mrs. Lemcke's cooking classes in Grand Central palace. On April 29 she was reported as having boned a shad. Are we to understand that every tiny bone was removed or only the back and adjacent large ones? A full explanation of the process would be gratefully received by us.
MRS. J. H. S.

Mrs. Lemcke did remove every tiny bone from the shad in the following manner: She held the fish in a swimming position, splitting it down the back with a sharp knife. Then she cut off the head and tail and commenced boning it by holding the knife close to the backbone and loosening the flesh from it on both sides. Next, the fish was laid open and the backbone taken out. This left the adjacent large bones exposed to full view. They were quickly removed, and only the small bones remained to be taken out. Many of these are visible, and those that are not can be readily distinguished by the touch and have to be picked out one at a time. This is the most tedious part of the operation, but after one has tried it a few times a certain knack is acquired, and the job is over in much less time than it takes to describe it. After all of the bones are out the skin is removed and the fish cut into fillets, when it is ready for frying or baking after being seasoned with salt and pepper and dipped in bread crumbs. A boned shad cannot be broiled.—New York Sun.

Kate Douglas Wiggin-Riggs.

The recent marriage of Mrs. Kate Douglas Wiggin and Mr. George Riggs inspires a writer in the London Queen to the following graceful tribute which will be appreciated by Mrs. Riggs' many American friends: "Most people in London literary society will remember Mrs. Wiggin-Riggs — a tall, beautiful, supremely elegant woman, who looked as if the late Mr. Worth gave his entire attention to dressing her—a woman whose hair was like burnished gold, and whose beauty was at once spiritual and vivacious. I never heard an author give readings from his or her books with as much spirit as Mrs. Wiggin-Riggs. She used to give extracts from her 'Timothy's Quest,' than which no recently published work is fuller of dry New England humor, and from her 'Bird's Christmas Carol,' a book for big and little children, worthy of comparison with Juliana Horatia Ewing."

Woman Awheel.

Casual observers of the wheelwomen of Central park and Riverside drive, says a New York paper, must have noted that they show a great variety of action, as the term is, where horses are concerned. Some move along as inconspicuously almost as if they were walking, manage their draperies with perfect grace and seemliness and in all things conduct matters so that the male onlooker finds naught to cavil at. Others move with evident labor, find their skirts a burden and keep them in constant agitation by the violent movement of knees that seem to threaten the moon.

Women's Clubs.

It is not solely for the advancement of pure thought in the azure zone of intellect that women's clubs are formed. There are feminine societies or clubs for the promotion of cooking, cycling, needlework, municipal reform, athletics, singing, politics, equestrianism, the cosmos, lukewarm tea and many other things. In our time the field of femininity is coextensive with the compass of womanhood.—New York Sun.

A Playful Colt.

There is a horse on the sand hills that plays "hide and seek" with the children, says an Augusta (Ga.) contemporary. When it comes her time to "count," she will go to the base and stand, with her head lowered the usual length of time, and then trot around and peer behind the house corners and the large trees until she finds one of her playmates, when she will twitch her upper lip and whisk her tail for an instant, and then dash off at full speed for "base," or if she sees one of the girls running for "home" before she discovers her hiding place she will wheel and fly like an arrow, and being fleet of foot generally gets there first. None of the children enjoys the fun as much as the colt.

DRINKING CUSTOMS.

SENTIMENT HAS CHANGED IN REGARD TO ALCOHOL.

It is only a few years since alcohol tippling was regarded by any American society as a vice, or a misdemeanor, or a discredit to man or woman. The wine cellar, sideboard and black bottle of the old days were respected shrines where knelt the clergy, the physicians, the lawyers, the social leaders, the ladies and gentlemen. To offer alcohol with no apology was almost a social obligation and was accepted by everybody as a social courtesy. It was as much a factor of politeness and social observation as the compliments of the day, the friendly or loving clasp of hands and the tearful farewells. Alcohol held the mind, the brain, the soul, the heads of men and women in its poison jaws. It circulated throughout the whole blood currents of humanity. It gladdened joy. It soothed sorrow. It gave tone to social enjoyment. It colored the forms and customs of social life. It warmed religion. It atoned vice. It was the universal guest of humanity who dictated the invitations when people chose to organize for all purposes of social life, whether good or evil.

In these days there was no sentiment of society or the human mind against alcohol. Alcohol controlled human action as the sin of Adam darkened a sunless world before the star of Bethlehem shone over the eastern hills. But today drinking is a reproach. Drunkenness is a public shame, and inebriety is lamented and treated and cured as a disease. The public mind looks upon a drinking social gathering with disgust, upon a drunken man as upon a lunatic and upon inebriety as it does upon a cripple who has been deformed by the mischance of accident or carelessness.

The clergy no longer drink socially. Good society is "temperate" or becoming so, while Christian society will tolerate nothing less than total abstinence from alcoholic drinks. The fashionable societies which use alcohol drink wine æsthetically, as a memory of an old custom, as people put turrets and battlements on modern houses in memory of the days of chivalry.

Neal Dow is the author of the public sentiment which underlies this social reform. The day may come when the world will banish alcohol by an edict or save the slaves of drink by a proclamation of emancipation. Lincoln is honored as the author of the writing which freed 4,000,000 slaves, but the author of the sentiment in the public mind, which taught the ethical doctrine that slavery was wrong and made it odious, was greater than Lincoln. Lincoln was the instrument of this developed ethical sentiment. The child may already be born whose hand will sign his name, under authority, for universal prohibition, and this name may go down the line of human life and history as the greatest among men, but Neal Dow created the thought and grafted it upon the human mind, which may one day blossom and bring forth this possible fruit.—Dr. Keeley.

IN THE SHAPE OF ALCOHOL HE OVERCOMES MANKIND.

"And they brought into him them who were possessed of devils." That was in the age of miraculous healing, an age in which Omnipotence cured the ills of flesh and spirit by direct interposition. We still have among us those who are sick and those who are lunatic, but many good people who study the Scriptures are puzzled to know what is meant by that mysterious curse described as devil possessed.

Let these Bible students read the daily papers as a commentary on Scripture. If demoniacal possession be an evil of the past, what can be said of the recent story of a man who kicked his sick wife to death because she refused to let him have her small earnings in order to buy intoxicants? Of the wretch who, some months since, murdered his old mother for the same reason? Of the monster who, in the madness of alcoholic delirium, assaulted his dying daughter? Perhaps those were devils of a different variety that entered into the men and swine of ancient Judæa, but surely the modern kind are as much to be dreaded, being of equal malignity and mischief. Only too many horrors crowd the newspaper columns as proofs that satan is still unchained and as free to visit earth and ruin the inhabitants thereof as when he first scaled the walls of Eden.

In the police courts we may see the ragged and unkempt wretches from whom he has lately departed, only to come again, and there we learn what mischief he found them to do while he held them in possession.

It cannot affect our belief whether he now comes in invisible form, as in those days when he retreated at the command of Deity incarnate, or whether he may be touched and handled as an intoxicating liquor—the result is the same, and this is all with which we have to do. Whether in Bible times the victim was first seized with or without his own consent we may not say, but today this victim is always more or less culpable, less sometimes, because from his cradle he has had to contend against the terrible strength of environment, but in every case the curse is in some measure of his own bringing about, and therefore after the devil leaveth him to remorse and punishment we do not protest when we see him led to prison for minor crimes committed at the command of his master or condemned to lose his life, when, at the same instigation, he was driven to shed man's blood. He who is mad by the inscrutable decree of an allwise Providence can never be regarded as a criminal, no matter what his acts may be, but satan's madman is deserving of no more mercy from God or man than is his master.—Banner of Gold.

Inebriety Closely Resembles Insanity.

So much alike are the symptoms of some forms of inebriety to some forms of insanity that many alienist authorities, with Hutcheson of Glasgow, nearly 50 years ago, regard inebriety as a form of mania, a brain and mind unsoundness, rendering the victim irresponsible for his acts done in paroxysm. Carpenter calls inebriety one form of insanity. In Belgium the law acknowledges an irresistible, uncontrollable impulse to drink to excess as a form of insanity and legislates for it accordingly by the involuntary committal of the narcomaniac to an asylum on the production of medical testimony. Anstie speaks of inebriety as really more a variety of constitutional insanity than of alcoholic disease. The ungovernable impulse to drunkenness certainly bears an exceedingly close resemblance to and is practically not distinguishable from the other ungovernable impulses of many of the insane.—Dr. Norman Kerr.

In Utah the new constitution of the state will be submitted to the voters at the November election. Its distinctive features are the provision inhibiting polygamy and the clause granting the right of suffrage to women.

SABBATH SCHOOL.

LESSON I, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, JULY 7.

Text of the Lesson, Ex. xx, 1-17—Memory Versus, 3-17—Golden Text, Luke x, 27—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

1, 2. While we now turn back from the life and work of the Lord Jesus, as revealed to us in the gospels, to the story of the Lord's dealings with Israel on the way to the promised land, we are learning of the same Lord whose goings forth have been from of old, from the days of eternity (Mic. v, 2, margin). It was not because of any worthiness in them, but only because of His own faithfulness and His promise to Abraham that He brought them out of Egypt (Deut. vii, 7, 8; Gen. xv, 13, 14). It was now the third month since they had been redeemed from the bondage of Egypt. They had come to Mount Sinai, and the Lord had offered to make them a peculiar treasure unto Himself above all people, a kingdom of priests, a holy nation, if only they would obey His voice. This they readily promised to do, and now we see them gathered about Mount Sinai, the mountain quaking greatly and covered with fire and smoke, out of the midst of which God speaks the words of our lesson to the people. See chapter xix and Deut. v, 4, 22, 24, 26. It was a day, in this respect, unlike any before or since in the history of this world. He first reminds them that their redemption from Egypt was wholly His doing without any help of theirs, for "salvation is of the Lord" (Jonah ii, 9), and He never asks an unredeemed soul to keep His commandments. The only command to the unsaved is to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ (I John iii, 23; Acts xvi, 31), then when Christ has become to them the end of the law for righteousness He will fulfill in them the righteousness of the law, enabling them to walk not after the flesh, but after the spirit (Rom. x, 4; viii, 4).

3. Since they were redeemed by the only living and true God, to make Him a name on the earth in the sight of all nations (II Sam. vii, 23; Isa. lxiii, 12, 14), therefore they were forbidden to have aught to do in any way with the gods of the nations, idols of wood and stone, the work of men's hands (II Kings xvii, 36, 37; Jer. x, 10, 11). We who have been redeemed from the curse of the law by the work of our Substitute (Gal. iii, 13) are to have no idols between our soul and God, but make it manifest that we worship only Him.

4-6. Because they saw no similitude on the day that God spoke to them out of the midst of the fire, therefore they were to use no images nor likeness of anything in their worship of God. God is seven times called a jealous God. The other six places are Ex. xxxiv, 14; Deut. iv, 24; v, 9; vi, 15; Joshua xxiv, 19; Nah. i, 2. The word translated jealous also means to buy, purchase or redeem. We are redeemed to be a people for his own possession (Titus ii, 14, R. V.) and He wants us all for Himself.

7. The name above every name must be ever hallowed as Jesus taught us to pray (Math. vi, 9). Not only is all kind of so called profanity forbidden, but as the name stands for the character (Ex. xxxiv, 5-7) all that would in any way belittle the character of God must be carefully avoided. We are here to honor Him in every way and magnify His name.

8-11. The Sabbath was made for man, and the Son of Man is Lord of the Sabbath (Mark ii, 27, 28). If, then, He is my Lord, the Sabbath is specially mine that on it I may have special communion with Him. In Isa. lviii, 13, 14, we are taught that we are to honor Him, not doing our own ways, nor finding our own pleasure, nor speaking our own words, and that thus we shall delight ourselves in the Lord. In Col. ii, 16, 17, we read that even the Sabbath is a shadow of things to come, perhaps referring to the keeping of a Sabbath that remains for the people of God (Heb. iv, 9) but which we can foretaste even here (Heb. iv, 10).

12. The first four commandments, ordinarily known as the first table of the law, are summed up by our Lord Jesus in Mark xii, 30, 31 (quoting from Deut. vi, 5 and Jer. xix, 18) as loving God with all the heart, and the last six as loving our neighbor as ourselves. Or as it is in Rom. xiii, 10, "Love is the fulfilling of the law." This fifth command is spoken of in Eph. vi, 2, as "The first commandment with promise." Next to God we are to honor our parents, and a curse is pronounced upon such as do otherwise (Deut. xxvii, 16; Prov. 30, 17).

13. "Thou shalt not kill." In our Lord's commentary on this in Math. v, 21, 22, He teaches that anger lies at the root of murder, and in John iii, 15, it is written that "he that hateth his brother is a murderer," referring back to the story of Cain and Abel. Not only are we forbidden to hate any one, but we are forbidden to speak evil or even imagine evil against another (James iv, 11; Zech. vii, 10; viii, 17).

14. "Thou shalt not commit adultery." That this command reaches not only to the sinful act, but is broken by even a sinful thought, is clear from our Lord's comment upon it in Math. v, 27, 28. Another aspect of it is found in Jas. iv, 4, where we are told that to love or be a friend of the world that hates God is in His sight a form of adultery. Let us pray:

> Wash, Lord, and purify my heart,
> And make it clean in every part,
> And when 'tis clean, Lord keep it, too,
> For that is more than I can do.

15. "Thou shalt not steal." Many would scorn to take what does not belong to them, as between man and man, who possibly might have to plead guilty when searched by the question, "Will a man rob God?" Inasmuch as our relation to God is the first question, let the believer ask himself, Am I robbing God of any portion of my being or my time or my money? He claims our body as His property (Rom. xii, 1, 2; I Cor. vi, 19, 20), and at least a seventh of our time and a tenth of our income.

16. "Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor." Some love lying rather than righteousness (Ps. lii, 3), but such are finally found without the city (Rev. xxii, 15). "He that worketh deceit shall not dwell within my house; he that telleth lies shall not tarry in my sight" (Ps. ci, 7). God is a God of Truth—the Spirit is a Spirit of Truth, and Jesus is the Truth (Isa. lxv, 16; John xvi, 13; xiv, 6). When they have full control of us, we will bear no false witness.

17. "Thou shalt not covet." We might infer from Rom. vii, 7, in connection with Phil. iii, 6, that Paul fancied that he had kept the law pretty thoroughly except on this one point, but he learned, as James also did, that to keep the whole law and offend only on one point makes one guilty of all (Jas. ii, 10; Rom. vii, 18). "Guilty" is the word for every one (Rom. iii, 19, 20). Some one has well said, "To do what the law requires I must have life, and to be what the law requires I must have righteousness, but by nature I have neither and am therefore cursed." When I receive Christ, He becomes my life and righteousness and will fulfil the law in me.

SILVER IS IGNORED

By the National Convention of Republican Clubs.

STRUGGLE ON THE FLOOR AVERTED

By Agreement on a Declaratton That Leaves Out the Disputed Issue and All Others—Resolutions on Public Questions Referred En Masse to the Republican National Convention Next Year—McAlpin Elected President.

CLEVELAND, June 21.—The national convention of Republican clubs had an eventful day. Its committee on resolutions consisted of fifteen silver and thirty-one anti-silver men. The sub-committee of eleven to draft resolutions to submit to the full oommittee had only two silver men—Dubois, of Idaho, and Allen, of Utah. After this sub-committee had worked all night on an "Address to the People," with the word "resolved" omitted therein, a committee of three on revision was selected, and the silver men claim that they were not represented at all on the revision committee. The sub-committee adopted the report of the committee on revision, and the full committee met at 2 p. m. to consider the "Address to the People" that had taken two days and one night for its preparation.

Ignored the Question of Silver.

The feature of the "address" was that it covered every question except that of silver, which was entirely ignored. This was doue to prevent a minority report on the silver question and a fight on the floor of the convention. When the full committee considered the address the anti-silver men opposed it. They said there had been more agitation here all week on the silver question than on all other things combined, and for the report to be silent only on that question would be cowardly and inconsistent. The silver men were satisfied with the address and had agreed to make no minority report and not to open the question on the floor of the convention lu the event the address was adopted. Their opponents, however, held that it was enough to concede everything to the west for the sake of harmony without "rubbing it in."

New Departure in Declarations.

Some of the most ultra opponents of free silver in the committee insisted that if the silver question was ignored entirely, all other questions should be ignored. This plan pleased the western silverites better than "the address to the people." After indulging in the most bitter speeches for hours in the consideration of the address a new depature was taken by Senator Patton, of Michigan, offering the following as a substitute for the report of the sub-committee:

"Whereas, Section 13 of the constitution of the Republican League of the United States, says: 'This League shall not in any manner endeavor to influence the action of any national, state, county or municipal convention," the delegates of the Republican League of the United States in convention assembled do hereby renew their allegiance to the principles of the Republican party and pledge their best efforts for the success of the candidates of that party.

Refers 'Em to the National Convention.

"'Believing that the convention has no instructions from the Republicans of the United States, or jurisdiction under our constitution, to frame party platforms, we hereby refer all resolutions in relation to public questions to the Republican national convention of 1896, with entire confidence that its action will redound to the prosperity of our people and the continued glory and advancement of the country.'"

It was argued against the Patton substitute that the National League at its last convention at Denver and the previous year at Louisville, and at othor national conventions, had adopted recommendatory resolutions without the constitutional inhibition ever being raised, and that the adoption of the substitute would be accepted as a confession of this convention's inability to meet the issues squarely.

The New Plan Wins the Fight.

Although the arguments poured in hot and fast, and Chairman Robinson, of Pennsylvania, left the chair to oppose it, yet the plan of ignoring everything if the silver question was ignored gained such headway that the Patton substitute was adopted at 6:30 p. m. without a dissenting vote. As the "Address to the People" that was ruled out by the adoption of the Patton substitute reaffirmed the resolutions of previous National League conventions there was much discussion of the resolution adopted at Denver last yea, which demanded the restoration of silver.

PROHIBITIONISTS IN IOWA

Nominate a State Ticket and Declare for Free Silver.

DES MOINES, June 20.—The Prohibition state convention met in the Young Men's Christian Association hall. The convention was notable for the presence of a number of lady delegates who came in response to an invitation in the call for Women's Christian Temperance Unions and also all other organizations in sympathy with prohibition to send delegates. The convention roasted the Republican party for the passage of the mulct law.

The following nominations were made: For governor, Frank Bacon, Milton Junction; lieutenant governor, M. P. Atwood, Estherville; supreme court judge, Judge J. W. Rogers, West Union; superintendent of public instruction, Mrs. L. D. Carhart, Marion; railroad commissioner, H. F. Johns, Harrison county.

The resolutions declare for woman suffrage; for the free coinage of silver and gold at the ratio of 16 to 1; government ownership and operation for the railways; for Sunday observance, and for the income tax. They denounce the mulct law and the Republican party as the author of said law.

Mixed Ticket Carries a Florida City.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., June 20.—In the city election the citizens mixed ticket of Democrats and Republicans was overwhelmingly victorious. The independent Democrats elected only one councilman, and that one because some of his opponents' votes were improperly marked and had to be thrown out.

BOLLN'S POSITION IMPROVING.

His Shortage Decreasing as Time Passes and Overdrafts Are Returned.

OMAHA, June 24.—The investigation into City Treasurer Bolln's shortage has not been made public, though a week has passed since it was discovered that he was $20,000 short. Bolln has not been dismissed from his office or in any way disturbed. He has secured his bondsmen for whatever amount they may be required to make up by deeding them all his Omaha property. One result of the prolonged investigation will be a decrease in the shortage of several thousand dollars. The city employes who had been advanced money by Bollu have been hustling to square their accounts.

One member of the city council had drawn $1,125, which would be equal to his pay for twenty-two months, or for sixteen months after his term of office had expired. He paid $1,000 of this amount the day after the shortage was discovered and has paid the balance since. Other city officials had drawn amounts ranging from $10 to $500, which have also been repaid.

A Big Drop in Sugar.

Sears, Roebuck & Co., better known as the Cheapest Supply House on Earth, at 171, 173 and 175 W. Adams street, Chicago, Ill., are selling forty pounds of the best granulated sugar for $1, and other groceries at proportionately low prices; they ship their goods to anyone anywhere; they will supply you if anywhere within 1,000 miles of Chicago, selling granulated sugar forty pounds for $1, and everything accordingly. Send no money, but cut this notice out and send to Sears, Roebuck & Co., Chicago, for full particulars.

MISS FLAGG'S
LATEST NEW BOOK!
"A Prisoner of Hope."
COMPLETE IN ONE LARGE HANDSOME VOLUME.
Price, $1.25.
We heartily commend this new work, by Elizabeth E. Flagg, to all our friends. The narrative originated in her personal experience, two or three years ago, when she sought relief and restoration from the results of a painful accident, In that search she availed herself of a unique healer in New Jersey, whom she graphically described, at that time, in her weekly letters to this paper. The ideas created in her mind by that experience form the basis of this well-told story, and thoughtful readers will peruse it with interest. While all may not agree with its deductions, ministers of the Gospel, students in seminaries and intelligent home circles will find it pleasant food for thought. We sell it for $1.25 per copy, postage prepaid.

NEWS OF THE STATE.

TELEGRAPHIC REPORTS OF HAPPENINGS OF NOTE.

Work of the State Lawmakers at Springfield—Bills and Resolutions Introduced, Etc.—Other State Items of General Interest to Our Readers.

CHICAGO, June 19.—Just as the people of the state had settled down to a feeling of peace and security with no apprehensions as to what might happen at Springfield, the legislature having at last adjourned, the governor has ruthlessly destroyed that blissful state by a call on the legislators to meet again on June 25 at 2 p. m. and do a lot more law carpentering. He wants them to do several things, among them to raise enough revenue to meet the appropriations, which he says they have not done; to reform the police courts, and to abolish the state board of equalization.

Then he gives them a poser in the problem of a perfect system of taxation, and wants them to reform the practice in courts of record so that cases can be disposed of promptly. Two other things desired are laws to restrict children from employments that stunt them physically, mentally and morally and some sort of labor arbitration law. He also wants the state to take charge of the Pullman sleeping cars so far as fixing prices is concerned, legislation that will secure fair and unbiased grand juries and libel law revision. The toughest problem, however, that he insists on the legislature solving is that of keeping the convicts at work without letting them come in competition with free labor—but adds "if such a system can be devised."

The members hereabouts generally do not take kindly to the extra session. Speaker Meyer says it is impossible for him to attend, as it would be a matter of life and death for him. He expected an extra session, but thought the governor would wait until fall. Indeed, most of the members interviewed said they expected the call, but few cared to spend the "dog days" in Springfield. The length of the session may be judged from the remark of one member that it would take a month to pass a revenue bill. One plan proposed was to meet, hear the governor's message and then adjourn to fall. The regular session lasted twenty-three weeks. There are eleven measures enumerated in the governor's call, and most of them are difficult and intricate in their nature.

BURN GOV. ALTGELD IN EFFIGY.

Students at Normal Object to Action of the Executive.

BLOOMINGTON, Ills., June 20.—The bell of the Illinois State Normal university at Normal began ringing violently, and a mob of students and citizens assembled, the students wearing black robes and masks, blowing horns, and all denouncing Governor Altgeld, who is blamed for the order of the board of education abolishing the high school department of the Normal university.

The mob proceeded to the campus, where was found an effigy of the governor, and proceeded to hold a mock execution. The effigy was burned amid groans and cheers. The mob next proceeded to an open grave, and there after a funeral oration by a masked orator interred a coffin supposed to contain the "Model high school, aged 33, which reached an untimely end through Altgeld."

Close of the Galesburg Meet.

GALESBURG, Ills., June 22.—Events of the annual meet of the Illinois division of the League of American Wheelmen have closed. Racing was good and crowd large. The meet has been a financial success. The most interesting event was the five mile race, class A, with forty starters, comprising the best talent here. It was a hot performance from start to finish and was won by Bert Repine, of Galesburg. Those winning the most prizes during the tournament were: F. Wing, St. Louis; A. Gardiner, Chicago; A. A. McLain, Aurora, and Bert Repine.

HARRY HAYWARD GETS A RESPITE.

Supreme Court Gives Him a Stay Which It Might Have Refused.

MINNEAPOLIS, June 20.—Harry Hayward's life hung upon a very slender thread. Contrary to popular belief it was entirely within the discretion of the supreme court to have refused a stay. In that case he would have been executed tomorrow. The Hayward case was presented to the judges in chambers. It was carefully considered for two or three hours, but a stay of thirty days was finally granted upon condition that the case be argued this term.

The term will come to an end July 3. The probability is that a new trial will be refused. In that case Governor Clough will at once fix a new day for carrying out the penalty pronounced by the district court, and it is altogether likely that the condemned man will be executed some time during the month of July.

Accident on Whaleback.

CHICAGO, June 24.—By the explosion of a steam valve on the whaleback steamer Christopher Columbus off Waukegan Saturday night two men were killed and several others dangerously or painfully injured. The dead are: Frank Wilson, coal passer; E. J. Steit, fireman. Injured: Edward Darrow, painfully scalded; John Hopp, seriously scalded, inhaled steam; George W. Kell, hands and face scalded; John W. Keogh, hands and face scalded; Arnold Klein, Dubuque, Ia., badly scalded, accompanied by a student, also painfully scalded; Robert McConkey, back terribly scalded; Miss Miller, hands and face scalded; Frank Rosner, badly scalded; James E. Ryan, badly scalded; Miss Voxheimer, face painfully scalded; Jas. Lorimer, seriously scalded.

Altgeld Signs Fifty Bills.

SPRINGFIELD, Ills., June 22.—Fifty bills were signed by the governor yesterday. One greatly interesting cities was senate bill 276, which, it is said, practically puts a stop to local improvements in the towns and cities of the state. It prohibits a tax on any property in excess of the benefit the property will receive from the improvement. The governor has written a letter replying to critics of the bill.

Illinois Building Associations.

ROCKFORD, June 22. — The Building Association League of Illinois closed its annual convention here with the election of officers: President, George F. Penfield, of Rockford; first vice, Julius Stern, of Chicago; secretary, B. G. Vasen, of Quincy; treasurer, Albert Barnes, of Decatur. Peoria was selected as the place of the next meeting.

Paupers Combine for Murder.

QUINCY, Ills., June 24.—John Gahan, an old well-known character, who had been taken to the county house, was pushed from a second story window by inmates and his neck broken. He was dirty, disagreeable and quarrelsome, and the dwellers at the poor farm combined against him. The identity of his assailants will never be known.

Six Persons Drowned at Peoria.

PEORIA, Ills., June 24. — Harvey H. Noble and Fred Joyslin, with five small children, were drowned while returning from a fishing trip across the river. Noble and Joyslin became scared and jumped, capsizing the boat.

Notes of the State.

Fire-damp in a well near Monticello, Ills., caused the death of Jesse Carnell Prar and James.

Henry J. Aldrich, formerly of Bloomington, Ills., is reported missing from Denver. He was the manager and the "whole thing" of the Colorado Securities company, and, it is said, has left eastern creditors in the lurch for millions.

Lucas Stoudt, a butcher in Lock port Ills., has disappeared, and it is thought to be another case of murder, which makes two this week, both butchers.

Defeat for the Government.

LONDON, June 21.—The government was defeated on the motion of the Hon. William St. John F. Broderick, Conservative member for the Guilford division of Surrey, to reduce the salary of the secretary of war by £100 on account of an alleged deficiency in the army stores and munitions of war, chiefly cordite. The motion was adopted by a vote of 132 to 125. Progress was immediately reported.

Hope for Representative Remann.

VANDALIA, Ills., June 22.—Congressman Remann's condition has improved. He is able to converse a little and now takes nourishment regularly. While his condition is still precarious Dr. Hughes, of St. Louis, and Dr. Haller, of Vandalia, have not given up hope.

Notorious Counterfeiter Arrested.

ST. JOSEPH, Mo., June 21.—Deputy United States Marsnal Medley captured T. P Stratton a notorious counterfeiter who had eluded the officers for a year and who has been chased over half a dozen states. His capture is an important one.

To You

The Most Important

Matter demanding attention at this season is the condition of your blood.

Your health depends upon it, for as the quality and quantity of the blood vary, you are better or worse.

The blood conveys all the elements which go to make up the organs, nerves and tissues of the body, and carries away all dissolved, useless material.

Every bone, muscle, nerve and tissue, lives upon what the blood feeds to it.

The whole world knows that Hood's Sarsaparilla is the standard remedy for making pure blood.

It possesses merit peculiar to itself and by which it effects marvelous cures even when other preparations fail. When you buy your spring medicine get the best, and that is CULTIVATION OF OATS.

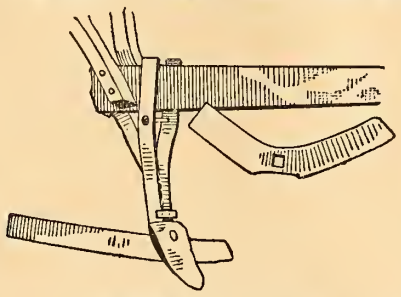
Comparison of Varieties, Weight Per Bushel, Shrinkage of Grain, Etc.

Following is a summary of a bulletin received from the Ohio station concerning experiments conducted there with oats. Sixty-four sorts were grown with a view to a comparison of varieties. These were divided into groups, each having some distinctive characteristic. The first group embraces 16 differently named sorts, having the open or spreading panicle, coarse, weak straw and short, plump grain of which the Welcome is the best known type. The second group comprises 14 kinds, in which the head or panicle is more or less one sided, and which are ordinarily termed side oats. The Seizure is one of the best representatives of this class. A third group consists of 18 varieties which are in general form similar to the Welcome class, except that the berry is longer and more pointed, and the straw generally a little stronger, but the grain lighter. The Wideawake was selected as the type of this class. In the fourth and last group are six sorts of black or mixed oats, having in the main the characteristics of the Welcome. In this group are included the Monarch, Rust Proof and others of like kind.

In the short, unfavorable season of 1893 the Welcome variety gave lower yields than any other of that class, while the group as a whole gave larger yields than any of the other three. The Seizure kind was the lowest yielder in the whole list for 1893, where sown late, but the same variety sown four to five weeks earlier gave, the same season, as good returns as any other variety on the farm. In 1894 only three varieties in the Welcome group gave higher yields than that variety—namely, Improved American, Badger Queen and Bonanza king. The highest yields in the Seizure group for 1894 were from the following varieties: Japan, Early Swedish, White Swiss, Prince Edward's Island and Wilson's Prolific, the latter variety badly mixed. The highest average yield was decidedly in favor of the Side oats group.

In a series of tests covering four seasons the varieties that have given the highest average yields are Improved American, Japan, Early Swedish, Prince Edward's Island, State of North Dakota, Colonel, Dakota Gray, Kansas Hybrid, Probsteier and Egyptian.



The average weight per measured bushel of all oats grown upon the station farm during the last four years falls below the standard of 32 pounds to the bushel. The highest average for any one variety has been 38.6 pounds; the lowest, 27.3. From the investigations thus far made it has not been found that oats of heavy weight necessarily have a smaller percentage of hull than those of lighter weight per measured bushel.

A single trial indicates that oats put away in good condition shrink but very little—in this instance less than 1 per cent—and the straw under ordinary conditions shrinks about 6 per cent.

Experiments extending over three seasons on clay soil show that the method of putting in oats without first plowing the ground may involve a loss of five bushels per acre as compared with sowing on land that has been plowed and well prepared.

An Effective Implement.

In a bulletin from the Arkansas station is illustrated a tool much used in the south and west and useful elsewhere when shallow culture is desired. This tool is known at the south as the heel scrape and scooter. In the bulletin mentioned it is thus described:

The single shovel forms the "scooter" part of the tool. It is 7 inches long and 3½ inches wide. It will do the work described by our correspondent. To make the "heel scrape" the curved iron is bolted on as shown. These "scrapes" are 16 and 24 inches long, about 2½ inches wide and one-fourth inch thick, with the lower edge sharp. As bolted on back of the shovel this scraper is inclined so that the front forms a cutting edge, so that it will slice off weeds and lift the upper soil. This makes a very effective tool. Rural New Yorker recommends this or similar attachment as useful in cutting off weeds and preventing too deep cultivation.

Dwarf Essex Rape.

Professor Shaw of the Minnesota station believes that a great future lies before the forage plant known as Dwarf Essex rape over the whole northwest. This plant resembles what the farmers of this country call rutabagas. The leaves and stem only are good for food. It is excellent for swine, cattle and poultry, and especially for sheep.

News and Notes.

Let every potato grower give the corrosive sublimate treatment and bordeaux mixture a fair trial this summer.

American Agriculturist calls attention to the fact that, now that many of the telephone patents have expired and the instruments in use are free to all, farmers who have barbed wire fences may convert them into telephone lines.

A Wisconsin contributor to Farm and Fireside reports that a patch of crimson clover which he sowed last fall endured the winter and now looks well. It is a more favorable report than was expected from that latitude.

Money Made in One Half Minute.

I have not made less than $16.00 any day since I began selling the Iron City Ice Cream Freezers. It is such a wonder. I always have a crowd wanting ice cream. I make from $5.00 to $8.00 a day selling ice cream and from $7.00 to $10.00 a day selling freezers. I can freeze cream elegantly in one half minute, and that astonishes people so they all want to sample the cream and then many of them buy freezers, as the cream is smooth and contains no lumps. Every freezer is guaranteed to freeze the cream in one half minute. Anyone can sell ice cream and the freezer sells itself. My sister is making from $10.00 to $15.00 a day. Write to W. H. Baird & Co., Sta. A., Pittsburg, Pa., and they will mail you circulars and full particulars free so anyone can go right to work and make lots of money all summer.

Allyn's Ritual of Freemasonry by Avery Allyn contains the fully Illustrated Ritual of the Blue Lodge, Chapter Council and Commandery, 11 of the Scotch Rite Degrees, Several Masonic side degrees and what is termed a Key to the Phi Beta Kappa, the Orange and Odd-fellows Societies. Price in cloth $5.00.

Duncan's Masonic Ritual and Monitor. Profusely illustrated with explanatory engravings, and containing the ritual and work of the order for the seven degrees, including the Royal Arch. Though extensively used as an Instruction Book and one of the best in the market it is not as accurate as "Freemasonry Illustrated," the first book on catalogue. Price in cloth, $2.50.

Richardson's Monitor of Freemasonry. Containing the ceremonies of Lodges, Chapters, Encampments, etc. Illustrated. Although extensively used in conferring the higher degrees, it is not only very incomplete but inaccurate especially as regards the first seven degrees, and as to the higher degrees it gives but a description and general idea of the degrees rather than the full ritual. Price in cloth, $1.25; Paper covers, 75c.

Look to the East. A Ritual of the first three Masonic Degrees by Ralph Lester. Price in cloth $2.00. Notwithstanding the high price this book is very inferior in every way to Freemasonry Illustrated or The Handbook of Freemasonry at a quarter the price.

LIBERALS HAVE QUIT.

Prime Minister Rosebery Drops a Great Burden.

LONDON, June 24.—It is now announced that the outcome of the deliberations of the cabinet in consequence of the adverse vote in the house of commons on Friday is that Lord Rosebery, the prime minister, has tendered his resignation to the queen. Her majesty has therefore summoned Lord Salisbury, the leader of the Conservative party, to Windsor in connection with the formation of a Conservative ministry. The leading Conservatives declare that the Marquis of Salisbury will not formally take office until parliament is dissolved. He will insist that the government, before yielding the seats, shall pass a vote of an amount necessary for the expenditures for two months, to enable a general election to be held.

The Conservatives will thus be in a position of attack instead of defense. Throughout the day the situation was the absorbing topic of the chief political clubs. Several members of the cabinet called in Downing street in the afternoon in the expectation of seeing Lord Rosebery, who returned from Windsor at 6 o'clock and drove to Downing street, where an informal cabinet meeting lasting twenty-five minutes immediately followed. It is understood that the Marquis of Salisbury only agrees to form a cabinet on condition that parliament is dissolved. Nothing is known regarding the personnel of the new ministry, but complete harmony exists between the Liberal Unionists and the Conservatives.

Undoubtedly Salisbury is right, from a political point of view, at any rate, in insisting on a dissolution. Still the move was a shrewd one on Rosebery's part. For if the Conservatives declined to take office Rosebery would stay and be in a stronger position than before—he had been defeated, offered the opposition control of the government, they declined; therefore they confessed that he had the real majority as representing the effective lower house. If a Conservative leader accepted there is no real doubt that he would find a majority, even if small, against him. He could not dissolve parliament until the supplies had been voted, and a Liberal majority could prolong the situation for months.

The Irish members are extremely uneasy and dissatisfied. They state that after acting for three years as the strongest arm of the government they are deeply concerned at the sudden end of the government without passing any of the principal Irish measures. Not only has home rule not progressed but measures concerning the Christian Brothers, the county council bill (which reached a second reading), the grand jury bill, and the proposal to extend the power of guardians regarding laborers' cottages are all lost. The only Irish measure now likely to be passed is Healy's municipal franchise bill, which has gone to the house of lords. The Liberal Scotch members are also sore, their expectations having been disappointed.

Lord Salisbury did not receive his summons until too late to go to Windsor last night. He went early this morning. The effect of the cabinet's decision is more marked upon the whips and officials than upon the cabinet ministers. Lord Rosebery, on his return to town, looked decidedly sprightly, and Lord Tweedmouth, Mr. Morley and Sir William Harcourt were in a jocular mood.

Whistling Law Unconstitutional.

OMAHA, June 24.—The supreme court of Nebraska has rendered a decision of great interest to railroads. There is a law on the statute books of the state compelling engineers to whistle at every public highway crossing and on failure to do so the railroad company is subject to a fine of $50, of which half goes to the informer. As a consequence there are many informants, particularly farmers, who make it a business to catch the engineer. A man lets it go until he has a number of cases and then goes to court. The law has cost the Nebraska railroads several small fortunes, and every suit hitherto has resulted in favor of the plaintiffs and against the railroads. The supreme court has decided the law unconstitutional.

Iowa Sunday School Association.

IDA GROVE, Ia., June 22.—The thirtieth annual session of the Iowa State Sabbath School association closed a three days' session here. In the great parade 1,813 Ida county Sunday school children were in line. About 3,500 visitors are in the city, and 5,500 persons witnessed the parade. Forty-eight counties were represented in the convention and 1,180 enrolled sessions were held in the various churches, all of which were crowded to overflowing. Many eminent church and school workers and educators in the state were present.

TWO SEAS UNITED.

KIEL, June 20.—All day long there has been a ceaseless incoming of trains hither on the railroads, each one filled to the last inch of available space with eager humanity to witness the opening of the great canal which unites the North and Baltic seas. Visitors have flocked in thousands in the streets of the town and in the harbor, and every place is overflowing with people. The main streets are almost impassable with the streams of men, women, and children. Pleasure steamers, loaded to their utmost capacity with crowds of sightseers, have been making numberless trips all day in the harbor, each one going the rounds of the warships, which are the central feature in the great spectacle. Each pleasure steamer, as it came abreast of a man-of-war, exchanged cheers with the jolly tars on board, and none of them seemed to grow weary.

The emperor arrived at the rathaus at 6:30 p. m. and was received by a guard of honor amid loud and enthusiastic cheering from the crowds in the vicinity. Shortly before 7 o'clock the banquet in the great hall of the rathaus began. The hall was splendidly lighted by electricity and the walls were almost hidden with historic paintings, draperies and flags of all nations, while rare plants were freely used to offset the richness of the mural decorations. Over the chief entrance was a crimson canopy faced with the arms of the city of Hamburg. On the right side of this canopy was a trophy of British flags and on the left side was a trophy of French colors with "R. F." (Republique Francaise) conspicuous in large letters.

There was a loud fanfare as his majesty walked to the head of the imperial table, bowing right and left on his way to his seat. His majesty sat with the regent of Bavaria, Prince Luitpold, the king of Wurtemburg and others of the German princes and grand dukes on the left. The duke of York, the Grand Duke Alexis of Russia, Sir Edward Malet, the British ambassador, and Herbette, the French ambassador, were seated opposite the emperor. The total number of guests was 600. During the banquet the emperor was in wonderful spirits and led in an animated conversation full of gaiety and good humor, charming all present.

During the banquet Burgomaster Lehman made a speech congratulatory of the event which the company was assembled to witness and after he sat down the emperor spoke and closed as follows: "All nations uplift themselves to us here today with a questioning look. They need and desire peace. In peace alone can the world's commerce expand. In peace alone can it thrive, and peace we shall and will uphold. In this peace, may the trade of Hamburg, too, prosper and flourish. The protection of the imperial eagle shall ever follow it, whithersoever it may pursue its way over the globe. But we now raise our glasses to the weal of our worthy Hanse town of Hamburg. Cheer for Hamburg. Another, and yet a third."

In the evening the town, harbor, and river were a brilliant spectacle with the innumerable illuminations. On the island at 10 o'clock the grand display of fireworks was given. The United States men-of-war present, which had been well supplied with fireworks, contributed not a little to this part of the spectacle. There were also several set pieces in red, white, and blue, representing the German and American arms. Another set piece was a special motto in German text "Herzlichter Gruss am Deutschland von den Vereinigten Staaten" (Hearty greeting to Germany from the United States).

Murder at Chicago Car Barns.

CHICAGO, June 24.—Four bullets fired by a masked robber ended the career of Carey B. Birch, cash receiver for the West Chicago Street Railway company at the Armitage avenue car barns of the Milwaukee avenue line. In an open safe, before which the unfortunate man fell, lay $4,000. Seizing a handful of the money the murderer fled and has not been captured.

Thrown from Her Wheel.

CINCINNATI, June 24.—Miss Ada Florence Fitch of Lawrenceburg, Ind., who graduated from the Cincinnati Law school a month ago, was thrown from a bicycle in this city by colliding with a heavy wagon. The hind wheel passed over her body, inflicting injuries that are supposed to be fatal.

Hawaii and Annexation.

WASHINGTON, June 22.—Consul General Mills at Honolulu has sent to the state department a report of the labor commission on the coffee industy in Hawaii. The commission says that there is now labor enough to supply the coffee plantations, but that the supply may fail at any time and the coffee industry be seriously crippled. The report is in substance a plea for annexation.

American Whist League.

MINNEAPOLIS, June 21.—The American Whist league elected the following officers: President, Theodore Schwarz, Chicago; vice president, W. H. Barney, Providence, R. I.; recording secretary, B. B. Kribbe, St. Louis; corrospouding secretary, R. H. Weems, Brooklyn, N. Y.; treasurer, R. L. Richards, Rock Rapids, Ia. The revised by-laws providing for auxilliary associations on state lines were adopted.

Harriet Beecher Stowe was eighty-four years old June 14, and is in good physical health.

In order to let your light shine in the true sense, you should take the Cynosure, and after reading, pass it around among your neighbors.

If you are going off for a summer vacation, have the Cynosure sent to your address, and embrace every opportunity to introduce it to your friends.

A new secret society has been started in Washington City called the "Supreme Temple of the Silver Knights of America," whose object is to secure the free coinage of silver and make silver a legal tender for all debts.

Dr. A. T. Pierson, at the Bible Institute last Saturday, was asked the question: "Can a person belonging to a secret society be a consistent Christian?" He replied: "Jesus Christ satisfies me so well that I want nothing else."

The style of our times in having so much of the form of religion, but denying its power, has been illustrated by a grocer who lived over the store, and who in the morning was in the habit of calling to his clerk down stairs, "John, have you watered the milk?" "Yes." "Have you sanded the sugar?" "Yes." "Have you beaned the coffee?" "Yes" "Then come up to family prayers."

Dr. James Harper writes in the United Presbyterian: "There is ground to fear that many who bear the name of United Presbyterian are but little in sympathy with the principles, at least with the more distinctive principles of the United Presbyterian church. Some seem inclined to recede from the stand which the church has taken in regard to secret societies, psalmody and communion, or at least to administer with great laxity the law relating to such points.....And whenever a church becomes ashamed of its profession, while in name retaining it, the functionary whose services it most needs is an undertaker, and one also unskilled in the art of embalming."

It is a deplorable fact that the nations that lead the world in the consumption of alcoholic liquors are the three Protestant nations, Germany, Great Britain and the United States. Germany heads the list with a consumption of thirty-three gallons per head. Great Britain follows with thirty; and United States ranks next with sixteen gallons per head. How powerfully it must tend to counteract the teachings of our foreign missionaries, when those whom they try to save know that the nations most under the influence of Christianity send out the most liquor to ruin the bodies and souls of men. Bishop Foster says there are 240,000 Christian saloons in the United States, because it is by consent of the Christian churches that they exist.

An exchange says: "If Christ were here now he would undoubtedly surprise some good men by the things he would do, even as he surprised many good men by what he did nineteen hundred years ago." Of one thing, however, we may rest assured, that if Christ were on earth now and walking the streets of Jerusalem with the beloved disciple John he would not invent some excuse to send John off while he would disappear in some doorway and ascend to the fourth floor where at the door of a lodge-toom he would give the rap and password, and then go in and engage in lodge ceremonies which John out in the cold could not share. Oh, no. A Master who said, "In secret have I said nothing;" who "spake openly in the temple whither the Jews always resort," and of whom it was said that he was not to be found in the secret chamber, could never stoop to anything so selfish and deceptive as that.

Are you sometimes feeling discouraged that our cause is making little progress? Do you despair of getting more subscribers for our paper? We entreat you to exercise more faith. Don't give up the good fight. Ask God in prayer to direct you how to reach the hearts of friends and awaken their interest. The best way to do so is to get them to take the Cynosure. It has been by introducing it into homes that life-long friends of our movement have been enlisted all over the land. We know that times are hard and there are "so many cheaper papers." But it is possible even in such times to get Cynosure subscribers. Our Pacific Coast agent, Rev. P. B. Williams, has sent in as many as fifty-two new subscribers in one month. Bro. W. B. Stoddard has the same success. So let us all take heart and join hands this year for a long pull, a strong pull, and a pull all together, for new subscribers.

The Christian Standard of St. Louis gives this timely warning: "Patriots, philanthropists and Christians must not forget that strong influences are at work to establish compulsory military drill in our public schools. It would be a thousand times better to teach our boys the use of tools of industry than the tools of destruction and death. We could hardly conceive of a greater national calamity than this proposed innovation of military drill. It would brutalize us beyond measure. It concerns us in all our highest interests more vitally than tariffs or currencies, and yet it is safe to say that but few citizens give the matter any serious attention. Fathers and mothers, have you thought of the far-reaching consequences of the introduction of militarism among the boys of the nation? Better that the public schools should be abolished than prostituted to such ends. Yet, nothing but the most vigilant and determined opposition of Christian parents will prevent this."

The fact that the great mass of the religious press refuses to utter any voice of warning against the evil of secret societies demonstrates the importance of sustaining a paper like the Cynosure. In a private letter that comes to us from a missionary in South Africa, Mrs. L. B. Bridgman, laboring under the American Mission Board, we make the following extract: "I have often thought I would like to know what means are employed by your Association to urge upon religious editors, teachers and ministers, their duty in reference to Freemasonry, etc. Their silence and apparent indifference are amazing, and it appears that herein lies one cause of the deadness of Christ's church and their very meager support of the work of missions. Is it impossible to persuade the editors of such papers as the Congregationalist, the Independent and the Outlook to publish in their columns any articles on the subject? How are our young men to be warned of the danger, if not through the religious press or through the pulpits? Is anything being done through the Y. M. C. A. or the Endeavor societies?

In going from the depot to our office we pass a crowd of workmen busy removing the rubbish and laying bare the foundation for a new building. Farther on, another crowd of workmen are engaged in putting up the walls of a building. In both cases all was noise and confusion. But the work of removing the rubbish was just as necessary and important as the work of putting up the walls. The work of the former must precede the work of the latter. It would not do to say to those who are removing the debris and walls of the old building, "Your work is too much tearing down and not enough of building up. You ought to be at work as builders on the wall." And yet we are sometimes told that in our reform work we are too much engaged in tearing down; that our work should be more constructive and less destructive. But let it be remembered that in the building up of Christ's kingdom there must first be the work of laying bare the foundation. The debris of the lodge is one of the greatest obstructions. When we see how this evil is growing we may say as Nehemiah when rebuilding the broken-down walls of Jerusalem, "There is much rubbish so that we are not able to build the wall."

IS THE WORLD GROWING BETTER?

The Rev. J. B. Wilson said before the Lexow Committee in New York City that he "could find thirty places within ten minutes' walk of his church for fallen women who wished to amend their lives, but not three places for virtuous woman who wished to preserve their virtue, for they had no sympathy.

The Rev. Dr. Talmage said in a recent sermon that divorces were unknown in Rome for 500 years, until the country became corrupt. He interpreted it both as an evidence and effect of rottenness. By the same and similar proof the evil has spread beyond cities and Lexow investigations over the whole land.

Rome was mainly corrupted by secret societies under the disguise of religion such as the Bacchanalia. Our own country is falling a victim to the same institutions. First among these is Freemasonry, as will appear by reading the last edition of "Experiences with Secret Societies, with Key to Masonry," and its popularity is due to its success. The Pope, from the knowledge of the confessional, accuses them of "trying after eighteen centuries to revive the manners and institutions of paganism, and of trying to pull down the foundations of morality and become co-operators with those who would like to see that become lawful which they like," and adds that "it is nothing but to urge mankind into the most abject and ignominious degradation."

A celebrated Theosophist and Mason said that the most perfect Masons in the world were the Pidgeon Indians, among whom he had spent some months, but their most distinguishing trait is the surrender of households to guests.

THE AUTHOR.

TRUE WAY OF ACCESS TO GOD.

The secret lodge method is to worship its own god—the god of this world. Masons are more consistent, however, than many suppose, as it is unMasonic to attempt to worship their god through Christ. That Christ is the only way of access to the God of the Bible is admitted by all Christians. "He that climbeth up some other way the same is a thief and a robber." But the worship of a god that cannot be reached through Christ is useless. It is idolatry, and it would be blasphemy to attempt to worship through Christ any other god than that one who is the author of our being—the God of the Bible.

The religion of the Bible is genuine; all other religions are false. The worship of the only true God, according to his own word, through his only way, Christ, insures us eternal life. The worship of the Christless lodge god will prove to be eternal death, even to many professed Christians, unless unrepented of.

All the good moral character in the lodge is a cover for the iniquity. And professed Christians who see the evils of false worship, and still adhere to the organization, make the lodge popular, and give it prestige by their influence. Before God the church has lowered the standard of repentance. Bible repentance toward God does not lead to false worship. And though one may seek repentance carefully with tears, it will not be found in the direction of the lodge or any compromise with it, but toward God. If we, through great tribulation, wash our robes and make them white in the blood of the Lamb; if we trust God for grace to bear the cross and do right, we will in due time exchange the cross for the crown.

RESOLUTIONS ON SECRET SOCIETIES.

J. Howe, of Stevensville, Ont., sends the following resolutions on secret societies passed by the United Brethren conference at Berlin, Ont., April 5, 1895:

WHEREAS, Secretism, as an organized institution, has always been at variance with good government, free institutions, and a healthy public confidence, perhaps never more so than at the present time, because of its multiplied divisions and widespread influence. And

WHEREAS, The principles and practices of the secret lodge are at variance with the principles and practices of Christianity, the Christian church and the teachings of Christ its founder, who is the "light of the world;" who taught his disciples to "proclaim upon the housetops" what he taught them in "secret," or privately. And

WHEREAS, Secretism is a relic of the dark ages and of heathenism, and is Christ-rejecting; therefore

Resolved, That we are opposed to the whole system of secretism, as unnecessary, dangerous and bad; injurious to Christian character, hurtful to spiritual life, a robber of the church finanally, and contrary to God's Word which says: "Be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers." So, being opposed to Christ and his kingdom, it should be opposed by his followers.

Resolved, That we maintain our constitutional law on the question of organized secrecy.

WHY NATIONS PERISH.

We have no sympathy with that idea that is prevalent among politicians and statemen, and men of science, and those who control the press of the country; that a nation, that the human race in its development and progress in civilization from age to age, are things great, and sacred, and irresponsible, and higher than the highest. We cannot forget the words of the prophet: "Behold, the nations are as a drop of a bucket, and are counted as the small dust of the balance; behold, he taketh up the isles as a very little thing. All nations before him are as nothing, and they are counted to him less than nothing and vanity." There is nothing here therefore to intimidate him; and he can deal with the proudest empire as easily as with the minutest creature he has formed.

Says Chancellor Kent in an extract before me: "States and bodies politic are to be considered as moral persons having a public will, capable and free to do right and wrong," etc. This is high authority upon a vital point. A nation, therefore, is accountable to God, and accountability to God means liability to punishment—to punishment if the case requires, amounting to destruction. There was an order of officers in the Roman state called lictors. These walked in front of the magistrates, bearing each a bundle of rods with an axe bound up in the center, which seems to have intimated that if gentler measures of correction should fail, the axe would be unbound, the axe keen and heavy which "Strikes once, and strikes no more."

Everlastingly the sword hangs in the shadow of the throne—the sword to kill. No slighter sanction will awe the evil doer. Take that away, and the throne itself will be trampled in dust. I must unlearn every lesson I have learned at my mother's knee, if these things are not so. As I have seen a house that was about to be removed from one village to another, taken down piece by piece, almost shingle by shingle, so the entire compass of my mental habits, and my ideas of God and man, and the relations of the creature to the Creator, must be taken down to the ground before I can cease to believe that the nation and kingdom that will not serve God shall be destroyed, as the strict punishment of that crime. —Rev. S. P. Herron.

DOES FREEMASONRY RULE EUROPE?

Alas! yes, Freemasonry rules us.

In the Convent of 1886, of the Grand Orient of Paris, the Freemasons themselves proclaimed their power in these terms: "For a century past, nothing has been done in the world except through Freemasonry. It has led Europe, and particularly France, where it has for a century past. It has reigned over it now for nearly twenty years as sovereign mistress. The government is not in the Elysee, nor in the Palais-Bourbon; it is in the Rue Cadet, at the Lodge of the Grand Orient."

This fact is evident; the Masonic journals and reviews boast of it and rejoice at their success. "Freemasonry," said the Republique Maconnique for the 30th of April, 1882, "ought to be the mistress and not the servant of political parties."

"We have organized, in the very heart of Parliament, a real syndicate of Freemasonry," said the official journal of Freemasons in 1888, "in order to obtain interventions extremely useful for influencing the public authorities."

"Freemasonry" exclaimed the president of the Grand Orient, in 1891, "is worthy to be the advanced guard of progress. It is worthy of directing the Republic. It is so said and it is true." Bulletin du Grand Orient, p. 281.

"Nothing should be allowed to appear in France in which the secret influence of Freemasonry is not found," said the president of the Convent in 1890. He added: "If we wish to organize, in ten years hence Masonry will have seized the bit and not a soul will stir in France without our knowledge and consent."....So that, as has been authoritatively declared, all the laws of this kind are prepared in the lodges before being presented in the Chambers. A minister or a deputy receives the order to present it; the journals of the sect prepare public opinion. After this the discussion in the Chambers is only to amuse the gallery and to make a little parade before the public; the Masonic majority always vote as they have been instructed by the Grand Orient.

Monsignor Treppel was then perfectly right when he said: "The present struggle is between Christianity and Freemasonry which rules and governs, and whose program has been prepared and carried out point by point, for the last fifteen years."

Monsignor, the Archbishop of Aix—who was persecuted by the Masonic governments) wrote to the Minister of Public Worship: "Freemasonry, the eldest daughter of Satan, governs and commands; a thousand times are they voluntarily blind who do not see it."

His Eminence, the Cardinal Archbishop of Paris, was no less explicit in his letter, to which all the bishops of France subscribed: "The present struggle," he said, "is not between political parties, but between Christian France, which wishes to claim liberty of faith, and the Masonic sects."—The Catholic Review.

RESOLUTIONS OF DENVER NATIONAL REFORM CONVENTION.

WHEREAS, Almighty God is the source of all authority and power in civil government, and has delegated this power to Christ and appointed him King of nations, and constituted his Word in the Bible as his revealed law for all peoples; and

WHEREAS, Nations have a moral character and accountability for all their acts, and are subjects of his moral government:

Resolved, 1. That it is the duty of the State to acknowledge his authority and the Bible as its supreme law in its Constitution—the document which defines the character and acknowledges the source of its authority.

2. That as a nation settled by people recognizing these principles it is our undoubted right to make our fundamental law their expression and so create an unquestioned legal basis for Christian morality, usages and institutions.

3. Such an acknowledgment is not designed and does not tend to oppress individual conscience or to affect a union of church and state, but rather prevents this by requiring the state to acknowledge for itself, and not through the medium of an established church, its relation to God.

4. Recognizing that the disregard for sound theory is always followed by mischievous practical results, we cannot but attribute to the omission of such an acknowledgment in our Constitution the alarming growth of the theory that government has nothing to do with religion, and the theory that the laws favoring our Christian institutions are unconstitutional. We also recognize this omission as one of the fruitful sources of the widespread and ever-increasing demoralization of public morals, the lowering of the moral standard of our laws, the weakening of the sacred ties of the family, the prevalence of social vice and crimes, the growth of official corruption, and the rising spirit of lawlessness.

5. The bold demands of organized and unorganized infidelity place before the American people the alternative of the Christian or secular theory of government, and a failure to recognize the former will ultimately involve the recognition of the latter. Therefore, in order to maintain and give permanence to our Christian institutions, it is necessary to give them the authoritative sanction of our organic law.

6. That the principles which underlie the National Reform movement commend themselves as practical and vital, not only to the religious but to the moral interests of our country, and that the claims of patriotism prompt to energetic and persevering effort to achieve their ultimate triumph.

7. That we pledge ourselves to labor earnestly to secure such an amendment to our National Constitution as will give an unquestioned legal basis to the Christian elements of our government, and prevent State legislators from making an established religion; and such an amendment as will on the one hand require the reading of the Bible without comment in our public schools, and on the other hand will prevent any sectarian instruction; also such an amendment as will prevent the use of public funds for sectarian schools, and the enactment of more stringent Sabbath laws, and the better enforcement of those already on the statute book, that God's law may be honored, and all persons engaged in the government service and in manufactories and other departments may enjoy their God-given right to a weekly rest day.

THE HOPE OF OUR COUNTRY.

It is a maxim framed out of the experience of the ages that history repeats itself. Indeed, the world's history is but one short story often told. Parents trained in the rough school of poverty, live lives of virtuous toil, and accumulate wealth. Their children, born with a silver spoon in their mouths, and cradled in a band-box, grow up in idleness and vice, and die in poverty and shame.

What is true of individuals, is equally true of nations. They come into being amid poverty and conflict. The stern discipline of necessity trains the people to habits of industry, frugality and virtue. Those habits are the highway to wealth and power. Wealth and power develop extravagance, vice and forgetfulness of God, and these in turn open the flood gates of ruin. Such has been the history of America up to date, but the circle is not yet complete. We have had the early discipline of poverty and toil, tempered, thank God, with piety. That discipline developed the sturdy freemen of revolutionary fame. Our early habits, with God's blessing, have brought power and wealth without a parallel. Wealth and power have made us proud, extravagant and forgetful of God. History says that the next step is ruin.

The great question before the American people to-day is this, Can we avert the fall? To my mind there is but one star of hope. It is the Star of Bethlehem. Guide the ship of state by that and we shall ride triumphantly.—P. F. Feemster.

CHURCH AND STATE.

There are six things which the state may have in common with the church and yet they will not and ought not to be united.

1. They may exist in the same country and not be united. It would be needless to mention this, only there are some people so afraid of the union of church and state that they cannot bring themselves to admit that they can have any thing in common without being united. We desire, if possible, to go back to ground on which all can stand.

2. The church and the state may have the same people for members and yet not be united. A man may be a member of the Methodist church, the largest church in this country, and a citizen of the United States, and yet the Methodist church and the United States government not be united. A man may be a member of the Baptist church of England and a citizen of Great Britain, and yet the Baptist church and the British government not be united.

3. The church and the state may have the same forms of government and not be united. In the state we have monarchial, aristocratic, representative and democratic forms of government, and in churches we have the same, or modifications of the same, yet the church and the state are not united. Presbyterian church government is representative in form, as is also the government of the United States, yet the United States government and the Presbyterian church are not united.

4. The church and the state may have common objects, the glory of God and the good of man, without being united. This in no way affects the independence of their organizations. In so far as they work honestly and intelligently for these common objects, they will work together and help each other, and all things ought to work together for good. A man's civil life and his ecclesiastical life should not run in opposite directions. If they do, he will be trying to serve two masters, and will either hate the one and love the other, or he will hold to the one and despise the other. Governments are not wholly "of the people," for they are "ordained of God;" nor are they wholly "for the people," for "God hath made all things for himself."

That the church and the state should have the same objects does not unite their organization or take away their independence.

5. That the church and state should govern their respective organizations by authority derived from the same source does not unite them.

Jesus Christ has been made "Lord of all." He himself says: "All power (Revised Version, authority,) is given unto me in heaven and in earth." "By me kings rule and princes decree justice." All Christians will admit that Christ's authority ought to control the church, and he himself has made it as plain as words can make anything that his authority is to rule in the state. Our point is that it may rule in both without uniting them. On earth here they will still have separate and indpendent choice of officers, law-making powers and means of support. The organizations here will not be at all united.

6. The church and the state will not be united though they should both recognize common principles of morality. It does not unite church and state that they both deal with a man for the same offense. If a man, being both a citizen and a church member, should steal, both courts, the civil and the ecclesiastical, would try him and pass sentence for theft. Yet they would be entirely independent. The moral principle, "thou shalt not steal," was recognized by both courts, yet they were not united. Our only point in this connection is that so far as the state and church do legislate on moral questions, they may both make these laws agree, and both harmonize with God's law without being united or losing their independence. So far as they make laws on questions where there is a right and a wrong side, they ought both to be right, and then they will surely agree, for there can be but one right side. This ought to be the aim of both, and in aiming at this, and in hitting it, too, they are not united. The church and the state may, and often do, make laws on the same subject, and one which involves moral considerations. That they should both recognize the same moral principles in their settlement of such questions does not unite church and state.

As the planets circle about a common center, are warmed and lighted by the central sun, are held in their places by the same law, and move in the same plane, yet are not united, so the church and the state are to circle about God's throne, to be blessed by Christ, to be held by the same moral law, and move in the same plane of human life and interests, and yet are not and are not to be united.—Prof. W. J. Coleman, in the Christian Nation.

AN IMPEACHMENT OF THE LODGES.

Rev. Simpson Ely, Dean of the Bible School at Fairfield (Neb.) College, who has made the secret lodge a special study, not long since gave the public the following impeachment of the lodges and their work. I ask for it a careful perusal:

"I impeach them, because:

"They are secret, useless, clannish and Christless.

"They exclude the most needy; bind their members by unscriptural oaths; often speak of heaven as a lodge; promote vain pomp and spectacular displays; are intolerant and persecuting in spirit; violate the unity of the marriage bond; apply their (empty) high-sounding titles to Jehovah; substitute a human (the lodge) for a divine institution (the church); often exclude women from their membership; are condemned out of the mouths of their own members; shun all investigations and discussions of their claims; are mongrel institutions, combining worldliness with religion; discriminate in favor of lodgemen and against Christians; clothe their self-aggrandizement in the vesture of benevolence; have the same burial service over the wicked and the righteous; build up some classes in business, to the pulling down of others (quite as worthy); keep men from becoming members of the church; give only a moiety of their princely revenues to their needy and worthy poor; perform their operations under cover of darkness, and will not endure the light; rob the church of the time, strength, energy, talent and means that rightfully belong to it; in nothing do they give Christ the glory, while the Bible teaches that Christ must be all in all; and (finally) they teach that their wicked and righteous members shall alike attain to the highest degree in heaven."

As between the lodge and the church, "No man can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other."—Matt. 6:24. Christ will not accept a divided allegiance. —H. M. Hugunin in Free Methodist.

HOW TO REACH THE MASSES.

Rev. Wm. Telfer of Bloomington, Indiana, who is in sympathy with the anti-secret cause and a reader of the Cynosure, is now engaged as agent of the American Bible Society. He sends us the following practical points in reference to his work:

"Poor people should not think of buying large, costly Bibles in this day of cheap books. Get a good Bible for use; one of good print and usable size. If you have $12 to invest, permit me to suggest the following use of that amount of money in a Bible and Bible helps: Get a good Teacher's Bible containing a concordance and other helps; a Bible dictionary, Bible history, a Bible atlas and a set of cheap commentaries on the New Testament. Thus a library may be gathered around the Book of books, not too bulky to handle, nor costly in price, but of great interest to the Bible reader. The contributors to this work have come from all classes and creeds —the rich and poor, whites and blacks; Catholics, Jews, Unitarians, Moravians, Friends and non-church goers; besides all the churches in the city are represented on the list as friends of the Bible cause. Large contributions have not been frequent, but many smaller amounts have made the work more successful than was anticipated. Those churches in which the membership is instructed in the principles of systematic Christian giving are generally the firmest, most liberal contributors to this or any good cause. They are apt to give more from principle; less from caprice or mere sentiment. Preachers everywhere ought to instruct the people in the principles of Bible-giving, teaching the a. b. c. of the subject, not taking too much for granted or presuming that the people already know their duty.

"A sort of home mission work is carried on with the Bible cause. Where people are in the city having church letters, church preferences, or need a pastor's visit, the name and place of residence are given to the pastor of their choice. A number of such names have been given to the various pastors. From these names, if properly looked after, will come valuable additions to the churches in the months to come. A general interest in the subject of personal religion prevails among the people. The expression of a desire to live a better life is frequent among the non-church goers. If twenty fully consecrated Christians out of each church in the city would visit the homes of all those directly or remotely related, talking not gossip nor "our nice church," but vital religion, from heart to heart, and from house to house, a mighty reformation would be wrought in our city already famed for its pleasant homes and the general intelligence of its citizens. We are apt to want to do our work at too long a range. If the people do not go to church, the church ought to go to the people in their homes. The already burdened pastor can not do all of this work. In this personal hand-to-hand endeavor is found a partial solution of the question, how to reach the masses."

ONLY ONE EXPLANATION.

There is but one explanation of the fact that hundreds of thousands of grown, rational men repeat this farrago of Odd-fellowship weekly, and from year to year. It is that Satan is its god, and that he imposes these and other pagan puerilities on man, made in the image of God and redeemed by Christ, to avenge himself on the God whom he hates for casting him and his angels out of heaven; to travesty the Christian religion and shut the only door of hope from man through Christ, by opening false doors leading to himself. To treat such a system as frivolous "nonsense" is to commit a dreadful mistake. If "the heavens and earth" were now in flames—as they one day will be (2 Peter 3: 7)—if only one bridge of escape, built by Christ, could give safety to those fleeing from the conflagration of the world, and a revolted angel should set open false doors, promising to lead to Paradise, but actually leading to hell, "where their worm dieth not and their fire is not quenched," such is the door of every secret lodge. Every pagan shrine, or temple, or man-made religion, is such a gateway of perdition, no matter what the worships are made of, or what frivolities are practiced within them. Legions of devils give them their mesmeric power over mind; and while the motives of the worshipers are as various as their callings and hopes, "their way is as darkness; they know not at what they stumble." Prov. 4: 19.

OATHS AND PENALTIES.

We often hear the remark from members of the order, "Once a Mason, always a Mason," and the idea conveyed by it is, that the relation to the order is so sacred that nothing can sunder it. Something like the quotation coupled with the marriage relation, "What, therefore, God hath joined together, let no man put asunder." Still, for one cause, even the marriage relation may be sundered; but, according to the maxim quoted, the Masonic relation never may.

A great mistake is entertained very generally in regard to an oath; that is, that any person, under any circumstances and for any purpose, may apply the binding obligation of an oath; as, for instance, that persons may bind themselves together for the most wicked and mischievous purposes as firmly as the husband and wife are bound by the marriage bond. That the pirate captain and his crew are as firmly bound together by it as the members of a commonwealth and their ruler. This is a very great and very dangerous mistake.

The question then arises, How are we to distinguish between these two things? When is swearing the exemplification, and when is it the profanation of the divine ordinance of the oath? The answer is: When it is taken in accordance with the divine institution, it is the one; when otherwise, it is the other. As, for instance, the relation to be constituted by it is a divinely instituted relation, such as the family relation. Malichi 2: 14:—"The Lord hath been witness between thee and the wife of thy youth—the wife of thy covenant." Matt. 19: 6:—"What, therefore, God hath joined together, let no man put asunder." So also in the constitution of a State. Rom. 13: 1:—"The powers that be are ordained of God" (vs. 3 and 4), "for the ruler is the minister of God to thee for good." The relation of the citizen to the State, and of the officers to the State, are divinely instituted relations to which God is a party, and should be constituted by oath; v. 2: "They that resist shall receive to themselves damnation."

Blackstone, Book IX., p. 137, says: "The law takes no notice of any perjury but such as is committed in some court of justice having power to administer an oath, or before some magistrate or proper officer invested with similar authority, in some proceeding relative to a civic suit or criminal prosecution."

Dr. Jenkins, on "The Oath," p. 193, says: "Before any association of men should dare to tender the oath they must be able to show that God is a party to the compact under which they are associated; and that by virtue of that compact they may exercise sovereign authority. No society has a right to call upon God to be a party to the covenant of the oath until they can show that they 'are ordained of God.' But this no merely voluntary society can do; and we therefore conclude that all oaths administered by the authority of such are extra-judicial and an abuse of the ordinance."

CHRIST OR SELF?—A CONTRAST.

Christ or self? Which is preferred? Which is loved best? Whose glory is most cared for?

These are home questions, and call for deep searchings of heart. Possibly there is no sin which so often wraps itself in a cloak of devotedness to Christ as self-seeking. It hides itself under all kinds of good names, such as righteous indignation, faithfulness to Christ, resistance of evil, order in the church, holy discipline, and such-like. Let our own name, our own work, our own honor, our own authority, our own position, or something of our own, be touched, and at once this sin of self-seeking is roused; and unless detected and judged, it quickly leads us to do or say something which is either unseemly, ungracious, or un-Christlike.

Let us glance at a few points which may help us to detect this subtle sin. We will look at it in the way of CONTRAST.

IF SELF BE OUR OBJECT, IT MAY LEAD TO:	IF CHRIST BE OUR OBJECT, IT WILL LEAD TO:
Determined effort to succeed and excel in everything.	Determined effort to please Him at all costs.
Unwillingness to attempt anything unless there be good hope of success.	Willingness to try and do anything which He wishes, although conscious of great probability of failure in the effort.
Exceeding sensitiveness to a rebuff, or a sneering or disparaging word.	Ability to bear and forgive a rebuff, or sneering or disparaging word.
Great painstaking to secure success, and desire that our labor and self-sacrifice should be appreciated.	Great painstaking to please Him; and even if conscious of doing the thing badly, satisfied that He knows and appreciates the labor, and values it according to the cost, and not according to the results.
Little conscience as to means used, if success can be secured.	Tender conscience as to means used, because His approval is the chief desire of the soul.
Self-indulgence in matters which do not cross the object in view, nor affect our own name.	No self indulgence in anything that would grieve Him.
Great sacrifice of our own selves, or of others, to attain our object.	Great sacrifice of our own selves, and, if needs be, of the feelings of others, to please Him.
No rejoicing in the success of others, unless in some way it reflect honor upon us, or gratify our personal affections.	Great rejoicing in the success of others, if only it bring glory to Him.
Envy, jealousy, and desire to detract from and hinder the prominence of others, unless we can surpass them.	Desire to help others in their service, and to increase their honor, even if outshone by them, if thereby more fruit be brought to Christ.
Indignation and severity towards sin in God's children, if in any way their failure reflects discredit upon us.	Loving gracious efforts to recover those who in any way turn aside from Christ, because they are dear to Him.
Indifference to their sin, and secret satisfaction in it, if their failure tends to our own aggrandizement.	Real sorrow of heart for their sin, because it grieves our Lord, and dishonors His name.
A readiness to speak of the sins of others, because of a secret desire to exalt ourselves above them.	Great care not to expose the sin of others more than faithfulness to Christ and to His word requires.
Harsh judgments, and unkind speaking and hasty, un-Christlike dealings against such as cross us in our path.	Kind words and Christ-like ways towards such as oppose us, and patient waiting upon the Lord to clear our path.
In short, Self, and its glory, honor and fame, the object and idol of the soul, to which everything is sacrificed.	Christ, and His glory, honor, and gratification, the ruling desire to which all else is surrendered, however pleasant or valued.

RESULTS.

A weary, aching, disappointed heart, which feels it has labored in the fires for very vanity, and only reaps a harvest "of grief and of desperate sorrow."	A quiet, restful, satisfied spirit, which delights itself in His love, and enjoys His smile, and has a full reward for its labor in His approval.

May this contrast be used by the Spirit of God, as his sharp two-edged sword, to hew this sin in pieces before the Lord!

One word of caution. We must use this sword against ourselves, and not against our brethren. "Let us not judge one another any more." We may judge actions, but we are not permitted to impute motives. "I, the Lord, search the heart." This is his prerogative; and if we dare to impute motives, we make ourselves transgressors, and sin against the law of love. "Love thinketh no evil....believeth all things....hopeth all things." Let us search and try our own ways, and ask Him to search our hearts, and enable us to put away iniquity far from our tabernacles.

"Is there no balm in Gilead; is there no physician there? why, then, is not the health of the daughter of my people recovered?" "I AM THE LORD THAT HEALETH THEE."

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

A SAIL TO PLYMOUTH.

As compared with the towns and cities of the old world, New England with all her historic memories cannot boast any particular venerableness. As computed by that standard of time which embraces the ruins of Karnak, and the buried civilization of Nineveh, her oldest landmarks are scarcely of yesterday. Yet the mere age of a monument or a ruin means very little if it means nothing else; if out of the past that has been into the future that is to be, it sends no living electric wire of aspiration, of self sacrifice, of moral power and patient devotion making it as a pillar of fire going before the generations of humanity on their painful way to the promised land that is always just before but never reached; the Utopia that from Plato to Edward Bellamy has been dreamed about, and must surely exist, or the faith of the race has been in vain. What is one of the stone cromlechs of Druid times, though it antedates the landing of Julius Cæsar on the shores of Great Britain, compared with Plymouth Rock?

The other day a family party of anti secretists, "on pleasure bent," but not averse to gathering all the useful information we could by the way, and chaperoned by Mrs. Stoddard, who is a thorough-going Boston woman, and knows all its ins and outs, many and bewildering as they are, by heart, took a sail down the harbor to Plymouth. It is a delightful trip, even though the boat which plies between is a Lilliputian affair, and evidently not built for speed. A thunder storm varied the program, but not unpleasantly. The sea is very beautiful when it puts on its robes of violet and amethyst, and turns toward you those dimpling, witching smiles which have lost none of their magic potency since the days of Ulysses; but when it is shrouded in gray mists, and with the fogbell tolling at intervals its solemn warning you sail on and on into the heart of the unknown mystery, you have seen another side of old ocean—not that of the siren who sings to enchant and lead astray, but the sybil with prophetic scroll slowly upwinding before you the strange, mystic characters of destiny. It is so much like life. Who knows what is hidden behind those dark purple gray folds, and what strange joy, what unlooked for realization of hopes deferred may come for us when the cloud-veil lifts at last?

FAMOUS OLD PLACES.

But a truce to dreams. We are nearing land. These are the very shores on which that little company looked when they crowded the deck of the Mayflower 275 years ago, and realized that they had gained at last the goal of their wanderderings. The first thing to strike the eye on landing is Plymouth Rock, which is disappointingly small, and by no means the huge boulder which most tourists make up their minds to see. It is in fact only a small part of the original rock, which has been moved three times, and suffered from the ravages of relic-seekers. Still the wonder is that there is anything left of it at all. The next point of interest is Burial Hill. Here the pilgrims laid their dead to rest during that dreadful first winter, smoothing the graves over that the Indians might not count them. From its summit there is a fine view of the sea, and doubtless many a breaking heart has looked with sad eyes over the waste of stormy billows, and tried to solace itself with the thought that heaven was as near from one side as the other.

HOW TO CARVE WELL.

Hints by Which a Lady Can Learn to Perfect Herself In This Art.

A good knife of moderate size and great sharpness is a necessity. In sharpening a carving knife the sharpener should hold the blade close to the stone, almost flat. Hold the carving knife firmly with one hand, pressing the thumb against the back of the blade, and frequently whet the knife against the steel. First cut the bone from the roast, trim the outside a little and begin to lay off slices from the top of the roast, so that the juice which falls from the slice cut will permeate the meat beneath and not drip and waste into the dish, as it would do if the meat were carved from the side. The platter should be placed near enough to the carver to give control of it. In roast pieces, such as loin, breast, fore quarters and the like, the butcher should have been instructed to separate the joints so that carving may not be impossible. In carving beef, mutton, lamb and veal, thin, smooth, neat slices are desirable. They should always be cut across the grain, taking care to pass the knife through the bones of the meat.

In carving a leg of mutton the best slices are obtained from the center and the next best from the broad end. The pieces from the part next the knuckle are apt to be dry. A sirloin of beef yields its best slices from the end near the tenderloin. If it is cut through in this part, the pieces must be fairly thick; if long, thin slices are desired, it should be cut across.

In carving a duck the fork should be stuck in the side and not in the breast, as is the common practice.

The turkey should be turned endwise toward the carver, instead of sidewise, as is the usual custom, as the knife is always held parallel with the direction of the fowl in carving. Insert the large fork through the center of the breast, the tines astride of the ridge. Cut away the trussing twines, and cut two thin slices of white meat from the breast down to the shoulder. Now divide the wing from the shoulder, which, if done before cutting the two slices, that part of the fowl and the upper ends of the slices will be ragged. The beginner should cut above the second joint down toward the back; then cut on the lower side, press the joint gently outward with the knife and divide the joints with the point of the knife. Slice off the breast in wide, long and thin slices. Cut off the pope's nose and the side bone. The "oysters" on the back belong with the side bones and should not be detached from them. The wishbone should be separated from the breastbone and shoulder, and a quick stroke will separate the collar bone from the breast, and another will give you the shoulder blade.

How a Thermometer Is Graduated.

A thermometer to be graduated is placed in snow or pounded ice, and a mark is made opposite the end of the column of mercury. This is the freezing point. It is next surrounded with the steam of boiling water, and a second mark made to show the boiling point. The space between these two points is then divided into a number of equal parts, which varies with the description of a thermometer.

How to Make Tough Meat Tender.

Cut the steaks the day before they are required into slices about 2 inches thick. Rub the surfaces with a little baking soda. Next morning wash off the soda, cut the meat into the shape and thickness desired and cook it to taste. The same process may be used for poultry or mutton.

SECRET SOCIETIES MUST GO.

Quite a change has come over public sentiment in Evanston on the secret society question. A few years ago Miss Willard excused the Greek letter fraternities among the young ladies by characterizing them as "Gardens of Girls." Now the professors are convinced that the fruitage from such gardens is not at all desirable. This is what they are doing with these gardens, says the Chicago Post:

"Prof. Henry L. Boltwood is doing all in his power to break up the two secret societies which were formed last fall among the students of the Evanston high school. Report has it that the township board of education is heartily in sympathy with the principal's attempt to uproot Gamma Sigma, the boys' society, and Delta Kappa Phi, the girls' society. It is possible that neither will be in existence next year. No formal action has yet been taken by the board, but it is expected in the near future.

"The local chapter of Gamma Sigma was founded, as stated, last fall. The fraternity originated in New York, and now has chapters in eleven different high schools. The Gamma Sigma boys come from the best families in Evanston, and include many of the leaders in school affairs. The Delta Kappa Phi girls are also prominent in the social doings of the high school. Both societies were started with the consent of Prof. Boltwood. At the time, however, he told the founders that whenever the societies became expensive or their influence undesirable he would do all he could to disrupt them.

"In speaking of the matter this morning Prof. Boltwood said: 'No formal action has been taken as yet regarding the existence of the secret societies in the high school. The subject is being discussed, however, and something may come of it. Gamma Sigma and Delta Kappa Phi will not remain in the school any longer if I can help it. This year they were an experiment, and never before was there more clannishness, dishonesty and lack of faithful study. The societies are alleged to be 'literary,' but the amount of literary work done by either, and especially by the girls' 'frat,' is not going to hurt anyone. Their influence has been bad. The school lacks unity, and the societies, although not wholly, are largely to blame.'

"Prof. Boltwood has held consultations with members of both societies urging them to give up their organizations for the good of the school. The Gamma Sigma say it is out of the question. The Delta Kappa Phis say little but think a great deal. It looks as if the societies would go under unless the parents of the members use their influence to prevent such an outcome. Both may be obliged to exist sub rosa."

OHIO MASONS AT WAR.

Evidences are multiplying that Freemasonry, like every evil system, contains the seeds of its own dissolution. It is a house divided against itself, and therefore cannot stand. As evidence of this we note the following from the Philadelphia Record of June 12:

W. B. Mellish, Deputy Grand Master of Masons for Ohio, and Imperial Potentate of the Order of the Mystic Shrine, is threatened with a suit for damages, or alleged libel. This is a development of a fight of a few years ago between the Scottish Rite and the Cerneau Masons.

Some days ago there came to this city W. R. Colby, as the representative of a Masonic organization calling themselves "The Grand Lodge of Masons for Ohio." Mr. Colby's mission was to organize a subordinate lodge in Cincinnati. Mr. Mellish took advantage of the first opportunity to denounce Mr. Colby as an impostor, and over his own signature accused him of obtaining money by false pretenses; also saying that he made himself personally responsible for the full effect of his language.

Mr. Colby notified his State Grand Master, and a call was issued for a special meeting of the Grand Lodge at Columbus to morrow for the purpose of officially authorizing a suit against Mr. Mellish for damages. Mr. Colby left Cincinnati to-night to be present at the meeting, and will return Thursday with the authority of his Grand Lodge to bring the suit.

About 1890, three Ohio lodges, at Worthington, Bucyrus and Crawford were suspended by the Grand Lodge of Ohio for affiliating with the Cerneaus. In 1891 they met and organized a Grand Lodge of their own, and it is this which Mr. Colby now represents.

Thus the potsherds strive with the potsherds. We cannot see why one of these "rites" has not as good a right as the other to call its tricks and ceremonies Masonry. We do not understand that either has a patent on the name.

Concerning this Cerneau Masonry, Mackey says in his Encyclopedia of Freemasonry: "Joseph Cerneau, a French jeweler, born at Villeblerin, in 1763, and who, in the beginning of the nineteenth century, removed to the city of New York, where in 1812 he established a spurious body under the title of 'Sovereign Grand Consistory of the United States of America, its Territories and Dependencies.' This Masonic charlatan, who claimed the right to organize bodies of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite, was expelled and his pretensions denounced, in 1813, by the legal Supreme Council sitting at Charleston, South Carolina. Cerneau and his adherents gave much trouble in the Scottish Rite for many years, and the bodies which he had formed were not entirely dissolved until long after the establishment of a legal Supreme Council for the Northern Jurisdiction."

HOW A TURK SEES IT.

While we cannot for a moment palliate the recent crimes of the barbarous Turk and we should pray for the speedy overthrow of his tyrannical government, yet it will do us no harm to know how he views our government. The following letter was written to the New York Voice from Vitolia in European Turkey by a Turk:

MY RESPECTED SIR:—Please pardon your slave if I do not this letter translate precisely into your language, assisted by my lexicon.

Many Christian newspapers, in America particularly, upbraid our race, and our most gracious ruler, the Sultan, because, on account of the, what you call, Armenian outrages, concerning Christians in our country.

These severe censures are not equitable to my mind and to my patriotism. Let us look. You say our Sultan treats the Armenians with cruelty, but how have your Christians treated the first owners of America? I mean the red Indians named the aborigines. You have 400 years of persecutions which you celebrate with your Columbian Exposition.

You have also one war of four years, where 1,000,000 Christians were by their brother Christians killed. What is one small village of rebels killed?

Then you had some of African slavery, worse degraded and cruel than Moslem slavery, 4,000,000 slaves.

Slave-sellers are not benevolent and humane very.

Statistics from America say that one-half of the money for the support of the United States is taken from impost on intoxication drink, and 100,000 yearly die, caused by this vice. Our Sultan kills a small village of heretics, traitors. In your Koran, which I admire, there are such words like this: "Take the beam out of your eyes and quickly you are able to see clearly, and take the mote out from your kinsman's eyes." Your obedient slave, HAMID-NUZRET.

SUPPLANTING THE CHURCH.

Charles Follett of Byron, Ill., writes us an interesting letter, after returning from an excursion to Columbus Co., North Carolina. He shows that the great curse of the South is the lodge. Not only did it inspire the men who plotted treason and secession; not only did it instigate and prolong the civil war which desolated the South, but like the deadly upas, it still blights and destroys the church. Bro. Follett took pains to enquire into the religious state of the country. He found no church service on the Sabbath at the station where his car was side-tracked. Part of the train went on to a lake resort and he got off at Whitesville, the county-seat of Columbus county, that he might have an opportunity to attend church. He found a number of churches in the place, but they had service only one or two Sabbaths in the month; and the minister who was to hold the service that day was out of town "funeralizing," as they term it in the South, some lodge member who had died. A colored church had service in the town that day, but in the only paper published in the county their service was never announced. In this county paper the church and lodge directory is combined, and usually much greater prominence given to the lodge. In notices of deceased members much is made of their lodge connection, while their connection with the church is barely mentioned. Thus the whole influence of the lodge is to supplant the church. It excludes Christ, the church's glorious Head, the only one by whose atonement and intercession sinners have access to God.

Bro. Follett closes his letter with these words: "David, who had this testimony, that he was a man after God's own heart, has stated some conditions necessary to our salvation; one is that he should keep out of the counsels of the ungodly, and another is that he must not stand in the way of sinners, and still another that he shall not sit with scorners; and I cannot think of any position or circumstances where he can be associated in any manner with sinners and sin as he must be in a Masonic lodge. They are those that trample under foot the Son of God and count the blood of the covenant an unholy thing, and have done despite to the Spirit of grace. It is no wonder to me that Paul made such a heartrending appeal to the Corinthians to separate themselves from the wicked associations that environed them, when he saw how they were corrupted and ruined with the sinful defilement that can never enter that place which our Redeemer has gone to prepare for us in those mansions of blissful purity."

CO-OPERATIVE LIFE INSURANCE.

The Knights of Honor now claim a membership of sixty thousand who are to receive at death the sum of $2,000 each. Thus is created a liability of sixty thousand times two thousand, which is one hundred and twenty million dollars. The sum of $20 per annum is the largest estimated cost to each member.

Now thirty-five years would be an unusual average expectancy for insured lives, but for the sake of argument we will admit an expectancy of forty years. Sixty thousand members contributing $20 per year for forty years would be $800 each, or an aggregate of $48,000,000. Now see what this amounts to: Aggregate liabilities, $120,000,000; collections, $48,000,000; deficiency, $72,000,000.

How this deficiency is to be made up, is the question that must be answered by all co-operative insurance companies of whatever name, before they can be relied upon by those desiring to provide for their families. No insurance has ever proved permanently successful except such as have been based upon the average rate of mortality, combining at the same time the principle of compound interest on money held in reserve against each policy obligation.

SECRET SOCIETIES.

The following is excellent editorial matter from the columns of the United Presbyterian of June 20:

"We believe that all secret associations, political, social, beneficial, or religious, are unnecessary, selfish, un-Christian and injurious, and should be discountenanced and discouraged by all Christians. They are unnecessary:

"1. They are needless in political management. A political party in time of peace, when there is neither civil nor religious persecution, that cannot succeed without resort to secret methods, ought not to succeed. The most useful and successful political parties in our country have in no sense of the word been secret parties. They have spoken openly to the people.

"2. There is no need for them in social life. Will any man maintain that society as such is benefited by any of these societies? Is not that Christian community, where these secret orders are not found, the most contented, prosperous, and happy? If all of these were abandoned today, society would be the gainer instead of the loser.

"3. The so-called beneficial societies are unnecessary. Because (a) they refuse to afford any benefit to those most needing help. They will not receive the blind, the lame, the infirm. (b) There are numerous insurance companies that are openly and honestly conducted, and that yield better and more reliable returns to their beneficiaries. (c) The state and the church are the divinely-appointed agencies for protecting and aiding the needy and dependent.

"4. True religion has no need for them. They are in fact opposed to the genius and spirit of Christianity. Jesus could and did say, 'I spake openly to the world; I ever taught in the synagogue and in the temple, whither the Jews always resort, and in secret have I said nothing.' John 18: 20. The exhortation of Paul is in harmony with the teachings of his Master, 'Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them; for it is a shame even to speak of those things which are done of them in secret; but all things that are reproved are made manifest by the light: for whatsoever doth make manifest is light.'

"They are selfish. They all seek the advantage of the individual or a clique, not the good of all, and are therefore opposed to the doctrine and spirit of Christianity. 'As we have opportunity, let us do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith.' Gal. 6: 10. A college secret society is not maintained in the interests of all the students, but for the advantage of a few—advantage frequently secured by injustice and unfairness to others. Members of all secret societies recognize themselves as under obligation to favor their own members, rather than those who do not belong to their organization. A member of the church, who is also a member of a secret organization, is bound to favor the unbeliever who may be a member of his order in preference to his Christian brother who does not belong to it."

PERSONAL MENTION.

—W. G. McCoy, an old-time friend of our cause, formerly of Rehobeth, Iowa, but now of Aurora, Ill., called at our office last week.

—Rev. J. P. Stoddard and Elder J. A. Conant spent Sabbath, June 23d., in Washington city. They were en route for Berea College commencement.

—Rev. W. B. Stoddard preached last Sabbath t Schwenksville and lectured Monday evening at Norristown, Pa. He expects to go to Boston early in July.

—Elder C. C. Lawrence, one of our subscribers living in Monroe, Wis., with his son F. G. Lawrence, spent Sabbath in the city, and were welcome callers at the Cynosure office.

—Rev. W. L. Ferris, pastor of the Congregational church at Cherokee, Iowa, preached in the city last Sabbath, and visited our office Monday. He is a strong friend of our cause in Iowa.

—"Prof. Simpson Ely," says the Christian Standard, "will return to evangelistic work. His heart goes with his preaching, and therefore his evangelistic efforts in the past were crowned with success."

—Elder Wm. Plant, who has been laboring in Wisconsin, and who is an earnest friend of our work, has been attending Dr. A. T. Pierson's Bible Institute in Chicago the past week. He was a caller at our office Monday.

—Rev. W. T. Ellis, of the Wesleyan Methodist church, and editor of "The Way, the Truth and the Life," of Portland, Oregon, visited the Cynosure office last week. His heart is in strong sympathy with our great reform movement.

—Rev. J. B. Galloway of Poynette, Wis., was a visitor at the Cynosure office last week. He was en route for Colorado on a two months' vacation. He has some interesting matter which he promises soon to contribute to our columns.

—Englewood congregation, under the pastorate of Bro. Duff, is becoming quite an asylum for U. P. ministers. It now includes Dr. Duncan, and Revs. Graham, Harvey and Pollock. The Instructor says: "With Dr. Kennedy as street inspector they ought to keep things clean."

—I. A. Somner, one of the directors of the Mennonite Book Concern at Berne, Ind., sends for a number of our publications and wishes us success and God's blessing in our work. This denomination is strongly with us in our battle against the secret empire. Their publishing house at Berne sends out a large number of books and publications.

—Rev. Henry W. Johnston, with his wife and two children, were welcome visitors at the Cynosure office last Saturday. They had just returned from Freetown, Africa, and are on their way to Clarinda, Iowa, to enjoy a much needed rest with relatives. During the past five years they have been laboring in the Interior Bombali Mission, 115 miles east of Freetown, on the west coast of Africa. They have established an industrial school with twenty-two scholars, and are deeply interested in their foreign mission work, but failing health under that tropical sun compels them to relinquish it for a time.

—Rev. Isaac C. Weidler, of Biglerville, Pa., in sending his renewal writes, "I have been a reader of the Cynosure for at least twenty years, and of course cannot do without it. The Christian Conservator and the Christian Cynosure are twins that must not be separated. The Lord bless you in your good work of throwing light on the secret lodge system.

—Prof. E. J. Paine is now in charge of the Klamath Indian Agency, in Oregon. He conducts a flourishing school of upwards of 100 Indians, and had more than forty conversions among his scholars last year. Prof. Paine has had charge of the Wasioga, and other seminaries, and is a thorough educator. We received from him much encouragement while in the reform field.

—Rev. C. F. Hawley has recently removed to Garden, in Northern Michigan, where he has settled as pastor of a Congregational church. No anti-secret lecturer in the west is as gratefully remembered by as many of our readers as Bro. Hawley. There are but few of our agents who have traveled more miles in winter's cold and summer's heat, and done more hard, self-sacrificing work for the cause than he.

—Rev. A. G. H. Overn, of Trinity Evangelical Lutheran church, St. Louis, visited our office a few days ago. He declares his conviction that the secret orders are the greatest enemies of the church at the present time. His experience with them in St. Louis was that when he tried to be neutral on the question, yet members of the lodge in his church refused to support him unless he would espouse their cause.

—R. A. McCoy, Mansfield, Ohio, who for several months has been traveling in the South, writes an interesting letter from Nashville, Tenn. He says secret lodges in the South are much more popular than in the North. Not unfrequently in small towns the church and the lodge occupy the same building and the lodge is invariably on the top. While in the North they do not often occupy the same building, yet the lodge is on top all the same.

—Rev. A. J. McFarland, D.D., of Beaver Falls, Pa., was a welcome visitor at our office last week. He has given his whole time to the lecture field last year, speaking on the important and practical theme "Loyalty to Christ in the realm of Christian citizenship." He nearly always in his lectures refers to the lodge evil as a danger both to church and state. He has been so successful as a reform lecturer that he was unanimously reappointed by his last synod to the same work.

—Mrs. M. L. Chapin, a W. C. T. U. worker of Bruning, Neb., sends us words of cheer, and an invitation to take part in a Fourth of July celebration in Rufus Park's Grove. The program consists of an opening address on "True Patriotism," then five minute speeches by ministers, a W. C. T. U. address by Mrs. Howe of St. Joseph, and a woman suffrage contest by six young ladies. We enjoyed the privilege of speaking at a meeting in the same grove several years ago, and wish the friends of reform could arrange for similar celebrations of the Fourth of July in every town in the land.

WHEATON ACADEMY.

The annual recital of the Conservatory and Art school at Wheaton was held in the chapel Tuesday evening. The audience crowded the hall in every part. A fine musical program was interspersed with parts taken by the Art school. The exercises reflected credit upon the pupils, and their teachers, Mrs. Nutting, who, for more than twenty years has been director of the work in art, Prof. Coffin, of Chicago, who has been the instructor in vocal music, and Prof. Rice, of Sterling, who is at the head of the instrumental department. Wednesday morning, at 10:30, the Board of Trustees met in the president's office. Dr. F. J. T. Fischer, of Elmhurst, whose term expired, was re-elected for the full term of ten years. Judge Carter, of Chicago, was elected to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Hon. F. H. Mather. Miss Ella Carter, of Boston, was made director of the Conservatory for the coming year. She will be assisted by Miss Adelaide Harding, who has studied in both this country and Europe, and will have charge of the instruction on the pipe organ and assist in the piano department. Miss Myrtle Mattison, A M., Mus. B., will teach the guitar, and arrangements for the violin are in progress. The Woman's Building, toward the erection of which Mr. John Quincy Adams has given $10,000, and to which Mr. C. H. Case, Mr. D. C. Cook, Mrs. A. F. Rider, Mr. Geo. B. Hopkins and others have liberally contributed, is rapidly progressing. Mr. M. M. Brown, of Chicago, is the contracting builder, and is donating a considerable portion of the cost. He promises to have it ready for occupancy by the first of September. It is expected that steam heated, electric lighted rooms, together with board and tuition, can be furnished in the new building for $150 per year.

Yesterday afternoon, at 2 o'clock, the graduating exercises of the Preparatory school were held. There are twenty-eight members in the class, fifteen of whom had parts in the program. The music was furnished by the Conservatory, and was very fine. The audience completly filled the large hall. In the evening the annual literary program of the Alumni Association was given after the banquet. The toast master was Mr. W. D. Gates of '74. The address was by Rev. E. O. Lovett of '87 on "The Duty and Method of the Development of Thought Power in the Individual." The essay was given by Miss Ruth D. Nutting of '75, who has spent four or five years in Europe. The title of her essay was "The Quiet Ways of the Alps." The welcome to the class of '95 was given by Mr. C. E. Kirkland of '79, and the response by Mr. F. H. Smith, of the graduating class. The weather has been delightful. Audiences have been large and everything promises well for this institution which is becoming more and more a factor in the life of Chicago and the great interior.

was Thursday, and it was cool, bright and pleasant; no finer day could be desired. The usual throng from country side, towns and villages around poured itself into the classic town, to see and hear the exercises of the day. Many friends were present from Chicago; the president and several of the faculty of Naperville College came over, and before the time for the exercises to begin, the spacious parlors of the college were filled with the faculty, the alumni, the graduates and visitors from abroad. The chief interest centered in the graduating exercises, and at half past ten, to the music of a stirring march, played on the big organ, the faculty, distinguished visitors and graduates marched into the crowded chapel. The president of Naperville College led in the opening prayer, after which began the literary feast of the day, in the essays and orations of the class of '95. All of the twelve graduates, except one, presented public performances, which were all of a high order, and showed not only the thorough training the mind had received under the hand of faithful teachers, but also that they were abreast of the vital reform issues of the day. The radical reform sentiment expressed in the exercises was much to be admired, and breathed the spirit of the illustrious founder of the college, as well as that of its present president. We will not attempt to sketch each of the performances, but simply mention them in order. The first oration and salutatory was by Maud Gamon, on "The South;" J. N. Davis spoke on "Two Prophets;" C. P. Nedelkoff, "The Heretic;" Fannie L. King, "The Hope of Better Politics;" F. H. Smith, "International Federation;" Julia E. Cook, "Sense;" Rollin C. Mullenix, "The Laboratory;" H. J. Dunton, "Manhood;" Katharine Dresser, "Contact;" W. Parsons, "Patriotism;" S. W. Plumb, "The Impending Crisis," which was an oration and valedictory. The exercises continued until two o'clock, yet the interest was not unabated. The unanimous verdict of all visitors seemed to be that the prosperity and efficiency of Wheaton College is on the increase, and too much cannot be said of the indefatigable labors of its president, faculty and friends which are making it one of the best colleges in the land.

Our last national census gives 460 colleges and universities in this country with 10,400 professors and 150,000 students.

ARE SERMONS DULL?

REV. MADISON C. PETERS ANSWERS A QUESTION.

It Is the Dull Souls of the Listeners That Make the Preacher Prose—Ministers Preach Too Much—Sermons Need Not Be Great to Be Effective—Plain Truths.

In his sermon at the Bloomingdale Reformed church, New York, Sunday, June 16, Rev. Madison C. Peters spoke in answer to a question propounded by a newspaper man, "Why Are Sermons Generally Dull?" The text was Matthew xi, 7, "We have piped to you, and ye have not danced." The preacher replied to the newspaper man as follows:

I want to speak tonight in answer to a question a newspaper man recently asked, "Why Are Sermons Generally Dull?" Candidly I do not think that this question underrates the ministry. The most attentive and regular churchgoers do not fall behind this man of the world in speaking freely of the dullness, the sameness and the inconsequence of the average sermon. A preacher of any but the highest powers who ventures to detain his hearers beyond half an hour is regarded as a sort of social criminal. The impatience of preaching may well demand the attention of the public press. Of course some people come to church for nothing and go away with nothing, and the nothingness is their own. Their own dull souls make the preachers prose. A Beecher would be dull to a dull soul. Eyes kept long in the dark go blind, and long disuse of the soul's power to think of divine things throws it down to death. But still the fact remains that sermons as sermons go are dull—many preachers are like the Irish sportsman who aimed at nothing and hit it every time. Good old Andrew Fuller once exclaimed, "Oh, the holiness of their living and the painfulness of their preaching!"

We have to preach too much. Garrick and Foote agreed that Whitefield's oratory "was not at its height until he had repeated a discourse 40 times." In a revised sermon there should be a pleasure much the same as that received from an excellent piece of music. Our congregations now demand of us two sermons each Sabbath, a midweek lecture and other addresses as occasion may demand. Our congregations demand too much in the way of pastoral visitation.

A sermon need not be great, eloquent, magnificent. But instead of glittering generalities and pious platitudes put something in the sermon to glow, brighten, convince, subdue—"thoughts that breathe and words that burn." The themes which cluster around the pulpit are the grandest the human mind can contemplate and may well inspire the loftiest efforts of genuine eloquence.

Sermons are generally dull because people very often do not know what the preacher is talking about. Our Lord's discourses are wonderfully plain. They should be our models of style. A learned teacher published a commentary on Matthew. The text was printed in large type and his notes upon it in small. He presented a copy to an uneducated woman in his congregation. Some time afterward he asked her how she liked his book. "Indeed," she answered, "doctor, I am sure it is all good, but somehow or other the fine print is not so plain to my mind as the coarse print on the top of the pages. I can understand Matthew very well, but I can't get any meaning out of your comments." Are not a good many sermons like that?

The people are tired of set terms and theological phrases. Instead of telling a Christian congregation every Sunday to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, thus telling them to do what they are already doing, let the gospel be applied practically to society and the affairs of men. Let us have ministers of the present and not mere mouthpieces of the past—voices and not simply echoes. The great need of the pulpit today is that broad conception of a mission which is involved in the petition of the Lord's Prayer, "Thy kingdom come." If the popular notion that religion concerns the relation in which the soul stands to God is the only true idea, then much of Christ's life and teaching was not religious, and the final judgment will not be a religious court. Christ's life was as much secular as sacred, and he came to the sacred through the secular. The gospel of Christ comprehends not only the salvation of the soul, but the establishment of a kingdom here and now, the laws of which express God's will. The work of the church should be as far-reaching as human activity. We are not only to fit men to do the will of God in heaven, but hasten the answer to the Lord's Prayer, "Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." And, if the preachers had always in their sermons grasped Christ's idea of the kingdom and recognized its relations to the world, the world's history would read differently. The church ought always to have been the first to right the world's wrongs, but with a narrow conception of her mission she has sat with hands in her lap while other great organizations have done the work, and although these organizations drew their inspiration largely from church members, yet the success of these reform movements and benevolent enterprises are not the church's success. Christianity is broader than the church because the church has separated herself from the spirit of Christ. Make Christ not merely the center of a mere theology or the patron of an ecclesiasticism, but let us preach Christ as the Saviour of man, Christ as the brother of man, Christ as the hope in every discouragement, Christ as the reform for every wrong. If the pulpits by their silence on the great public questions divorce Christianity from the forward movements of our civilization, they must be content to occupy a little place in the world's thought. If the preachers would hold their grip on the masses, they must not withdraw themselves from the world, but get off their stilts and come down among the people, and be the people's men, for Christ was the people's Christ!

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic For the Week Beginning July 7. Comment by Rev. S. H. Doyle.

TOPIC.—The Ten Commandments in our lives.—Mark xii, 28-33.

In answer to the scribe's question Jesus declares love to God to be the first and greatest commandment, and the second like unto it—love to man. Thus He takes two commandments, separated widely in the Scriptures, and so unites them as to make them the essence and sum not only of the Ten Commandments, but of all commandments. If we love God with all our heart, soul, mind and strength and our neighbor as ourselves, all commands referring in detail to our duty to God and man are made unnecessary. It is upon this principle of love that we should put the Ten Commandments into effect in our daily lives.

1. Love to God. "Thou shalt love the Lord, thy God, with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength. This is the first commandment." This commandment is found in Deut. vi, 5. It is the sum of the first four of the Ten Commandments which relate to our duty to God. To love God in the way here described means to love Him supremely, with the entire being. God is deserving of such love. He Himself is love, and He loved us before we could love Him. We should love Him above every person and everything for these and other reasons, and if we love God in this way our love will express itself in our lives. We will be grateful to Him. We will admire Him and desire to be like Him. We will desire to have His name known and honored the world over. But specially will it be manifested in keeping the commandments referring to Him. With such love in our hearts we cannot have any other God before us. We can worship nothing but Him. We would not think of taking His name in vain, and the keeping of His day would be our joy and delight.

2. Love to our neighbor. The second commandment is like unto the first in that love is the basis of it. "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." It is second to the first, and to keep it we must obey the first, for we cannot truly love man unless we first love God. This commandment is found in Lev. xix, 18, and is the sum of the last six of the Ten Commandments. We are to love our fellow men as we love ourselves. A practical exemplification of this love is expressed in the Golden Rule. If we love our neighbors as ourselves, we must keep the commandments on the second table of stone. Love should thus be the ruling principle of our lives. It will make us true to God, true to our fellow men and true to ourselves. Have we such love to God and to man?

Bible Readings.—Ex. xx, 1-17; Lev. xix, 18; Deut. vi, 4, 5; xv, 7, 8; Josh. xxii, 5; Ps. xxxi, 23; Isa. lviii, 13, 14; Math. v, 21, 22; vi, 24; xxii, 35-39; John xiii, 34, 35; xv, 12-14; Rom. xii, 9, 10; I Cor. vi, 7-10; xiii, 1-4; Gal. vi, 1, 2; I Thess. iv, 9; I Pet. i, 22; II Pet. i, 7; I John ii, 9-11; iii, 14-17; iv, 7-12.

Boston, 1895, is to be a convention of enlargements. It will go as far as any convention in the past has gone, and then it will take one step further.

In magnitude it will be by all means the greatest religious gathering ever held in the history of the world. No less than 50,000 delegates are expected. This is 10,000 more than were at Cleveland last year.

At that convention there were two principal auditoriums—a hall and a tent. Boston will have three auditoriums—Mechanics' hall and two immense tents. These tents will be made especially for the occasion and will become the property of the United Society for use at later conventions.

Invite the Church Members.

Endeavorers make a great mistake when they do not invite the older church members to attend their special annual meetings. One minor result of such attendance is that the collections taken at such meetings will be largely increased, as the older people, seeing what good work the society is doing, will be moved to make liberal contributions to their undertakings.—Golden Rule.

Puts the Principle to the Test.

Perhaps the most difficult and trying duties to which the Endeavorer stands pledged are those of reading the Scriptures and prayer. It is not difficult to discharge this obligation once or twice, but to do it regularly and faithfully, to be conscientious in suffering no day to pass without it, puts the Christian principle of the youthful believer to the test.—Selected.

Christian Endeavor Briefs.

A junior society of Christian Endeavor, numbering 15 members, has been organized among the younger boys of the Kansas City Young Men's Christian association.

At a recent prayer meeting of the Presbyterian society at Napa City, Cal., when the subject, "Winning Others," was discussed, 15 of the Christian Endeavorers pledged themselves to try to bring at least one soul to Christ during the coming six months.

A remarkable floating society exists in the Bethel, at Vineyard Haven, most of its members belonging to the ships that pass through Vineyard sound. There is seldom a large attendance except when the ships are storm staid so that the men may be ashore.

There seems to be no end to the unlikely places where Christian Endeavor societies spring up. The latest is in connection with the insane asylum at Asawatomie, Kan. Its membership comprises five of the officials of the institution and a number of the attendants.

Endeavorers must take care not to assume what does not belong to them and must learn to be true and loyal to the church in every relation that they sustain to it.

ADVICE THAT SHOULD MAKE HER ATTRACTIVE AND GRACEFUL.

Care Required In Selecting a Bicycle—How to Learn to Ride—There Is No Royal Road—Hints on the Construction of a Convenient Costume.

Some women deprive themselves of the pleasure of riding a bicycle on account of the awkward appearance presented by a good many feminine riders, especially those who go along with knees rising and falling laboriously. They fear that they may commit the same faults, not knowing that the ungraceful exhibition is simply the result of one thing—ignorance concerning the choice of a bicycle.

If a woman were about to mount a horse, one of the first things to which she would give her attention would be to the length of the stirrup leather, which she would adjust to suit her stature; otherwise she would rise and fall in the saddle in too pronounced a manner and her appearance would be more or less unsightly. The proper adjustment of pedal and saddle in the case of the bicycle is equally important. Bicycles are made in different heights from the saddle to the pedal—namely, 21, 23, 25, 29 inches. If a woman with long legs has one of the low machines, it will be almost impossible for her to ride with grace. In choosing a bicycle a woman should test it by sitting on it while it is stationary and moving the pedal round with her foot. In this way she can ascertain if the seat is too high or too low for her.

When the pedal is at the lowest point, the foot should reach it comfortably, not so as to exert full foot pressure, but with about the same pressure as the toe gives the stirrup when sitting at ease in the saddle or what it gives to the floor when in a comfortable rocker. It is not safe to have a pedal that the foot cannot control all the way round, while if the pedal does not give the leg a full stretch the result will be an ungainly jerking up of the skirts.

The length of the crank of the pedal is even more important. In length the crank varies from 7 to 5½ inches, making a difference of three inches in the rise and fall. As the pedal revolves it raises the foot and knee just so much at each revolution, and if the elevation is too great an appearance of awkwardness is produced. Apart from producing awkwardness, the long crank has other serious drawbacks.

If a woman gets a bicycle with the proper height of saddle and a moderately short crank, she may be a graceful ride if she will observe one rule—not to turn the knee outward, but inward, in pressing the foot down. That it is natural to turn the knee out is demonstrated by the small boy, whose knees waggle from side to side like governors on an engine as he rides his bicycle. With a woman this action stretches the skirts to their utmost width and causes a very bad showing from behind and from the front. It will be found that there is much less fatigue from the inward stroke than from the outward, as the pressure is more direct and with less friction.

There is no royal road to learning to ride the modern safety. It is largely a matter of confidence. Some women will learn in an hour and others in a week. Where it is practicable it is best to go to one of the schools and take a lesson or two from a competent instructor. If this cannot be done, the next best plan is to mount the machine near a wall or board fence where there is a slight incline, and holding the handle with one hand and fending along the wall with the other move along until confidence is attained. The reason why the wall is advocated rather than a friend with a strong arm is that if the friend is a male he will insist on being at the side of the learner so as to be ready to receive her in his arms when she is about to fall. The prettier the girl is the more he will adhere to this line of conduct. So long as the support is in full view the rider can see what assistance is given, and she gets rattled the moment she sees it withdrawn. The assistant should keep well to the rear and should support the rider by holding the machine so that the learner cannot tell when the supporting hand is withdrawn. In this way the correct balance is learned before the rider knows it.

This is the reason why so many girls taught by friends are three times as long in learning to ride as those taught in schools, and even when expert seldom have the style of the school taught pupil. Miss Frances E. Willard, who is an enthusiastic rider, said recently that she had three teachers before she could master the wheel, and that it was only by the method last described she learned to ride. It took Lady Henry Somerset two months to learn to mount and ride, but by following the directions here given any woman should be able to learn in six lessons of 20 minutes each.

Here is a description of a costume for a woman to wear when bicycling. It includes a loose blouse waist and has a skirt made of some loosely webbed fabric which falls into folds of its own accord. The skirt is gored to fit very close around the hips, while from just above the knee to the bottom it is flared or widened. The hem is lightly weighted. This, it is claimed, does away with all display of the ankles and the ugly, cumbersome look from behind, which most of the proposed costumes have been found to possess in actual use. In walking it does not look unbecoming. Knickerbockers or full trousers may be worn under it or not as desired.

Given a properly fitting machine, reasonable skill and a well cut skirt, there is only one thing needed to make a woman ride a bicycle gracefully, and that is the limitation of speed. No woman should attempt to ride more than about eight miles an hour on asphalt or more than six miles an hour on a macadamized road if she values her appearance. Her skirt must have time to fall and drape between the motions of the feet, and this cannot take place if a rapid action of the knees is kept up. A well mounted woman, riding at a moderate speed, is seldom seen, but when she is met with every one turns to look at her, and here is given the secret of her superior attractiveness. The woman should set the pace for her escort, not try to keep up with him.—New York Sun.

The American Jewess.

The Amerlean Jewess! What a sublime name! What a lofty subject to write on and send it as a message to all who delight in the association of our lovely women—and who does not?—who honor and respect their mothers, think the world of their daughters and love their sisters. It draws us with closer affection to our homes; it links us with firmer devotions to our families. It makes us look back to those ages when our rabbis decreed that women should be exempt from ordained ceremonials (nashim petirin min hammitsvoth), as we see the American Jewess actively engaged in every movement appertaining to religious affairs as well as social and intellectual culture.—Rabbi L. Weiss in Pittsburg Jewish Criterim.

WHAT WHISKY DOES.

ACTIONS OF A DRUNKARD ARE THOSE OF A MANIAC.

The Course and Symptoms of Inebriety Resemble the Progress of Insanity—How Alcohol Effects the Nerves—Paralysis and Death.

Alcoholic intoxication is insanity. The higher cerebral nerve centers are rendered inco-ordinate. The drunken man is a maniac and quite frequently, in the excitable stage, requires restraint. When a young man drinks wine at a party or convivially, he becomes excited, hilarious, more or less confused, inco-ordinate, then stupid, and then goes off into a comatose sleep until the poison is consumed, when he is restored once more to sanity.

Viewed entirely from the standpoint of physical pathology, without a knowledge of the cause, this debauch can only be called an attack of insanity. Now, it will be noted that the course and symptoms of a drunken fit resemble the whole course and progress of insanity. In the first stage is "elevation" of the higher cerebral centers—exaltation of self and visions of grandeur. The man is conscious of everything except that he is drunk. A few more drinks, and then the higher centers take on confusion, the lower centers become paralyzed, speech is thickened, the gait is staggering, the man reels, mutters, grows stupid and relapses into coma and general paralysis and is dead drunk. This is the typical course of the disease known as general paralysis. In the first stages of this disease there is mental exaltation, then mental perversion, then the low centers become involved, and finally the scene ends with coma and general paralysis.

In a debauch alcohol first attacks the higher nerve centers—cerebrum and cerebellum. The reason is because these centers have less resistance than the lower to alcohol. The lower centers are involved later and are affected least. But cases are numerous in which the lower centers are poisoned with fatal effects. The debauchee sinks into deep coma; the poisoning fatally involves and paralyzes the lower nerve centers, which causes the heart and respiration to fail, and the coma fades away into oblivion—the inebriate is dead.

Nerve cells are very impressionable. They have the power of becoming educated. Repeated impressions made upon them from any source will cause this training or conduct or mode of action or education. When the brain cells are educated, they perform their functions according to the form and type of this training. They act as they are taught to act.

Now, all inebriety is periodical, though apparently many cases may be constant or continuous, but in every case this periodicity may be found, though it varies from a part of a day to part of a decade in duration. The real reason of this is because the nerve cells were taught to demand and resist alcohol in this periodical manner. No man drinks just as much every hour. He leaves intervals between drinks and between debauches. When he has established a carving for liquor, he will automatically imitate the method of drinking as it was first indulged.

But repeated debauches educate the cells into inebriety. The mental manifestations of inebriety are those of insanity. I consider an inebriate an insane person. I regard his insanity as the cir cular variety and will give my reasons.

Kirchhoff says circular insanity is a periodical attack of mania, succeeded by an interval of melancholy or even interval of apparent sanity.

The periodical inebriate fills these indications. He is periodically a maniac. His debauches are followed by an interval of apparent freedom from liquor and mania. I do not say that all inebriates should be confined in an asylum, but I certainly do say that were they not known to be drinking men their mental manifestations and conduct would convict all of them of insanity in the courts, and they would be sent to asylums.—Dr. Keeley in Arena.

President Fanre's Bad Precedent.

When Mr. Felix Faure was recently elected president of the republic of France, he ordered that every soldier in the French army and every sailor in the navy should be given a bottle of wine wherewith to drink his health, the same to be at his own personal expense. In other words, the drinks were on him. The other day he received the bill and gave his check for it without a murmur. It amounted to 69,000 francs, or $13,800. What a pity for France's defenders that an election comes only once in seven years!—Bonfort's Wine and Spirit Circular.

What a blessing rather if the first act of every new president is to encourage wine bibbing. No wonder, with such official examples, French scientists and statesmen are becoming alarmed at the ravages of alcoholism in the republic.—Voice.

Bnt One Way to Stop.

Idly, vainly shall we seek to stop excessive drinking so long as we permit drinking at all. As well might you encourage men to drift over Niagara falls, but exhort them to be sure to stop when half way down.—Greeley.

CHILDREN OF INEBRIATES.

Apt to Be Stunted In Growth, Idiots, Epileptics, Diseased and Deformed.

A distinguished English specialist in children's diseases has carefully noted the difference between 12 families of drinkers and 12 temperate families during a period of 12 years, with the result that he found that the 12 drinking families produced in those years 57 children, while the temperates were accountable for 61. Of the drinkers' children, 25 died in the first week of life as against six on the other side, the latter deaths being from weakness, while the former were attributable to weakness, convulsive attacks or to œdema of the brain and membranes, to this record being also added five who were idiots, five so stunted in growth as to be really dwarfs; five when older became epileptics; one, a boy, had grave chorea, ending in idiocy; five more were diseased and deformed, and two of the epileptics became by inheritance drinkers. Ten, therefore, of this 57 only showed during life normal disposition and development of body and mind. Of the temperates, as already stated, five died in the first week of weakness, while four in the later years of childhood had curable diseases, and two only showed inherited defects of a nervous character. Thus the large proportion of 50 were normal in every way, sound in body and mind.—New York Tribune.

Broke His Mother's Heart.

The editor of The Catholic News writes in a recent issue: "Many a pitiful story is brought out in the police courts of a great city. Perhaps the saddest the newspapers of New York have ever reported came from Jefferson Market court last week. A poor mother dropped dead there at the feet of the son who had been a disgrace to her. This son was a young man of 30 or so. Instead of helping his aged mother, he spent what little he earned in drink. At last the poor woman determined to have him committed as a habitual drunkard, hoping that such a step would be for his good. She was called to the witness stand to swear to the complaint, but the effort was too much for her, and she died with the words on her lips, 'It's breaking my heart.' Here is a temperance lecture more eloquent than any man ever delivered."

Plain Whisky Killed Him.

No worse "knockout drops" than plain whisky, according to the inquest held last week over the body of Dominico Eillo, a New York organ grinder. We have always held that whisky, give it a chance, would knock out whatever good there is in a man and end by knocking out the man himself.—New York Voice.

Help One Another.

Seldom can the heart be lonely
If it seeks a lonelier still,
Self forgetting, seeking only,
Emptier cups of love to fill.
—Frances Ridley Havergal.

A Word About Cider.

A strictly temperance man over in Lafayette, who drinks a little cider occasionally, reminds us of one of Josh Billings' apt sayings, "Cider may be a good temperance drink, but I can get so drunk on it that I can't tell one of the Ten Commandments from a bylaw of a baseball club."

SABBATH SCHOOL.

LESSON II, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, JULY 14.

Text of the Lesson, Ex. xxxii, 1-8, 30-35. Memory Verses, 7, 8—Golden Text, I John v, 21—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

1. "Up, make us gods." Some one has said that whenever we turn away from leaning exclusively upon God either for salvation or for the necessities of the path we are virtually saying, "Up, make us gods." This is equal to a rejection of God. They had not seen Moses nor heard from God for several weeks, and they can trust no longer. They cannot walk by faith, they must have something to look upon. Blessed are all who are content to believe without seeing or feeling—content to live by faith.

2, 3. Aaron, the anointed high priest, seems to have no word of warning or help for them as from God. He was Moses' mouth or spokesman, and Moses was to him instead of God (Ex. iv, 16; vii, 1), and Moses being absent he, like a false prophet, speaks out of his own heart this evil advice (Jer. xxiii, 16). It is sad when we depend upon man instead of upon God for the message—then when the man is absent we have no message. Observe also that as they gave the ornaments of their ears to make an idol, so they gave their ears to the devil (Deut. xxxii, 16, 17).

4. Instead of receiving at their hand the gold to make an idol, they should have received at his hand and from his lips the living words of the living God. It is a sad case indeed when the one who ought to represent the people before God misrepresents God to the people and joins the people in heathenish desires and customs. Through him who should have led them to the God of Glory they changed their glory into the similitude of an ox (Ps. cvi, 20) it looks as if Aaron had wholly lost his reason when we hear him say, "These be thy gods, O Israel." Compare II Thess. ii, 10, 11.

5. "And when Aaron saw it, he built an altar before it." See this sin repeated in the case of Jeroboam and the very words of Aaron used (I Kings xii, 28, 33). This is all the work of the devil from beginning to end, and so is everything like it in the churches and among the people of God today. God is a Spirit, and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth. And when any person or thing comes between the soul and God it is idolatry.

6. "The people sat down to eat and drink, and rose up to play." See I Cor. x, 7, and it would be well to read the whole chapter. Is it not on the same line of things when in houses built for the worship of God people bearing the name of Christ meet to eat and drink and be entertained or amused? There is a wonderful likeness to the dancing and singing of the naked people around the golden calf (verses 19, 25) in some things done in our midst in the name of religion.

7. The Lord said to Moses that the people had corrupted themselves, and He ordered him down from the mountain to see to it. All the good is from God, all the evil is on our side with satan back of it. Long afterward the Lord said to this people: "O Israel, thou hast destroyed thyself, but in Me is thine help. O Israel, return unto the Lord thy God, for thou hast fallen by thine iniquity" (Hos. xiii, 9; xiv, 1). The sin is ours, the salvation is all His.

8. "They have turned aside quickly out of the way which I commanded them." Blessed are the undefiled in the way who walk in the law of the Lord (Ps. cxix, 1). There is no way for the child of God to walk in but THE WAY, which is Jesus Christ Himself (John xiv, 6). We are not to turn from Him, either to the right or the left (Joshua i, 7), and when tempted to turn we have the promise of help and guidance if we are only willing to be guided (Isa. xxx, 31; Cor. x, 13).

30. "I will go up unto the Lord, peradventure I shall make an atonement for your sin." Before coming down from the mount Moses had pleaded for Israel and obtained the assurance that God would spare them as a nation. The account of this, and the meeting with Joshua, and the destruction and disposition of the calf is found in the intervening verses, also the significance of the question "Who is on the Lord's side?" and the true meaning of consecration. Compare Luke xiv, 26, 27; Math. x, 37, 38.

31. "And Moses returned unto the Lord." While all sin is sin, and even the thought of foolishness is sin (Prov. xxiv, 9), yet some sins are more heinous than others. Moses calls this a great sin. Jesus himself spoke of a sin that hath never forgiveness at the same time that he spoke of the forgiveness of all manner of sins except this particular sin (Mark iii, 28, 29). The sin that overtops all others is the rejection of Christ the Son of God.

32. "And, if not, blot me, I pray thee, out of thy book which thou hast written." He is willing to suffer in their stead if necessary in order to save them. The same spirit is seen in Paul on behalf of this same people Israel (Rom. ix, 3). The reality is seen and fully carried out in the Lord Jesus Christ, who was made a sin offering for Israel and for us that we might be saved (II Cor. v, 21).

33. "Whosoever hath sinned against me, him will I blot out of my book." In Rev. xx, 12 we read of books being opened, and another book which is the book of life. In Mal. iii, 16 we read of a book of remembrance. What book is referred to in our lesson we may not now know, but we may be sure that if it were possible to have a name blotted out of the book of life our Lord would not have made it such a great ground of rejoicing to have one's name there (Luke x, 20; Rev. iii, 5).

34. "Behold, mine angel shall go before thee. Nevertheless, in the day when I visit I will visit their sin upon them." The Lord is slow to anger and plenteous in mercy, but sin that is not repented of and forgiven shall in due time be visited. Every penitent sinner may be forgiven by accepting Him who died in his stead, but there is no other way but by the atonement. The guiding and protecting angel is mentioned in Ex. xxiii, 20, "Behold I send an angel before thee to keep thee in the way, and to bring thee into the place which I have prepared." "The angel of His presence saved them" (Isa. lxiii, 9). Well may we say, "If thy presence go not with me, carry us not up hence" (Ex. xxxiii, 15). But thank God for Math. xxviii, 20; Isa. xli, 10, 13; Deut. xxxi. 8; Heb. xiii, 5, etc.

35. "And the Lord plagued the people, because they made the calf which Aaron made." The Lord judgeth righteously, for there is no unrighteousness with Him. He looketh upon the heart and will render to every one according to their works. Partnership in evil is an evil partnership.

MOUNTAIN STORMED.

HISTORIC LOOKOUT CAPTURED BY EPWORTH LEAGUERS.

And a Memorable Service Held on the Summit—Two Thousand Visitors to the Chattanooga Gathering of Methodists Greet the Appearance of the King of Day With the Old Doxology.

CHATTANOOGA, June 28. — Lookout mountain was stormed early yesterday morning by 2,000 Epworth Leaguers, who took possession without opposition. At 6:30 a. m. tho street cars began to move the young Methodists toward the mountain. As the cars ran through the city and suburbs their occupants made the air resound with the old-fashioned Methodist camp-meeting music. Darkness covered the face of the mountain as they reached its base, but that did not deter them from their purpose. With gladsome song and hearty shouts the ascent was begun. On they went until a steady stream was scaling the side of the historic old mountain. It was a grand scene that the eye beheld as the summit was reached. The gray of the morning dawn had put in its appearance and one could catch glimpses of the surrounding landscape.

Like a Scene 1900 Years Ago.

Great clouds of mist hung over the city and the valley. The faint outlines of the Tennessee river could be traced as it gracefully made its turn on the Moccasin bend. The assembled band of Wesleyan pilgrims, representing almost every state of the Union and also the Dominion of Canada, reverentially uncovered their heads and began their devotions. Rev. George R. Stuart, the celebrated evangelist who assists Sam Jones in his meetings, led the service. As he stood and talked to the people of the love of God and of the power of the gospel of Jesus Christ, and as one looked upon the peculiar surroundings of the assembly, his mind ran back to that noted meeting of nearly 1900 years ago, when a great assembly of people heard the gospel proclaimed by its Great Founder upon a mount of Palestine.

A Never-To-Be Forgotten Scene.

The Sermon on the Mount was in the minds and the hearts of all present. As the service went on the face of nature changed. The great clouds rolled back, the mist fled, and the gray turned into the rosy tints of the morn. The worshippers stood as if lost in devotion and adoration. Their hearts were brought close to the God of nature, who was so beautifully and majestically revealing His power to them. They stood silent, and then as there peeped over the distant horizon the first beams of the great King of Day, they all, as if moved by a common spirit, broke forth with the long metre doxology, "Praise God from Whom All Blessings Flow." The good Methodists could stand it no longer. Their pent-up feelings became exuberant and old shouts were given and handshakes were exchanged on all sides. It was a scene never to be forgotten.

Received Some Pictures with Applause.

Yesterday was given to the carrying out of an elaborately prepared programme of routine papers and addresses of interest to the leaguers. The appearance of a colored speaker, Rev. John Wesley Bowen, of Atlanta, was the occasion of generous applause from the audience. At the afternoon meeting a great hit was made by an address of Rev. Carlos Martyn, a Presbyterian minister from Chicago, who spoke on "Christlan Citizenship." He said the north had to look to the south for help in the direction of city reform. The pictures he drew of the corruption of Chicago were received with great applause.

At the night meeting 15,000 were present, and speeches were made by Miss Stella Rule, of Knoxville; Rev. W. P. Lovejoy, of Athens, Ga.; Rev. F. L. Loveland, of Clinton, Ia.; Bishop Thoburn, of Indiana, and others.

IOWA BANKERS TALK FOR GOLD

Remarks at the State Association by a Couple of Financiers.

STORM LAKE, Ia., June 27.—The ninth annual meeting of the Iowa Bankers association was called to order promptly by the president, Simon Casady, of Des Moines. President Casady in his opening address spoke plainly on the duty of the meeting in the present crisis, advocating action in favor of a gold standard, saying that it was not wise to keep silent, and that all necessary legislation should be asked for.

His remarks were received with warm applause, plainly showing the temper of the 125 delegates present. J. K. Deming, cashier of the Second National bank of Dubuque, read a paper on "Gold, Silver or Both." He took strong ground that gold always had been and always would be the basis of currency, and said he would only use silver in a limited amount, and that we had too much coined now.

Echo of Last Year's Strike.

CHICAGO, June 29.—The city of Chicago is made defendant in a damage suit for $100,000 filed in the Circuit court by the Illinois Central Railroad company. The case is one of a series of cases commenced against the city by the railroads to recover damages which they claim to have suffered by injuries to their freight cars and delay to their business arising from the American Railway union strike of last year.

San Francisco Fire Cost $1,200,000.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 29.—The loss on Thursday evening's fire is placed at $1,200,000. Three hundred families are not only homeless, but have lost all their belongings. Great destitution prevails. A relief fund has been started by the Examiner.

DEATHS OF PROMINENT MEN.

Ex-President Peixoto, Prof. Huxley and Gen. Green Clay Smith.

RIO JANEIRO, July 1.—Ex-President Peixoto is dead. One of the most prominent figures in the eventful history of modern Brazil has passed away with the death of Floriano Peixoto. His position was that of a distinguished soldier and a statesman who was always found equal to the many sudden political emergencies in his country. By the resignation Nov. 23, 1891, of President da Fonseca, Marshal Peixoto became chief executive of the republic. His administration was chiefly devoted to keeping the two indomitable rebels, De Mello and Da Gama, from overthrowing the government.

The siege of Rio Janeiro by the insurgent fleet was perhaps the most interesting incident of Peixoto's administration. As the date for the national election in Brazil approached, it was generally surmised that Peixoto would declare himself dictator and remain at the head of the government. Peixoto's course was, however, that of a good citizen. When Dr. de Moraes was elected president Peixoto disappointed all the prophets of evil by peacefully turning over the reins of government and doing all he could to make his successor's road an easy one. His health then failing the ex-president retired from public life.

Death of the Veteran Gen. Smith.

WASHINGTON, July 1.—General Green Clay Smith, the veteran preacher, soldier and politician, died at his residence in this city. He had been ill for some weeks with a malignant carbuncle, which resisted all treatment. General Smith came from a famous Kentucky family, and was born July 2, 1832. In 1860 he was a member of the Kentucky legislature and the next year became major of the Third Kentucky cavalry. While in the field he was nominated for congress as a Republican, and resigned to take his seat in the house. In 1864 he missed the nomination for the vice presidency on the ticket with Lincoln by half a vote. Later he went into the ministry and in 1876 he was nominated by the Prohibitionists for president. In 1895 he came to Washington and became pastor of the Metropolitan Baptist church.

Half a Crop of Winter Wheat.

SPRINGFIELD, Ills., July 1.—The crop bulletin of the secretary of the state board of agriculture says the latest information received at the department of agriculture is to the effect that but little over half a crop of winter wheat will be harvested in Illinois this year.

MISS FLAGG'S LATEST NEW BOOK!
"A Prisoner of Hope."
COMPLETE IN ONE LARGE HANDSOME VOLUME.
Price, $1.25.
We heartily commend this new work, by Elizabeth E. Flagg, to all our friends. The narrative originated in her personal experience, two or three years ago, when she sought relief and restoration from the results of a painful accident. In that search she availed herself of a unique healer in New Jersey, whom she graphically described, at that time, in her weekly letters to this paper. The ideas created in her mind by that experience form the basis of this well-told story, and thoughtful readers will peruse it with interest. While all may not agree with its deductions, ministers of the Gospel, students in seminaries and intelligent home circles will find it pleasant food for thought. We sell it for $1.25 per copy postage prepaid.

ILLINOIS PICKINGS.

NEWS NOTES OF INTEREST FROM HERE AND THERE.

Reports by Telegraph of Important Happenings in Our Own State During the Past Few Days—News of Interest to the People of Illinois.

SPRINGFIELD, June 26.—The senate's first meeting of the extra session was brief. The governor's message was read. It was also brief and not a particle caustic. Indeed it was mild and kindly, and simply told the solons that the chief reason they had been called together was that they had not provided enough money; that all their appropriations were propor and reasonable, and that he was sorry that he had to call them back. The other matters he had listed had been put in to give the statesmen something to do, but the governor explains that they are all matters of importance, that should be attended to.

The officers of the regular session were reappointed by resolution. A committee was appointed to inform the house that the senate was in session and the senate adjourned. In the house the same business was transacted, Speaker Meyer in the chair.

There have been a number of caucuses, but none of them has developed anything important. The Democrats resolved indorsement of the extra session. The governor has signed the libel bill.

Republican house members held a caucus and decided that Speaker Meyer be authorized to appoint a temporary speaker, while he is unable to act, provided the appointee be either White, Cochran, Needles or Berry.

SPRINGFIELD, June 27.—The Republicans of the senate met in caucus and received the report of committee appointed to investigate the subject of the state's finances. The report was a divided one. Harding had prepared a statement which showed that the deficit would amount to $500,000. Dunlap had a statement which estimated a surplus instead a deficit, based on the idea that the inheritance tax and corporation fees would show a big increase. The caucus decided to accept these figures. Howell left the caucus, declaring that a deficit existed and it was child's play to attempt to escape it. The caucus decided to favor the investigation of the state treasury during the Democratic administration. Neither house did any business.

A joint caucus of the Republican senators and representatives was held in the afternoon. Berry offered a resolution that the caucus proceed at once to decide what portion, if any, of the governor's proclamation be considered this special session. A motion that a joint committee be appointed to report to an adjourned meeting of the caucus on the subject of tax levy, was adopted.

The governor has vetoed the senate bill looking to the promotion of the construction of a waterway, the idea being the construction of a trunk waterway through the state from Lake Michigan to the Mississippi river. The governor says such schemes are very enchanting, but this one would cost too much even if practicable, which it is not.

SPRINGFIELD, June 28.—The business done in the two houses of the Illinois legislature was not great. In the senate Mahoney tried to get up a labor arbitration bill, but could not suspend the rules. Salomon had a park bill for Chicago that he was no more fortunate with and all attempts to introduce bills were objected to and defeated. In the house Kitmiller, Republican, introduced a resolution that the house elect a speaker pro tem and introduced a row at the same time. A motion to table was carried by the Republicans—75 to 44. A motion was carried for a committee of five to examine the finances of the state and see whether the appropriations were sufficient. Both houses adjourned for the day.

SPRINGFIELD, Ills., June 29.—Both houses of the Illinois legislature have adopted an adjournment resolution to July 9, and the members have gone home until that date. Bills were introduced in the senate: For arbitration of labor disputes; revenue bill abolishing the state board of equalization; to regulate charges in sleeping cars; to tax all butter substitutes. The house received the majority and minority reports of the sufficiency of the tax levy aud ordered the printing of 5,000 copies of each.

Illinois State Fair.

SPRINGFIELD, July 1.—The premium list for the Illinois state fair of 1895 embraces premiums aggregating over $40,000 in cash. The state board of agriculture has designated President Judy and Secretary Garrard as a committee to confer with a like committee to be appointed from the citizens to establish a bureau of information for persons visiting the fair. Headquarters will be maintained and all information necessary furnished visitors

Huxley Solves the Problem for Himself.

LONDON, July 1.—The celebrated Prof. Huxley is dead. Thomas Henry Huxley was born near this city in May, 1825. He was the originator of the doctrine of evolution and of the term "agnostic" for those who "do not know" in reference to a hereafter, as opposed to those who by faith and belief in the scriptures claim that they do know. He died in agnosticism. He and Gladstone had a controversy through the papers on the subject. His great study was life—where did it come from. He never found out, but discovered to his own satisfaction and that of other scientists that "protoplasm" is the one thing common to all life.

FATAL FIRE AT MINNEAPOLIS.

Six Firemen Meet Their Death—Heavy Loss of Property.

MINNEAPOLIS, June 28.—During a fire on First avenue south last night six fire men were killed. The loss to property, principally McDonald's crockery house, will be large.

Following are the names of the dead firemen: Joseph Hay, Walter Richardson, Frank Rulaine (lieutenant), John Horner, Bert Thomas and an unidentified man, a member of engine company No. 14. Several others were seriously injured and it is thought that there may be still more dead who have not been extricated from under the ruins of the walls which fell and crushed them.

The seriously injured so far as known are: Ed Thielen (lieutenant) and Captain Cadwell. The property loss consisted of the entire demolition of the building occupied by McDonald Bros., dealers in crockery, chinaware, glassware, silverware and gas fixtures. The building was of four stories, brick walls and wooden interior framework, and was well stocked.

The fire originated in the boxes and packing stored in the rear of the building, and was beyond the power of the fire department to control. At a few minutes before midnight the walls fell, one side wall falling in and the other falling out into the alley where the firemen were at work. The total loss will aggregate over $260,000; insurance unknown.

FATAL FIRE IN A RAG SHOP.

Floor Collapses and Two Firemen Are Killed and Eight Injured.

WORCESTER, Mass., July 1.—A fire in the rag shop of the Hubeley Manufacturing company in Brackett court caused the death of two firemen and injured eight others. The dead are: W. F. Brigham and Lieutenant J. J. Boyle, both of hose No. 4. The injured are: Deputy Chief Engineer George S. Coleman, Captain W. N. Avery, John P. Casey, F. H. Bassford, R. D. Robinson, and E. C. Atwood, all members of hose No. 4, and Henry H. Ham and C. E. Chamberlain, of hose No. 9. A floor in the upper story collapsed and fell, carrying the two floors underneath it into the cellar. The men went down with it and were buried under the ruins and bales of rags.

Killed by Fire Damp.

BOONE, Ia., June 27.—John Marshall, Jr., son of the owner of the Crowe & Marshall Coal company, was overcome by fire damp while at work in a new shaft. John Thunell, a miner, tried to save him, but he was overcome. A third miner went down, but he could not rescue the two men, and they were dead when the fire damp was foreed out of the mines by the ventilators so that the rescuers could get to them.

Favor Calling a Silver Convention.

ST. CHARLES, Mo., June 28.—Earl R. Britt, secretary of the silver conference held in this city last week, has received communications from the chairmen of fifty counties out of a total of 114 in Missouri, all but two of which are in favor of calling a state convention for the purpose of defining the position of the Democratic party on the silver question.

Fire at Kansas City.

KANSAS CITY, July 1.—Fire consumed the contents of a four-story brick building at 105 and 110 West Third street, causing a loss on the building of $12,000 and $40,000 on the stock and machinery of the Kansas City Paper Box company. The insurance is about two-thirds of the loss. The building was owned by Dr. J. S. Pierce, and was rebuilt after being demolished by a cyclone in 1886.

THE DEATH RECORD.

MILO J. CHASE, president of the Chase Bros. Piano company, at Chicago.

MARK LYUCK, well-known theatrical man, at New York.

Rev. EUGENE EVANS, prominent colored divine, at Springfield, Ills.

PHILLIP PHILLIPS, composer and singer of sacred music, at Delaware, O.

GEORGE F. BISSELL, prominent citizen of Chicago, at Asheville. N. C.

Fire at St. Marys, O.

ST. MARYS, June 27.—A fire here destroyed the woolen mills and seven buildings. The loss will probably reach $100,000.

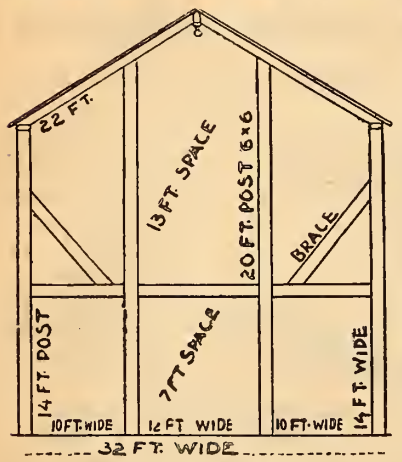
Nervous

People should realize that the only true and permanent cure for their condition is to be found in having

Pure Blood

Because the health of every organ and tissue of the body depends upon the purity of the blood. The whole world knows the standard blood purifier is

Hood's Sarsaparilla



And therefore it is the only true and reliable medicine for nervous people. It makes the blood pure and healthy, and thus cures nervousness, makes the nerves firm and strong, gives sweet natural sleep, mental vigor, a good appetite, perfect digestion. It does all this, and cures Scrofula, Eczema or Salt Rheum, and all other blood diseases.

Hood's Pills easy to buy, easy to take, easy in effect. 25c.

A Hay Barn.

Progressive farmers in all localities are each year more and more avoiding the wasteful extravagance of stacking hay as it was formerly done. Hay barns, barracks or sheds are coming very generally into use. The Iowa Homestead, with a view to encouraging the proper storing of hay, presented, with other models, an illustration of the end view of a hay barn, which has given satisfaction. It is 32 by 56 feet, holds 60 tons of hay and provides shelter for 100 head of dehorned cattle and only cost $100, in addition to the owner's own labor. The posts may be put on sills or on a brick or stone base, or may be set in the ground. For the inside posts a 12 inch sill set in the ground and filled up level with gravel and cement is preferred, and the owner regards a shingled roof as the cheapest and best.

No lumber bills are given because these plans are intended to be suggestive merely, each builder modifying them as his needs may seem to demand. Poles may be used in some localities and not in others. Some want more room and others less. Some may desire cattle sheds around the outside, while others may prefer to run the stock under. Each to his taste, for nothing is more difficult than to plan a farm building that shall in all respects suit another man.

Insect Pests and Plant Diseases.

It is reported from the New York station that paris green and kerosene emulsion still remain the leading insecticides, and that bordeaux mixture is the best remedy for plant diseases. Other conclusions arrived at are that the knapsack sprayer is generally useful, though extensive growers need a machine of greater capacity. The suction pipe should always enter the tank at the top, and the pump should be made of brass or be brass lined. Hand pumps should allow the weight of the body to be used on the handle while at work. Vermorel nozzles give a better spray than the disk machines.

For spraying potatoes and tomatoes a nozzle is needed which can be lowered between the rows and directed so as to force the spray up through the vines. The agitator is needed to keep the poisons in solution. The best forms work up and down in an upright tank, like the dash in the old churn. Where the pump piston has a packing, this should be often renewed. For killing cabbage worms and insects, no liquid has been found equal to dry paris green applied with a hand sifter. Powder guns are useful for applying dry powdered poisons, pyrethrum, tobacco dust and sulphur.

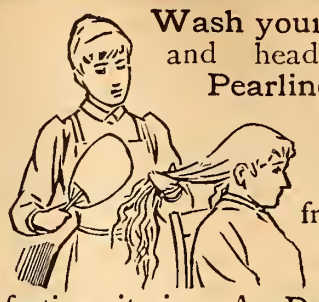
LISTING CORN.

Advantages as Set Forth by a Nebraska Correspondent of American Agriculturist.

Some ten years ago listing corn was not in favor. Now three-fourths of the grain produced in Nebraska and Kansas is raised by listing. Not because it is easier to raise a crop this way, but there are other reasons. In the spring the farmer is hurried and crowded more than at any other season of the year. There are the many small things to attend to which should not be put off, but the corn planting must be done on time if a full crop is expected. Then it is that the lister comes in just right. To make listing a success it must be done right. Plant the corn properly, at the right season, and do not put it off to the very last, as is too often the case, and then expect it to make as good corn as the earlier planting. I do not advise very early listing on wet and undrained land. The seed is liable to rot. About May 10 is early enough in this state.

Next see that the corn is planted properly. This, as well as any other seed, will germinate and grow better in the beginning if it is planted in a mellow seedbed. There should be at least two inches of loose earth below and 1½ above the seed. If the lister drops the corn in the bottom of the furrow or in hard subsoil, the seed will not germinate or root there as well as in mellow ground, and hence the slow growth as compared with check planted corn, which as a rule has the mellow seedbed. Again, some combined listers drop the corn directly under the subsoil share, which is equally as bad as the former. The lister plow should cover all weeds at the edges of the furrow and make a smooth, gracefully rounded mound. The field may then be let alone until plowing, or it may be rolled or planked and then cultivated with a clipper for the first time.

For success in cultivating listed as well as any corn, the field should be at least moderately free of trash. Cultivation should begin as soon as possible, either with a clipper or cultivator, and should be often and thorough, but not deep toward the last, as root pruning is not advisable. As some combined listers do not furnish a well pulverized seedbed for the corn, it will pay to follow the lister with a one horse drill. This will, as a rule, furnish the desired seedbed and will insure a better stand, while the young plants will also grow much faster.



Rural New Yorker has always advised against the use of fresh, unleached wood ashes for potatoes. Scab has almost invariably resulted from such use.

The state of Wisconsin has enacted a rigorous antiadulteration dairy law. If it is enforced, it will prevent the manufacture and sale of filled cheese. The law also prohibits the sale of oleomargarine as butter, whether it is colored or not.

Mothers will find "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" the best to use for children while teething. An old and well-tried remedy.

Wash your Hair and head with Pearline, and see how refreshing and comforting it is. A Pearline shampoo, even if you don't take it very often, will keep the scalp beautifully clean and healthy. Don't use too much. Not that there's any harm in it, but it'll take too long to wash the suds off, and you might grumble about that. Use your Pearline in the bath. You'll feel invigorated after it. It's very much like a Turkish or a Russian bath —except that it costs almost nothing, and that you take it at home, without any trouble or fuss. 441 JAMES PYLE, N. Y.

MASONIC CHART.

ILLUSTRATING THE RELATION OF SOME OF THE DEGREES AND RITES IN FREEMASONRY TO EACH OTHER.

The accompanying chart represents one hundred and forty two degrees.

1. The American Rite of 13 degrees;
2. The Scotch Rite of 33 degrees;
3. The Egyptian Rite of 96 degrees.
4. The Mystic Shrine of one degree.
5. The Eastern Star of 5 degrees for Master Masons and for women. These are side degrees, and not genuine masonry.

The Symbolic degrees, or Blue Lodge of three degrees, are common to every Masonic rite, whether American, Scotch, or Egyptian, or whichever of the Masonic rites, named in Mackey's Masonic Encyclopedia one may choose to investigate.

This chart shows in the Blue Lodge the position of the Worshipful Master and some of the other officers of the lodge. Several positions of the candidate who is being initiated are also shown. In the Master Mason's degree is recognized the murder, burial and resurrection scene so full of religious significance to Freemasons.

A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery.

Scotch Rite Masonry Illustrated. 2 vols. Per vol., cloth, $1.00; paper, 65c.
The complete illustrated ritual of the entire Scottish Rite, comprising all the Masonic degrees from 3rd to 33rd inclusive. The first three degrees are common to all the Masonic Rites, and are fully and accurately given in "Freemasonry Illustrated." Vol. I comprises the degrees from 3rd to 18th inclusive.
Vol. II comprises the degrees from 19th to 33rd inclusive, with the signs, grips, tokens and passwords from 1st to 33rd degree inclusive.

Hand-Book of Freemasonry. 274 pages, flexible cloth, 50c.
By E. Ronayne, Past Master of Keystone Lodge No. 639, Chicago. Gives the complete standard ritual of the first three degrees of Freemasonry.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. 110 pages, paper, 25c.
The genuine old Morgan book republished.

Allyn's Ritual of Freemasonry. By Avery Allyn. Cloth, $5.00.
Contains the fully Illustrated Ritual of the Blue Lodge, Chapter Council and Commandery, 11 of the Scotch Rite Degrees, several Masonic side degrees and what is termed a Key to the Phi Beta Kappa, and the Orange Societies.

Duncan's Masonic Ritual and Monitor. Cloth, $2.50.
Profusely illustrated with explanatory engravings, and containing the ritual and work of the order for the seven degrees, including the Royal Arch. Though extensively used as an Instruction Book and one of the best in the market, it is not as accurate as "Freemasonry Illustrated."

Richardson's Monitor of Freemasonry. Cloth, $1.25; paper, 75c.
Contains the ceremonies of Lodges, Chapters, Encampments, etc. Illustrated. Although extensively used in conferring the higher degrees, it is not only very incomplete but inaccurate especially as regards the first seven degrees, and as to the higher degrees it gives but a description and general idea of the degrees rather than the full ritual.

Formal delivery of the seals of office has taken place at Windsor castle, and the Conservative cabinet is now in charge of the British empire.

There is no truth in the report that the duke of Aumale, uncle of the late count of Paris, has been assassinated.

DENVER COUNCILMEN IN PERIL.

Indignant Citizens Make Threats Against Some of Them.

DENVER, June 28.—The city council chamber was invaded by indignant citizens who were determined on seeing that boodle measures were not favored. The special cause for the gathering was a pending ordinance providing for a change in the water service, which was said to have its origin with the Union Water company. The aldermen were in session over eight hours. A force of fifty policemen in uniform and a score of detectives in citizens' clothes were scattered about the room to prevent any outbreak upon the part of the mob. Threats of violence were loudly made. Once a rope was shown by the crowd, and its use was demanded during the afternoon meeting, when Alderman Emery changed his vote from the side of the taxpayers to that of the water company.

A rush was made for the rail separating the seats of the aldermen from the spectators, but trouble was averted under the counsel of cool-headed leaders, who were prompt to check all tendencies toward violence. The chamber at times rang with the cries, "Hang him!" "Boodle!" "Kill the traitor!" and others of like character. Alderman Leet, who represented the sentiment of the surging mass, at one time addressed the crowd, urging the preservation of order. He declared that the passage of the ordinance would not settle the matter under consideration; that before its final adoption it would have to receive the approval of the board of supervisors, and then that of the mayor.

He declared, further, in answer to charges that the water company owned them all, that the mayor could be depended upon as be opposed to the unpopular proposition before the council. Alderman Ames also assured the people that triumph would ultimately come to them, and pleaded with them to return to their homes. These statements inspired confidence and the crowd melted away. Later the ordinance passed, and to escape the anger of the citizens who yet lingered about the hall the aldermen stole from the chamber through the rear window and went to their homes in cabs or under police escort.

PRACTICALLY KILLS THE CASE.

Stanford Estate Beats the United States in a Great Suit.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 1.—Judge Ross, in the United States circuit court, has sustained the demurrer of Mrs. Leland Stanford in the suit commenced by the general government against the estate of the late Senator Stanford for the recovery of moneys on account of Central Pacific railroad debts. The court sustained the demurrer on the ground that the individual stockholders were not liable for the debts of the corporation, and while the government was given time in which to file an amended complaint it is understood that this decision practically kills the case.

The judge holds that the state can do nothing in the matter, because the law holding stockholders liable individually for the debt of a corporation was passed after the Pacific railway people made their contract with the government, and the government has no claim because that contract does not even hold the corporation, let alone its members, liable from reimbursement to the government for its bonds.

STANFORD UNIVERSITY, Cal., July 1.—There was great rejoicing at Stanford university when the news was received that Judge Ross had sustained the demurrer in the case of the government against the Stanford estate. An adverse decision in the case meant the ruin of the university.

KENTUCKY DEMOCRATS.

Full Ticket Nominated After a Convention Lasting Three Days.

LOUISVILLE, June 28.—After a session lasting three days, the most memorable ever held by the Kentucky Democracy, that party has nominated a full ticket and the gathering has adjourned sine die. The ticket complete is as follows: For governor, P. Watt Hardin; lieutenant governor, R. T. Tyler; treasurer, R. C. Ford; auditor, L. C. Norman; register of the land office, G. B. Swango; attorney general, W. J. Hendrick; secretary of state, Henry S. Hale; superintendent of public instruction, Ed Porter Thompson; commissioner of agriculture, I. B. Vall. Final adjournment was not reached until 7 p. m. yesterday.

Everything was harmonious except when the nomination for secretary of state was up. There were four candidates—H. S. Hall, J. W. Headley, Charles W. Metcalfe, and J. Stoddard Johnston—and there was no nomination on the first or second ballot. Just after the second ballot Virgil Taylor charged fraud on the chairman, and Berry retorted: "Sit down, or I will have you attended to." "D—n you, we will have justice," returned Taylor, and then he burst into a string of oaths which he directed at the chairman. He was only pulled off after he had created a very exciting scene.

FOURTH STRAIGHT FOR YALE.

Sons of Eli Defeat the Harvards Badly in the Boat Race.

NEW LONDON, Conn., June 29.—Yale won the fourth consecutive victory over Harvard in the university boat race here last evening, and won easily by nine lengths, the official time being 21:30. The conditions of water and wind could not have been more favorable. Harvard had a slight advantage at the start, but when a mile had been rowed Yale was a length and a half in the lead, Ell's crew rowing with a stronger stroke than the Harvard men, who splashed a little over the entire course.

The story of the race is told in the record of the official time, which is as follows: First mile, Yale 5:04, Harvard 5:20; second mile, Yale 10:21, Harvard 10:37; third mile, Yale 15:59, Harvard 16:21; fourth mile, Yale 21:30, Harvard 22:05. Two members of the Harvard crew were badly exhausted by the time the course had been rowed, but the Yale men appeared fit for a continuation of the work, and rowed a quarter of a mile without easing up their stroke.

SURPLUS INSTEAD OF DEFICIT.

Treasury Balance on the Right Side for the Current Month.

WASHINGTON, June 27.—For the first time in many months the treasury receipts for the current month will exceed the expenditures. The treasury balance sheets for the month show a surplus instead of a deficit, and as the expenditures are usually light towards the end of the month it is regarded as certain that the surplus will continue to grow from now until July 1.

The treasury is $46,623,211 behind in the matter of receipts and expenditures for the current fiscal year, and in the intervening days between now and July 1 it is unlikely that more than a million and a half of this deficiency will be made up, so that the year's balance sheets probably will show that the expenditures for the year were about $45,000,000 greater than the receipts.

Fell Head First into a Post Hole.

SIOUX CITY, Ia., June 28.—Mrs. Sarah Lewis has served notice on the city of injuries claim to have been received by her by falling down a telephone pole hole several weeks ago. The hole was dug in the tall grass by the Home Telephone company for a new pole. Mrs. Lewis in walking through the grass stumbled and fell down the hole. The sides were so narrow that she could not move her arms and for half an hour she was held fast, head downward, in the hole seven feet deep. When removed she was utterly prostrated and her health is said to have suffered permanently. The city will be asked to pay $5,000 damages.

Successor of the Whisky Trust.

SPRINGFIELD, Ills., July 1.—Application has been made to the secretary of state for a license to incorporate the American Distilleries company, successor to the whisky trust, and organized by the reorganization committee of the trust. The capital stock is $35,000,000, of which $7,000,000 is to be preferred stock and the balance common. The name of the company was objected to by the secretary of state, it being too similar to that of another distilling company, but he will grant the license as soon as a name which is unobjectionable can be agreed to.

Appeal to Friends of Home Rule.

NEW YORK, June 29.—The Irish National Federation of America, in response to an urgent appeal from the Irish National party, have issued an appeal to friends of home rule. After rehearsing the position of the home rule cause at present in parliament, the circular declares that the Irish party have kept faith with the Liberals and that the Liberal ministry should not resign without making an effort to pass the measures agreed upon. It also maintains that Ireland is today in a better position to force her claims for home rule than ever before.

New British Cabinet.

LONDON, June 26.—The new ministry as far as completed and officially announced is as follows: Marquis of Salisbur, premier and secretary of state for foreign affairs; Duke of Devonshire, president of the council; Balfour, first lord of the treasury; Chamberlain, secretary of state for the colonies; Sir Richard Hicks-Beach, chancellor of the exchequer; Goschen, first lord of the admiralty.

Complicated the Case Somewhat.

ONTONAGON, Mich., June 28.—Frank M. Wilbeck, of Chicago, president of the Wilbeck Lumber company, of Ewen, had David A. Nease and Joseph Totten, of Ewen, arrested for embezzlement. They have taken out a capias for Wilbeck for false imprisonment, laying their damages at $20,000.

Ex-Treasurer Commits Suicide.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 29.—Louis Blanc, ex-treasurer of the B'Nai B'Rith society, committed suicide by turning on the gas. Blanc was discovered to be short $13,000 in his accounts some months ago.

Headed by a Harlan Man.

KEOKUK, Ia., June 29.—The Lee county Republican convention chose a delegation to the state convention uninstructed as to governor, but headed by Congressman S. M. Clark, a Harlan man.

No Religious Garb for Teachers.

HARRISBURG, Pa., June 29.—Governor Hastings last night approved the religious garb bill, which prohibits teachers in public schools from wearing any distinguishing religious garb or insignia of religious orders.

Iowa Bankers Assign.

CLINTON, Ia., June 27.—The well-known banking house of G. Haywood & Son assigned to C. W. Chase. Liabilities are about $160,000. Assets, $270,000. It is thought that all claims will be liquidated dollar for dollar.

Among the speakers who are expected to be present are Rev. I. P. Austin, president of Wesleyan Methodist Conference, of West Tennessee; Gabriel S. Crowe, Adamsville; Rev. I. H. Dawson, pastor of Salem Baptist church, Jackson; John Joy, McNairy; Dr. C. Powers, McNairy; Rev. J. W. Robison, Purdy; Rev. W. S. Webb, pastor of First Baptist church, Memphis.

Ladies especially invited. Admission free.

Secret organizations are inspired by selfishness and are conspiracies against the rights of others.

The severe drouth of three and a half years was sent upon Israel in the time of Ahab because of the sin of Baal worship. Have we not good reason to believe that the severe drouth throughout the Northwest this summer is because of the prevalent modern Baal worship of the lodge? Has God or his law changed since the days of Elijah?

Dr. J. H. Barrows says that more damage is being done by the open Sunday saloon than can be repaired by all the churches and schools during the week.

The total wages paid to working people in the United States in 1890 was $2,283,216,529. It would take every dollar of it to pay the direct and indirect cost of the liquor traffic for the same year.

More that three millions of dollars pass daily into the coffers of the liquor traffic of this country. Much of the financial depression would be removed if this were directed into the channel of legitimate trade.

At the International Supreme Good Templar Convention in Boston recently the secretary reported a loss of almost 20,000 members in America, Canada and Australia during the past year. This indicates that in Christian lands secret temperance organizations are declining in popularity.

Rev. John A. Dowie is arousing public attention by his Gospel mission and remarkable cases of Divine healing. The latter has excited a persecution by the medical practitioners of the city. Rev. Dowie not only has the faith that does much to remove bodily ills, but a faith to testify against such social evils as the secret lodge; and we opine this has much to do with the persecutions to which he has been subjected.

Dr. Lyman Abbott's theory of creation by evolution may be defined as "a change from an indefinite, incoherent homogeniety to a definite coherent herterogeniety, through continuous differentations and integrations." Or to use plain language, evolution is a change from a nohowish, untalkaboutable all alikeness, to a somehowish and in general talkaboutable not all alikeness, by continuous somethingelsefiations and sticktogetherations.

The St. Louis Christian Evangelist of June 20th presents an illustration of how to give the Gospel trumpet an uncertain sound. An enquirer asks the question, "Can I in accordance with the Bible belong to a secret society?" The Evangelist, instead of pointing the enquirer to some plain Bible texts on the subject, only replies, "Settle that question for yourself. If you have any doubt about it we advise you to let secret societies alone."

President W. H. Davis, of Hartsville College, Ind., writes in reference to the secrets of the lodge: "The devil finds an easy home in the lodge. Turn him out, and there will be kicking enough. It is against his nature to go with sealed lips. We always expect him in the front pew in the church. We make a racket about it sometimes and succeed in disturbing his quiet. But how is it in the lodge? The devil can tell tales faster than any other; for 'he is a liar, and the father of it.' Discommode him in the lodge and where are your petty secrets? Scattered to the winds to be sure; for the devil will not keep secrets but for a purpose. So peace must be kept at all hazards with his satanic majesty in the lodge."

The Worshipful Master of Keystone Lodge No. 639 in this city is now Lorinze Kurzka, a saloonkeeper. This is the lodge of which Edmond Ronayne was once Master. One of its members told him recently that one marked difference from the past was that very few ministers joined it now. Some years ago Secretary Parvin of Iowa said in a Grand Lodge report that the lodges were filling up with a more undesirable class, because the moral character of the order had been affected by the charges of Anti-masons

John Calvin Faris, who graduated last month in the Indiana State University at Bloomington, has been elected to take the presidency of Eminence College, at Eminence, Henry county, Ky. He is an excellent working member of the Covenanter church at Bloomington, of which the editor was pastor, and is a true friend of the anti-secret movement, and rendered valuable assistance in arranging for the State convention at Bloomington last winter. He is one of the strong men of his class and was president of the University Lecture Association last year. We heartily congratulate him on his promotion to such a useful and important position.

Rev. T. M. Chalmers relates an interesting experience with the present Gov. Morrill, of Kansas. In 1892 Bro. Chalmers was preaching in Hiawatha, where is the home of the Governor. At a Fourth of July celebration in which Gov. Morrill presided, Bro. Chalmers at the close mounted the platform and handed each of the dignitaries an N. C. A. tract entitled "The Masonic oath itself a perjury." No sooner did the Governor see the character of the tract than he viciously tore it to pieces in the presence of the multitude. Bro. Chalmers said: "Are you a Mason, sir?" He answered: "Yes, sir; and I am proud of it!" No wonder such a devoted lodge member has turned traitor to the cause of prohibition.

The New York Observer says of Dr. Lyman Abbott's address before the students of the Northwestern University: "Without questioning the motives of the speaker, it must be said that he made some very unwise and harmful statements. There were nearly four hundred graduates, young men and women, whose religious views were, to say the least, unsettled, and whose minds were immature, obliged to hear from a university speaker such sentiments as these: 'I believe in the development of all life from one primordial germ. The process of the development of all life from one primordial germ can be traced. I believe that all vegetable life, all animal life, all men, all human institutions sprung from that early germ . . . As an evolutionist I not only do not believe that the Bible is an infallible book, but that an infallible book is an unthinkable proposition.'"

THE IMAGE OF THE BEAST.

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

Some years ago an excellent Christian minister, Rev. Richard Horton, wrote a book which had for its object to show that modern Freemasonry is "the image of the beast," described in Rev. 13: 14–18. The argument, though able and ingenious, failed to convince some of its readers, not so much on account of the conclusions at which he arrived, as because of some things assumed in the discussion which needed to be proved.

But without wishing to criticise an excellent book, I desire to present a few thoughts on this topic and ask the readers of the Cynosure to consider whether they are in harmony with the teachings of the Scriptures, and current history.

THREE BEASTS DESCRIBED.

Three different things are described by the sacred writer, all closely connected, but to each of which certain acts are attributed. They are "the beast," "the two-horned beast," and "the image of the beast." To which we may also add "the mark of the beast," and "the number of his name." There is, I think, a general concensus of opinion that "the beast" here spoken of is identical with the fourth beast of David (Dan. 7: 7); also with that of Rev. 13: 1–8 and Rev. 17: 3. Daniel says that it was dreadful and terrible, and strong exceedingly, and that it had "ten horns." John says he had "seven heads and ten horns," and that power was given him over all kindred and tongues and nations. There can be little doubt that this great beast represented the Roman Empire, both pagan and papal, and that the ten horns correspond with the ten toes of the image described in Daniel 2: 31–40, and that these are represented by the kingdom into which the great empire was subsequently divided.

There is a general agreement among Protestants that the scarlet woman who sits on the beast, and who is called "Mystery, Babylon the Great, the mother of harlots and the abominations of the earth" (Rev. 17: 3–5), which for a time rides on and directs the Roman government. Among her children may be included the state churches of Europe, which, like the mother, are in adultery with the world. So much seems tolerably clear. There is a very common opinion among Protestants that the papal church also represents the beast of the Revelations. From this I dissent. She is nowhere called a beast, but always spoken of in her proper character as an arrogant and vile woman, who is "clothed in purple and scarlet," the most costly array, and is "decked with gold and precious stones and pearls." This is exactly the description of the papal church as she has appeared in history, but is not at all the description of a beast. As further proof that this scarlet woman is not and cannot be identical with "the beast," is the fact that while for a time she is the directing power, both of the beast and of the ten horns, using that power for her unholy purposes, so that she becomes "drunken with the blood of saints and the blood of the martyrs of Jesus.

But, subsequently, "the ten horns and the beast, these shall hate the harlot, and make her desolate and naked, and shall eat her flesh and shall burn her utterly with fire." Rev. 17, 16. Rev. Ver.

This surely is

but perhaps its accomplishment lies in the near future. At all events it seems absurd to identify the papal church with either the beast or the anti-Christ. She has some characteristics common to both, but is by no means identical with either. The anti-Christ, or "the Lawless One," (See 2 Thess. 2: 8,) will doubtless be the instrument of her destruction. Nihilism and socialism in Europe make war on all religion. Having determined what the beast is not, let us inquire more particularly what he is. The four beasts of Daniel (Dan. 7: 7), as we have seen, represented the four great empires that should successively rule over the earth. These all were despotic powers. They knew nothing of the rights of man and nothing of civil and religious liberty. When Darius issued his decree that "whosoever shall ask a petition of any god or man for thirty days save of the king, shall be cast into the den of lions" (Dan. 6: 7), it was quite in keeping with the entire system of government.

The supreme authority, both civil and religious, was vested in the king. This was especially true of the Roman Empire, in which the emperor, in both pagan and papal Rome, was Pontifix Maximus, and demanded absolute subjection in religious as well as in civil affairs. This was also true for a long period of the governments that grew out of the ruins of the Roman Empire, and is still largely true of the governments of Russia and Turkey. The beast, then, represents despotic power, wherever it is found. Despotism is always inspired by Satan. It is said: "The dragon gave him his power and his throne and great authority." Rev. 13: 2.

It is always blasphemous. The examples of Nebuchadnezzar, who arrogantly said: "Is not this great Babylon that I have built for myself;" and of Belshazzar, who brought the sacred vessels of the temple to be used in his drunkenness and "praised the gods of gold and of silver and brass, and of wood and of stone," are among the many in all current history. It is always

A PERSECUTING POWER.

"It was given to him to make war with the saints and to overcome them." Rev. 13: 7. This has been true of despotic rulers in all ages. It is true to-day, as seen in the persecution of the Stundists and Jews in Russia and of the Armenians in Turkey. And finally it is said of the beast that "all that dwell on the earth shall worship him, everyone whose names are not written in the book of the life of the Lamb that hath been slain from the foundation of the world." Rev. 8: 1.

But do all men worship powers save those only who worship God? I answer, yes; for all men are worshipers, and the worship which is not paid to God is paid to Satan, who is the god of this world. Surely all unregenerate men love power. To them it is the supreme good. The power of wealth, of place, of learning, of custom, and of praise. These constitute the world, which we are exhorted not to love, and are told that "if any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him" 1 John 2: 15. This love of the world and the things of the world must be essentially the same as the worship of the beast, since it is in all cases a subordination of divine authority to the gratification of self. But what, then, is

THE TWO HORNED BEAST?

I answer that the horn is a symbol of power. In despotic governments this power is represented by a single horn, or by kingly authority. In constitutional monarchies there is another source of power—that of the people. This constitutes a second horn and gives to the government its two-fold character. In his description of the divisions of the great Roman Empire and of nations as they shall be in the last days, Daniel says: "The fourth kingdom shall be strong as iron; for as much as iron breaketh in pieces and subdueth all things, and as iron that breaketh, all these shall it break in pieces and bruise. And whereas thou sawest the feet and toes were part of potter's clay and part of iron, the kingdom shall be partly divided, but there shall be in it the strength of the iron; forasmuch as thou sawest the iron mixed with miry clay. And as the toes of the feet were part of iron and part of clay, so the kingdom shall be partly strong and partly broken. And whereas thou sawest iron mixed with miry clay, they shall mingle themselves with the seed of men, but they shall not cleave one to another, even as iron is not mixed with clay." Dan. 2: 40–43. This description exactly corresponds with the republican monarchies of modern Europe, in which the two horns of autocratic and democratic power are quite equally balanced.

These mixed governments of iron and clay are the outgrowth of our later civilization modified by increased general intelligence and the benign influences of Christianity. It is said that "one of the heads of the and his deadly wound was healed." Rev. 13: 3. May not this represent the repeated uprisings of the oppressed people against despotic powers and subsequent conciliation by being accorded some voice in the government? The history of modern Europe is full of such examples. Take England as an example. The beginning of the seventeenth century saw her government in its administrations essentially despotic. Kingly power received a deadly wound when Charles I. was put to death and the commonwealth was established. That deadly wound was healed when Charles II. and James ruled with a rod of iron. It was not until the reign of William III. that the two horns, the power of the king and the power of the people, became fairly adjusted.

THREE LINKS OF THE "GREAT CHAIN."

You may sometime be asked to join the Odd-fellows. Before doing so you must examine the matter thoroughly, for the Bible says: Prove all things: hold fast that which is good. 1 Thess 5: 21.

I shall not go according to general hearsay; I shall not go according to the opposition of some churches; I shall not go according to the testimony of some member who has withdrawn or who has been expelled. But I shall go according to the NEW ODD-FELLOWS' MANUAL, conformed to the new ritual, and to the latest legislation, written by Rev. A. B. Grosh, published at New York by Clark and Maynard, 734 Broadway, 1882. [For sale by the National Christian Association. See advertisement in this paper]

This book has been dedicated "to all inquirers who desire to know what Odd-fellowship really is." It has been endorsed by the Grand Lodge of the United States in 1852, 1867, 1868, 1871, 1879, and by many individual members and officers of the order as "complete and faithful," "the best book on Odd-fellowship ever published," "standard work of the order," etc.

Rev. A. B. Grosh, the author, is a Universalist minister. The book from which I quote was revised at Washington, D. C., 1881. The author was then in his seventy-ninth year, and thirty-nine years an Odd-fellow.

I shall show to you, and you shall judge, Odd-fellowship as it presents itself to the world in the best possible light.

On page 7 the author says: "The written, as well as the unwritten, secret work of the order I have sacredly kept unrevealed."

On that we shall of course not pass judgment.

Let it be clearly understood that I am not opposing Odd-fellows, but Odd-fellowship; not the persons, but the principles; not the character of the men, but the character of the system.

WHY UNFAVORABLE?

If I did not oppose the order I would have less labor in instructing people who wish to become members; if I did not oppose the order I could easily greatly increase the number of my members; if I did not oppose the order I would become popular instead of being denounced as narrow-minded; if I did not oppose the order I could draw a larger salary and have good times. All these are no small temptations. Why, then, do I not favor the order? Why do I not at least hold my tongue and leave the matter to the conscience of the person concerned? BECAUSE THE HOLY GHOST HATH MADE ME AN OVERSEER OVER THE FLOCK, TO FEED THE CHURCH OF GOD, WHICH HE HATH PURCHASED WITH HIS OWN BLOOD (Acts 20: 28); and the Holy Ghost says (Ezek. 33: 7, 8): O Son of man, I have set thee a watchman unto the house of Israel; therefore thou shalt hear the word at my mouth, and warn them from me. If thou dost not speak to warn the wicked from his way, that wicked man shall die in his iniquity; but his blood will I require at thine hand.

I shall compare the clear statements of Odd-fellowship with clear statements of the Holy Bible, which I believe to be God's Word, the touchstone by which a Christian must prove everything.

MERE INSURANCE ASSOCIATION BETTER.

"I want to provide for myself in sickness and for my family after my death." That is the usual reason given by people for joining the Odd-fellows.

This is very foolish.

"This is hardly a tithe of our aims and objects," page 88. "Such will find it a burden to perform an equal share of our duties and labors, and he may possibly be insured against sickness as certainly and more cheaply in a mere insurance association," page 94.

The receipts, without counting interest on invested capital, of the Grand Lodge of the United States for 1873 were $4,434,001, and the amount expended for relief was $1,490,274.

If out of $4,000,000, $3,000,000 are spent on regalia, salaries, entertainments, travels, buildings, etc., and only $1,000,000 for relief: visiting sick, helping distressed, burying dead, educating the orphan, Odd-fellowship is a failure in regard to its relief feature.

The duties of Odd-fellowship are: 1. To visit the sick. 2. To relieve the distressed. 3. To bury the dead. 4. To educate the orphan. To these have been added two others, viz., to aid the widow, and to exercise over each other fraternal watch, care and moral discipline. Simple as these are, they cover the whole ground, p. 93.

All these things are commanded by God to every Christian, and the best place in which to do these things is the church founded by God; hence, it is useless, to say the least, to join, or to remain in, a lodge founded by men.

BUSINESS, NOT CHARITY.

It claims to be a charitable institution, p. 366.

This claim is false. The rich pay no more than the poor, and the poor get as much as the rich. The members should feel that they receive their just dues, not alms, p 74.

They should foster the "desire to claim these aids as some kind of right—that such relief was not alms—that the recipient should not be deemed a pauper. God bless this honest, proper pride!" p. 359.

"They must not only be told that all are equal, but they must be made to know, to realize it in every possible way," p. 75.

To give what is right, what has been paid for, is simple honorable business, not charity. No more need be said on this head.

ODD-FELLOWSHIP A RELIGIOUS INSTITUTION.

"Religious instruction" is given, p. 39.

"Odd-fellowship was founded on great religious principles," p. 348.

"We have a religious test," p. 364.

"We use forms of worship," p. 364.

"We frequently read valuable lessons from that sacred volume"—(the Bible), p. 364.

"We draw from it our moral code and the peculiar instruction which unfolds our obligations to God and our brother man," p. 364.

"So far we are a religious body, and have a religious faith for the basis of our fellowship and to unite us in religious duty," p. 364.

"No lodge or encampment can be legally opened without the presence of a Bible," p. 364.

They have prayers, pp. 368–371.

They have altars, chaplains, high priests, rituals, order of worship, funeral ceremonies.

All this is more than enough to prove that Odd-fellowship is a religious institution. It was founded by man. The church is a religious institution founded by God. A Christian ought to join the church, and come out from the Odd-fellow lodge, because he has all the work he can do in the church of God.

Odd-fellowship is a religion, but it is a false religion, for it is not the Christian religion.

"Odd-fellowship being of all denominations, and some of them of no denomination, it would be absurd to suppose that they, or any of them, would require an initiate to give or receive the fellowship of the order as Presbyterian, Baptist, Lutheran, or any other church fellowship, or even as distinctively Christian fellowship," p. 372.

Just consider these last words: It would be absurd to receive the fellowship of the order as distinctively Christian fellowship. Is that plain enough? The English language cannot be much plainer.

Not being the Christian religion, as a matter of course Odd-fellowship does not acknowledge the one true and living God, Father, Son and Holy Ghost.

"It requires of every candidate for initiation an expression of his faith and trust in a Supreme Intelligence as the Creator and Preserver of the Universe," p. 362.

This "principle" is the "corner-stone of the entire institution," p. 363

This is the only religious test Odd-fellowship has. According to it, Jews, Mohammedans, heathen and infidels can become Odd-fellows, for they believe in "a Supreme Being." By joining the Odd-fellows a Christian becomes a "brother" of Jews, Mohammedans, heathen and infidels, and denies the true God, Father, Son and Holy Ghost.

"Judaism, Christianity, Mohammedanism recognize the one only living and true God," p. 297.

This is false.

Judaism and Mohammedanism both deny Christ, and Christ says:—All men should honor the Son, even as they honor the Father. He that honoreth not the Son honoreth not the Father which hath sent him. John 5: 23.

"Followers of different teachers, ye are worshipers of one God, who is Father of all, and therefore ye are brethren! As such, charity, and speaking the truth in love, should prevail among us; unity in good works, wherein all agree; toleration in opinions, wherein we differ," pp. 298, 299.

This is false. The followers of Christ are the only ones worshiping the true God; the followers of Mohammed and the modern Jews worship a false god, an idol, for they have not Jesus Christ. Jesus said to the unbelieving Jews, John 8: 44, "Ye are of your father the devil." God is not the father of all.

We are not to tolerate opinions wherein we differ in these religious matters; we are to expose and oppose them by the word of truth.

Stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free. Gal. 5: 1.

Earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints. Jude 3.

Odd-fellowship excludes Christ.

"We are careful to impress on every candidate's mind that we studiously exclude from our meetings all that pertains to the sects, parties, etc., and that we are to know each other only as men—as brothers of the great human family," p. 372.

All sectarian distinctions and topics are excluded from the meetings of the Odd-fellows, p. 358.

"Feeling also how sectarian and party strifes estrange men from each other....They exclude all such topics and distinction from their meetings," p. 27.

But Christ says:—He that is not with me is against me. Luke 11: 23.

Again he says:—Whosoever shall deny me before men, him will I also deny before my Father which is in heaven. Matt. 10: 33.

Odd-fellowship puts all religions, true and false, upon the same level, and treats Christianity as a "sect," just as modern Judaism, Mohammedanism, heathenism and infidelity are "sects."

"No sect do we know among us," p 109.

"We are antagonistic to no religion, p. 364.

"We admit men of all religions into the order," p 364.

"We hold our religious creed only as a common foundation—principle, on which everyone, for himself, may build, with mind and heart, whatever else he deems necessary to believe and profess," p. 365.

The prayers of Odd-fellowship are Christless.

"The Holy Trinity," "Triune God," any recognition of Christ as the Saviour of the world, or as the second person of the Godhead, are purposely omitted in order that Christian, Jew or Mohammedan can unite in these prayers; and this is defended (pp. 368–371) and these expressions are contemptuously called "cant phrase," "pet idea," "theological shibboleth," "sectarian war slogan," p. 368. We fully believe the author, when he says (p. 369) "Our fraternity, as a body or class, makes no great pretension to religion."

In the prayers adopted by the Grand Lodge of the United States the name of Christ is excluded. "It is also ordered that on all occasions of the order the same spirit, as observed in the foregoing, shall be strictly followed by the officiating clergyman or chaplain, to exclude prayers offensive to members of the order in many of our lodges," p. 184.

ODD-FELLOWSHIP TEACHES SALVATION BY WORKS.

"To visit the sick, relieve the distressed, bury the dead, and educate the orphan, is commanded by our laws, and these deeds are among our imperative duties. But, although they are the frequent and almost daily ministrations of Odd-fellowship, they constitute but a tithe of the intrinsic merits of our order, and are but the rounds of that ladder by which it would have its votaries rise to get higher planes of virtue and excellence. Its great aims are, to improve and elevate the character of man—to imbue him with broader and higher conceptions of his capabilities for good—to enlighten his mind—to enlarge the sphere of his affection—in brief, to lead man to the cultivation of his true fraternal relations, designed by the Great Author of his being," p. 379.

By and through these good works "we aim to improve and exalt the character of our members," p. 93.

"We increase his means and measures for blessing others, and thus happifying himself," p. 95.

"We open for him a field beyond the limits of his party or his church," p. 94.

Odd-fellowship is "an institution for the proper development of man's powers and affections, and the relief and amelioration of human want and suffering—an effort to open for man, wherever he may be, a school for moral and social culture," etc., p. 96.

The good works of Odd-fellowship "are designed to make him a better man—better in every relation he bears to church," etc., p. 367.

An Altar dedicated to such offices must be served with clean hands and surrounded with pure hearts, p 109.

"By associating together for benevolent purposes, we hope to improve and elevate the characters of our brethren, to enlighten their minds, to teach them their capabilities for usefulness, to expand their affections," p. 110.

"WHAT REGENERATION BY THE WORD OF TRUTH IS IN RELIGION, INITIATION IS IN ODD FELLOWSHIP," p. 100.

It will arouse the soul to a just sense of its responsibility to God, and its duty to man. It will fill his heart with a salutary horror of that monster SIN, whose power has arrayed man against his fellowman, and washed the earth with tears and deluged it in blood, p. 105.

"Friendship, Love and Truth are not only a safeguard, but a remedy, for all the social and moral evils that afflict our race, p. 107.

"The world may move in a vain show, each man striving to disguise himself from others, often even from himself. But in our lodge-room we expect brethren to lay aside the deceitful mask, and look each other lovingly in the eyes, knowing and known of each other as they are," p. 107.

"May your initiation and consequent practice aid in releasing you from all blindness of moral vision, set you free from the fetters of ignorance and error, and bring you from a death in selfishness into a life of active benevolence and virtue," p. 108.

Here are a few specimens from funeral odes to be sung at the funeral of a brother—mind you, Christian, Jew, Mohammedan or infidel!

"Though in the Grand Lodge above,
We remember thee in love," p. 408.

"And now he quits his weary train
And marches o'er the heavenly heights.
But we shall walk with him again,
And share his rest and his delights," p. 408.

"Till life shall end—then hear the voice,
"Depart in peace from earth to heaven," p. 409.

THE LODGE PLACED ABOVE THE CHURCH OF CHRIST.

Christ's birth, suffering, death, resurrection, ascension, intercession is ignored and excluded as without value—men can be saved without all this, by their good works.

But the Bible says, we conclude that a man is justified by faith, without the deeds of the law. Rom. 3: 28.

Our righteousness are as filthy rags. Isaiah 64: 6.

We are by nature the children of wrath. Ephesians 2: 3.

Except a man be born again of water and the Spirit he cannot enter into the kingdom of God. John 3: 5.

The Bible says:—He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life. 1 John 5: 12.

Whosoever denieth the Son, the same hath not the Father. 1 John 2: 23.

Who is a liar but he that denieth that Jesus is the Christ? He is Antichrist that denieth the Father and the Son. 1 John 2: 22.

Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers: for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness? and what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? and what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? for ye are the temple of the living God; as God hath said, I will dwell in them, and walk in them; and I will be their God, and they shall be my people. Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty. Ephesians 6: 14–18.—Lutheran Witness.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

OLD CORONATION.

If there is one tune in all our church hymnals that more than any other seems worthy to echo, not only through but beyond these "corridors of time," and fill the spaces of eternity with its triumph of adoring praise, that tune is "Coronation." Young, old, middle-aged, we all love it. It floats through the background of our childish memories like an echo from the songs of seraphs, and as we go farther and farther away from the sacred walls of the sanctuary where we worshiped first, which seemed to echo to its strains oftener than any other, and from the dear lips which sung them with such fervor and sweetness, we only grow to love it better;—to feel more and more that it stands alone, and can neither have companion nor rival, that one majestic pæan of the church universal. And were ever tune and words so happily wedded! A curious proof of their wonderful fitness, the one to the other, lies in the fact that the Rev. Samuel Longfellow, brother of the more famous poet of that name, undertook once to adapt a Unitarian hymn to the tune, thinking very justly that there was manifest incongruity in a congregation of Unitarians who believe that Jesus was but a human being perfected, singing "Crown him Lord of all!" But he met with such very indifferent success that of this revised version nothing remains but tradition.

Even they of the liberal faith found that the grand words and the grand tune had been joined by God himself, and it was not in man to put them asunder. So sectarianism had to stand aside; and just as we of the Puritan faith have learned to sing the hymns of Catholic and Universalist, Moravian and Episcopalian, so the Unitarians have learned to sing "Coronation," conveniently oblivious of the chasm between such words and their professed creed. It is also by the Unitarians of Shirley, Mass.—his native town—that a tablet to the memory of the composer, Oliver Holden, is to be placed in the church with a fitting inscription. It was in Charlestown however that he composed his famous tune, and the organ on which he composed it is said to be still in a good state of preservation. He was born in Shirley in 1765, but died in Charlestown, 1874. He was a Baptist; but thank God that no denomination can claim this tune which is sung throughout the Christian world, on the banks of the Ganges, in the wilds of Africa, and the palm-crowned isles of the South Sea.

LIVING ARGUMENT FOR TEMPERANCE.

There is nothing like a living argument for temperance who is 91 years old, and still retains his health and faculties, as does the venerable Neal Dow of Portland, Me., whose presence at the recent Good Templars' convention in this city was one of its chief attractions. The International Lodge decided, among other points, that not only the children of Good Templars, but of all parents who are willing they should take the pledge, are eligible to membership in the juvenile branch of the order; also that a member of the Jewish faith can consistently become a Good Templar. The lodge is fast breaking down the bars to indiscriminate membership; even the Odd-fellows having opened their orders of Rebekah to all women who are free, white, and twenty.

COLOR LINE IN NEW ENGLAND.

The word "white" reminds me that there are parts of New England where the color line exists, and a cruel, inhuman and unreasoning prejudice decrees that a colored young woman, no matter how well fitted, shall not teach in the public schools. Her name is Ida M. Morgan, a graduate of the State Normal School and of the Emerson College in Boston. She came highly recommended to the school committee of East Providence, R. I., but they answered the petitions made in her behalf, by the statement, which it is to be hoped the Providence people will show to be false, that the prevailing sentiment of society was against one whom they conceded was in every way fitted—save for her color—to be a teacher. This committee would do well to emigrate to South Carolina among the Tillmanites, and leave their places to be filled by men of a larger and broader make up.

WOMEN PREACHERS IN BOSTON.

The Universalists Young People's Convention will open in Boston, July 10, and in the long list of women preachers who will speak is the name of the Rev. Augusta J. Chapin, the only woman in the world—so it is said—who has the distinction of writing D. D. after her name. In the Hartford Theological Seminary the women students appear to be a decided success, as one took the prize, four were speakers at the graduation exercises, and another delivered the address at the alumni dinner.

THE PULPIT AS THE CENSOR OF PURLIC MORALS.

Rev. I. J. Lansing gave one of his strong sermons last Sabbath evening at the Park Street church on "Public Morals, Public Officials, and Public Censors." Dr. Lansing is not dead in spite of the vituperation and abuse poured out upon him, but very much alive, and the officials whom he scores must see a new pertinency in the title "Brimstone Corner," given years ago by the irreverent to the church where he preaches. His position, that there can be but one standard for national as well as private morality, and that the Ten Commandments and that the public official is amenable to exactly the same law which governs the private individual, ought not to be open questions; but the treatment given him even by the religious press at the time of the Cleveland episode would seem to show that quite the contrary opinion prevails; and public officials in general, and the President in particular, can be a law unto themselves without any regard to that given from Sinai. His most striking point was this: there should be a censor of public morals, and that censor should be the pulpit. Certainly Dr. Parkhurst has shown that there is no censorship of which sinners in high places stand in such wholesome dread.

WHO IS RESPONSIBLE?

The case of Anson Gilbert, the child murderer, which has been occupying public attention, is another argument for prohibition. As the examining physician said, when alluding to his family history, "It is well known that the children of drunken parents do not start life on a sound basis." Is not every man, be he minister or layman, who casts his ballot for license, actually responsible for the defective brain, the weak will, the distorted moral bias which makes such children grow up criminals? and how shall the stain of blood be ever washed out from the hand that knowingly for the sake of party or individual interests votes to perpetuate a traffic which stamps the mark of Cain on even the unborn babe?

A "DRY" FOURTH OF JULY.

Boston is to have something new in its history—a "dry" Fourth of July. Taking all the holidays, of which there are seven—there would have been eight if the liquor men had not fought making the seventeenth of June a legal holiday because that would have meant closed saloons—election days and Sabbaths, and we have between sixty and seventy days on which the sale of liquor is practically prohibited. Why is it harder to prohibit it on the remaining days?

ELECTRIC RAILROADING.

In the late experiments made at Nantasket in electric railroading it is said that a speed was attained of 80 miles an hour. The railroad companies with their invested millions probably wish that "the electric era" could have been staved off for another fifty years. The prophecy of Joel seems about to be fulfilled when the chariots "shall seem like torches" and "run like the lightnings." But as we chain this mightiest and most godlike of all material forces and make it do our bidding, let us remember these thoughtful words penned when this nineteenth century of invention and progress was approaching its meridian.

"If we wrapt the globe in rising with one hot, electric breath,
It is power within our tether, no new spirit power comprising,
And in life we were not bolder men, nor braver men in death."

ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Green Clay Smith.—A political sermon.—Hymns that are sung.—New University president.

Christianity lost an energetic and tireless worker by the death of Gen. Green Clay Smith, whose remains were interred Monday in the beautiful and historic cemetery at Arlington, just across the Potomac river from Washington. Although for some years past pastor of Metropolitan Baptist church, General Smith never was allowed to drop his military title. As long ago as the 16th of June Gen. Smith recognized that his illness—a carbuncle attended by blood poisoning—would be fatal. On that day he wrote out the directions for his funeral, and when one of his deacons, who was his personal friend and almost constant attendant during his sickness, came to see him he said: "It doesn't look as if I were going to get well, and I want a funeral service in the church. I want it conducted by the deacons of the church." He then gave the deacon the memorandum, which prescribed that the services should be opened by reading "Asleep in Jesus." His wishes were carried out. I do not believe that there has been a large public meeting held in Washington since Gen. Smith became a resident of the city, to discuss or provide for any moral reform or for the betterment of mankind in any way, that he did not attend and take an active part in, and he did a prodigious amount of similar work in his church and in the soldiers' organizations with which he was connected. He was always ready and willing not only to help raise an erring brother or sister to their feet, but to help hold them there. There was nothing of the Pharisee about him. He recognized man's proneness to fall and was always ready to forgive and to pray for forgiveness and encouragement. May he hear the welcome words: "Well done, thou good and faithful servant."

Rev. Dr. B. C. Henry, who has been a missionary of the Presbyterian board for twenty-two years in Japan, preached at the Church of the Covenant last Sabbath evening, from St. Matthew 27: 22. In the course of the sermon he said: "Never did a more momentous question fall from the lips of a man than that asked by Pilate of the Jews—'What shall I do with him called Jesus?' It must be answered by every one, both great and small, high and low. Pilate was, in a sense, to be pitied. But he will go down to posterity as a beacon-light, warning men from the shoals of cowardice and vacillation. He stands as the prototype of the scheming politician. This great question of Pilate's has come to men in every age and must be replied to. It is a question that is above and takes precedence of all diplomatic or governmental questions. Our whole future for ever and ever depends on the answer. There are people who deny the divinity of Christ. That he actually lived they cannot gainsay; but of his powers and mission they would despoil him. Can we read the account of the New Testament and call Christ an impostor? We must and cannot do otherwise than accept the proof of his divinity, and through faith in him find salvation at last."

Rev. Dr. J. H. McCarthy began a series of sermons on "The Hymns we Sing," at the Metropolitan M. E. church this week, and if the first one be a fair specimen it is going to be a very interesting course. He truly said: "People never forget what they sing. A child will learn the multiplication table quicker in a song. Geography has been taught in the same way." And again: "If you want to be kept in the memory of mankind, write a good hymn. Bishop Ken was a great preacher, an extensive writer, a man of wide education; but he is remembered mostly by a single composition of thirty-two words, the Doxology, 'Praise God from whom all blessings flow.' His books will all be forgotten, but this little verse of thirty-two words will live as long as the world lasts. At the great Evangelical Alliance held in Berlin a few years ago there was a memorable scene. Representatives prime mover in this, I found to be in full sympathy with us. The following notice appeared in the Herald:

"Light on Secret Societies," by the Rev. W. B. Stoddard, of Washington, D. C., at Bethel church, corner of Noble and Lafayette streets, on Monday evening, July 1st, at 7:45. Rev. Mr. Stoddard represents the National Christian Association that gives light on secret societies. He is possessed of great ability and gives a most interesting and profitable discourse, as he turns on the light in comparing the Masonic rites and the Christian religion. Secret societies and all others invited. Seats free.

It was evident that the writer of the above was not well acquainted with your humble servant. I am glad that it does not require a man of "great ability" to show the iniquity of the lodge. A wayfaring man though a fool ought to know better than to open his mouth and shut his eyes to receive what some wag may wish to give. The way is opening grandly for work in Norristown. The following subscribed for the Cynosure: Dr. W. W. Dill, M. J. Harley, Rebecca D. Johnson, J. M. Rittenhouse, Miss L. H. Harley, A. H. Gehman, Dr. M. S. Borneman. Others will follow. I am assured that the way may be open for further meetings when I can give it attention in the fall. This would be a good centre for a convention.

I find our Beacon Light Mission here is being prospered. Nearly every day enquirers are shown the truth regarding the lodge system. Books are sold and tracts given. Sister Powers, who is in charge, desires to thank the friends who have sent her back numbers of the Cynosure for distribution. She could use many more to advantage. Those who are not keeping a file of the Cynosure would do well to re-mail back numbers to Beacon Mission, No. 355 Pennsylvania Ave., Washington, D. C. They will be used to good advantage in missionary work. We had a good prayer meeting at the Mission last night.

As I sat for a little on the Capitol steps last evening listening to the Marine Band as they played "America" and similar patriotic tunes, and looked out over the throng who were applauding, I wondered how many of that company would have been willing to have given what our liberty cost. Judging by their willingness to sacrifice for unpopular truth to-day, I should say very few. Many are willing to praise the past patriots; few are willing to be patriots when it means unpopularity.

A company of colored chaps have just marched by with a brass band and some green strips around their necks. Probably some secret society imagining they are wise while parading their lack of sense. Judging by the amount of racket, one might conclude that nearly everybody was patrotic. If shooting money into the air makes patriotism then they are. Perhaps the butcher and baker may be the worse for the money their patrons pay to the fire-cracker maker, I shall endeavor to go to Boston next week to aid in supplying the Endeavorers there with anti-secrecy literature.

BROTHER FENTON IN IOWA.

CLEAR LAKE, Ia., June 29, 1895.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The Luther League, a so-attendance was large, and no one seemed in hurry to leave. A visit to the home of Re Jesse Zeigler assured me of his sympathy. Th way will be open for a meeting in his churc

(German Bap.) when I can again come that way

In my work at Schwenksville I made the ac quaintance of new friends who will hereafter rea the Cynosure. I filled my appointment, speak ing on the anti-Christian character of the lodg Sabbath morning. The rain that God sent at th time of meeting doubtless diminished the attend ance. Notwithstanding a goodly number gathere and listened attentively. A collection was kindl given in support of our work. This congrega tion is favored in having a pastor of ability an consecration who leads right in reform.

There was a good attendance, all things con sidered, at the German Baptist church, Graters
Ford, where I preached the Word Sabbath even ing. The members there are a unit in opposition to the lodge. I stopped with Bro. J. Conner, the pastor. His home is always open to the re former. En-route for Norristown I changed cars at Oaks. Bro. Myers was away, but his horse and carriage were not. I used them for a half day's canvass in the country. I have often wished our work could get a foothold in Norris town. Until this trip I have not found an open door. The Mennonite Brethren have recently erected a house of worship. Dr. W. W. Dill, th home from a Masonic funeral he said: "Wife, I don't to want to be buried Masonically when I die; it was awfully shocking to see those wicked men repeating the Lord's Prayer at the grave."

If the prophets had treated the lodge worship as the pastors of to-day that refuse to warn the people against the same thing do, we should have had no Bible. These pastors are even afraid to declare the identity of Freemasonry with that condemned by the prophets, lest they should lose their reputation amongst liars.

CHEERING NEWS FROM TEXAS.

BRO. PROCTOR HOLDS IMPORTANT DISCUSSIONS.

STOUT, Texas, June 25, 1895.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I am still in the battle against secrecy and sin. It often waxes hot, but the Commander is leading me.

> "His voice to bid me forward go,
> Though fierce and mighty be the foe."

Dr. Leach, with several of his Masonic brethren, met me at Persimmons Grove the fourth Sabbath of last month, and asked for a division of time. We agreed upon one hour and fifteen minutes each. I spoke first and reserved no time for rejoinder. I took for a text Deut. 22, 29: "Secret things belong to the Lord our God; but those things which are revealed belong unto us and our children forever." Luke 12: 2, 3: "For there is nothing covered that shall not be revealed; neither hid, that shall not be known." "Therefore whatsoever ye have spoken in darkness shall be heard in the light, and that which ye have spoken in the ear in closets shall be proclaimed upon the housetops."

With the N. C. A. chart and Edmond Ronayne's Hand-book, I showed that Freemasonry was fully revealed. I placed Bro. J. P. Stoddard's picture in the lower right hand corner of the chart, and gave a short sketch of the N. C. A. work at the World's Fair. I showed their false claims to antiquity and its false system of religion having no Christ, and that it was un-American. Then I showed the deception they practice on the women; but for want of time I did not speak of my experience with the institution.

When Dr. Leach arose, he said he was very much disappointed, because he came to hear Freemasonry exposed, but this had not been done. He denied Morgan's and Ronayne's expositions, and said I knew nothing about Masonry; that I had my lesson well, but my authorities were Morgan and Ronayne. He denied that any one had ever been solicited to join the lodge; and if any one in that house had ever been solicited to join he asked them to rise to their feet. There were four in the audience stood up. He tried to evade it by saying that the men who solicited them were not in good standing in the lodge. He denounced the N. C. A. as being a hydra-headed monster, pouring out its venom on one of the oldest and most honorable institutions in the country. He warned the people against our literature and against me, the agent. We were a set of men too lazy to work and had taken this plan to beat the people out of their money. His soothing syrup gave out before he removed the sting which the truth had lodged in the consciences of some of his Masonic brethren. They were heard to remark: "I wish I had not been here." "I don't see why they allowed this discussion," etc. I had quite a number of N. C. A. tracts to distribute. They went like free cakes on a hungry election day.

The Worshipful Master of East Point Lodge was boasting that he could take my books and whip me like a child, etc. I called his attention to the statement and told him I would turn them over to him for a short time, and let him per-

CORRESPONDENCE.

ALL-ROUND REFORMERS.

CLAY CENTER, Kansas.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—It seems to me that we all-round reformers are a little too much divided up in the way of organization. We have the National Christian Association, the National Reform Association, the Sabbath Observance, etc., many of them worthy of our patronage and help.

Then when we come to politics we are again subdivided; all this places us at a very great disadvantage.

Now it is a fact that very many of our best reformers are in sympathy with all of the leading reform movements. Then why would it not be a good plan to organize an association that would include all of them, or at least most of them. This, it seems to me, would make it less laborious and give us more strength. Of course to organize a new association would incur considerable self-sacrifice and some expense on the part of somebody. Especially would this be true in case a convention is called as a starter. For this reason would it not be better to see what can be accomplished by means of correspondence first; and in pursuance of such a plan I would propose this idea: Let a model constitution be published, say in the Cynosure, and this could be furnished in small blank books or folders to workers at a nominal expense. Let workers solicit names with postoffice address and contributions from parties friendly to such a movement. The lists of names might be taken in duplicate, one to be kept by the party securing the list, the other, together with the signature, to be returned to the Cynosure office; and after a number of names have been secured a meeting could be called and officers elected, and so the work would be begun.

Now, as I have thought that this would be a feasible plan, I beg leave to submit the following as a model constitution:

CONSTITUTION OF THE CHRISTIAN POLITICAL REFORM ASSOCIATION.

WHEREAS, The ignoring of God, of Christ and of the Bible in our national polity—the desecration of the Christian Sabbath, the tampering with our free-school system by designing sectarians, the domination of the rum power, the secret lodge, the prevalence of gambling and lotteries, the many abuses of the elective franchise, and the various systems of special or indirect taxation, are dangerous and growing evils in our age and nation; it becomes the duty of all Christian citizens to unite for the overthrow of these and kindred evils, and for the upbuilding of a better standard of fundamental principles in our land; therefore we do adopt the following constitution:

ARTICLE 1. This association shall be known as the Christian Political Reform Association.

ART. 2. The object of this Association shall be to bring about the acknowledgment of Almighty God as the creator and preserver of all things, and his Son Jesus Christ as the only rightful ruler of nations, and the Bible as embracing the only infallible laws with which all human enactments, both civil and ecclesiastical, should conform in our national constitution, and to enact laws to promote a better observance of the civil Sabbath, to prevent our free-school system from being used for sectarian purposes, for the overthrow of the rum power, the secret lodge system, gambling and lotteries, and for the establishing of equal suffrage, under proper restrictions, also equal taxation, to enlighten the public mind respecting those and kindred reforms, and to assist by voice and vote the nomination of candidates for office, and the election to office of men who are in full sympathy with these principles and who are pledged to carry them into effect.

ART. 3. Sec. 1. The officers of this Association shall be a president and a vice-president, recording and corresponding secretaries and treasurer; and these officers shall constitute the executive committee, three of whom shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business. Sec. 2. In addition to these officers, the Association may secure the services of one or more organizers or lecturers; and while the volunteer assistance of workers are always acceptable, care should be taken not to employ the services of anyone for a greater length of time than there is funds on hand to pay for such service.

Art. 4. This Association shall hold its meetings annually, at such time and place as the executive committee may designate, due notice to be given to all the members and friends of the cause long enough in advance to give ample time for all to attend who may so desire.

ART. 5. This Association may adopt a code of by-laws, auxiliary to, but not conflicting with, this constitution.

ART. 6. Any person who is in full sympathy with the objects of this Association may become a member thereof by signing this constitution and contributing to its funds.

Now, friends who claim to be all-round reformers, what do you think of this plan? Would it not be well for us to get together? And are you ready to join hands in this matter?

D. M. GILLESPIE, M. D.

A NEEDED REFORM.

NEW YORK, June 13, 1895.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—We, under the advice of Dr. March and several other prominent reformers, have had set up in type the enclosed list of the reform spellings of words selected from the list recommended by the American Philological Association and the Spelling Reform Association.

We are willing to introduce at once these forms in our four periodicals: (1) Literary Digest, (2) the Homiletic Review, (3) the Missionary Review of the World, (4) the Voice; also in all new books hereafter published by us, and also in our correspondence, provided a reasonable number of other periodicals and writers and business men will adopt the same so as to help break the force of the criticism that may oppose. We have introduced already a number of these simpler forms in our publications, as "tho", "catalog", "program". The New York Independent has been using for a long while a number of these simpler forms. It is believed that this entire list of words can be used by printers and writers without shocking the public overmuch. And after the public gets used to these forms, another step in advance can be taken. This is a reform in which we believe greater speed will be secured by making haste slowly; yet we should be sure that the progress be not slower than is really necessary.

It has been suggested that we write to a number of influential persons asking their views touching the adoption of this list, in the way of criticism or commendation, and also to see if we cannot secure a sufficiently strong indorsement to make the plan immediately feasible.

This letter is sent to several hundred persons in the hope of securing 100 of these signed "consents."

If you approve of the plan, may we not suggest that you sign and return the accompanying blank? Please return the printed list of words enclosed with any suggestions that may occur to you in the way of additions or eliminations. If we secure one hundred signatures to the blank we shall send you several of the printed slips, with the names of the persons assenting.

Yours respectfully,

I. K. FUNK (of the Voice).

The following is the new spelling of some of the more commonly used words:

Altho, autograf, beutiful, catalog, endevor, epigram, epilog, eufony, feminin, hypocrit, jelousy, lithografy, fantom, farmacy, plum-line, program, receit, Savior, smooth, telegrafy, thru, thruout, trechery, triumfant, yern.

HOW TO CLEAN METAL.

Use Finely Sifted Rotten Stone and Sweet Oil.

To begin with brass, it is best to avoid all cleaning mediums containing corrosive acids, and there is really nothing better than rotten stone and oil—finely sifted rotten stone and good sweet oil. Brass fenders may be cleaned either in one piece, or better still if taken to pieces by unscrewing the screws. A soft rubber of blanket or flannel wrapped round a piece of wood or cork dipped in oil, wrung out and powdered over with rotten stone will soon polish up the flat portions. Round portions, such as knobs and bars, are best cleaned by passing round them a band of flannel (moistened as above), pulling the ends alternately. Coal scuttles and any repousse articles, such as kettles and bellows, can best be cleaned by brushing with the same compound or with ammonia. Of course all the coating of lacquer must be removed before cleansing becomes possible, and all traces of the rotten stone dust must be brushed out of the recesses. Nothing looks more detestable than brass work with a patina of red or brown polishing paste. The same applies to brass candlesticks, trays and waiters. Doorplates ought to be removed before vigorous cleaning, or else the paint may be rubbed off and leave an ugly halo round the doorplate. Stair rods can be cleaned by making a thick pad of felt, anointed with rotten stone and oil, to shut like a book. The rods must then be inserted and worked in and out for half their length, then reversed, and treated similarly for the other end. All brass things should be fiuished first by rubbing with an oiled or vaselined rag, and then by rubbing with a leather. To secure a good effect, rubbing should all be in one directiou. Cross rubbing never gives a good result. Copper may be cleaned in exactly the same way as brass, though at times very fine emery powder may be required to give the best results.

Tinned ware looks very nice when new, but vigorous scouring soon wears through the thin coating of tin and leaves the iron underneath exposed to view and to atmospheric action. Whiting with plain water, or else with ammonia, is the best for such wear, only the angles and recesses must be brushed to remove all traces. If the iron underneath is exposed, retinning may be necessary. Such ware should be carefully dried inside to prevent the chance of rusting.

The best cleaning medium for pewter and britannia metal is rotten stoue mixed with scraped up yellow soap, or soft soap, with the addition of some turpentine. This sounds a curious mixture, but the effect is magical on dish covers, well dishes, etc. The final rubbing is best done with flannel and dry rotten stone. If a highly polished surface is desired, there is no reason why such goods, if the metal is good, should not be burnished with a steel buruisher.

Grates that have been blacked must be scraped with a steel scraper, supplemented by turpentine applied on a brush or rag. A chain burnisher will also help in giving a high polish to bright steel goods.

Jeweler's soap is excelleut for any articles that will stand water, and anything so washed is best dried in boxwood sawdust, as this prevents any uneven drying and consequent streakiness.

Rouge is very commonly used by jewelers and is admirable for flat surfaces, such as water cases, spoons and forks, but is apt to stick in auy depression or projections in chased, engraved and repousse work, and thus to give a reddish tinge to the article cleaned with it.

The Christian Cynosure.

REV. M. A. GAULT, - - - EDITOR.
WM. I. PHILLIPS, - - - PUBLISHER.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JULY 11, 1895.

Some of our exchanges complain of a something in the judicial machinery that makes law a mockery and the courts a sham. Such causes are enumerated as the criminal sympathy of jurors, the entanglements growing out of legal techicalities, the venality of lawyers, the quibbles of the higher court judges, etc.

While these causes all operate more or less, yet they omit the chief cause which is the magic of oaths, grips, signs and passwords. Secret combinations, sworn to mutual protection, like Masonry, as Wm. H. Seward and Millard Fillmore said, "defeat the administration of justice and tramples on every government it cannot control." Masonry seldom fails to shield one of the order who has merely violated a law of the land. It usually secures immunity from punishment to its own members except when the crime is committed against one of the order. The remedy is in prohibition by the government of all such societies, or the exclusion of any juror from serving who is a member of a secret society, when either party is a member of such a society.

An American eagle was once seen to rise from a swamp in Michigan with something in its talons, and soar on majestic wing toward heaven. But it was seen to flutter and struggle, and soon came wheeling to the ground. It had taken in its embrace a rattlesnake which inflicted its fatal bite.

What a fit emblem of our Republic, which more than a century ago started on its magnificent flight until it was the admired of all nations. But it took in its embrace American slavery, which in the civil war came near bringing it to the dust. However it shook off the deadly evil and again mounted upward; but to-day our country is in the grasp of a more fearful foe,—that of the secret empire.

The hundreds of secret organizations are controlling elections, dominating political parties, perverting courts of justice, filling the commercial world with combines and monopolies, and poisoning our whole social life by their selfish exclusiveness.

They are dividing men into conflicting parties, which must soon explode society into fragments unless the evil is suppressed by the government. It is every patriotic citizen's duty to use voice, pen, money and influence to warn the country against this danger.

LOVE OF SECRECY.

Considering the alarming growth of secret orders in this country there can be little doubt but that they will precipitate a revolution before many years. Some of our most conservative exchanges are already beginning to sound the alarm. As for instance, we find the following editorial in the Pittsburg Post of recent date:

The patriotic-society business is being rather overdone in this country, but there comes forward another one, starting under favoring auspices, which is confined to commissioned officers, or the direct male lineal descendants, in the army, navy or marine corps of the United States, who did active service either in the war of the American revolution, the war with Tripoli, the war with Great Britain of 1812 or the Mexican war. The omission of soldiers of the war for the Union is noticeable. They have plenty of societies of their own. But it is explained this last society—the "Military and Naval Order of the United States"—is to take the place of the Society of the Cincinnati, founded by Washington and his associates in 1783, which must soon pass away by the terms of its organization, confining it to the "eldest male posterity" of officers of the revolutionary army. It was never a great success in the popular sense, the Society of the Cincinnati, and was resented at its outset, notwithstanding the authority of Washington's name, as intended to create a privileged class resting on ancestry. As the revolutionary war was a protest against this sort of thing, it is not to be wondered at that in early days those outside the charmed circle of commissioned officers objected to the Cincinnati as anti-American.

A census of the secret societies of the United States, with the purposes they seek to advance or the histories they commemorate, would make an interesting exhibit. We do not suppose the rage in that direction has ever taken hold of any people as it has those of this country during the last twenty or thirty years, and it is still going on. Almost every month sees a new society launched, with the mystery which is the main attraction of all such organizations—with the promise of uniforms and parade, and social and political and business advantages, for there is a great deal of the leaven of self-seeking human nature entering into all these societies. Their extraordinary increase, taking a large proportion of the population, masculine, feminine, and juvenile, has had the effect of destroying one of the chief objections to them by those who oppose secret societies. They are no longer novelties, but are getting rather commonplace, and sometimes take on the character of a nuisance to the practical minded. It is an element of human nature, the love of mystery, and when to this is added possible personal advantage or promotion, we have an explanation why we have become a nation where passwords and grips abound. There is a probability of the dangerous weapon of ridicule asserting itself against the whole business. It is getting too common, and the pretexts are often of the farcical order.

SELF GOVERNMENT.

We notice in Fourth of July speeches the usual changes were rung upon the government being "of the people, by the people and for the people." That government should be by and for the people, we do not deny, but in its origin and law it is of God. "The powers that be are ordained of God."

The assertion of sovereignty by any man or by any combination of men is open rebellion against God. Our great Rebellion was simply the assersertion of state sovereignty. This was clearly seen to be disloyalty to the government of the United States. If we say plainly that we the United States of America will not acknowledge Christ as the Ruler of nations, we undeniably take a position of rebellion. Rebellion is simply refusal to recognize the authority of that government under which we are placed. Simply disregard of that authority without any hostile act constitutes rebellion.

Let any number of persons in any part of the country resolve that they will henceforth govern themselves, even if they declare no war with the government, but ask only to be let alone, they only purpose to govern themselves. Now according to popular theories what objection is there to this? If government be of the people, for the people and by the people—if government derives its just powers from the consent of the governed, who can forbid the people of any given portion of the world setting up a government of their own? But when the Southern Confederacy did this we called it rebellion with all the emphasis of the civil war. Now in the great empire of Christ, for he is by inspiration declared to be the Prince of the kings of the earth if the United States sets up a government without acknowledging his authority, is it not rebellion?

THE CAUSE IN HUMBOLDT.

Secretists of every kind are striving to gain adherents in Humboldt, Nebraska, where the State convention was held last winter. The meeting did much to arouse the friends of the cause. In the Methodist, Presbyterian and Baptist churches are those who have the light and are not afraid to let it shine to the saving of all who do not love darkness rather than light. The little Christian church has recently secured the lodge evangelist, Mr. Combs, as its pastor. Recruits for the lodge are openly sought on the streets and attempts are being made to start new orders. The same thing is done in every town and city. Satan has come down in great wrath knowing that his time is short. The god of this world is putting forth desperate energy to maintain his kingdom. "We wrestle not against flesh and blood but against principalities and powers; against the rulers of darkness of this world." Eph. 6: 12. But let us not forget that greater is He that is for us, than all they that can be against us. And God can save by few as well as by many. Let the friends of light organize, no matter how few their number, and combine their testimony. Let them do everything possible to circulate the Cynosure, and anti-secret tracts. The Lodge Lamp can be sent into homes every month for a year, for only ten cents in clubs. Let friends exercise the same faith in the result of such seed-sowing as the farmer exercises in sowing his grain. God's truth shall not return void.

CHURCH OR LODGE—WHICH?

The feature of the lodge question that excites alarm in the minds of many ministers and Christian workers, is the direct and indirect tendency of the lodge to displace and supersede the church. Not only does it do so by the absorption of time and funds that should be devoted to the church, but in the estimation of multitudes of lodge members it is as good as the church, and all the church they desire.

At the People's Institute in Chicago on a recent Sabbath, six lodges united in a service in memory of deceased Odd fellows. Bishop Fallows conducted the service and said in his address: "There was no agency more potent for good than the Odd-fellows' order. And as to its secret methods which many people condemn, he said that Christ has set the example of secrecy in his acts, and has proclaimed the right of his children to follow his methods if they choose. The order is a power, because it is based upon a living, glorious and operative truth—Christianity." When such a prominent church leader as Bishop Fallows says there is no agency more potent for good than the Odd-fellows, is it strange that so many professed Christians as well as non-Christians believe and act on the same theory? The result is that lodge meetings and ceremonies are tending to supersede religious meetings and worship in the church. If Odd-fellowship is an agency as potent for good as the church, then why did Christ give his life for the church? Surely then it was a waste of blood and sacrifice for our forefathers to resist unto death rather than surrender their faith in Christ.

THE LABOR QUESTION AND THE LODGE.

It is fearful to contemplate the influence of the lodge over the laboring classes. Prophecy points to a period when men cannot buy or sell unless they have the mark of the beast, or, in other words, can give the grip and password of some secret order. It seems also that we are entering a period when no laborer can get a job of work unless he has the same mark of the beast.

As an illustration of this we read in the Inter Ocean that "at the last meeting of the board of trustees of the Southern Illinois Insane Asylum, at Anna, held here for the purpose of opening bids for the erection of the main building, burned last winter, Governor Altgeld told the trustees and bidders that when the contract was let it must go only to those contractors who would employ none but union labor. He considered that in such cases the building would be complete sooner. To-day the trustees awarded the contract to James B. Diver & Co., of Chester, Ill., and Keokuk, Iowa, better known as the Youngstown Bridge Company, of Youngstown, Ohio, for $149,800. They will employ union labor. The lowest bid was that of Anderson Brothers, of St. Louis, Mo., $143,000, but they failed to agree to employ only union labor."

Thus Governor Altgeld demands that out of the State treasury, for the erection of one building alone, a premium of $6,800 be paid for lodge labor over free labor. Applying the same rule in the case of all public buildings, it will be seen to what extent labor is in bondage to the lodge.

ODD-FELLOWSHIP BASED UPON CHRISTIANITY.

The declaration by Bishop Fallows that the order of Odd-fellowship is a power because it is based upon Christianity is as dangerous an untruth as could well be expressed in as many words. Surely the Bishop cannot be ignorant of the statement made by the Sovereign Grand Lodge of the world in 1889. It was in answer to the question, "Is it lawful for a chaplain to commence and finish his prayers in the name of Christ?" The authoritative answer of this supreme judiciary of the order was: "Our order only requires a belief in the existence of a Supreme Being as a qualification for membership, and has no affinity with any religious sect or system of faith. Hence, everything savoring of sectarianism is not to be tolerated. The words, system of faith or sect, do not have reference merely to sects within the pale of Christianity, but have a far broader significance, and include all the religions of the world. In this sense Christianity is a sect; hence, it is expedient and, I think, unlawful to make prominent reference to it in lodge work.....We have Jews and many Mohammedans and other non-Christian sects within our order, and the rule applies to them equally with members of the Christian faith."

An institution prohibiting its members from using the name of Christ in prayer and at the same time claiming to be a religion must be a false religion. And to say that such an institution is founded upon Christianity is a contradiction in terms. The Manual of Odd-fellowship, page 90, says: "In a word, what regeneration by the Word of Truth is in religion, initiation is in Odd-fellowship." This shows that instead of being founded upon Christianity it is only a parody on Christianity, deceiving the unwary and simple, and leading them away from Christ, the only Saviour of the world.

LECTURE FOR THE CHILDREN.

BY PROF. D. A. STRAW.

THE INSECTS AND THE LIGHT.

Why do not those bugs do their flying in daylight if they are so pleased with a brilliant light? I mean the moths and other insects that gather in such quantities about the electric lights every evening. All day long in the brightest of July sunshine these little flutterers keep hidden away in dark corners, under leaves and boards, in crevices, where daylight is excluded. Then, as soon as it gets dark, they are in their element, but every candle, or lamp, and especially an electric light, has an attractiveness that is really astonishing. Seeking for light! They cannot get enough of it. They dart into the very center of it with a perfect delirium. They risk their lives —regular martyrs to their desire for light. On the ground below we find handfuls of them with wings burnt off, legs, feelers and heads scorched; hundreds of them dead and dying for their love of light.

But why did they not think of that in day time when the world was flooded with light, safe, sweet, healthful sunlight? Yet they seem very much like a certain sort of men, and a very numerous sort too—men who say they are seeking for light when they go out in the night time and collect at the lodge rooms. Most of them shun the Gospel of Jesus who said he was the light of the world, and that he lights every man who comes into the world; then at night they go flocking to the lodge, oh, so eager for light! They risk their health, they give up their money, they sacrifice their liberty of conscience, in their desire for light.

Some of them see a very dazzingly little charity light in the pledge to take care of members when they get sick or bury them when they are dead, while the great Gospel light shines in the thirteenth chapter of 1st Corinthians with a charity that floods the earth with its beams. With charity the whole Gospel glows, from the song of good will when the baby Christ came, to the prayer for the enemies when he hung on the cross. Isn't it better to "walk in the light" than to shun daylight and then seek for a lamp? But what sort of bugs did we find around the night lamps? Not a honey bee there. Only mosquitoes and moths, millers and beetles. They live not to give, but only to get.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Elder Rufus Smith writes from New York that he and family expect soon to be at Wheaton.

—Elder J. H. Curry, of Bloomington, Ind., was a welcome visitor at the Cynosure office last week.

—Rev. P. B. Williams, during the month of June, gave fifteen anti-secret lectures and twenty-five sermons, which was an excellent month's work.

—President Littlejohn, of Amity College, Ia., is spending the summer in Great Britain and on the continent, and will return to his post early in September.

—Rev. J. D. Smith, of Lodi, Wis., a true and tried Cynosure friend who has been suffering for several years with nervous prostration, is improving in health.

—Secretary W. I. Phillips will go East this week on important business connected with our work. He may look in upon the Endeavorer convention at Boston on his trip.

—Rev. J. C. K. Faris, of Beaver Falls, Pa., was a welcome visitor at our office last week. He has three brothers who are pastors of congregations, and all staunch supporters of the Cynosure.

—Bro. Louis Dorman, of Washington, D. C., sends with his renewal prayers for success in the war we are waging. It always gives greater emphasis to prayers to have them come with renewals.

—Rev. H. F. Day, pastor of the Baptist church at Surry, Maine, has heard of the Lodge Lamp, and writes us to send him a copy, as he would like to investigate the subject, for it is a new idea to him.

—Bro. Isaac Bancroft of Monroe, Wis., who for so many years has borne testimony against the lodge evil, writes that he feels that he is growing old, and his memory is failing, but his general health is good.

—Rev. W. B. Stoddard goes this week to Boston, where he and Rev. J. P. Stoddard will do all they can for the cause at the Christian Endeavor convention, and afterward may arrange for a convention in Vermont.

—Bro. I. R. B. Arnold expects to go to Freeport about August 1st to lecture in the Free Methodist church and various points in that vicinity. He is a faithful witness for Christ's truth and should have the prayers of God's people.

—The Free Press of Birmingham, Iowa, we are sorry to hear, has been discontinued some months on account of sickness and death in the family of Sister Enlow. We deeply sympathize with her heroic self-sacrifice in so long sustaining the paper after her husband's death.

—T. W. Stewart, of Belle Centre, Ohio, sends his renewal and writes that though times are hard yet he cannot get along without the Cynosure, which he values especially for his family. We wish all parents would realize the importance of thus instructing their children on the dangers from secret organizations.

—John Motter, of Lyons, Kansas, a true old-time friend of our cause, and at whose home we have found inspiration while in the reform field, recently had his shoulder dislocated by being thrown from a cart. It is his good fortune to have been from his youth an aggressive Abolitionist, anti-secretist and party Prohibitionist.

—Seven young men sent by the Moody Institute, of Chicago, are now carrying on Gospel work on Bro. I. R. B. Arnold's floating chapel, which is now at Spring Valley, Ill. Excellent meetings have been held by them in several places. They will remain about two weeks at Spring Valley, and then visit Hennepin and other points down the Illinois river.

—Rev. H. W. Johnston, who with his family are now with relatives near Clarinda, Iowa, writes in the Wesleyan, "Our first-born, our boy and his father's pride, sleeps in a little African grave, a sacrifice to the redemption of Africa; but two little African-born girls still cheer our home, and we still feel that even little Irvin was not too much to lay at the feet of our Lord."

—Rev. A. C. Tris, of Howard, Kansas, sends us an excellent little booklet on the Holy Spirit. In it he says, "The forsaking, or leaving out of the work of the Holy Spirit, as the only and sole mover of all our spiritual energy, is, in our humble opinion, the greatest, the most aggravating sin of this nineteenth century, and the sole cause of all the miseries, schisms and contentions in the churches in our day."

—Bro. B. Tunnicliff, of Schuyler's Lake, N. Y., sends us this preamble to resolutions passed by a lodge of Masons at Richfield Springs, N. Y.: "Whereas, it has pleased Almighty God, our great High Priest, to remove from earth the soul of our esteemed companion, Menso O. Barus," etc. This shows what imperfect and confused ideas Freemasons have of the relation of God to sinful men. Bro. Tunnicliff wonders if these Royal Arch Masons design to make Almighty God only an intercessor between themselves and their lodge deity.

—Robert Lynn, of Tarkio, Mo., a former co-laborer in reform work, writes from Boulder, Colorado: "So Dr. Jonathan Blanchard's mantle has fallen on you. I hope you will prove a true Elisha, carrying out the practical part of the great reforms inaugurated by Elijah, but not attempting to bring down the consuming fire of heaven on the poor captains of fifties, and other deluded minions of the Ahab dynasty. If in any moments of holy zeal you feel such fervent promptings, put your hand to your ear, and listen to the still small voice and hear the tender Master saying, 'Ye know not what spirit ye are of.'"

—Miss Belle Ewing, of Bloomington, Ind., writes that she is becoming more and more disgusted with the secret orders. Almost every Sabbath afternoon, the sacred quiet is broken by some of the lodges headed by the Mechanics' brass band marching out to the cemetery to decorate the graves of their dead. They usually meet first in one of the churches, where addresses are made lauding the order. This fearful form of Sabbath desecration has broken out this summer as never before. And the next day the daily papers write up the performance in the most glowing style. And now there is not a minister in the city dares to speak out against the evil.

—Rev. H. L. Hastings, 47 Cornhill, Boston, sends us a neat volume of 140 pages comprising two of his most valuable publications. "A Square Talk with Young Men about the Inspiration of the Bible" is a most popular and practical reply to the various modern criticisms of the Bible, and is designed especially for young men. It has reached the enormous sale of 2,200,000 copies, or not far from 44 tons. The other is "Are there Corruptions in the New Testament?" which is a practical demonstration of the authenticity of the New Testament, a book which has reached its fifth edition. We know of no books so well calculated to refute the current skepticism of our times.

form that easy task. I urged him to come to the front like a man, and if he was holding to anything he could not bring to the light and defend, he should leave it in the dark, where it belonged, and flee for his life. He told me to set the time and name the place, but to give him a little time. I set the time for the third Sabbath in June, but he failed to meet me. A few of his Masonic brethren were there. One of them, Captain Crone, seemed to enjoy the description of the mock death, burial and resurrection of the candidate in the initiation of Hiram Abiff.

I learned afterwards that the captain had only taken one degree, and that three years ago. Par Awtry asserted that if Dr. Leach did not give me enough, he would finish me. I sent him word to meet me at Persimmons Grove last Sabbath and complete the task. Neither he nor Dr. Leach came, but had a singing appointment about a quarter of a mile away, at a dwelling house, to draw as many of the people as possible. But I had a good audience and spoke experimentally for about two hours. Two Masons present gave good attention. I distributed a large number of Cynosures. I feel encouraged to press the battle to the gates. The Worshipful Master of East Point Lodge remarked to a Christian lady (a friend of mine), that I had better stop lecturing against Masonry, for I was doing no good and not keeping anyone out of the lodge. She said: "I know it has, for it has saved my father's family over $100." He said: "How is that?" "She said: "Pa had taken one degree, and brother Thomas was elected for the first degree, when Proctor warned the people to keep out of it. That was three years ago and pa never went any further. Thomas never went to the lodge for the first degree, but he and another brother got Proctor to order William Morgan and E. Ronayne's expositions and that kept another one of the family out."

Thus it was a saving of eleven degrees at $11 each, making a gain of $121. Now, the father says that they are done making Masons in this country.

S. F. PROCTOR.

WOMAN AND HOME.

DR. ANNIE WILLIAMS DEVOTES HERSELF TO GERM RAISING.

These be days when germs are held responsible for nearly all the ills that flesh is heir to. Any schoolboy nowadays would laugh at the idea of the love of money being the root of all evil. He knows full well that, as a matter of fact, germs possess that unique distinction. He does not quite know what germs are. If he asks his mother, she will probably tell him that they are bacilli or bacteria, and the youth will be about as wise as he was before.

There is, however, one woman who could, if she would, pour such a flood of information as to these pests of modern civilization on the questioner's devoted head as would cure him for all time of the habit of asking foolish questions. Dr. Annie D. Williams is assistant bacteriologist to the New York city health department, and what she doesn't know about germs is not worth knowing. Miss Williams is a shy little woman, who occupies a desk in the health department's laboratory, where she spends most of the time bringing up by hand the deadliest of little disease germs, studying their habits, training them carefully in the way they should go, and then killing them off with neatness and dispatch. A queer occupation for a woman, isn't it? And yet, after all, not so queer, for the greatest discoveries in the science of medicine have been made in this way of late years. Bacteriology has conquered smallpox, laid diphtheria low, has won a fighting chance with consumption and will surely take more of death's ground out from under his feet before long.

She is not in the least afraid of her germs, but will sit for hours watching the contents of a filter dripping from a glass funnel into a wide mouthed flask containing microbes enough no doubt to put half Gotham's population in their graves.

"The work is not as dangerous or as hard as that of a practicing physician," she says, "and there is nothing about it that a woman has not the strength to do. I won't agree, though, that a woman can manipulate bacteria any better than a man, for when a man has had long experience in this work he acquires quite as much delicacy of touch as a woman."

Miss Williams always had a taste for medicinal study, but it was only lately that her interest in the study of disease germs led her to decide that she would make it her life work. She studied medicine in Leipsic and in the Women's Medical college of the New York infirmary, graduating from the last named institution in 1892. She had made a specialty of anatomy and was at once appointed assistant to the professor of pathology.

She obtained permission to study in the city's bacteriological laboratory the evil microbe that causes diphtheria. Her work was so thorough that she was asked to give her time to the city, continue her work and take a good place on the pay rolls. She is a sweet faced, serious minded young woman who is more at ease with microbes than with newspaper folk, and who seems to be wholly absorbed in her work.—New York Letter.

ARDENT DISCIPLES OF WOMAN'S RIGHTS IN FRANCE.

Frenchwomen of the present day are no longer satisfied with merely being allowed into the precincts of the house of deputies. They demand rights of a graver nature, and the deputies of the last decade of the nineteenth century are now considering their demands.

Such women as Mmes. Potonie-Pierre, Maria Martin, Maria Pognon-Coutant demand rights that shall place them on a level footing with men, and they have succeeded so far in enlisting in their cause many prominent deputies who have formed the parliamentary group of "woman's rights."

To tell the truth, there are not many women in France today who take very great interest in the question of woman's rights. But if there is not quantity there is quality.

At the present day the most ardent disciples are Mme. Potonie-Pierre and Mme. Maria Martin. Those two ladies, with Mme. Bogelot, who attended the women's congress at the World's Columbian exposition, walk in the footsteps of Maria Deraimes, to whom they were ever most devoted.

They are the correspondents of many of the organizations of women, both in the United States and in England. Mme. Potonie-Pierre is secretary of the leading French organization of women, La Solidarite des Femmes, and also of the French branch of the Universal and International Union of the Women of England.

Mme. Maria Martin is now the editor of the only newspaper published in the interests of women in France, Le Journal des Femmes, after having attained the unique position of being editor of a political journal strongly devoted to the interests of her own sex.

During the last three months of the year 1894 women took a great stride in advance. After repeated demands made by the women to the deputies a meeting was finally organized and a parliamentary group formed. The majority of the socialist members at once joined the group, and many, without a moment's hesitation, expressed themselves willing to indorse the most radical demands of the programme presented by the women.

The women demand a favorable vote in the chamber of deputies on the proposition of a law giving all women of age and not deprived of their civil rights the right to act as a witness on all certificates and civil documents. They also claim the nomination of a committee of 44 members to reconsider and reform the entire civil code, and especially to modify article 8, which says that every Frenchman shall be possessed of civil rights, making it read, "Every person, without distinction of sex, shall be possessed of civil rights."

National Council of Women.

The National Council of Women is one of the grandest and largest organizations of women that the world has ever known. Its very being and the possibility of its creation marks an era in the world's history. At its last convention in Washington a few months since there were gathered the most eminent women of the land, together with delegates from every civilized country.

The council has a paid membership of 700,000 members, and there are probabilities of it becoming more potent than even the political conventions of men in its direction of affairs which touch upon the family and the state.

This immense orgauization is described at length in Peterson's Magazine by Margherita Arlina Hamm, who is editor of its woman's department. She tells of the method of organization of the rules and governing forces, the personalities which have made all centralize and harmonize for one prevailing object.

Some of the famous women spoken of are Mary Lowe Dickinson, May Wright Sewall, Elizabeth Cady Stanton, Susan B. Anthony, Lillie Devereux Blake, Carrie Lane Chapman Catt, Harriet Keyser, Mary C. Francis, Ellen Battele Dietrick, Ida M. Rew, Mme. Eva Alberti, Cynthia M. Westover, Emma Cranmer, Lady Henry Somerset, Elizabeth Grannis, Marianna Chapman, Sarah Cooper, Frances Willard, Rev. Anna Howard Shaw, Rev. Carrie Bartlett, Mrs. Holbrook, LL. B., Cornelia K. Hood, LL. B., Rev. Ida C. Hultin, Dr. Julia Holmes Smith, Dr. Marie Strickland, Dr. Mary Green and Alice Stone Blackwell.

The best types of the members are arranged in classes according to their professions, philanthropies or work. The article is a memorial to woman's energy and growing importance.

Camilla Collet.

Camilla Collet, the eminent Scandinavian writer who has just died, was a strong advocate of equal rights for women. It is said that no private person in Scandinavia and northern Europe, with the exception of Fredrika Bremer, has done so much to raise the respect for the northern woman and her personality. Camilla was the daughter of one of Norway's most remarkable men, the leader of the early Norwegian independence movement and sister to the poet Henrik Vergeland. In 1841 she married the prominent Norwegian jurist, P. J. Collet, and ten years later became a widow. In 1855 her novel, "The Amtman's Daughters," made her famous. Like all her succeeding works, it advocated enlarged opportunities for women. It made a great sensation.

Both Ibsen and Tolstoi declare that they were indebted to her for many ideas and suggestions. From a purely literary point of view, her works are highly praised. The esteem in which the old authoress was held was shown by the great demonstration in Christiania two years ago on her eightieth birthday. In this festival it is said that a thousand women, representing every nationality, took part, and representatives from many of the learned, literary and political societies of Europe attended. Few women not of royal blood have ever been the object of so cosmopolitan a celebration. Mme. Collet leaves four sons, all prominent in Norwegian affairs.

THE WOMAN'S BIBLE.

A Specimen of the Work Compiling Under the Direction of Mrs. Stanton.

Here is a specimen chapter from the "Woman's Bible" which is being compiled by a revising committee of leading women of most civilized nations. They propose to comment simply on all texts in the Old and New Testaments that refer to women. Mrs. Elizabeth Cady Stanton of 261 West Sixty-first street is chairman of the committee, and information concerning the work may be obtained from her. The specimen chapter is Numbers xxvii, 1-11, and, with Mrs. Stauton's comments, is as follows:

1 Then came the daughters of Zelophehad, the son of Hepher, the son of Gilead, the son of Machir, the son of Manasseh, of the families of Manasseh, the son of Joseph, and these are the names of his daughters; Mahlah, Noah and Hogiah and Milcah and Tirzah.

2. And they stood before Moses and before Eleazar, the priest, and before the princes and all the congregation, by the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, saying:

3. Our father died in the wilderness, and he was not in the company of them that gathered themselves together against the Lord in the company of Korah.

4. Why should the name of our father be done away from among his family because he hath no son? Give unto us therefore a possession among the brethren of our father.

5. And Moses brought their cause before the Lord.

6. ¶ And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying.

7. The daughters of Zelophehad speak right; thou shalt surely give them a possession of an inheritance among their father's brethren, and thou shalt cause the inheritance of their father to pass unto them.

8. And thou shalt speak unto the children of Israel, saying If a man die and have no son, then ye shall cause his inheritance to pass unto his daughter.

9. And if he have no daughter, then ye shall give his inheritance unto his brethren.

10. And if he have no brethren, then ye shall give his inheritance unto his father's brethren.

11. And if his father have no brethren, then ye shall give his inheritance unto his kinsman that is next to him of his family, and he shall possess it, and it shall be unto the children of Israel a statute of judgment, as the Lord commanded Moses.

The respect paid to the daughters of Zelophehad at that early day is worthy the imitation of the rulers in our own times. These daughters were no doubt fine looking, well developed women, gifted with the power of eloquence, able to impress their personality and arguments on that immense assemblage of the people. They were allowed to plead their own case in person before the lawgivers, the priests and the princes, the rulers in state and church, and all the congregation, at the very door of the tabernacle. They presented their case with such force and clearness that all saw the justice of their claims. Moses was so deeply impressed that he at once retired to his closet to listen to the still small voice of conscience and commune with his maker. In response the Lord said to him, "The daughters of Zelophehad speak right, if a man die and leave no son, then ye shall cause his inheritance to pass unto his daughters." It would have been commendable if the members of the late constitutional convention in New York had, like Moses, asked the guidance of the Lord in deciding the rights of the daughters of the Van Rensselaers, the Stuyvesants, the Livingstons and the Knickerbockers.

Their final action revealed the painful fact that they never thought to take the case to the highest court in the moral universe. The daughters of Zelophehad were fortunate in being all of one mind, none there to plead the fatigue, the publicity, the respousibility of paying taxes and investing property, of keeping a bank account and having some knowledge of mathematics. The daughters of Zelophehad were happy to accept all the necessary burdens inspired by the laws of inheritance, while the daughters of the Knickerbockers trembled at the thought of assuming the duties involved in self government.

As soon as Moses laid the case before the Lord he not only allowed the justice of the claim, but gave "a statute of judgment" by which the Jewish magistrates should determine all such cases in the division of property in the land of Canaan in all after ages.

When the rights of property were secured to married women in the state of New York in 1848, a certain class were opposed to the measure, and would cross the street to avoid speaking to the sisters who had prayed and petitioned for its success. They did not object, however, in due time to use the property thus secured, and the same type of women will as readily avail themselves of all the advantages of political equality when the right of suffrage is secured.—New York Sun

Society and Pastor.

If there is coolness between the pastor and the Christian Endeavor society, the first duty of the members is to inquire what can be done to correct the evil. It is not necessary to inquire who is chiefly responsible for it, the only question of practical importance being, How can good feeling be restored? If the members are desirous of accomplishing this end, they will find some way to do it. In any proper effort in that direction they will find the pastor ready to meet them more than half way.—National Presbyterian.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic For the Week Beginning July 14. Comment by Rev. S. H. Doyle.

TOPIC.—For Christ and the church.—Math. xvi, 13-20. (Prayer for the international Christian Endeavor convention.)

The topic, "For Christ and the Church," is a very appropriate one. The fourteenth annual convention of the movement that has had these words for its motto and Christ and the church the objects of its love and fidelity is being held at Boston, and well may we obey the suggestion of the topic to pray for it. It may best suit the spirit of the occasion to consider Christian Endeavor as related to Christ and the church.

1. Christian Endeavor stands for Christ. It stands for a divine Christ and says of Him, as Peter said, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." It stands for a personal Christ, abiding in the heart and manifested in the life. The supreme object and aim of the movement has been and is to instil personal loyalty and fidelity to Jesus Christ into the heart and life of every one coming under its influence. "To do as He would have me do" is made the mainspring of life's every action. Christ first, everywhere and always, is its abiding principle. It stands for Christ as the founder of the church. Christ and the church are inseparable. He founded it not upon Peter as pope or prelate, but upon confessing Peter, and it was to be built up by the addition of others who confessed Christ divine, as living stones to Peter as the beginning. Christ is the head, and the church is the body, and even in its work for the church this movement represents Christ.

2. Christian Endeavor stands for the church. Next to loyalty to Christ it emphasizes fidelity to the church of Christ. It stands for interdenominational fellowship in the church. It would remind the Christian world that we are all brethren, all one in Jesus Christ. Yet it also emphasizes denominationalism. Loyalty to denomination, to the local church, has ever been one of its tenets, and the charge that it was or would undermine Christian denominations has ceased to be heard. Its history has been a sufficient answer to this oft repeated cry against it in the day of its early history. It stauds for work in the church. It is indeed the church at work and has done more to introduce systematic, regular lines of Christian work into the church than any other religious movement.

"For Christ and the church!" Under this motto the Christian Endeavor movement has prospered in the years gone by. Let us as Endeavorers be so faithful to our motto that in years to come the prosperity of this movement may be even still more great.

Bible Readings.—Ps. cxxii, 1-9; Isa. ii, 3; Jer. xxxvii, 3; xlii, 1-3; Mic. iv, 1, 2; Zech. viii, 20-22; Math. x, 18-22; Luke xxi, 10-12; Acts ii, 44-47; xv, 25, 26; xx, 28; Rom. i, 7-9; viii, 35-39; Gal. ii, 20; Eph. i, 22, 23; iv, 15, 16; Col. i, 18, 24; Heb. xii, 22-24; I Pet. i, 6-8; Rev. i, 4-6.

Endeavorers In South Africa.

A union of South African Christian Endeavor societies has been formed, with Rev. Andrew Murray, D. D., author of "Abide In Christ," as its president. The annual convention will probably be held next September. The union has started a bright little paper, and, although this is in many respects the day of small things with our South African brethren, yet they have great hopes for large growth. The Endeavorers who go out from the schools take with them the principles of the society, not only to different parts of Cape Colony, but to Natal, the Free State and Transvaal as well. At the last meeting of the synod of the Dutch Reformed church in Cape Town one evening was devoted to Christian Endeavor, with Dr. Andrew Murray presiding. An address was delivered by A. E. Bliss. Surely there are great things in store for the dark continent through the medium of the Christian Endeavor society.—Golden Rule.

Bringing the Members Together.

The executive committee of the local union of Seattle has a very pleasing plan for bringing the members together. At 6 o'clock on the evening and at the church previously designated the members congregate and partake of a plain lunch provided by ladies from the society at whose church the meeting is held. After the lunch a business session of the executive committee is held. Thus far the social feature has not interfered with the business meeting, but it has aided by causing prompt and good attendance.

Spreading the Glad Tidings.

The Christian Endeavor society is proving a great help in the Lutheran mission at Muhlenberg, in Liberia, Africa. Rev. George Goll has not only organized a flourishing society in his own mission, but the good news comes that five others have been formed through his instrumentality, and that this has proved one of the most helpful of all the agencies he has used for the evangelization of the Africans.—Exchange.

The Divine Helper.

Thou, too, wert forsaken; thy lonelier cry
Sent a wider appeal through the darkening sky.
Alone on the mountain, the garden, the cross,
Thou hast felt all humanity's anguish and loss.
My sorrows have touched Thee, my woes have been Thine.
Give help to my weakness, Thou Helper divine.
—Rose Terry Cooke.

Christian Endeavor Jottings.

The Christian Endeavor superintendent in Switzerland reports four societies in that country already.

Scotland now has 150 Christian Endeavor societies. This is just the number enrolled in the United States during the first three years of the society's existence. Christian Endeavor was almost unknown in Scotland three years ago.

To act nobly unconsciously we must strive for nobility consciously. A pail spills only that of which it is full.—Ivan Panim.

FOR LITTLE FOLKS.

INDIAN CHILDREN.

How the Little Kiowa Boys and Girls Amuse Themselves With Games.

If my little readers and listeners could visit "the Rainy Mount school" for Indians at playtime, they would see games quite unlike those seen at their own homes and schools, yet in part like them. A group of girls would be playing "goma-ton," or ball with a stick. The stick is about 3 feet long, one end being turned up about six inches. They get a stick with a joint. With this joint they strike the ball, rolling it along the ground to the next girl, who gives it a blow and sends it on, and so on till it has gone around; then they repeat. If the ball passes a girl, she cannot strike it till the next round.

Another group may be seen playing "pa-aw-topx." This is their favorite game. Wherever you see Kiowa girls, you will see them at this game. It is a ball game too. The ball is about two-thirds as large as a rubber football. It is made of old cloth and covered with cloth; hence it is soft.

"Pa-aw-topx" is simply throwing the ball up and striking it as it comes down with the top of the foot. Sometimes they hit the ball a dozen times without failing.

The small girls throw stones up as we play "jacks." They will sit for an hour by a stone pile playing.

The boys throw marbles, jump and play with bows and arrows. The small boys throw the arrows; the large ones shoot them from the bows

When they enter school, they come dressed in camp clothes, but these are soon changed for English clothes. When the girls have to stay indoors, they amuse themselves by making dolls. They always make a cradle for their dolls such as their mothers wear on their backs. They are very clever in making papoose cradles and dolls.—Mary J. Hand in Atlanta Constitution.

HELP THE FALLEN.

We Do Not Work Hard Enough to Reclaim the Drunkard.

I plead by all the wounds and tears and blood and groans and agonies and death throes of the Son of God, who approaches you this moment with torn brow and lacerated hand and whipped back, and saying, "Come unto me, all ye who are weary and heavily laden, and I will give you rest."

Again, there is a field of usefulness but little touched occupied by those who are astray in their habits. All northern nations, like those of North America and England and Scotland—that is, in the colder climates—are devastated by alcoholism. They take the fire to keep up the warmth. In the southern countries, like Arabia and Spain, the blood is so warm they are not tempted to fiery liquids. The great Roman armies never drank anything stronger than water tinged with vinegar, but under our northern climate the temptation to heating stimulants is most mighty, and millions succumb. When a man's habits go wrong, the church drops him, the social circle drops him, good influence drops him, we all drop him. Of all the men who get off the track but few ever get on again.

We do not preach enough to such men. We have not enough faith in their release. Alas, if when they come to hear us, we are laboriously trying to show the difference between sublapsarianism and supralapsarianism, while they have a thousand vipers of remorse and despair coiling around and biting their immortal spirits. The church is not chiefly for goodish sort of men whose proclivities are all right, and who could get to heaven praying and singing in their homes. It is on the beach to help the drowning. Those bad cases are the cases that God likes to take hold of.—T. De Witt Talmage.

TEMPERANCE DEFINED.

Moderation In All Useful and Total Abstinence In All Harmful Things.

In a recent lecture in St. Louis, Colonel George W. Bain, the temperance speaker, said it was far from his purpose to assert that every man who drinks is a drunkard. But the fact could not be denied that every drinker has within himself the potentiality of a drunkard. We need but to contrast moderation and total abstinence in their ultimate effects to see how vastly they differ. Moderation may lead to drunkenness; total abstinence never can. If every drunkard were to die tomorrow, the ranks of drunkenness would in time be refilled from those of the moderate drinkers; from the ranks of the total abstainers they could never be recruited. Even granting that drink is a blessing to a few, the fact remains that it is a curse to many and a risk to all. Colonel Bain said that if asked for a definition of temperance he would characterize it as moderation in all things useful and good and total abstinence in all things hurtful and wrong. Total abstinence, he said, was the only safe course for the young man of today. In every city in the country you can find men exclaiming in all the anguish of their tortured souls, "Drink has been my curse." The man is yet to be found who will say that his life was wrecked through total abstinence.

But men will claim that they can stop drinking whenever they wish. A man closes his hand. He can open it whenever he wishes. He keeps it closed for a whole year, and, behold, when he tries to open it he finds that the muscles and tendons of that hand are useless, and it remains closed forever. So it is with the will of the moderate drinker—he keeps it in check until it is paralyzed, and when the time for the great struggle comes he wavers for a moment on the border line and then sinks forever into the ranks of drunkenness. The consequences of drink are visited not only on the drunkard, but upon his innocent family as well. "Every rose on the bosom of the saloon keeper's wife," said Colonel Bain, "is stolen from the cheek of some one else's wife. Every ray of sunshine on the saloon keeper's carpet is stolen from some once happy home."

His Mother at a Saloon Door.

In 1874 I saw my mother kneeling in the snow to pray at a saloon door, and I crept out by a side way, stepping softly in the sawdust, ashamed of her.

That day's work cost her her life, but the saloon did not even pause, and her only child sped downward to the hell of darkness. But that snow set prayer persisted at God's throne through 13 awful years, and for her importunity he could but always hear, and when I "would" he spoke to me and speaks, and will speak on and on, until on some sweet Christmas eve I find my mother's arm again, and leaning on her great heart celebrate the end of the crusade.—John G. Woolley.

SABBATH SCHOOL.

LESSON III, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, JULY 21.

Text of the Lesson, Lev. x, 1-11 (Temperance Lesson) — Memory Verses, 9-11. Golden Text, Lev. x, 9—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

1. "And Nadab and Abihu, the sons of Aaron, offered strange fire before the Lord, which He commanded them not." The last lesson told us of failure on the part of Israel; this tells of failure in the priesthood. Every man at his best state (apart from God) is altogether vanity (Ps. xxxix, 5). This shall be fully seen when after 1,000 years of the personal reign of Christ a host of liars shall follow the father of lies when he shall be released from the pit. See Rev. xx, 7-9, and Ps. lxvi, 3, margin. After the completion of the tabernacle, Aaron and his four sons were consecrated to the priesthood to minister unto the Lord in His appointed way (Ex. xxviii, 1; Lev. viii, 1, 2; Ex. xxx, 9).

2. "And there went out fire from the Lord and devoured them, and they died before the Lord." Thus at the very beginning of the priesthood Jehovah made it very plain that he would have a whole hearted service or none. So also at the beginning of the church in the case of Ananias and Sapphira (Acts v, 5, 10). He showed plainly how He hates deceit and half heartedness. He does not often judge so swiftly and terribly, but such cases show us His mind on these things and how He will act in the judgment.

3. "Then Moses said unto Aaron, This is it that the Lord spake, saying, I will be sanctified in them that come nigh Me, and before all the people I will be glorified. And Aaron held his peace." That they were to be a holy people unto the Lord is the oft repeated requirement from Ex. xix, 6, 22 onwards. Jesus Himself in His great intercessory prayer said, "For their sakes I sanctify Myself that they also might be sanctified through the truth" (John xvii, 19). C. H. M. says that whether the fire came to express approval or displeasure the priest had only to worship, and that as priests of God we must rise superior to all the claims and influences of nature and of earth. When Ezekiel's wife was taken away by a stroke, he was forbidden to cry or mourn (Ezek. xiv, 16-18). Yet Jesus wept at the grave of Lazarus. In Ps. xxxix, 9, we have a parallel to Aaron's silence, "I was dumb, I opened not my mouth because thou didst it." See also Ps. xlvi, 10.

4, 5. "Come near, carry your brethren from before the sanctuary out of the camp." Thus their bodies, as in the case of Ananias and Sapphira, were buried, but what about Nadab and Abihu? We never bury people, strictly speaking—we bury the bodies or temples in which they sojourned for a season. It has been a great comfort to me to think of this since ever I grasped the fact that if my body ever has a burial I will not be there that day, but absent from the body and present with the Lord, with Christ, which is far better (Phil. i, 21, 23; II Cor. v, 8). There is a vast difference between being cut off from further service on earth as a saved person, and being forever cut off from all possibility of being saved. Some of the believers at Corinth were sick, and some died, because of transgression (I Cor. xi, 30). It is plainly stated in I Cor. iii, 14, 15, that it is possible to have rewards for service, and it is possible to lose one's works and yet be saved.

6. "Uncover not your heads, neither rend your clothes." Mourning ofttimes has in it a large element of rebellion against God. This we must desperately resist, lest we find fault with God. We must even take sides with God, even though his chastenings fall on those who are dearest to us. If we love our loved ones more than we love God, we are not worthy of Him. The greatest lover must have the greatest love, and in every dark and trying hour we must still hold to this—"God is love," and His ways are just and true.

7. "And ye shall not go out from the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, lest ye die, for the anointing oil of the Lord is upon you." Because they were the anointed priests of the Lord, chosen to minister unto Him, they were to keep themselves wholly for Him. The Spirit says, through Peter, that believers are a holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God by Jesus Christ (I Pet. ii, 5, 9); a royal priesthood to show forth His praises. In Eph. iv, 30, we read that we are not to grieve the Holy Spirit of God, by whom we are sealed unto the day of redemption. We should never desire in any way to go out from His service who hath called us with such a holy calling—never in any way be conformed to the world which lieth in the wicked one, but anointed with the same Spirit who anointed Him walk in His steps, going about doing good (Acts x, 38).

8, 9. "And the Lord spake unto Aaron, saying, Do not drink wine nor strong drink, thou nor thy sons with thee, when ye go into the tabernacle of the congregation, lest ye die." In this so called temperance lesson we only now at the close of the lesson come upon the strong drink question, and here it is in the form of a prohibition laid upon the servants of the Lord when on duty. A good word for the unsaved who are given to drink is found in I Cor. vi, 10, "Nor thieves nor covetous nor drunkards shall inherit the kingdom of God." A good word for saved people inclined to indulge themselves is that in Rom. xiv, 21, "It is good neither to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor anything whereby thy brother stumbleth or is offended or is made weak." The story of Rechabites in Jer. xxxv is a helpful one in this connection. As believers we are to live only "unto Him who loveth us" and "do all to the glory of God" (Rev. i, 5, R. V.; I Cor. x, 31). This should settle all difficulties.

10. "And that ye may put difference between holy and unholy, and between unclean and clean." They were, as a whole nation, severed from other people, that they might be the Lord's (Lev. xx, 26). In Egypt, and the night they left Egypt, the Lord put a difference between His people and those who were not His (Ex. viii, 23; xi, 7). By nature and by practice all are sinners, and there is no difference as to the fact (Rom. iii, 22, 23) till the sinner receives Jesus and comes under the blood, then he becomes a saved sinner, and because of this should have done with the unclean and unholy.

11. "And that ye may teach His children of Israel all the statues which the Lord hath spoken unto them by the hand of Moses." The order is always "Doing and teaching" (Mark vi, 30; Acts i, 1). Unless we ourselves are holy in our lives, our advice to others will not have much weight, for we will then be like the Pharisees, who say but do not (Math. xxiii, 3). But if, like Levi, we walk with God in peace and equity, we shall turn many away from iniquity (Mal. ii, 6).

To You

The Most Important

Matter demanding attention at this season is the condition of your blood.

Your health depends upon it, for as the quality and quantity of the blood vary, you are better or worse.

The blood conveys all the elements which go to make up the organs, nerves and tissues of the body, and carries away all dissolved, useless material.

Every bone, muscle, nerve and tissue, lives upon what the blood feeds to it.

ILLINOIS PICKINGS.

NEWS NOTES OF INTEREST FROM HERE AND THERE.

Reports by Telegraph of Important Happenings in Our Own State During the Past Few Days—News of Interest to the People of Illinois.

FREEPORT, Ills., July 6.—Telegrams of condolence from nearly every county in Illinois came to the widow of Speaker Meyer, and a number of beautiful floral tributes were received from friends throughout the state. The remains of the dead speaker were buried yesterday afternoon. Brief services were conducted at the Collman residence by Rev. E. P. Hill, D. D., pastor of the First Presbyterian church of Freeport, and Rev. Dr. John Mueller, president of the Presbyterian college at German Valley, Ills. A selected quartette rendered the music. Before the service an opportunity was given the friends from Chicago and other cities to view the remains for the last time. Friends were present from all parts of the state to the number of several hundred.

A train from Chicago brought down a large number of people to do honor to the dead citizen. Among those from the World's fair city was Mayor Swift, Lieutenant Governor and Mrs. Gill were in attendance, as were also a large number of legislators from the central and southern part of the state. The active pall-bearers were: Oscar E. Heard, state's attorney and a classmate of the speaker; Postmaster F. Charles Donohue, O. L. Schulte, H. J. Moogk, Alfred Freed and Louis Karcher, the latter of Chicago, all personal friends of the deceased.

The honorary pall-bearers were: Senators Munson, Aspinwall, Fisher, O'Brien, Willoughby, Mahoney and Bartling, and Representatives McCarthy, Stoskopf, Shanahan, Muir, Slade, Schubert, Hogan, Dudley, Curley, Mahoney, Brannen, Callahan, Needles, Berry, Crafts, Cochran, Mauritzon and J. W. White, of Whiteside. Grand Regent John Kiley, of the Royal Arcanum, and a large delegation of that order from Chicago attended the funeral, as did also the Freeport councils.

Will Neither Deny Nor Affirm.

SPRINGFIELD, Ills., July 5.—Regarding a story in the Chicago papers of alleged bribery of members of the legislature, and that Governor Altgeld had sufficient evidence against fifteen members to send them to the penitentiary, and that a special session of the Sangamon county grand jury would be convened to consider the cases, Governor Altgeld declined to affirm or deny the truth of the story. He says there is plenty of time for him to talk when the matter is ready for publication, if ever that time arrives.

Brings Suit for Libel.

GALENA, Ills., July 8.—Mrs. Mary Ward Smith has instituted suit in the circuit court against Robert J. Garner, a dealer in shoes, for libel. The plaintiff, it is alleged, owed Garner $7.50. After having made several presentations of the bill Garner displayed prominently in his store a poster which read: "Mrs. Mary Smith owes me $7.50." An itemized copy of the bill followed. Mrs. Smith sues for $2,000.

Civic Federation at Work.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., July 5.—The Springfield Civic Federation, at the meeting of the city council, presented a communication calling attention to the alleged fact that the police were not enforcing the ordinances relative to the Sunday closing of saloons and regarding gamblers and houses of ill fame. Mayor Woodruff in consequence has issued strict orders to the police to enforce said ordinances.

Illinois Encampment Begins.

SPRINGFIELD, Ills., July 8.—A seven weeks' encampment of the Illinois National Guard has begun at Camp Lincoln, near this city. The Second regiment and Cavalry troop A, of Chicago have arrived and will remain in camp a week.

Representative Remann Better.

VANDALIA, Ills., July 5.—Congressman Remann's condition has improved somewhat. Mr. Remann has exhibited wonderful vitality throughout his illness, and on this Dr. Hughes bases his only hope.

Cases of Smallpox Reported.

SPRINGFIELD, Ills., July 5.—The state board of health reports two cases of smallpox at Monnd City, Pulaski county; two cases at Villa Ridge, Pulaski county, and three cases at Aurora, Kane county.

Notes of the State.

Figures of men in the window panes of Robert Dick's house are mystifying the people of Rochelle, Ill.

Samuel Wilson secured a verdict at Springfield, Ills., against the Mobile and Ohio railroad for $5,000 damages for injuries received in a grade crossing accident.

George Masten and Elmer Young were held at Tuscola, Ills., charged with attempting to wreck an Illinois Central train June 24.

Joseph Greer fell from a water tank at Rushville, Ills., and crushed his skull so badly he died shortly afterward.

The dome of the Illinois state fair building for farm and orchard products will be that of the World's fair horticultural building.

SPEAKER JOHN MEYER DEAD.

Presiding Officer of the Illinois House of Representatives.

FREEPORT, July 4.—Hon. John Meyer, speaker of the lower house of the Illinois legislature, died here at 6:45 yesterday morning at the home of his father-in-law, C. O. Collman, where he had been since the close of the legislature. The end was rather unexpectd, as his illness was not regarded as serious. Death was due to liver trouble and enlargement of the spleen. He was born in the kingdom of Holland, Feb. 27, 1852, went to Chicago when 1½ years old, attended the public schools there and was graduated from the Northwestern university. He afterwards took a course in a college of law, and was admitted to practice in 1879. He was chosen a member of the legislature in 1884, and had served ever since. He was elected speaker of the house in January last. He married the daughter of C. O. Collman, of this city, in 1881, and his wife and one child, a daughter, survive. The remains will be interred here.

CHICAGO, July 4.—Universal regret was expressed in this city among those who knew him when the news of the death of Speaker Meyer was received. Every one had a word of praise for the dead man, and the high regard in which he was held was evidenced in many ways. The Cook county members of the legislature met at the Great Northern hotel last evening and adopted resolutions highly eulogistic of the public services and private character of the deceased. Among politicians the effect of the event on the legislature was eagerly discussed, and the general opinion was that the house would be thrown into an exciting contest for the speakership as soon as it reassembles.

Fall of a Grand Stand.

BUFFALO, July 5.—The Press Cycling club's meet at the driving park brought together a very large crowd of people, and the meet was marred by a bad accident. While the last race was in progress the grand stand collapsed, injuring nineteen of the occupants. Three sustained injuries which may result fatally. They are Frank Leymonvester, spine broken; John G. Heil, three ribs broken and internally hurt; Mrs. L. M. Elrick, both legs broken. Eight others sustained more or less severe fractures and contusions.

MISS FLAGG'S
LATEST NEW BOOK!
"A Prisoner of Hope."
COMPLETE IN ONE LARGE HANDSOME VOLUME.
Price, $1.25.

We heartily commend this new work, by Elizabeth E. Flagg, to all our friends. The narrative originated in her personal experience, two or three years ago, when she sought relief and restoration from the results of a painful accident. In that search she availed herself of a unique healer in New Jersey, whom she graphically described, at that time, in her weekly letters to this paper. The ideas created in her mind by that experience form the basis of this well-told story, and thoughtful readers will peruse it with interest. While all may not agree with its deductions, ministers of the Gospel, students in seminaries and intelligent home circles will find it pleasant food for thought. We sell it for $1.25 per copy postage prepaid.

Wild Waters Sweep Away All of Winona, Mo.

ELEVEN LIVES LOST IN THE FLOOD

Disaster That Was Like Shipwreck on Land—No Time to Get Out of the Line of the Torrent's Sweep, Which Occurs in the Night—Baxter Springs, Kan., Visited by a Cyclone That Sends Five Persons to Eternity.

SPRINGFIELD, Mo., July 8.—A storm awful in its terror and total in its work of destruction has wiped out the town of Winona, on the Current river branch of the Kansas City, Fort Scott and Memphis railway in Shannon county, at 10:30 o'clock at night. It is known that eleven persons lost their lives and eight men are missing. The dead are: Rev. G. W. Duncan, Mrs. G. W. Duncan, Mattie Duncan, Mrs. Crawford (daughter of G. W. Duncan), Crawford Gert, George Nevins, Norma Nevins, little daughter of Lloyd Wright, Maggie Cannon, John Morris, and Mrs. Nevins. The bodies of Rev. G. W. Duncan, his wife and daughter, and George Nevins, Norma Nevins, and the Wright girl were recovered, but the others have not been found.

Like a Shipwreck on Land.

A slashing rain preceded by a fierce wind set in at 9 o'clock at night. While the wind ceased the rain increased intensely, until at 10 o'clock it became a warring tumult. At 10:15 four feet of water was on the streets. In fifteen minutes more the buildings could no longer stand the strain and began to careen and fall to pieces in the waters. Vivid flashes of lightning pierced the downpour, which came like the falls of Niagara. Houses were smashed and in the water were hundreds of men, women and children, dashed about like corks. It was like a shipwreck on land. Cries of terror and shouts for help from the struggling people clinging to pieces of timber made the scene one that baffled intelligent effort to save the helpless. The strong current rushing down the ravine or valley carried many to higher land and places of safety. When the torrent had to a degree subsided the men who had seen to their own families turned their attention to others, and by 3 o'clock in the morning the worst was over.

Shelter for the Unfortunates.

But those who escaped found themselves homeless, without food and nearly without clothing. As soon as the destroyed telegraphic communication was restored Mayor B. F. Evans telegraphed to this city for aid. The inhabitants of Winona are now scattered among farm houses, or have gone to neighboring towns. In all thirty buildings were destroyed, most of them being dwelling houses. The total loss is about $80,000. At places the water was twelve feet deep in Winona. It is now known that Birchtree, eight miles west of Winona, had its greatest storm at the same hour. No lives were lost there, however, but Cortez & Fisher, lumber dealers, lost $2,000 by the destruction of their huildiug. Other buildings were slightly damaged there.

The Way the Flood Came Down.

Winona, in point of population and business, was the most important town in Shannon county. The railway that passes through the town follows a valley east and west and a deep ravine goes out northwest toward the river. Along the sides of this ravine or valley were clustered houses occupied hy the families of the men who had heen employed in the Ozark Lumber company's sawmill. When the clouds opened on the hills the water rushed dowd this ravine, carrying all before it. The railway track was torn up and residence houses and husiness huildings were swept along with it into the torrent.

DONE BY THE DREAD CYCLONE.

Five Killed and a Number Injured in Kansas—Narrow Escape of Miners.

BAXTER SPRINGS, Kas., July 8.—Baxter Springs was laid in ruins, five people were killed and twenty others badly wounded by a twisting cyclone that struck the town at 6 p. m. A complete list of dead, is as follows: Sallie Wehster, aged 70; Florence Webster, aged 36; Ralph Wehster, aged 3: Thomas Shields' hahy, H. Hihbs. The injured are: Mrs. Neal, hoth collar bones hroken and internal injuries: James Neal, scalp wound and internal injuries; Roy Webster, right arm broken, right hip and left elbow dislocated; Mrs. Martha Smith, hip dislocated and internal injuries; Ella Smith, internal injuries; George A. Dicker, head injured; three members of A. Sharpe's family, badly injured; Mrs. Thomas Shields, living nine miles south, fatally injured; A. G. Hamback, head iujured.

There seem to have heen two currents of wind which struck the town, one from the north and the other from the west, and they met near the M. E. church, joined forces and turned east, doing serious damage to property before meeting, but after coming together the destruction was complete. The northern current did comparatively little damage before meetiag, but that from the west hlew 23 freight cars from the track, rcduced to kindling wood the M. E. and Christian churches, and did a varied assortment of damage to other huildings. The memhers of the Webster family, recently from Nebraska, the mother aged 70, daughter aged 36, and the grandson, aged 3, were killed by lightning. Another son had his leg broken and his shoulder dislocated, and will probably die. M. B. Hibbs, aged ahout 60, died from excitement, falling dead in onc of the stores on Military street.

The western part of Lyon township had a touch of perhaps the same twister. It struck the farm and house of Thomas Shields, of Lyon, demolishing his house and barns. Mrs. Shields and two children were in the building at the time the storm struck it. One of the ohildren, a 2-year-old babe, was killed, the other child's leg was broken and Mrs. Shields had her shoulder dislocated and is injured in her back and spine. She will die. One or two other farms iu the immediate vicinity of Mr. Shields' were damaged in fences, trees, etc. W. I. Areher was found dead on the Nolan farm in Sheridan township. It is supposed that he was drowned while crossing a creek.

Forty miners at work in mine No. 47, of the Kansas and Texas Coal company at Weir City, had no knowledge of the storm until the mine was deluged with torrents of water from above. All had narrow escapes from drowning, and every mule in the mine was drowned. The rain was the most violent ever known, resemhling a cloudburst, and the entire country was flooded. Reports of further fatalities seem almost certain when the roads are opened up.

CHICAGO ALSO STORM-SWEPT.

Furious Wind and Rain Closes a Hot Day —Loss of Life Rumored.

CHICAGO, July 8.—One of the most furious wind and rain storms known in this vicinity for years passed over the clty early last evening. The day had been intensely hot, and there were many people out on the lake in sail hoats, and as the storm came suddenly it was feared that several lives were lost. The different lifesaving crews were husy all evening.

The only lives lost supposedly were those of Charles Klein, Johu Ross and Charles L. Shook, who were out in the lake in a rowboat and are missing, and August Brodlow, towerman on the Pan-Handle tracks at Ada street, who was fatally hurt by the tower being blown over. Lightning struck several houses in the outskirts and two small residences were blown over, hut nohody hurt. Damage to telegraph and telephone wires was universal.

Dispatches are full of storm havoc. At Pine Bluff, Ark., many huildings were damaged, and news is anxiously awaited from the surrounding couutry. Dispatches from many points in the central and northern portions of Illinois and southern Wisconsiu tell of furious storms. At Savanna, Ills., the storm almost reached the proportions of a cyclone. At Peoria several buildings were unroofed, one three-story frame block completely destroyed and much other damage done. Wires are all down at Milwaukee.

From all points the story is of damage to buildings, trees, and crops, but no loss of life is reported. In many sections of Kansas and Missouri rains amounting to cloudhursts have fallen. In Georgia at Willard's Station every house was wrecked and two negroes killed; many farm houses were also wrecked. The list of deaths will reach ten and of wounded twenty.

SIX DROWNED IN LAKE GENEVA.

Among Them the Assistant Physician of the Elgin Insane Hospital.

LAKE GENEVA, Wis., July 8.—A heavy storm passed over here, which unroofed buildings and demoralized shade trees. The hail broke a large amount of glass and ruined corn, oats and what little fruit there was. The steam launch Dispatch was chartered just before the storm by a party consisting of Father Hogan and Miss Hogan, of Harvard, Ills., and a man thought to he Dr. Franz, assistaut superintendent of the Elgin (Ills.) insane asylum, and his wife and child. They were caught by the storm and hoat was swamped and all on board were drowned.

LATER.—The names of the drowned are as follows: Dr. John E. Hogan, assistant physician at the northern Illinois hospital for the insane; Mrs. John E. Hogan, wife of the doctor; James Hogan, aged 3, son of Dr. Hogan; Rev. Father Hogan, pastor of the Catholic church at Harvard, Ills.; Miss Hogan, of Harvard, Ills., sister of Dr. Hogan; John Preston, engineer of the launch, Lake Geneva.

Zouaves Drill at St. Louis.

ST. LOUIS, July 6.—The feature at the interstate drill was the contest of the zouave companies. The competitors were the Hale Zouaves, of Kansas City; Neeley's Zouaves, of Memphis; Chicago Zouaves, and Walsh Zouaves. All put up pretty drills, the tactics heing on the "as you will" order, and consisting of unique and fancy movements, each company having its own specialties.

Tired Women

Should stop and consider the dangers which threaten them because of their weakness, languor and lack of ambition. Thousands of women find their strength unequal to the demands of duty. And yet there is no escape from the incessant round of care and toil. They must have strength. How shall it be given? By building up their systems through purified, enriched and vitalized blood. Hood's Sarsaparilla will give them strength because it will make their blood pure and enable it to feed the nerves upon proper nourishment. It will create an appetite, tone the stomach and invigorate every organ. It is what tired women need.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Is the Only

True Blood Purifier

Prominently in the public eye today. It feeds the nerves on pure blood.

Hood's Pills act harmoniously with Hood's Sarsaparilla. 25c.

Wounds on Plants.

The wounds made on growing plants of trees should always be protected by some application as soon as they become dry enough for it to adhere well. Common paint is better than neglect, but any cement of the character of grafting wax is better. One of the best substances, both for its neatness and its long adhesion to the surface of the wound, is the well known shellac varnish, consisting of a strong solution of shellac in alcohol. To prevent the neglect which so often occurs because the owner has nothing of the kind on hand it is well to have such a preparation made in time, says Country Gentleman:

Procure such a wide mouthed bottle as the one represented and insert a brush to be used in applying it by making the cork a part of the handle. This will prevent drying up, and it will be always ready.

Those who have time to attend to it may make the turpentine and rosin mixture by using a half pound each of rosin and tallow melted together, adding a spoonful of turpentine when it is cool, with two ounces of alcohol and an ounce of water, heating again and stirring rapidly. This is a good application, but is not so delicate for fine plants as the shellac. If it becomes too thick, add alcohol.

Large Versus Small Hives.

In Bee Gleanings Mr. Ernest R. Root gives this concise recapitulation of what has been learned from the discussion of large versus small hives:

There are more beekeepers using large brood nests than we were aware of. Many more favor ten frame hives in preference to the eight frame than we supposed, although, if we could count the hands of those using the eight frame hives and those using the ten frame hive, I think we should probably find three of the former to one of the latter. It seems probable that some are using too small brood nests, say, of eight frame size, when they might possibly get better results with 10 and 12 frame sizes.

In colder climates, especially where there is one main honey flow in June and July, with very little fall flow, the eight frame size seems to be used most. In warmer localities, in many portions of the south, in Cuba, where the seasons are prolonged, and where there are months when the bees can gather honey, instead of weeks, as it is with us up here in the north, a large brood nest of 10, 12 and 16 frame capacity seems to have the preference. Instead of beekeepers running from ten down to eight, as formerly, the tendency now seems to be from the small size to the large. The double eight frame hive of 16 frames is too large, since 12 frames seem to afford the maximum capacity for most localities.

Supply dealers will do a lot of growling because it will be a nuisance to keep so many sizes of hives in stock, each size necessitating special covers, special supers, special bottom bars and special honeyboards. How nice it would be if every beekeeper could use one size of hive, one kind of frame, one kind of everything! But no. There are too many notions that are at variance, too many localities with different resources, too many things in general, to make us all think and believe alike.

Storing Corn Fodder.

The possible loss from storing cut or shredded corn fodder or stover before it is fully dry, or when it has been wet by rains, is illustrated by a sample recently sent to the Illinois experiment station. This was nearly black in color, very acid and apparently had been nearly charred by excessive heating. The sender says that the top of the mow in which it was stored was of fair quality. His cows ate only sparingly of the blackened fodder, and its feeding value must have been greatly reduced.

Many prefer to cut timothy just after the blossoms have gone off.

Constipation, an exceedingly dangerous condition of the bowels, is nearly always the result of carelessness and inattention to the calls of nature. To correct irregularities and restore healthy movements, the best aperient is Ayer's Pills. They are easy to take.

Summer Excursion Tickets.

MASONIC CHART.

ILLUSTRATING THE RELATION OF SOME OF THE DEGREES AND RITES IN FREEMASONRY TO EACH OTHER.

The accompanying chart represents one hundred and forty two degrees.

1. The American Rite of 13 degrees;
2. The Scotch Rite of 33 degrees;
3. The Egyptian Rite of 96 degrees.
4. The Mystic Shrine of one degree.
5. The Eastern Star of 5 degrees for Master Masons and for women. These are side degrees, and not genuine masonry.

The Symbolic degrees, or Blue Lodge of three degrees, are common to every Masonic rite, whether American, Scotch, or Egyptian, or whichever of the Masonic rites, named in Mackey's Masonic Encyclopedia one may choose to investigate.

This chart shows in the Blue Lodge the position of the Worshipful Master and some of the other officers of the lodge. Several positions of the candidate who is being initiated are also shown. In the Master Mason's degree is recognized the murder, burial and resurrection scene so full of religious significance to Freemasons.

Scotch Rite Masonry Illustrated. 2 vols. Per vol., cloth, $1.00; paper, 65c.
The complete illustrated ritual of the entire Scottish Rite, comprising all the Masonic degrees from 3rd to 33rd inclusive. The first three degrees are common to all the Masonic Rites, and are fully and accurately given in "Freemasonry Illustrated." Vol. I comprises the degrees from 3rd to 18th inclusive.
Vol. II comprises the degrees from 19th to 33rd inclusive, with the signs, grips, tokens and passwords from 1st to 33rd degree inclusive.

Hand-Book of Freemasonry. 274 pages, flexible cloth, 50c.
By E. Ronayne, Past Master of Keystone Lodge No. 639, Chicago. Gives the complete standard ritual of the first three degrees of Freemasonry.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. 110 pages, paper, 25c.
The genuine old Morgan book republished.

Allyn's Ritual of Freemasonry. By Avery Allyn. Cloth, $5.00.
Contains the fully Illustrated Ritual of the Blue Lodge, Chapter Council and Commandery, 11 of the Scotch Rite Degrees, several Masonic side degrees and what is termed a Key to the Phi Beta Kappa, and the Orange Societies.

Duncan's Masonic Ritual and Monitor. Cloth, $2.50.
Profusely illustrated with explanatory engravings, and containing the ritual and work of the order for the seven degrees, including the Royal Arch. Though extensively used as an Instruction Book and one of the best in the market, it is not as accurate as "Freemasonry Illustrated."

Richardson's Monitor of Freemasonry. Cloth, $1.25; paper, 75c.
Contains the ceremonies of Lodges, Chapters, Encampments, etc. Illustrated. Although extensively used in conferring the higher degrees, it is not only very incomplete but inaccurate especially as regards the first seven degrees, and as to the higher degrees it gives but a description and general idea of the degrees rather than the full ritual.

HELLMAN'S CRIME.

He Takes His Whole Family to Eternity with Him.

CHICAGO,, July 6.—Frederick Hellmann, a well-to-do mason contractor, murdered his wife and four children and then killed himself. It was first supposed that Hellmann and his wife and children met death by accident, but it developed at the coroner's inquest that it was wholesale murder, calmly planned, and that the man intended to kill himself and end the existence of the members of his family. The dead man and his victims are: Frederick Hellmann, aged 37; Mrs. Ida Hellmann, aged 32; Fred Hellmann, Jr., 11; Ida Hellmann, 10; William Hellmann, 7; Hedwig Hellmann, 3. The motive for the crime may never be known, but it is supposed that the act was that of a madman, as Hellmann, about ten years ago, had a sun stroke, from which he never recovered completely.

Suspicion was first aroused in the morning by the fact that the house in which the Hellmanns lived was tightly closed long after the usual hour for the family to be astir. The mother and married sister of Hellmann, who lived next door, attempted to break into the house, but were unable to do so. They finally managed to force an entrance through a window that had been left unfastened, and made their way to one of the bedrooms, where the dead bodies of all the family were found. The house was so full of gas that the two women were nearly overcome, and it was only after it had been opened up that it was found possible to turn off the gas, which was streaming from an open jet.

The relatives and all the neighbors at once concluded that the deaths had been the result of an accident, and the police adhered to the same opinion. The open gas jet was just above the bed in which the mother and one of the children lay, and it was supposed that one of them had during the night accidentally hit the stopcock and knocked it open. At the inquest, however, an entirely different complexion was given to the affair by Charles, the brother of Hellmann, who produced a letter written by the murderer and suicide late on the previous evening, in which he clearly stated his purpose of killing himself.

He gave no intimation of the fact, however, that he was meditating the death of his family also. He spoke of the window through which the women had crawled as the only way in which his brother could gain admission to the house, and said that he had left it open for that purpose. The brother did not receive the letter until the afternoon, and went directly to the inquest.

Bob Fitzsimmons Acquitted.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., July 4.—The defense in the trial of Bob Fitzsimmons was closed with the testimony of Dr. G. A. Lyon, of New York. From the description given he said he would judge that Riordan was affected with hypertrophy, which gives the heart a spasmodic action. He thought the kidneys were affected with Bright's disease; also from the description of Riordan's condition he would judge he had an enlargement of the liver and an affection of the left lung. He had warned Riordan not to drink alcoholic beverages and not to engage in violent exercise. The arguments were made and the case given to the jury, which rendered a verdict of not guilty after three hours' deliberation.

Colorado Democrats Resolve.

DENVER, July 3.—At the afternoon session of the Democratic mass-meeting resolutions were adopted dissenting from the financial policy of the present administration, opposing the issuing of interest-bearing bonds in the time of peace and indorsing the action of the Democrats of Illinois in calling for a national Democratic free silver convention. Ex-Governor Adams made a speech in which he declared the only hope for free silver lay in the Democratic party. All the signs point to the fact that the two candidates for president next year would be a gold Republican and a silver Democrat, and the people would choose between them.

Inter-Collegiate Prohibitionists.

CLEVELAND, July 5.—At the convention of the inter-collegiate Prohibition convention the first business was the election of officers, which resulted as follows: President, Clay Herrick of Berea college, Kentucky; vice president, F. W. Barber of the University of Wisconsin; treasurer, Fred S. Nave, now of Ohio university, but who will go to the Northwestern university at Evanston, Ills., next year. The secretary is to be elected by the executive committee on the recommendation of the convention. John Elliott of the Yale Law school was suggested for the place.

Kentucky Populistic Ticket.

LOUISVILLE, July 6.—The Populist state convention declared for free silver and nominated the following ticket: Governor, Thomas I. Pettit, of Daviess; lieutenant governor, John J. Blair, of Nicholas; treasurer, M. R. Gardiner, of Hardin; auditor, C. H. Dean, of Woodford; register of the land office, J. E. Quicksall, of Wolf; attorney general, S. M. Priton, of Hart; secretary of state, Don Singletary, of Hickman; United States senator, Clarence S. Bate, of Jefferson.

BRYAN REPLIES TO A HEARER

Who Was Inclined to Think Statesmen Could Change Their Minds.

CINCINNATI, July 8.—Hon. W. J. Bryan, of Nebraska, spoke on bimetallism upon the invitation of the Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce. He spoke fully two hours to an audience most of which was not in sympathy with him. The applause of his distinctive free coinage arguments came from the workingmen. Nevertheless the entire auclence gave him profoundly respectful and admirlng attention, and greeted some brilliant passages in his speech with great applause.

A gold standard interlocutor in the audience gave him frequent opportunity for brilliant repartee. He criticised Secretary Carlisle's five propositions made at Bowling Green and made his usual direct argument. An interlocutor in the audience said: "Statesmen may change their minds." Bryan replied: "They may change their hearts, but having once uttered an eternal truth they cannot make it follow them in their false meanderings."

HEAVY FAILURE AT CHICAGO.

Dernberg, Glick & Hornor, of the "Leader," Go to the Wall.

CHICAGO, July 5.—The firm of Dern berg, Glick & Hornor, proprietors of the "Leader" store, have failed. The stock, fixtures, lease, teams, and other property of the firm are in the hands of the creditors on chattel mortgages securing claims aggregating $225,000. An inventory of the stock is expected to show a valuation of $400,000 or $450,000. The National Bank of Illinois, this city, is the principal creditor, holding nearly all the chattel mortgages. The attorneys of the concern said that in their opinion the firm would in a short time be able to resume. It employed 450 people, and it is claimed did a business aggregating $2,000,000 a year.

CALLAPSE OF A BRIDGE.

Four Fatally Hurt and Forty More Injured—Town a Hospital.

GOSHEN, July 5.—The sidewalk of the Iron bridge at Bristol, ten miles north of Goshen, fell with 100 people, who were watching tub races on the St. Joseph river. Forty persons were hurt, many seriously. The town is a hospital.

Those most seriously hurt were: Dr. C. E. Dutton, Clyde Trumbull, Mrs. Albert Strong and Herbert Nicholson. These may die. There are fully forty others who sustained more or less serious cuts and bruises, but will recover. The scene immediately after the collapse of the bridge was one of the wildest excitement.

Riot at a Parade.

BOSTON, July 5.—The Fourth of July parade of the patriotic societies of Boston and vicinity at East Boston ended in a pitched battle between some of the paraders and the spectators, in which sticks, stones, and revolvers were used with fatal effect. John W. Wills, a laborer, was shot and instantly killed; Michael Boyle had his head split open by a club, and now lies dying; a young man named Stewart had his nose cut off with a sabre; Patrick Kelley sustained a severe scalp wound, and officer A. S. Bates was hit in the mouth by a brick thrown by an unknown person and lost several teeth, besides suffering from severe lacerations.

Made an Assignment.

ST. LOUIS, July 8.—The Hart & Duff Hat company of this city made an assignment, naming Francis J. McMaster, an attorney, as assignee. Liabilities are placed at $39,000 and assets at $52,500. The assignment is subject to a deed of trust, securing three preferred creditors, to whom $11,000 is due.

Three Dead by a Boiler Explosion.

SIOUX CITY, Ia., July 6.—The Journal's Howard (S. D.) special says: J. D. Lawson, senior member of the firm of J. D Lawson & Co., proprietors of the mill wrecked by the explosion Tuesday, died from the effects of his injuries. The list of dead is now three.

Professor Moore Takes Charge.

WASHINGTON, July 6.—Professor Willis L. Moore of Chicago, the newly appointed chief of the weather bureau, has taken charge of his new office.

THE DEATH RECORD.

EDWARD B. HARPER, president Mutual Reserve Fund Life association, at New York.

JOSEPH P. SKELLY, well-known composer and song writer, at New York.

Darkness can only exist as the light departs; so the secret lodge can only exist as the light of Christianity declines.

Armed Europe seems to be waiting for the ultimate command of one man, and whether it shall be peace or war is the problem which the Czar of Russia alone and single-handed is to determine. One thing is certain, when the war does come it will be a struggle for national existence.

Dr. Talmage, whose sermon at Clear Lake, Iowa, on Sabbath the 7th, drew such an immense crowd, received, according to the newspapers reports, $500 for his sermon from the Milwaukee, Chicago and St. Paul railroad company. Excursion trains were run and the crowds that poured into Clear Lake would net the company quite a handsome profit. Besides, Dr. Talmage, in his sermon, embraced the opportunity to laud not the Sabbath but the two greatest Sabbath breaking forces in the land, the newspapers and the railroads.

Rev. Mojola Agbebi, an African missionary, home on vacation, writes to us from Congo Institute, Colwyn Bay, North Wales: "During my voyage to this place from Africa, the Rev. H. W. Johnston, of Clarinda, Iowa, a missionary from Freetown, Sierra Leone, placed a book on secret societies in my hand, and recommended your Association. I have read the book with great interest and abundant surprise. I desire now to know whether there is any one who can help by supplying me with books, newspapers, tracts, booklets, pamphlets, etc., on this subject, to circulate in West Africa, particularly in the British colonies where these secret societies have built and are building their nests and erecting their altars. If there is any one that can so help, I shall be glad to hear from you, and shall be grateful. I am pastor of a Baptist church in Lagos Yomba Land, West Africa. I am on a visit to England, through the kindness of friends, and shall return before the close of the year." We hope some of our readers who have means will be inspired to contribute for literature to sow this very important field.

Col. Geo. W. Bain, the matchless Kentucky orator, has this to say on the theory of evolution: "When I remember the years of Methuselah, and look about me and see men tottering under their three-score years and ten to-day, I am inclined to think that there has not been a steady evolution upward during the centuries. Down in Kentucky, some time ago, young Harry Clay, the son of our great Southern statesman, lay bleeding to death from a wound inflicted upon him in a drunken brawl by a liquor seller. In the same city at the same time the grandson of John J. Crittenden, one of the brightest men who ever graced the United States Senate, was also dying from injuries received while drunk. And at the same hour, the great grandson of Patrick Henry was in a prison cell, brought [illegible] by drink. Look at those great men way off there on the summit of fame, and then look at their offspring disgraced by drunkenness. My friends, I will leave others to determine whether man has by a process of evolution risen from an original brute condition. But the cases I have mentioned are not evolution but devolution."

We frequently get letters like this from Rev. E. E. Sims, pastor of the Congregational church, Dallas, Texas. "The principles of the Cynosure I heartily endorse. It is a necessary instrument by which you are able to turn on the light, and show up the false positions taken by secret societies. Our city is wholly given up to idolatrous lodge-worship. The lodge has taken in the women and the children as well as the men; it is a regular catch-penny, as well as a damnable evil. The churches cannot pay their pastors nor meet running expenses, not even our largest churches. The lodges are sapping the vital cords of our church life. We stand by and see it die, and in many instances never open our mouths to expose the deadly foe. This matter is magnifying itself in such alarming proportions that the ministers' union of this city were called to take some steps to prevent the lodge from utterly destroying the churches. The subject was discussed pro and con by them, and finally the committee on program brought in the subject, 'Can a man be a true Christian and live up to the mandates of secret fraternities?' To be sure, it was a warm debate; but the anti-lodge debaters won the laurels; and at the close of the meeting one brother minister said that he was a member of ten lodges, and he does not try to live up to all their requirements, so he pays his dues and fines and goes on. Lodge anniversaries almost invariably come on Sabbath. They meet, dress themselves in their lodge attire and parade the streets for hours with a brass band at their head, desecrating the holy Sabbath, and at the same time keeping a good many from the church worship on that day. But if the Lord will help me they shall hear me along these lines. I know right will win in the end."

The optimistic prophecy of Dr. Talmage, that in the present state of Christian civilization international war is no longer a possibility, sounds strange indeed in view of the lurid facts of the present year. We remember to have heard similar prophecies just before our last civil war, which filled more than a million graves with untimely dead. During this year two nations in Eastern Asia have been engaged in deadly conflict, and Japan, most under the influence of Christian civilization, has swept over China with uninterrupted conquest. Russia is massing her troops upon the borders of Korea, which together with the threatened collapse of Turkey may plunge all Europe into war before many months. Europe is now a great military camp with a standing army of nearly twenty-two and a half million. In our Hemisphere there are similar threatening war clouds. The revolutions in San Salvador, Samoa, Brazil, Nicaragua, Hawaii, Peru, Ecuador, and at the present moment in Cuba, together with the preparations for war [illegible] Chili and Argentina, prove that the time for beating swords into plowshares has not yet come. France is still pursuing her invasion of Madagascar and crossing England's path in Western Africa on questions of annexation. Our own country seems about to enter a social revolution on the labor question, and secret organizations like the A. P. A. and Jesuitry are nearing a collision.

Rev. Henry M. Bissell, a missionary at Fuerte, Mexico, under the American Board of Foreign Missions, writes us strongly remonstrating against the attitude of the Cynosure on the Hawaiian question. The editor is not aware that the Cynosure has taken any attitude on this question. We do not wish to be held responsible for all views expressed by correspondents. We are glad, however, to get Bro. Bissell's letter, for it gives us opportunity to say that the Cynosure is in deep sympathy with Hawaii in its struggle for republican government which is the highest and best form. We are glad also the Island desires shelter under the folds of the United States flag. We believe Hawaii is ready for self-government if what we read is true that the ratio of attendance upon the public schools is larger than in Illinois, and that over sixty per cent of the entire population attend church, and that there are none of the natives who cannot read and write. Indeed, we have read that Hawaii is today more Christian than New England. At their last Fourth of July celebration in Honolulu, Minister Willis, who presided, called down Joseph Cook, of Boston, who was a speaker, and who attempted to criticise President Cleveland's policy on Hawaiian affairs. We are inclined to think a partisan press was rather severe in its criticism of Mr. Cleveland, whose policy was not so much opposed to annexation, as to the revolutionary methods by which it was attempted.

THE NEW RELIGION.

BY REV. A. THOMSON.

After a somewhat careful reading of the Prince of India, I arrived at the conclusion that Wallace had one great purpose in view in writing that work. Namely, to show that the essentials of the Christian system might be summed up in a few words, and that by magnifying these essentials the twin demons of discord and superstition had taken possession of the church. I was the more interested in this, in that it corresponded with much in my own thought and observation. My own theology has been narrowed down to two propositions: thus I believe the sacred Scriptures to be the inspired Word of God, and I believe Jesus Christ the Son of God to be my Saviour and Master. If a man be honest these two articles carry with them all the rest; if he be not honest no iron-clad creed will make him so.

But if the true religion be simple in its essentials, so the new religion of our day is also exceeding simple. It has two articles that explain the sum of all that it teaches. Thus: 1. I believe in God. 2. I believe that every man should be a good fellow. Here all thought of the sacred Scriptures as the Word of God is left out, and of course there is no reference to Jesus the Christ, for he is not and never can be the God of this world. That the new religion is lodge religion no man who knows anything on the subject will for a moment deny. By their very nature most of the lodges can have no other. For to secure the support of intelligent decency there must be a belief in God. But to hold the Jew and the deist, the Lord of glory must be left out. So we have the simple but comprehensive creed of the lodge:

1st. I believe in God.

2nd. I believe that every man should be a good fellow. The extent to which this lodge religion has leavened the masses to-day may be readily ascertained by anyone applying this short creed to any man in general. Hold it up before them and they recognize it as theirs as a man recognizes his own face in the glass. But if you do but say lodge they will often be disposed to thank you for stating it so clearly. It is needless to say that this is not Christianity nor anything like it. It is the world worship of the world god and can only lead to death and despair.

THE IMAGE OF THE BEAST.

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

(Concluded)

AN IMPORTANT EXPOSITION OF PROPHECY.

In all of the semi-republican governments of the world there is a recognition of the rights of humanity. They have been largely modified by Christianity. They often "speak as a lamb," kindly and courteous. They also have the element of kingly power, which commands vast armies and navies and does not hesitate to shed the blood of men. This power "speaks as a dragon." They exercise all the authority of the first beast, and exalt and worship power as much as the old despotisms.

But it is said of the two-horned beast that "he doeth great signs, so that he should even make fire come down out of heaven on the earth in the sight of men. And he deceiveth them that dwell on the earth by reason of the signs that it was given him to do in the sight of the beast, saying to them that dwell on the earth that they should that hath the stroke of the sword and lived. And it was given to him to give breath to the image of the beast, that the image of the beast should both speak and cause that as many as should not worship the image of the beast should be killed." Rev. 13: 13–15

Now what are these signs? If I am right in the conclusion that the two-horned beast represents the semi-republican kingdoms of modern Europe, it ought to follow that one of the outgrowths of their development should be

SOME REMARKABLE PHENOMENA.

This is just what we observe; for along with the growth of civil liberty and representative governments there has been not only a vast increase in general knowledge but most marvelous discoveries in arts and sciences, and especially in the application of sciences to the interests of mankind. Living in the midst of them and understanding in some measure the forces that have been developed by these great discoveries, we do not call them miraculous; but if some of us had been told in our boyhood that we should live to read in all the dailies of our American cities the details of a battle in China, or an election in Australia, on the same day that it transpired; or if we had been told that men in Chicago and New York could converse with each other as readily as though they sat by the same fireside, we should have said "that would be nothing short of a miracle." No one in the last century would have believed that before a hundred years men, women and children would be riding in comfort and safety at the rate of seventy-five miles an hour. If anyone had predicted the phonograph, he would have been laughed at; if he had told us that our cities would be networks of electric railways, they would have sent him to the madhouse.

Who can witness the wonderful brilliancy of our electric lights, now extended all over the world, without feeling that "fire has indeed come down from heaven." Yet all these things are the outgrowths of that modern civilization which has grown up side by side with republican governments. And this leads us to

OUR MAIN INQUIRY,

What is the image of the beast? If, as we have attempted to show, "the beast" means despotic government, which has always been inspired by Satan, always used for oppression, always hostile to Christ, and always demanding supreme devotion to itself, then it will follow that the image of the beast ought to possess these qualities in a greater or less degree. If, as we have seen, this image was made by the direction of the two-horned beast, who also gave it power and authority "that the image of the beast should both speak and cause as many as should not worship the image of the beast should be killed," we ought to expect it to be an outgrowth of modern civilization, and to exist by the consent and co-operation of the modern governments of Europe as well as those of America.

Is there anything in modern society that substantially corresponds with this description? I answer that including the trades unions and the secret insurance societies, does meet the conditions set forth. Take Freemasonry, which was originally a trades union, as an example and an illustration of the system.

1. Its government is purely despotic. "The government, therefore, of the Grand Lodge is completely despotic. While a Grand Lodge exists, its edicts must be respected and obeyed without examination by its subordinate lodges." (Mackey's Lexicon, Art. Grand Lodges, Jurisdiction of.) "The first duty of the reader of this synopsis is to obey the edicts of his Grand Lodge. Right or wrong, his very existence as a Mason hangs upon obedience to the powers immediately set above him. The one unpardonable crime in a Mason is contumacy or disobedience." (Morris' Synopsis of Masonic Law, Webb's Monitor, page 196)

This despotic character runs through the entire system. It is essentially military. Many of the orders (and this feature is increasingly common) have a distinctively military organization, arms and drill. They are prepared for actual war. In all, the right of private judgment must be sacrificed. As the soldier may not go back of the commands of his officer, so the lodge member must be "obedient to the powers immediately set above him." But to give up this right of private judgment is to forswear our allegiance to God. It is practically to take another god as the supreme director of life.

2 It is inspired of Satan. As "the dragon gave power to the beast," so he does to his image. The entire secret lodge system and is as utterly diverse from and antagonistic to it as light is from darkness. The lodge system is purely selfish. Its motto is to love them that love us. Give to them from whom you expect as much or more in return. Christianity is purely benevolent. It knows no distinction of race, sect or order. It does good to all men as it has opportunity, "especially to them who are of the household of faith." The lodge excludes the poor, the maimed and the blind; but Christ specially invites them and makes them "kings and priests unto God." The lodge demands supreme loyalty to itself. It takes no account of any man's religion, so only he is true to his lodge covenant. He may be a Jew, a Christian, a Mohammedan or a pagan, provided nothing in his religion interferes with his relations to his order. Christ makes religion the supreme duty and business of life. He demands supreme loyalty to himself and forbids all that does not tend to his honor. The lodge appeals only to worldly motives. Christianity says, "Love not the world, neither the things that are of the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him." 1 John 2: 15 If Christianity is inspired of God, the lodge must be from the Evil One.

3 The despotic power of the lodge system is used for oppression and persecution. This is especially true of the trades unions, which not only compel their own members to labor or rest as they direct, but forbid non-union laborers from taking their places. In all cases the non-union men who claim and exercise their undoubted right to sell their labor in the best market obtainable are insulted, abused, and sometimes murdered, for refusing to obey laws to which they owe no allegiance.

4. Secret orders are hostile to Christ. Not only is their spirit essentially un-Christian, but many of them have forms of worship from which the

NAME OF CHRIST IS CAREFULLY EXCLUDED.

They have a religious worship which does not even pretend to be a Christian worship. This is especially true of Freemasonry and Odd-fellowship. "So broad is the religion of Masonry.... that the Christian, the Jew and the Mohammedan may and do harmoniously combine with the Buddhist, the Parsee and the Confucian, and the worshiper of deity under every form." (Webb's Monitor, page 285.) This necessitates a special rule for worship; hence "Prayer in a Masonic lodge should be of a general character, containing nothing offensive to any class of conscientious brethren. In theory the whole world of Masons are supposed to be present in every meeting of every lodge, and the instruction, moral and religious, should be directed accordingly." (Ibid. page 285.) This effectually excludes Christ, since, as a divine Saviour, he is offensive to Jews, Mohammedans and pagans.

5. All secret societies not only from their own members, but, to a large extent, the subjection of all others. They deny alike to the church, the state and to society at large all right to know what they are, what they do, or to make any investigation of their character. They resist such investigation as an invasion of their rights They often resort to violence and sometimes to murder in order to suppress all inquiry. They hold the pulpits in their grasp so completely that not one minister in fifty dares to publicly say what he thinks. They control the public press. Not one of our great journals dares open its columns to a discussion of their character or even tell well authenticated facts. The religious press is, as a rule, quite as subservient as the secular; and the churches, even when well informed as to their impious oaths and blasphemous ceremonies, admit their members to their communion, and accord to them positions of honor and power.

6. Though denying to the state any right of inspection or control, and though they are governments within the government, they which make them bodies corporate and empower them to hold property and funds. It has recently been proposed by one of the commissioners appointed by the President to investigate the labor troubles, that all trades unions shall be required to become bodies corporate; and that instead of dealing with individuals, all employers, whether persons, corporations or States, shall make their contracts with these secret orders. There needs but one step more, and all individual rights will have passed away, and "no man may buy or sell unless he has the mark of the beast or the number of his name."

When it is remembered that Freemasonry has death penalties, and has sometimes executed them, and that all secret orders are increasing in numbers, in arrogance, and in readiness to take the life of all who resist their demands, it should not seem difficult to believe that ere long all men's lives will be in jeopardy who will not bow to their authority. It is already true that the badge of membership in some secret order is well nigh universal. To those whose names are not in the book of life such membership is their religion. They worship the image of the beast and the dragon that gives him power. Meanwhile the third angel cries: "If any man worship the beast and his image....the same shall drink the wine of the wrath of God that is poured out unmixed in the cup of his anger." Rev. 14: 9, 10.

BIBLE LAW OF GIVING.

BY REV. J. M. FOSTER.

David said: "I will not offer to the Lord that which doth cost me nothing." That revealed the true character of his religion. He desired to give proof that he valued the forgiveness of sins by a Redeemer. Giving unto the Lord was a part of the homage which he delighted to render. It is ours to imitate the man after God's own heart.

The tithe law ought to be practiced in every congregation. This secures stated, frequent and cheerful contributions. A man whose income is $5 per week will dedicate fifty cents to God. That will mean $25 per year to Christ. Out of that he can assist in sustaining the oridnances here and send a portion to the missionaries. It would require only forty such contributors to raise $1,000 a year. A man whose income is $10 per week will devote $1 per week to God. That will be $52 per year. It would require twenty such to contribute $1,000 a year. A man whose income is $20 per week will dedicate $2 to Christ. That will be $100 a year. It would require ten such contributors to reach $1,000 a year.

Every individual believer is a priest unto God. The priests received the tithes in Israel. Each believer administers the tithe law for himself under Christ the High Priest, to whom it was devoted. And after he sets apart his own tithe it is holy unto the Lord, and it is only a question of judgment as to what department of the Lord's work has the prior claim. Do not say the Lord requires us to give as he has prospered us, as that does away with system in giving. Your contribution is to be each week every Sabbath. That gives periodicity and connects it with worship. And the tithe of the greater or less income is the spiritual sacrifice—the firstling of the flock that you offer unto God. Do not say that our contributions are to be spontaneous, and therefore cannot be regulated by law. We are to keep the Sabbath freely, cheerfully, spontaneously. But the Sabbath law is none the less binding. We are to engage in family worship spontaneously. And yet it is to be observed with regularity morning and evening.

And we are to give willingly, not grudgingly, of necessity, for God loveth a cheerful giver. The Greek word cheerful is hilarion, and from that comes our word hilarious. The Christian gives with a swing, with a glad and leaping heart. And the tithe law regulates the swing, as the swinging pendulum is the regulator of the clock. The believer is to sing praise to God with a loud noise, skillfully with a joyful heart. He is to give with a glad heart unto the Lord. The tithe is the law of his giving. Every believer who repudiates that law and withholds his tithe from the Lord will soon find that he has robbed himself. God's providences are against him. He loses what he has.

THE TRUE SOURCE OF A NATION'S GREATNESS.

BY PAUL B. PHILLIPS, OF WHEATON COLLEGE.

"Woe to the country," said Methernich, "whose condition and institutions no longer pro duce great men to manage its affairs." A nation is great in its leaders. Some men possess a mighty influence in molding sentiment. Some astonish us with marvelous inventions. Some have great minds for the science of government. What glorious memories have Cromwell, Shakespeare, Milton, Bunyan, Newton, Washington, Lincoln, and a hundred others, left us? How far would civilization have now advanced if such talented men as they had not taken upon their shoulders the labors which they were able and willing to perform for their country?

Bismarck, in addressing the students of Germany on his eightieth birthday, said: "There have always been conflicts in Germany; and to-day's party divisions are the after effects of the peasants' wars. Without fighting there is no life. Without our internal conflicts we should eventually come to the condition of the Chinese and lapse into a fossilized state." So Germany's greatest statesman recognizes the fact that public agitation over public questions is a source of her greatness.

In the early history of our country our fathers found an open parliament of the greatest benefit. The town meeting proved itself a most valuable help to the New Englanders in their contest with British despotism. The British understood the value of these meetings to the colonies, and Parliament enacted a law prohibiting the holding of town meetings and sent troops to enforce the law. The Americans also knew the value of the town meeting which enabled them to understand their rights, and answered that very enactment of Parliament with the battles of Bunker Hill and Lexington. The town meeting was the un-partisan, political school of New England. The interest which the citizen had in himself, his home and his neighbors impelled him to favor such measures as he felt would redound to the good of all. Such debates as were held in the meeting fired each citizen with patriotic interest in his country's welfare. And keeping interest awakened in the individuals of a country is like keeping the nerves of the body awake. If the nerves of a human organism become dead, the body will not move or feel pains which ought to be removed. Neither can a disinterested citizen have any care whether he votes for the best interests of his country.

De Toqueville thought that Anglo-Saxon America owes its very existence to the town meeting. It would be hard at any rate to prove that the town meeting was not a main source of our freedom. If our second century of self-government is to go on safely and prosperously, there must be some renewal of that old town meeting spirit of agitation which enabled a handful of farmers to repulse the invading armies of Great Britain.

However, a nation is most exalted by its Christian principles. Spain, insignificant, dwarfed in power, lies a smouldering heap; while the small country, once her opponent, whom she so mercilessly persecuted, Holland, stands a bright and shining light among the nations of Europe. France and her Huguenots, whom she persecuted and massacred. Ah! in the after history of France we see the sequel of so much bloodshed and ungoverned rage. As the Huguenot blood was eradicated from the veins of France, France weakened and has never yet attained the position she might have reached in literature, government and happy homes.

The Reformation in Germany placed her at the head of the literature of the world. England's Christian standard, bought with the blood of many martyrs, has widened her borders till the sun never sets upon all of her possessions. The Puritan blood, which coursed through the veins of this country for the first time in 1820, makes every American a peer of the kings of Europe, and our national supremacy thereby stands second to none. History itself shows that great nations have had their great men; that the great men were, as a rule, produced in times or places of agitation; that agitation produces patriotism; and that a nation's greatness and durability can largely be determined by the measure with which it believes the Bible, and the religion which has Christ and no earthly authority as its corner-stone.

SECRET SOCIETIES UNCHRISTIAN.

They are un-Christian. 1. Un-Christian in spirit. It is not their intent or design to do good to all men as they have opportunity. Their spirit is that of the priest and Levite, who saw the wounded man, failed to help him, and passed by on the other side. The spirit of Christianity is that of a good Samaritan, who had compassion on the poor sufferer and afforded him all the help possible; and this, too, not because he was a Samaritan, or a Jew, or a Christian, or a member of his order, but because he was a fellowman in distress.

2. They are un-Christian in their religious teaching. This is true of the order of Masons, and also of Odd-fellows, and of how many of the minor orders we know not. Col. Geo. R. Clarke, Superintendent of Pacific Garden Mission, Chicago, says: "I speak of Masonry (having once been a Mason myself) Masonry in its foundation principles, as taught in the Blue Lodge, from the Entered Apprentice to the Royal Arch Mason, totally ignores the need of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, as at all essential to a correct and holy and righteous life, or as at all essential to our salvation from sin and death to righteousness and eternal life. In this, the foundation of Masonry, it is taught that one belonging to this order is only required to live up to the teachings of Masonry to be fully saved from sin and its penalty, death, and to gain heaven at last. The name of Jesus Christ is never mentioned, nor is any worship accorded to him, nor is salvation in his name even once hinted at."

The religion of Odd-fellowship is equally Christless. In a pamphlet in defence of Odd-fellowship, published by Rev. J. Dillon, some years ago, he says: "There are those" (members of the order) "who, no doubt honestly, reject the orthodox faith. Many of these belong to the order, and in deference to their faith it was deemed expedient to leave the name of Christ out of its prayers." "In omitting the name of Christ from its prayers, the order requires no one to abjure his faith in him, but leaves him to the uninterrupted enjoyment of his own private religious views." "Jew and Christian meet in the same lodge. The question then arises, whether it would be better to dispense with prayer altogether; each insist on his own mode and form or prayer; or whether each shall yield something to the prejudice of the other, maintain the fellowship, and do the work which, it is admitted, ought to be done." It appears very plain from this that the religion of Odd-fellowship is an un-Christian religion.

They are injurious. Because, 1. Professing Christians in entering the fellowship of these societies bind themselves by covenants of love and friendship to close and intimate relationship with those who may be both immoral and godless. "The friendship of the world is enmity with God." Mr. Moody has well said that all Christians, who have entered these societies, are called upon to separate themselves from them 2. They dishonor the Christian religion and degrade it to the level of Judaism, Mohammedanism and other false religions." "All men should honor the Son, even as they honor the Father. He that honoreth not the Son honoreth not the Father which sent him." John 5: 23. 3. They require applicants for membership to support principles and obey laws, and this by solemn oath or promise, of the character of which they are entirely ignorant. 4. Membership in them injuriously affects one's relations, domestic, civil and political. 5 They tend to the weakening of one's sense of his personal responsibility, discourage self-reliance and deprive one of the best elements of true manhood. 6. They are condemned by the example, words and authority of the Lord Jesus Christ.—United Presbyterian.

SECRET SOCIETIES.

These are testified against, and their members excluded from our communion for reasons such as these: (1) The ordinance of the oath is violated in its being imposed by those who have no right to do so. (2) It is violated by the person who is being initiated, swearing to keep secret what has not yet been made known to him. He cannot do this and have a good conscience. (3) The believer, by identification with these societies, is in a fellowship with unbelievers that is clearly forbidden by the Word of God. See 2. Cor. 6: 14–18. (4) Secrecy, as a permanent principle, is contrary to the plain teaching of Christ. See John 18: 20. (5) The principal secret societies (Freemasonry, Odd-fellowship, and others. See Mackey, Webb, Grosh, etc.) exclude by law the Lord Jesus Christ from their prayers and other religious services. When their members die the burial services declare that they have entered into happiness—"the grand lodge above"—and this without the slightest reference to Christ or his atoning work for sinners. (6) These societies, as experience has proved, are capable of being used for evil and destructive purposes both in church and state. For these and numerous other reasons this article has its place in our testimony. It is eminently distinctive and important both to the church and the state.—The Aurora.

HORACE LORENZO HASTINGS.

Horace Lorenzo Hastings, of Boston, Mass., editor and publisher of The Christian, The Anti-Infidel Library, and of an unknown number of books, tracts and pamphlets, of which, during the last forty years, probably six hundred tons have been scattered in every quarter of the earth, is a descendant of Thomas Hastings, one of the early settlers of Watertown, Mass.

On the mother's side H. L. Hastings has the blood of Hamiltons and Knoxes who settled the old hill town of Blandford, Mass., where he was born and bred. The two descending lines which met in the family of his father, King S. Hastings, the English Puritan, and the Scottish Presbyterian, both of which, self-exiled from their native shores, had undertaken to plant a new civilization in the wilderness. exercised a potent influence by blood, tradition, religion and education upon the subject of this sketch.

For four successive generations his immediate ancestors had been preachers, so that it was not strange that before he was eighteen he "graduated" from farm and saw-mill, and entered upon evangelistic work, using voice and pen and press incessantly from that day to this. In figure slightly above the medium size, but with a powerful yet sympathetic voice, capable of commanding the attention of thousands, indoors or out, he has traveled hundreds of thousands of miles on both sides of the Atlantic, and spoken thousands of times in the chief cities of America and Great Britain, in highways and byways, theatres, tents, churches, wharves and steamships, or wherever he could find people willing to listen to the words of truth. Avoiding disputes about dead issues, adopting as his motto, "No creed but the Bible, no master but Christ, and no name but Christian," he has found open doors among religious people of nearly all classes, and immense audiences have waited on his ministry. Two things, probably, that have introduced Mr. Hastings to popular attention more than anything else are the familiar hymn written by him about 1858:

"Shall we meet beyond the river,
Where the surges cease to roll?"

and his lecture on the "Inspirations of the Bible," otherwise known as "Will the Old Book Stand?"

Over two and three-quarter million copies of this thirty-two page address have been circulated in every part of the world, in eighteen languages, and consuming more than sixty tons of paper, thus making it, as Joseph Cook has said: "Probably the most widely circulated tractate on Christian evidences since the days of Christ." Lord Shaftesbury, the English philanthropist, wrote of it: "I consider it one of the most valuable essays of modern times." When Mr. Moody was selecting the literature for his great distribution during the World's Fair in Chicago in 1893, it was this lecture which held the first place, and 300 Christian workers assisted him in distributing a half million copies, or over two car-loads, in six different languages, tens of thousands of them being given as "souveneirs" to visitors to the Ferris Wheel. The address probably illustrates the author's characteristically forcible English better than anything else from his pen that might be named. Mr. Hastings was born Nov. 26, 1831. On the 12th of October, 1853, he was married to Miss Harriet Frances Barnett, of Moretown, Vermont, who, by her earnest devotion and manifest gifts, has contributed more than any other element to his success in life.

CORRESPONDENCE.

ALL-ROUND REFORMERS AGAIN.

EFFINGHAM, Kan.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Among many good things in your issue of July 11th, there is one worthy of special notice. Dr. Gillespie's article on "All-Round Reformers" deserves a careful reading and consideration. Why not unite our forces? No one need compromise any principle. If anyone did not wish to support one or more of the movements represented he could give instructions with remittances as to how the money he gives should be used. Let us agitate this question. Let us have the pros and cons. The doctor's idea is good and the constitution he submits for our consideration is good. I find but one fly in the ointment and that can be easily lifted out. Art. 2nd. sets forth the object of the proposed association. The elements of this object will find general acceptance among reform workers. One of the methods proposed for carrying those principles into effect is faulty.

"To enlighten the public mind respecting these and kindred reforms"—that is good. "And to assist by voice and vote the nomination of candidates for office and the election to office of men who are in full sympathy with these principles and who are pledged to carry them into effect." Here is where many of the best and most able friends of these reforms would strand. To help elect men to office under the existing constitution is to help support the godless feature of our constitution. A man elected to office takes oath to support not a constitution that he believes ours ought to be but the present one as it is. Can a Christian, in order to advance a good cause, swear or cause another to swear to sustain the very evil he is seeking to destroy? Let the good doctor amend his last method so as to give each one the right of choice as to how to establish these principles. Let us unite. It is the opinion of the writer that if any person takes hold of one of these reform movements with heart and hand it will not be long before he will grasp firmly all of them. There is a logical and moral claim that bind them together.

ROB'T. A. PADEN,

A WASHINGTON WOMAN'S ENQUIRY.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 3, 1895.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I trust you will pardon a stranger for troubling you with a letter, but the King's business sometimes requires not only haste but boldness. I am jealous for my Master, the King. I am in a dilemma; am not only in a dilemma but am distressed. If what you say in your paper; if what my intimate friend, Mrs. Powers; if what good Brother Stoddard and thousands of others, some who have gone on before, say regarding the Masons is true, why is it that such a man as Gen. Green Clay Smith, who was one of the leading Baptist ministers here, should prefer that his funeral be conducted by Masons; even ignoring Baptist ministers who were not brother Masons? Being a Baptist myself I feel more interested in it. Rev. Mr. Smith bore the reputation of being an excellent Christian man, and Rev. Dr. Easton of the Presbyterian church, who officiated at the funeral, claims entire sanctification, and has published a pamphlet on holiness. Then, again, why is it that secret lodges are never spoken against in the pulpit? A Sabbath-school superintendent told me not long ago that he would not be separated from his lodge for a large sum of money.

If the lodge is so good for men, why are women excluded? If it is such a good place for a man to spend five or six evenings every week, why is it not a good place for the wife and mother? Jesus, when on earth, did not exclude women. Blessed be his holy name. You may think my questions are not important enough to be replied to, but I think no matter unimportant that affects the destiny of an immortal soul. If you will take the trouble to reply to some of the questions through your paper it might help others as well as myself. I remember how, during my early Christian life, similar questions presented themselves to my mind, and I, not having been a student of God's Word, nearly made shipwreck of what little faith I had.

As for myself I do not believe in the lodge, except that it is effectual as a screen for murderers, thieves, whoremongers, pergurers and liars. I have to go no farther than the court house to see it. It seems next to impossible for a man who is a Mason to be convicted here in Washington, no matter if he has taken the life of his fellowman. It looks to me as if the devil was playing the same game he did in the Garden of Eden when he succeeded in getting Eve to eat the forbidden fruit because it was "desired to make one wise," and I am glad that women are excluded after all. My good husband, who is not a Mason, says I am wrong in making such assertions against Masonry; that I knew very little about it; so I have been waiting before sending this communication for my indignation to cool down. But waiting has not helped the matter at all. "By their fruits ye shall know them."

Yesterday the wife of a Mason called upon me. Many times during the past year she has called upon me in a state of mind bordering upon insanity, and this is the story she has many times told me, which has been corroborated by others. Her husband was an influential earnest Christian worker and a Sabbath-school superintendent in a neighboring city. They, with their lovely family of sons and daughters, moved to this city. The husband joined the Masons. Then the serpent entered that little garden of Eden. Oh, could you but see the desolation made in that home you would not wonder that the tears fall upon the page as I write. That once affectionate husband and father has now sunk to the lowest depths of debauchery. This is not the only case I can give you. Can all this be the result of the teachings of the Masonic lodge? If it is, this city is a cage for all unclean birds, for it is full of Masons. Even ministers of the Gospel become Masons so they can reach the young men. I know this to be a fact.

Mrs. Powers is, in her quiet way, doing an excellent work. She lives on one of the most popular streets near the depot and about midway between the White House and the Capitol. When Congress is in session that street, Pennsylvania avenue, is travelled by Congressmen more than any other; and I would suggest that when Congress again opens Mrs. Powers be supplied with anti-secrecy literature so she can sow the good seed an inch deep from the White House to the Capitol, for I know of none who need the benefit of it more than Congressmen. If any doubt it I would suggest that they read the book entitled, "If Christ came to Congress," by Hon. M. W. Howard.

I have not written this for publication, but if you see fit to use it you are at liberty to do so. A request has been sent me that I send you the enclosed article clipped from a leading colored paper. I am not a colored woman, but my sympathies are with that unfortunate race.

PLEA FOR OPPRESSED ARMENIA.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 10, 1895.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—That Christianity is a mantle large enough to cover the world was shown by the action taken by the congregation of the Metropolitan M. E. church last Sabbath evening, in signing the following petition, addressed to Hon. W. E. Gladstone: "Sir: We, the undersigned, respectfully pray that you entreat the government of her majesty to request his majesty, the Sultan of Turkey, to appoint a European Governor in Armenia." Before the petition was presented for signatures, Rev. Dr. Johnston, pastor of the church, delivered an address on the Armenian subject, which ought to be read by every Christian.

Lack of space prevents giving the address in full, but the paragraphs quoted state the case too pertinently to be ignored. Dr. Johnston opened the meeting by saying: "This meeting is very important and may be far reaching in its consequences. It is not merely to utter a protest against Turkish barbarities in Armenia, but to assist in creating an agitation for the permanent relief of those Christians in the East. * * * If the Epworth Leagues and other young people's associations of the churches of this national capital and the churches throughout the country will lend their aid, respond to the cry of suffering humanity and present a long, loud, united, earnest entreaty, the voice of this nation will be heard. * * * Public opinion is the mightiest of earthly forces. We are starting waves of influence that shall roll across the Atlantic, and then with augmented power over the continent of Europe, until they shall reach the Golden Horn and break at the feet of the Sublime Porte like the sound of many waters and mighty thunderings, demanding the reform of abuses revolting to humanity and which are a disgrace to the civilized world. * * *

"Who are the people that are suffering these terrible deeds of outrage, violation and massacre? They are the people of Armenia—Armenia, the oldest country in the world—twice the cradle of the human race. From its mountains start the waters of the Tigris and Euphrates, rivers that watered the very Garden of Eden. From the heights of Ararat descended Noah and his family after their preservation from the waters of the deluge. Who are these Christians that are enduring the cruelty and tyranny of the fierce Mussulman? They belong to a church 1,500 years old, venerable with antiquity and wearing the purple robes of martyrdom—a church that has stood as the advance guard of Christianity; that remained a bulwark against the invasions of Zoroastrianism and Islam, until at last, overwhelmed by the Moslem hosts, in its isolation and helplessness it has endured persecution for 1,000 years.

"The Armenians formed their own alphabet from the Greek Septuagint and Syriac Peshito; they translated the Bible for themselves, and the Armenian version of the New Testament has been called the queen of all the versions. They love the Bible, read and study it. The Book of God has never been a forbidden book. No obstacle has ever been put in the way of its diffusion. It is a tolerant church. I was greatly impressed when traveling in the East with the commending place this church holds in Palestine and the Holy City, and have no doubt that this historic church people are destined to play an important part in the regeneration of Asia. It is a church of organized charities; and one of the most striking of the great public buildings of Constantinople is the Armenian Hospital, with its thousand inmates. They are faithful to Christ and ready to suffer for their religious convictions. * * * They are a peaceful, industrious, honest, energetic and enterprising population, physically, mentally and morally superior to their oppressors; and to withhold our sympathy or to refuse to do anything in our power as individuals to prevent the recurrence of these wholesale crimes is treason against the brotherhood of humanity, and a violation of every principle of justice and religion." LITTLE FOXES DESTROYING THE VINES.

WEBSTER, S. D., July 3, 1895.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The Methodist people have just closed a series of tent meetings conducted by Rev. McLean, of Millbank. He was assisted by Rev. Harkness, of Bradley. Bro. Harkness is a young man of promise, an acquisition from the Wesleyan society. He made the transfer because he disliked farming in connection with the ministry. It was inconvenient, no doubt, but all right on principle. There was also present to assist, Rev. Springer, from Clark. Bro. Springer is a devoted lodge member and chaplain of the State encampment of the G. A. R. The lodge sticks out all over him, as it always does on those in the habit of frequenting the lodge-room. You can tell them at a distance of twenty rods.

He got his theology somewhat mixed in his discourse Friday night. First, he asserted that children are born into the world as pure as Adam and Eve before the fall. However, in about two minutes after, he concluded there is something the matter with human nature. He was also eager to assure his hearers that hell is not quite so bad as it is pictured in the Bible. Bro. Springer should be dealt with gently, considering the disadvantages under which he labors. There is one religion in the lodge he attends, and another in his church; being equally devoted to both, he naturally gets things mixed. Nevertheless he was hauled over the coals for his unscriptural expressions by Bro. McLean, who followed with remarks. Rev. McLean is a heavy weight champion of 250 pounds. His appearance is that of a prosperous merchant of the millionaire type. But he possesses a well-balanced character, and succeeds by the wisdom of his methods by sheer force of ability, and by the purity of the Gospel he preaches, whatever may be its application afterwards.

Webster has been "all converted" by the Methodists once or twice before, but the churches were in a worse condition a few months after the revival than before. However, the success was grand while it lasted. A like grand success might have been recorded this time, except for the uncompromising character of Bro. McLean's preaching. Two hundred unconverted young people sat shivering under his urgent appeal last Sabbath night; and probably a hundred would have come forward and joined the church, but there is a grand dance just coming off in connection with the present encampment of the G. A. R., and Bro. McLean was positive in stating that dancing church members were not wanted. If they could have had the dance and their salvation thrown in conveniently as a kind of side show they would have availed themselves of the opportunity.

As it was, the success was not complete. Two dozen, mostly children of church members, joined, but the great mass of unconverted remained unmoved. What we want is a wave of salvation that will sweep over this place and save us from the ball-room, the lodge, and from the world, the flesh and the devil in general. R. BRORUP.

WHERE THERE IS A WILL THERE IS A WAY.

ON THE WING, July 5, 1895.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I do not mean our wills and ways in general. I refer only to the one will and the one way. The time came when I found I had this will with the Lord's will inside of it, like a wheel within a wheel. As the inside wheel was always in motion, I found but one thing to do, and that was properly to connect the wheels. On the 20th day of last month I found myself on the way to New York City. I landed there the 24th of July. On the 27th, three days after I landed, our good Lord found a way for me, more glorious and victorious than he ever opened up before, for me to work as never before, for the destruction of all Satan's works. Now, I am planning to take my family and on the first of next month start for New York. As we expect to see many of our old friends North this summer and fall, I will not only make all plain to them, but to many of the dear saints with whom we never met.

RUFUS SMITH.

TO MUCH MACHINERY.

EL PASO, Ill., July 2, 1895.

EDITOR CYNOSURE.—Being a believer in every true reform, I venture to write you with reference to the numerous organizations which claim to be Christian, and are working for the cause of Christianity. It seems to me that some of the doings of these different societies need to be closely examined. They have names and objects that sound very well, but why is it thought best to multiply such organizations and thereby greatly increasethe expense of Christ's work? Is the machinery of the church wornout and has it served its day? Do not such conventions as the Christian Endeavor in Boston involve great expense? And how many of Christ's poor ones cannot attend. If these conventions could be confined to counties it would remove this objection. Is it not diverting the funds of the church into the coffers of Sabbath-breaking railroad corporations instead of into the channels of mission work. It seems to me there is danger of giving to the Christian Endeavor movement the honor and glory that should be given to the church which Christ purchased with his own blood. I have noticed, too, that these man-made organizations are largely officered and manipulated by lodgemen, like many of our declining churches. What the cause of Christ needs is not more machinery but more of the Holy Spirit's power to operate the machinery we have. While these organizations are run very largely on the time, funds and talent formerly devoted to the church, we often wonder how much they add to the church's efficiency and influence. Their tendency is to work separately from the church. It is quite common for Christian Endeavorers to hold their separate meeting Sabbath evening and then absent themselves from the regular church services. Is there not danger of Christianity degenerating into a dress parade convention affair? Christian Endeavor is a good cause, and we all ought to endeavor and consolidate our influence and follow Christ not for the loaves and fishes but for the good of a world lying in wickedness. The Epworth League was introduced here in the Methodist church by the pastor, who is a Mason; likewise the Y. P. S. C. E. in the Presbyterian church was organized and led by a Freemason. You need not wonder that I am very jealous of different organizations, all pretending to work for the same object.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Let me first thank your readers who have already sent cards, and ask those of you who have not given me your names and address to do so that I may correspond with you. I propose to send each contributor occasional reports of the work and, from time to time, some little articles of interest from this strange land. Only picture cards are serviceable, and the more flashy the color the better. It is the picture the Chinese like. We paste a printed verse of Scripture on the back and use them as rewards in day and Sabbath schools. Colporteurs also use them in selling Scriptures and tracts.

Send by post as printed matter whenever you have enough for a small package. If you will write your name and address plainly on the package you need not write me. I would also like Berean Leaf Clusters. These may be sent the same way. Old ones are just as good. Address

A REFORMER'S OBSERVATIONS.

CHEYENNE, Wyo., July 3, 1895.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I saw, to-day, from the dome of the capitol here, for the first time, the snow-capped Rockies. They are well worth seeing. The city is small but beautiful. It is recovering slightly from the sad results of wild speculation and wickedness. Depots and public buildings are very fine and substantial. The capitol is not large, but handsome and well built of stone.

Masonry shows its ubiquitous and arrogant character, as we see inscribed on a front cornerstone the following: "Laid by the Grand Lodge A. F. & A. M., A. L., 5887, A. D. 1887. N. R. Davis, Grand Master." I asked a man here to-day whether it belonged to the Masons or to the State. He did not seem to understand me.

"He that buildeth the house is greater than the house." So I suppose that some Masons imagine that their order is greater than the State. Webb indicated this when he said no law of the land can affect the obligation. This is no doubt true, when the making of laws and the execution of laws is in the hands of the secret empire. But thank God there is a higher law which cannot be thus defied. "God will bring every work into judgment with every secret thing."

J. B. GALLOWAY.

SALVATION NOT THROUGH THE LODGE.

KENT, Ill., July 5, 1895.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I have often thought upon the words of our Saviour that he spoke to Nicodemus: "Ye must be born again." Many have, I fear, no idea what this is or means. Nicodemus did not seem to understand it even though he was a "master in Israel." He must have known something, however, of the admission of the Gentiles into the Jewish church. He must have known that the candidate must be baptized before he could be admitted. And when he was baptized it was said of him: "He is born again." That is, he was brought from the heathenism into the Jewish faith. But when Jesus said: "Except a man be born of water and of the spirit he cannot enter into the kingdom of God," he meant as a person must be baptized with water in order to have any relationship with the church; baptism signifying the washing away of all heathenish beliefs, or, in our day, all sins. So must he "be born of the spirit" in order to have any relation whatever with God and his Son Jesus Christ.

But do not men substitute something else for regeneration? Do they not have another way of being "born again?" Many, I fear, do. But can we, dare we attempt to substitute anything else or devise any other way? And if we acknowledge any other way of regeneration, and look to any other source but to Jesus Christ and the operation of his Spirit upon our hearts, is it not idolatry? If it is not, will not some one be kind enough to tell me what idolatry is? I must confess my ignorance. But is not this just what some people do? Have they not found "some other way?" I am aware of the fact that some people do not feel the need of the church nor of Jesus Christ because they have found, as they vainly hope, a Saviour in the lodge.

During a revival meeting we held in our place, a young man attended quite regularly. A deep interest was taken in him. We talked to him personally whenever opportunity presented itself. One night as we were pressing the claims of God upon him, he said: "I belong to a lodge; and if I live up to its rules I will be all right. It is founded on the Bible." This is only one instance. Many more there are who do not heed the Saviour's command: "Ye must be born again." You might belong to a thousand lodges, and unless you are "born again," "born of the Spirit," together with the wicked, the robber, the Sabbath breaker, the murderer, the whoremonger, the adulterer, the profane, and all that forgot God and do not keep his commandments, together with these you shall sink into the nethermost hell, where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched.

Oh! would to God that secret societies with the saloon could be blotted out forever. May God bless everything that is being done to this end.

Yours truly, P. B LINAWEAVER
(Pastor M. E church.)

LODGE INFLUENCE IN CALIFORNIA.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., July 4, 1895.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I am not accustomed to write for publication, and in my former letter had no object beyond the one stated, viz: a desire for information regarding the Knights of Maccabees, and any of their principles and practices entitling them to special recognition in the Christian church more than any other services. I take it for granted these are objects of solicitude and helpful effort on the part of the Christian ministers and organizations. Permit me just here to say, that the Maccabees of Los Angeles, as a body, impress me that they are men of good habits and earnest lives. And the individual members of my acquaintance are men worthy of respect.

As to the main question, I cannot make it seem right that the church building, dedicated to the worship and service of God, should be for a special occasion re dedicated to the glorifying of a purely secular order, or organization of men, as was the case on the occasion referred to June 16th. The walls all around the platform were hung with the badges, insignia and colors of the order. The sermon given us was characteristic of its author, Dr. Day, and that is praise enough; and save a brief prologue, eulogistic of the order, was a stirring appeal not alone for the theory, but the practice also of charity incited by the highest Christian motives and in its best forms.

Replying to your inquiry: "What are the facts in Los Angeles and how do they impress you?" I reply, In Los Angeles not alone, but in all Southern California, if not the whole coast country, the lodges are dominant to the extent of supremacy. They are first, and everthing else is subject; they dominate in politics, in trade relations, in social conditions, and to an overwhelming extent in church organization. No office in State, county or city, either elective or appointive—and I think I may safely add, no prominent pulpit, is or can be filled by any aspirant antagonized by the secret empire.

But a hopeful fact in the other direction is that the spirit of intolerance and arrogant defiance of opposing influences which formerly characterized the devotees of secrecy seems to have given place to a more tolerant and courteous method of asserting their influence. As to the use of my name, I would not write that which I was not willing to meet in my office, on the street, or anywhere that I am likely to be found. And while I do not think this letter worthy to crowd out the more valuable utterances of others, if published, let it be over my own name.

A. S. J. PHELPS.

WHO IS ON THE LORD'S SIDE?

DE KALB, Iowa, June 29, 1895.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The family, church and state are organizations which the Lord has appointed. The pretence that the lodge has the same claim to obedience as the family, church or state, is the crowning deception of the wicked one. Organized secrecy is clearly of Satan's kingdom, and the blighting influence of the lodge is seen everywhere. It is an enemy to the Lord's kingdom. It is a foe to the family, because it separates man and wife, causing them to worship at different altars. It is a damage to the church, because no one can serve two masters. Darkness and concealment are not light. It is a foe of the state, because it is in conflict with justice in the courts.

There are many other objections which are beyond successful contradiction. But the chief objection is, that it is of the kingdom of Satan and has no place in the economy of God. It is the most damaging to those who adhere to and sympathize with its anti-Christian ceremonies. Christians are not doing their duty who are willfully ignorant on this subject, and will not try to rescue their brethren from the lodge and make them free in Christ. We pray the Lord that the church may remain loyal to the Master and have no sympathy with the apostasy of this age. The Head of the church has left it on record in his Word to us, that he "ever taught openly," and in "secret have I said nothing." Paul warned the church to "have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them, for it is a shame even to speak of those things which are done of them in secret." The light is now thrown upon this question as it was once upon American slavery; and it is just as true to-day that the worst enemies to the truth are in the church. In the days of slavery if one prayed for the down-trodden and the oppressed it was said: "He is praying for the niggar." Now, if in some places a minister quotes the words of Jesus: "Every plant which my heavenly Father hath not planted shall be rooted up," it is said: "He is striking at the lodge." We pray many may have courage to "come out from among them and be ye separate" from Satan's kingdom. It is said, we "cannot succeed against the lodge." Well, God can destroy these works of darkness; and if we do our duty, we will have the success he gives us; that will be better than any other kind of victory.

CYRUS SMITH.

FOR WHOM WILL THE SALOONS DECORATE?

BOSTON, July 8, 1895.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—We read to-day of a serious shaking up out West in which the "breezy city" had her full share. So far Boston has escaped the cyclone and the waterspout, but our staid city has been not a little perturbed over recent events in which religious bigotry and boisterous patriotism collided on the Fourth. What will be the outcome remains to be seen. Quite a number of pastors discoursed upon the East Boston mob, on Sabbath, and while all agree that it was an unfortunate and disgraceful affair, there seems to be a difference of opinion as to who is responsible for the ill feeling that undoubtedly inspired the unlawful and murderous procedure. It is quite proper to credit the saloon with a large portion of the responsibility, and to place this in the list of crimes and misdemeanors for which the voters of Boston are justly accountable, whether Protestant or Catholic. The history of the dramshop demonstrates that to vote for license is only a respectable way of indorsing violence, murder and every species of crime which are the natural offspring of the saloon. If a portion of the maladictions heaped upon ignorant foreigners was meted out to clergymen and other professed Christians who sacrifice principle to party interests on election day, it might be more justly bestowed.

The absorbing interest just now is the great Christion Endeavor Convention at hand. Delegations are beginning to arrive, but to-morrow and the day following are to be the great days of ingathering. The public buildings, churches and many business houses are gaily decorated with flaggy and artistic devices, so that our city has already quite a holiday appearance. I have not taken extensive observations, but so far I have seen neither a saloon or a lodge decorated in honor of this incoming army of Christian workers. It is fitting that these "twin relics of barbarism" should thus early give a public expression of their kinship, that the people may have an opportunity to note the bearing of the liquor interest towards this Christian convention with that of the conclave of Christian (?) Knights to gather here in August. It's an old saying that "men are known by the company they keep" and we are to have an opportunity of seeing whose friendly arms are extended, and whether the Christian(?) Knights gravitate towards the prayer meeting or the saloon.

REMINISCENCES—AFTER THE GREAT FIRE.

BY EZRA A. COOK.

As has been previously indicated, we found the destruction of our property almost total. A handsome, new horizontal engine and the large press on which the Cynosure was printed, both of which stood on the ground itself, were complete wrecks. I use the large flat bed plate now for the top of an imposing table. Other printing presses, a large ruling machine, etc., were also complete wrecks, in fact, almost totally destroyed. My twelve horse power steam boiler, which was literally in the ground, was not greatly injured, and I have in use a large wrought-iron "standing press," which, though warped out of shape, was repaired at moderate expense. All of my lithographic presses, tools, etc., with lithographic stones on which were engravings that cost thousands of dollars, were on the third floor of the main building, and so complete was their destruction that no trace of them even was to be found in the debris. The editorial room of the Cynosure was also on this floor.

Then, as now, the addresses of the subscribers of the Cynosure was kept set up in type, and proofs were taken from this type and pasted on the papers or wrappers each week. This was, of course, all destroyed; but what was far worse, neither the publisher or the editor, Mr. Kellogg, had taken one of these proofs to their homes and those at the office were all destroyed. We did not realize for a long time what a calamity this destruction of the mail list was. It seemed but natural to expect that most of the subscribers would write and enquire whether the Cynosure had started again, while it was believed that the fact that notices of its publication was continued, inserted in such papers as the Wesleyan, Free Methodist, Telescope and United Presbyterian, would be seen, so that we should soon recover our list; but we were disappointed.

Several hundred dollars was spent in trying to reach old subscribers, but with very meager returns. Some of the subscribers were behind on their subscriptions, but to some of them there was due a number of copies from a month to twelve months. From those that we owed numbers we are of course most apt to hear, and for ten years afterwards letters were received claiming from three months to a year's subscription as due, and such claims were allowed without question; but there were many who were "cast in a more generous mold," who not only called what was due them cancelled by the great fire, but in sending in their subscriptions added from a dime to a dollar more, so that the claims of others were about evenly offset; and if we could only have recovered our list of subscribers the loss would have been much less; but a year after the fire the Cynosure subscription list was less than half of what it was at the time of the fire. Doubtless lodgemen did all in their power to prevent the fact of the continuation of the Cynosure from reaching the people; and it is to be feared that some good men and women, who had felt the teeth of the lodge, yielded to the inclination to withdraw from the fight.

HOW TO TREAT CACTI.

A Beautiful Plant Needing Judicious Handling at First.

When plants of cacti are received from the dealers, cut off the dead roots, have ready four or five inch pots half filled with charcoal or broken crockery, or both. Over this place the soil, which should be quite sandy. Plant your cacti close together in the sand, and as soon as abundant roots are formed plant in small pots of sandy soil. The pots ought only to be large enough to hold the roots.

Be very careful not to overwater at any time, especially before the pot is well filled with roots. If cacti are given this treatment and the plants are healthy when received, there need be no dread of failure. When the plants have made good growth, they may be moved to large pots, giving good soil. The secret of success is to get an abundance of roots. It is an excellent plan to plant a dozen or more different sorts in a pot or box 5 inches in depth and 7 or 8 inches in diameter.

If all cacti growers would study the habits of the different varieties as they thrive in their native homes, there would be no cause for complaint on account of failure, for when acquainted with their habits they are the easiest plants to be cared for. Mexico produces more than half the varieties of the cacti in cultivation, and nearly all of them grow on the ground best drained by nature—from the highest mountain peaks down to the tablelands. After a rain not a single drop of stagnant water is left around the plant. Some of the varieties delight to grow between the rocks without any visible earth to feed the plant, and among these are seen many curious forms. The plants when forcibly pulled out appear so pressed that they seem to have been molded.

Another peculiarity is that the majority of cacti are found on the south side of the mountains, and in their native haunts will stand a year or more without rain, but as hardy as the plants appear in this respect most kinds will not stand any rough handling or bruising. After they have been bruised they will appear sound for awhile, but will eventually rot when in the hands of an amateur who endeavors to revive them by frequent watering. Obtain good, sound plants, ascertain if possible whether the different varieties are found in the shady forests of South America or the hot sandy plains of Mexico and treat accordingly, handle the various specimens carefully, give thorough drainage and water sparingly, and success will be assured.

HOW TO MEASURE BY SPOON AND CUP

An Invaluable Table For Convenience of Housekeepers.

Four even teaspoonfuls liquid equal one even tablespoonful.

Three even teaspoonfuls dry material equal one even tablespoonful.

Sixteen tablespoonfuls liquid equal one cupful.

Twelve tablespoonfuls dry material equal one cupful.

Two cupfuls equal one pint.

Four cupfuls equal one quart.

Four cupfuls flour equal one quart or one pound.

Two cupfuls solid butter equal one pound.

Two cupfuls granulated sugar equal one pound.

Two and one-half cupfuls powdered sugar equal one pound.

One pint milk or water equals one pound.

One dozen eggs should weigh 1½ pounds.

Skimmilk is heavier than whole milk, and cream is lighter than either, while pure milk is 3 per cent heavier than water.

The following table of proportions is also valuable. Use:

One teaspoonful soda to one cupful molasses.

One teaspoonful soda to one pint sour milk.

Three teaspoonfuls baking powder to one quart of flour.

One-half cupful of yeast or one-quarter cake compressed yeast to one pint liquid.

One teaspoonful extract to one loaf plain cake.

One teaspoonful salt to two quarts flour.

One teaspoonful salt to one quart soup.

One scant cupful of liquid to two full cupfuls of flour for bread.

One scant cupful of liquid to two full cupfuls of flour for muffins.

One scant cupful of liquid to one full cupful of flour for batters.

One quart water to each pound of meat and bone for soup stock.

How a Rocket Is Forced to Ascend.

A rocket ascends because, on the inflammable mixture it contains being ignited, a large quantity of gas is generated, which can only escape from the end of the rocket, and so forms a strong back jet. This forces the rocket from the case, and during its flight continues to act against the opposing atmosphere.

The Christian Cynosure.

REV. M. A. GAULT, - - - EDITOR.
WM. I. PHILLIPS, - - - PUBLISHER.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JULY 18, 1895.

NATION RULED BY THE LODGE.

As a government, we are rapidly passing under the control of the lodge. By act of some legislatures the G. A. R. is authorized to dictate what Text Books in history shall be used in our public schools. The same secret order in some States dictates that the youth in our public schools shall be trained in military tactics. An influence put into our public schools like one exerted at a river's source, will be felt all along our national history.

A recent and striking illustration of the insidious working of lodge influence to control State legislation, is the bill lately passed by the Illinois Legislature, for the relief of indigent war veterans and their families. This bill places the funds of the State at the disposal of a secret order for the relief of its indigent members.

Section second says that "the overseer of the poor shall provide such sum, or sums of money as may be necessary, to be drawn upon by the commander and quartermaster of any post of the G. A. R. in said city or town, upon the recommendation of the relief committee of said post, in the same manner as is now provided by law for the relief of the poor."

Section third provides that, "In case there is no post of the G. A. R. in any city or town in which it is necessary that such relief as provided in Section second should be granted, the overseer of the poor shall accept and pay the orders drawn, as herein before provided by the commander and quartermaster of any post of the G. A. R., located in the nearest city or town, upon the recommendation of a relief committee who shall be residents of the said town in which the relief may be furnished."

We are in full sympathy with the government providing for its indigent soldiers. It can never fully repay the men who risked their lives in the nation's defense. We yield to none in having a higher appreciation of the heroic sacrifices of the soldiers of the Union. But when a part of those soldiers organize themselves into a secret order, and then presume to control the distribution of public charities to their indigent members, we think it is carrying secret society favoritism quite too far.

THE RUM POWER.

Dr. D. H. Coulter, of Winchester, Kan., is exceedingly radical on the prohibition as well as on the anti-secret question. The following strong words are from his report on temperance at the recent synod in Denver:

"Evangelical religion encounters no greater obstacle; foreign missions meet no greater hindrance; nothing tends more to debauch the public conscience, and debase public morals; and Satan has no more potent instrument for the ruin of souls, than the rum power. Of crimes of violence and bloodshed, nine-tenths are chargeable to drunkenness, whilst the sorrows and woes that spring from this source, enter largely into the sum of earthly miseries.

"And yet so deceitful is this evil that its own slaves love their bondage; powerful churches vote in church councils to destroy the traffic, and vote at the polls to license it; and the vast majority of the people of this so-called Christian country are deluded into the notion that questions of finance, tariff and coinage are of more importance to the nation's wellbeing than the question of temperance. Whether the temperance movement has advanced or receded during the past year is a question. If there has been progress, it has been in the silent growth of sound sentiment, rather than in any public acts of any of the States, or of any of the churches, of any court or people; or in the increased strength and activity of any society.

"There is danger that prohibitory laws now existing will be at no distant day rendered practically inoperative, if not repealed. New methods are devised and tried, only to fail. The policy of legal prohibition is commonly regarded as impracticable, whilst any scheme that promises to divert public attention from it, as the only effective remedy, will gain popular favor. Under these circumstances the great liquor power of the land, strong and confident in the support of depraved appetite, of custom and law, of wealth and numbers; strong above any evil that ever cursed a great nation, takes strength to itself from its own wickedness, and wages aggressive warfare, too often successful, against every interest and right of God and man.

"It is the purpose of God to destroy this curse, but there is nothing to indicate that it is his purpose to destroy it by the ballot. As long as the nation refuses to submit to the authority of Christ, it cannot in truth be expected to accept his law of temperance and purity, Until it ceases to ignore his claims, as the nation's rightful Sovereign, it will in all probability continue to license the traffic in intoxicants and narcotics, and to derive large revenues from these sources. The facts that this wickedness has reached a great height, and that men have exhausted their measures in warring against it, lead to the hope that the hour of its overthrow is near. 'It is time for thee, Lord, to work; for they have made void thy law.'"

TEACHERS AND THE SABBATH.

Rev. J. R. Latimer, of Rose Point, Pa., writes us of how the National Teachers' Convention at Denver spent Sabbath July 7. It is of alarming significance when we consider that the mightiest leverage to move the nation is in the hands of the teachers of our public schools.

Bro. Latimer says: The Pittsburgh Commercial Gazette of July 8 had the following bit of news:

DENVER, Col., July 7.—A conservative estimate places the number of delegates to the National Educational Convention, who have arrived up to this evening, at between 7,000 and 8,000. ....To-day has been devoted to short railroad trips to the mountains and neighboring resorts, fully 3,000 spending the day in Manitou and on Pike's Peak, while 1,000 went over the famous "loop trip." Thus the Sabbath was spent by these teachers. Thus they set God and his law at defiance, trampling under foot the fourth commandment. Are such persons fit to be in the schoolroom, to be put in charge of the youth of our land as instructors? Will they likely be in favor of the Bible in the schools when they so openly disregard it? Can they be trusted to give right instruction in morals when they show themselves to be so immoral? What moral precepts will they be likely to enforce on their pupils, since they so utterly disregard the moral law? What respect for law can they inspire in the minds of the youth when they prove themselves to be so lawless? What will the harvest be? Should such teachers as these be employed? What condemnation of their conduct will this convention utter? Their conduct in this case is of a piece with the secularism that pervades everything at the present connected with the State. "Will not I visit for these things," saith the Lord. Verily he will sooner or later.

THE LODGE A RIVAL OF THE CHURCH.

Rev. A. Kilpatrick, a pastor at Valencia, Pa., gives the Gospel trumpet no uncertain sound on the lodge question. The following is an extract from a sermon preached in the Union R. P. church, July 7, 1895:

"The Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved. Notice, the Lord added them to the church, not to the lodge, or the encampment, or the council, but to the church. There are some church members who profess to believe that the lodge is better than the church. This they do not learn from the Bible. You cannot find in the Word of God anywhere that the Lord adds those whom he saves to the lodge. Hence, the claim that the lodge is better than the church must come from the wicked one. The devil sometimes uses even church members to scatter and to advocate his lies. And this claim, made for the lodge, is no exception. The fact that Gashmu saith it does not prove it true. Church members, like some Jews of old, say things because they are hired to say them by some Tobiah or Sanballat.

"When the lodge is set up as the rival of the church, as it is, then we may be sure that it is somebody else than the Lord that adds church members to the lodge. Just as the Lord brought those whom he would save out from the rival systems of old, as he brought them out from the Jews, and from the idolaters, so he still brings those that should be saved from the deistic, idolatrous anti-Christian system, the lodge, which is as much the rival of the church to-day as these systems were the church's rivals of old. Wherever the church has a rival the call is: 'Come out and be ye separate, and I will receive you.' It matters not to how many lodges a man may belong then, he cannot be saved unless the Lord adds him to the church. And we are sure of this. The Lord does not add to his church those whom the devil claims are better prepared for heaven by the lodge, than those are whom the Lord adds to the church. We need no other proof that the lodge is the rival of the church, than the claim that the patrons of the lodge make. And themselves being judges, the lodge should be condemned."

THE UNITED BRETHREN.

Rev. W. B. Stoddard sends us the following interesting account of one of the most reliable and influential anti-secret churches, the United Brethren. His suggestion is good, that the Cynosure readers ought to know more about the anti-secret churches. As it is important for a soldier in battle to know the force in the field, so in the war with secret societies; let us get better acquainted with those who are on the Lord's side. The conflict the United Brethren have passed through is one that threatens to rend every denomination. To be forewarned is to be forearmed. Bro. Stoddard says:

Some of the Cynosure readers may not be familiar with the facts connected with the struggle and division in the United Brethren church. It is with a hope of profiting any such that I write. This body of Christians is of German descent. A man by the name of Otterbein with two companions were engaged in religious work. There efforts were blessed in the conversion of sinners. When realizing something of the blessedness which comes from consecrated, united effort for Christ, Otterbein is said to have clasped his companions in his arms with the exclamation, "We are brethren." A church was formed, and from that little planting grew a body that at the time of the division numbered over 200,000 souls. That the founders and pioneers in this church were worthy of the profession they made, is evident from the uncompromising stand they took upon the unpopular reforms of the day.

They were anti-slavery, anti-secret, anti-liquor people. They were humble, largely uneducated, as we speak of education to-day. Their ministers were called often times from the plow, with little knowledge aside from the fact that God for Christ's sake had forgiven their sins, and he was willing to accept all who would receive him. Like David, as he went forth with the simple stone and sling to meet the giant encased in armor, they realized their strength was in the Almighty. They told the story of redeeming love in its simplicity as it had affected their hearts. God owned his word and sinners were converted. The fathers saw the need of a better education, and they were not slow to establish schools and seminaries for their children. Their churches grew in the country where simplicity in dress and doctrine are always welcome.

As the young men took the father's places it was observed many lacked the consecration and willingness to sacrafice which was so marked in their ancestors. Like the children of Israel when out of bondage, some looked back to the treasures of Egypt. Many seemed to think more of building up our church, of enlarging the salaries of our pastors, than the honoring of Christ. I think I can safely say that this feeling has led to all the difficulty and division in this body. While undoubtedly there have been, and are, those in what is known as the liberal wing who are "seeking first the kingdom of God," yet I am convinced from conversation with pastors and people that the great reason the liberals desired the constitution and confession of faith changed was that they might glorify self.

How often have I been told as I went to lecture in their churches, our testimony against secret societies is what shuts our church out of the cities. Could we but modify our law we could have churches like the Methodists in every city.

When I would enquire if the church law did not accord with the teachings of God's Word, most would admit that it did. Frequently persons making such admission would say: "If we could but get into the cities we would get lodgemen into the church and teach them to leave their lodges." I have no doubt some were so simple as to believe this would be the case. They would say "we don't want to do away with the law, but simply to modify it. We will get you to come and lecture as heretofore when we get into the cities."

How many of the "liberal" churches are open for anti-secrecy lectures to-day? Echo answers, how many? Put the wolves into the sheepfold and they will look after the mutton. They superintend and run the business or they will have no part in it. I am sorry to find that this idea of getting the wolf into the fold to convert him is held by many beside liberal United Brethren to-day. Other churches are on the road to be torn as this one has. May God arouse the leaders, for "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty." The division came, as come it must. I have not time nor space to go into details here, suffice it to say that a new confession of faith was adopted by those wishing to throw down the bars to let in the city sinners, while a part clung to the old confession of faith. Reading the editorial in the Christian Conservator headed "The publishing house lost" suggested this writing. The Conservator is the organ of the loyal division. Part of the State courts have given church property to one side and part to the other. It seems that the liberals get the old publishing house. house. When in Dayton, Ohio, last winter, working up our State convention, I was entertained at the homes of the editor and publisher of the Conservator and shown through the new publishing house where this paper is printed. It contains nicely-arranged rooms and new machinery. Weekly reports show that this paper and people are being blessed of God. They are advancing as one man against the enemy. Their churches are always open to our workers. We are indeed workers together. Brother Williams, our successful agent on the Pacific coast, has his membership in this denomination.

All lovers of righteousness will rejoice that our comrades are many and God is leading on to victory. Would it not be well for the Cynosure editor to ask some one in every denomination opposing secret societies to write something of their church history on this question, that we may get better acquainted?

TALKS TO YOUNG PEOPLE.

BY PROF. D. A. STRAW.

AN OLD TRAPPER.

There is an old trapper living in my barn, and he is an expert at the business. Nearly every morning of these July days when I go out there I may see him fixing his traps. These are snares which he makes of very fine gauzy silk and stretches across the passage between two outside doors. For this old trapper's business is catching flies, and he makes a fat living at it. He places his net there just where the gay little flies, after enjoying the shelter of the barn during the night, go sailing through to get out into the fresh sunshine for another long day of free, joyous, waltzing life.

But often my hat, when I enter the barn, tears his nets. Then as soon as all is quiet again old Robby Spider gets at his work of repairing. He draws his stay lines across, and then round and round he weaves the silken threads. Soon it is done and he goes to his tent at one side and waits for a victim for breakfast.

One morning the net was all strung with little beads of dew that collected from the damp night air that passed through; and I was surprised to see my old lodger taking it down thread by thread. He seemed to eat it. I don't know whether he really did or not. Then he went right to work and made a whole new web. Ah, yes! Then I learned something—that he knew well enough. He could not catch flies if they could see the snare. The dew had made it visible even to a fly's eyes. For though a fly has a multitude of eyes so he can see all around him, he probably cannot see any one thing so finely as we can. And the old trapper knew just how to catch him. He was as wise as Solomon on that subject. Solomon said, Prov. 1: 17, "Surely, in vain the net is spread in the sight of any bird." You must fix it so they will not see it if you catch them. And just so with flies.

And just so with boys, even grown up boys. Solomon knew them too. Eccles. 9: 12: "As the fishes that are taken in an evil net, and as the birds that are caught in a snare, so are the sons of men snared in an evil time, when it falleth suddenly upon them." The old trapper that sets snares for the boys is not less diligent than old Robby Spider. He is at it early in the morning; yes, and late at night, and he has a lot of men that help him at it. I never yet saw a fly that was mean enough to do a spider's spinning work and help to trap his own brothers. Look out for the snares, boys. But you can't see them. When some one tells you they are there, you can not see them half the time. The old trapper fixes them up so fine, and puts them just where he knows you will be likely to go, and where you often think you are going to have the jolliest good time.

But there is a place, boys, where you can find out how to discover them—all his old traps and fine-spun snares. If you read it up carefully you can find out how to avoid every one of them, and how to get out quickly if you should chance to run into one of them. It is in the Bible. The whole story is told there plain and pointed. The best plan is to read it up fresh every day, and get it clearly in mind. For if the old enemy gets a hold of you once there is small chance for you. Not many flies get out of the spider's clutches.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Rev. T. M. Chalmers preached last Sabbath at Cedar Rapids, Ia.

—Bro. P. A. Seguin, the converted Catholic priest, lectured at Arkdale, Wis., July 2. We are sorry to hear that he has joined the A. P. A.'s.

—Dr. W. G. Moorhead, D. D., president of our National Christian Association, will deliver the opening lecture before the Newburgh, N. Y., Summer School, Wednesday evening, July 17.

—Rev. W. Luessenhop, of Pueblo, sends for literature and writes: "Keep on warring and fighting. Our Lutheran Synod is fighting the same battle. The God of power is with us. The secret empire must fall."

—Bro Daniel Biggs, of Senecaville, Guernsey Co., Ohio, writes: "Please continue the Christian Cynosure, for I can't do without it. I am in my 83d year and have been taking the Cynosure almost from its first issue."

—Dr. Carradine, the anti-secret champion of St. Louis, has recently held wonderfully successful meetings in Denver. His remarkable power of enthusing large audiences comes from his wielding faithfully the sword of divine truth.

—Bro. S. C. Dodd, who has so long maintained the anti-secret standard in the Presbyterian church at Randolph, Iowa, writes: "I want to say that I think the National Christian Association, according to the size of it, is the best Home Missionary Society I know anything about."

—A friend of the cause in the East contributes $5 to send the Cynosure to a list of his friends expecting thus to interest them in our work. It was in this way that many life-long friends of the cause have been enlisted. Are there not others who will follow the example of this brother?

—Bro. Willets Skinner, of Rockford, Ohio, writes that he is too old and feeble to do any canvassing work, but that he is a friend of our Association, and "believes that it is doing a work greatly needed at this time when secret societies, like the frogs of Egypt, are coming up over the whole land."

—Rev. J. K. Glassford, our anti-secret lecturer in Missouri, is now at Denver, and is improving in health. He writes: "Oh, how I bless the Lord for the Cynosure. It comes every week full of good things. Long may it live to bless the world and fire the shot of divine truth into Satan's strongholds."

—Rev. D M. Pjants, of Philadelphia, says in a letter: "I renewed my subscription for the Cynosure with Bro. W. B. Stoddard. I love the paper and read it in preference to any paper I get. My views may differ somewhat from yours. In my preaching I do not condemn secret societies for an unregenerate people. It is one of the works of the world, and the world knows nothing better; but a Christian cannot be a follower of Christ and be bound to a secret worldly society. My work is to reform the Christianity of our day, and break the iron grasp of the world and so let Christ lead his people."

—Rev. A. Thomson, of the Congregational church, Tomahawk, Wis., writes: "God bless you in your new position. From time to time I hope you will hear from me, for few have deeper personal convictions on the lodge question than I; or see more clearly the eminent danger to the church from lodge power and influence."

—Bro. J. H. Worley, a missionary, writes us from Foochow, China, requesting Cynosure readers to send him picture cards. He says, "They are very useful in our work in many ways, besides helping to create in the hearts of those who send them a keener interest in missions." We hope our readers will respond to his appeal published on another page.

—Rev. C. D. Trumbull, D. D., of Morning Sun, Ia., in sending his renewal writes: "I have taken the paper many years, and always look for its coming, and note its contents with interest. My prayer is that you may be richly endowed with the Holy Spirit, to fit you more and more for the duties and responsibilities of the position upon which you have entered."

—Revs. J. P. Stoddard and W. B. Stoddard are very busy this week sowing anti-secret reform literature at the Boston Christian Endeavor Convention. A tract giving the likeness of Wendell Phillips and his testimony on the lodge question has been prepared by Rev. J. P. Stoddard, and is being placed in the hands of thousands of young people gathered at the convention.

—Miss Elizabeth E. Flagg, our New England correspondent, is taking a much needed rest this month. Besides her interesting letters to the Cynosure, she is doing nearly all the writing on the Woman's Voice, of which she is associate editor. It is a bright rustling twenty-eight column weekly paper, the champion of the public schools, the organ of the Independent women voters, and not only anti-secret in principle, but occasionally speaks its mind on this subject. Miss Flagg expects to begin her New England letters in August fresh and vigorous.

—Rev. James B. Converse, who formerly edited the Christian Patriot, of Nashville, Tenn., last spring combined his paper with the Phalanx, the Prohibition organ of Indiana. The paper published at Indianapolis is now called Patriot-Phalanx, and has been much improved by the reinforcement of Bro. Converse to the editorial staff. He insists upon bringing all political questions to the Bible line. Bro. Converse is our style of a politician. It is as important for the political builder to use the Bible as it is for the material builder to use the square and plumb-line.

—Mrs. Rufus Park, of Alexandria, Neb., is a devoted W. C. T. U. worker, and also in the anti-secret cause. The celebration on July 4, in Bro. Park's grove, she writes, was a complete success. The day was fine and the speakers were all on time, and addressed an audience of seven or eight hundred. The exercises were opened with prayer, and the addresses bristled with patriotic sentiment and were tinctured strongly with temperance. The young lady orators who contested on the suffrage question for a prize all did so well that the judges had great difficulty in deciding who should receive the prize. Mrs. Howe, of St. Joseph, gave an address that inspired all. The only cloud that overshadowed this successful meeting was the absence of Mrs. Putnam, whose recent death left a sad gap in the Nebraska W. C. T. U. ranks.

A new and attractive feature of the Cynosure will now be "Talks to Young People" every week by Prof. D. A. Straw, of Wheaton College. Prof. Straw is a popular teacher, and has a special faculty of interesting young people. He has kindly consented to conduct this department as a means of interesting young people more in the anti-secret reform.

The most dangerous temptation to the ministers in our day is to preach an abstract, not an applied Gospel; to advocate mere theory, and ignore currant and widespread evils.

ZEALOUS FOR CHRIST

REV. MADISON C. PETERS EXPLAINS THE CHRISTIAN'S DUTY.

One Cannot Believe the Gospel and Be Apathetic—The Rarest and Choicest Gifts Belong to God—Aim of Religion. Practical Christianity.

On Sunday, July 7, Madison C. Peters preached his last sermon for the summer in his church. He left the following day for Lexington, Ky., and other points south to preach and lecture before Chautauqua assemblies. August Dr. Peters will devote to rest. On Sept. 8 the church will reopen. Dr. Peters took for his text, "The zeal of thine house hath eaten me up."

What a power Christians would be if each one could honestly say with Brainerd, "Oh, that I were a flaming fire in the hands of my God." We need at this time what the Chinese convert told the missionary his people wanted, "Men with hot hearts to tell us of the love of Christ." Do you find in this world lukewarmness in any one department of real life? Do you find anything like apathy where men believe their interests or safety is involved?

It is only skepticism that suffers enthusiasm in the things of Cæsar and will not endure enthusiasm in the more important things of God. We profess to believe that the world of sinners outside of Christ will be eternally lost unless turned from their evil ways, and yet we so live by our indifference as to give the lie to such profession or else stamp ourselves without the commonest feeling of humanity. It is impossible to believe the truths of the gospel and yet be apathetic. I do not believe in religious excitement, but I do believe in excitement in religion.

The Cross Agitates.

The cross is the most restless and resistless of agitators, and if your religion does not excite you it is because you have no religion. If you believe in the tear compelling story of Jesus and his love, the best feelings and sympathies of your nature will be roused to their highest pitch and you will love with an enthusiastic love and praise with intensest gratitude him who loved and bled and died for us. If you feel no quenchless love, fiery zeal and glowing enthusiasm for Christ's glory, you may disgnise it as you like, but in deed and in truth you do not believe that Christ died that sinners might be redeemed or you believe in Calvary just as you do in Gettysburg; you believe in Christ as you believe in Washington or in some dead fact which belongs to history and has no vital connection with you or bearing on your destiny.

Thou must be true thyself
If thou the truth wouldst teach.
Thy soul must overflow if thou
Another's soul wouldst reach.
It needs the overflow of heart
To give the lips full speech.

Can we say with Christ, "My meat and my drink are to do the will of him that sent me?" Let us make our heavenly Father's business the business of life. Let our Christian living be no longer a secondary thing. Put Christ first. Gather all the choicest affections of your heart into one precious alabaster box of love; break it and pour it out before Jesus. Let the gifts you bring to him be the rarest and the choicest that you can find. Let the work of Christ be the one thing which kindles your warmest thoughts and calls forth your noblest service. Let your noblest ministrations this year be performed for Christ. Give yourselves to him. Begin to work with me to make this world better. During the period of rest let us consecrate our energies to him more fully and come home resolved to labor more earnestly than we have ever done.

Give every flying minute something to keep in store.
Work, for the night is coming, when man works no more.

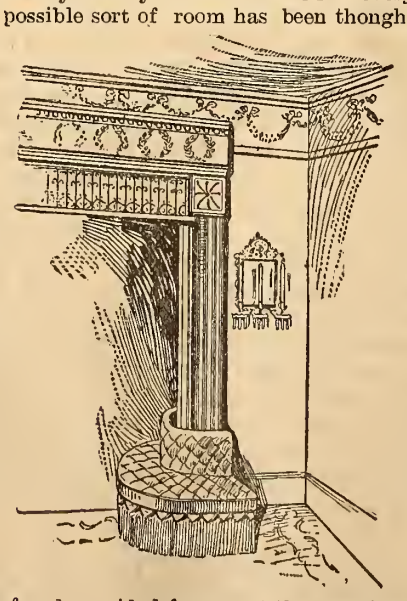
I often wonder that the truth of the gospel does not electrify mankind. It is the awful evidence that a terrible disease has fallen upon us, that we can see all the tempests that beat upon that sacred head and all the love that welcomed the tempest for poor lost man, and be insensate as icicles. There is not a spot on which you can stand with consistency till you take your place either with the destructive, blaspheming infidel in that vacuum in which no soul can breathe and no wing can soar and say, "No God," or with the Christian who can pour forth from his heart the cry of Paul, "For me to live is Christ."

Practical Christianity.

Are your ears open to the cries of woe worn humanity? You pity the sorrows of the suffering. That is not enough. Your hand must be taught to heed the pleadings of your pitying heart. What you feel you must do. What you wish you must make an earnest effort to accomplish. What you pray for you must try to attain. We do most for ourselves when we do most for others.

The goods that God has given us are to be laid out for the good of others—sacred trusts not to be greedily hoarded, lavishly squandered or selfishly to be enjoyed, but generously to be employed for the glory of God. The most benevolent soul lives nearest to God. To be good is noble; to do good is nobler. The paramount aim of religion is not to prepare for heaven, but to make this world better, wiser, happier and holier. Heaven will not be a place of white robes and golden harps and psalm singing only, but it will also be a place for living, loving and doing. Be not simply good; be good for something. This will make your life comfortable, your death happy, your funeral sad, your account glorious and your eternity blessed.

How good 'twill be at evening
If you and I can say:
"Good Shepherd, we've been seeking
The lambs that went astray.
Heartsore and faint with hunger,
We heard them making moan,
And, lo, we came at nightfall
Bearin' them safely home."



WOMAN'S WORLD.

A DOOR DIVAN WHICH FILLS A LONG FELT WANT.

New York's Woman's Headquarters—Mrs. Potter Palmer and Countess Craven. Miss Julia Wilbur—Chicago Women's Enterprise—Women In Public Office.

Although it would seem that the ultimate thought in furniture had found its expression in form before this, yet we find progressive manufacturers still putting out brand new ideas.

Here is one of those things that are new and yet so simple that one's first thought is: "Sure enough! Why did we never think of that?" Chairs and sofas we have without end in variety and beauty. Every alcove and nook in every possible sort of room has been thought of and provided for except the one place that exists in almost every house and is the one place where people are always wanting to sit—that is the doorway itself. Folding doors between communicating rooms are seldom closed. An ordinary chair within a few feet of the space never looks well. It shows its back to one room or the other and is in the way. The settee illustrated here is an addition to any decorative arrangement of either room. It does not interfere with any graceful drapery that may be arranged at the door. It is decidedly useful, convenient and gives a certain touch of the unusual and elegant to the room. Of course it is readily rolled to some other position when it is desired to close the sliding doors. Altogether it seems a decidedly happy thought, and likely to become as indispensable as the divan in a tasteful parlor.

New York's Woman's Headquarters.

The woman's headquarters is about the newest thing in New York. It has only been in existence a few weeks, but already it bids fair to become one of the successful organizations of the city. In an interview Mrs. E. A. Johnson, the originator of the idea, said: "There seemed to be a great need for some sort of a practical headquarters, where ladies could meet or make business appointments, write letters, especially during the summer months, when most ladies close up their town houses. Already there are more applications for rooms than the supply will accommodate." It is so much pleasanter to go to the "headquarters" than to a hotel, and at last women will be allowed to enjoy the blessed privileges of a man's club. There is a messenger service in the house and telephone close at hand. A room will be reserved and can be rented by the hour or season for classes, readings, lectures or society meetings, etc. Rooms can be engaged by the day, week or month, with or without meals.

The "woman's headquarters" will engage and send out servants at 50 cents a head additional to office fees and transportation. Characters of same thoroughly investigated before sending. One of the greatest features of the headquarters will be its convenience for selecting and sending choice cuts of meats at moderate prices, the charge for which will be 15 per cent on all orders under $5 and 10 per cent on all orders exceeding that amount. Butter will be made for the "woman's headquarters" and can be sold the year round at 30 cents a pound in print pound packages. A woman's chess club has already engaged a room for its meetings next season.—New York Letter.

Mrs. Potter Palmer and Countess Craven.

Mrs. Potter Palmer was the guest recently of the Writers' club, in London, at afternoon tea. The London reporters greatly admire our countrywoman and describe with enthusiasm her "picturesque white hair and her thorough knowledge of the art of dress." At this latest function Mrs. Palmer wore a very smart gown of cornflower blue crepon, with bodice of lace embroidery, and becoming little toque. The reception was a handsome and successful affair and included the presence of many of London's notables.

Another American, this a New York girl, the youthful Countess of Craven, formerly Miss Bradley-Martin, is also pleasantly in the public eye over in the home of her adoption. Lady Craven has just made her first public appearance in Coventry at the opening ceremony of a charitable fair. She made, according to the accounts, a most pleasing picture as she stood in a quaint archway of greenery in front of "Ye Pylgrym's Reste," and holding the two shower bouquets presented to her by two dainty white clad little maids in a short, graceful speech declared the bazaar open. She wore a beautiful though somewhat matronly looking gown of iridescent violet silk shot with black and a biscuit colored straw toque, with black roses, shot violet ribbon and a white espray.

Miss Julia Wilbur.

Miss Julia Wilbur, who died recently in Washington, was a noted character. During the war of the rebellion Miss Wilbur gave up her prosperous select school in New York and came to the capital to engage in voluntary service for the freedmen who thronged to the city in those dark days. Her sympathy went out to all, and in nursing the wounded she, like so many other women, knew no sectionalism. This was bread cast upon the waters which came back to her during the early Democratic regime, when she lost the position she had held in the patent office since 1869. Never was there a more conscientious and efficient clerk, and, therefore, it was no violation of public good that led Secretary Lamar, when it was represented to him that she had nursed the Confederates as well as Union soldiers, to secure her reinstatement.

This position she held until her death, and on her salary of $1,000 a year she maintained a home for herself and a dependent invalid sister and had a liberal purse for the support of the woman suffrage work. Up to the time of her illness, which began in March, she had been one of the most industrious employees of the offices, although she would have been 80 years old in August, and, as her sick leave and annual vacation time were only just running out at the time of her death, she had the satisfaction of feeling, even in her helpless condition, that she was receiving the reward of her own labors.—Woman's Tribune of Washington.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic For the Week Beginning July 21. Comment by Rev. S. H. Doyle.

TOPIC.—A clean life.—Ps. cxix, 9-16. (A temperance topic.)

The question of the Psalmist in the first verse of the topical reference, "Wherewithal shall a young man cleanse his way?" implies that the way or the life is unclean. This is in the unregenerate state the case. We are born in sin. The natural heart is sinful and corrupt, for "it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be." An unclean life is the necessary consequence of an unclean heart, as an impure stream must follow an impure fountain.

The importance of a pure, holy, honest, upright life cannot be estimated. It is the one thing above all others that should be desired and earnestly sought after. Nothing will compensate us for a loss of it. It is of inestimable value even from the standpoint of this present life, not to consider the fact of its tremendous importance in view of the fact that nothing unclean can enter into the kingdom of heaven. If a clean life is of so much importance, we may well ask, How may we have clean lives? This question is particularly applicable to the young, for then it is that the character of the life is formed, and then it is easier, too, if mistakes have been made to rectify them and to make the life clean.

The Psalmist here lays down the only true rule or principle for a clean life—namely, that we take heed to the word of God, that we square our lives by God's word, that we live in accordance with it. God's word is the only true solution of the problem of a true life. It transcends all human philosophy and ethics of men in that it applies the ax at the root of the tree, demanding that first of all the heart, the inward life must be clean. The Bible solution is regeneration—change of heart—rather than reformation, simply a change in the form of life. The logic of this standard is apparent to all. You can no more make a clean man by changing his form of life than you can cure a consumptive by putting on him a new suit of clothes. Given a clean heart and a clean life necessarily follows; without the first, the second is impossible.

To be effective in cleansing the life God's word must be laid up in the heart. It must be studied and meditated upon, and it must be practiced in the daily life. Let us devote more time to God's word that we may keep the heart pure and the life clean.

FABLE OF THE THREE CHURCHES.

How the Good Angel Christian Endeavor Brought Them Together.

Once upon a time—a long, long while ago, before the Christian Endeavor movement—there were three churches, built side by side. Tall board fences parted them the one from the other. Each was conspicuously placarded, the one with "We," the second with "Us," and the third with "Our," thus signifying to all beholders that the churches belonged to the denominations then known as Weists, Usites and Ourians.

But the churches were empty. So the Weist preacher stood in front of his church urging folks to come in, constantly proclaiming, "We are the people!" And the Usite preacher stood in front of his church, continually crying, "Come to Us!" And the Ourian preacher stood in front of his church, ceaselessly reiterating, "Ours only!" And in the pauses of these calls they shook their fists at one another.

All this, remember, was long, long ago, before the Christian Endeavor movement.

Now and then a man would stop, attracted by the noise, would look perplexed from the Weist to the Usite, and from the Usito to the Ourian, then shrug his shoulders and pass on his way. So the churches remained empty.

But one glad day Christian Endeavor came along—a beautiful, strong angel, with the most loving eyes and the most eager, outstretched hands—and he drew these three men to himself, and they held a little prayer meeting all together in one of the churches, it does not matter which. As they came out of that meeting, they all went to work and pulled down the high board fences. Then they tore off the three signs, "We," "Us" and "Our." Then all three took up their old positions, with Christian Endeavor, on the sidewalk in front of their churches and began to invite the people in. And the Weist cried, "Christ is the Saviour!" And the Usite cried, "Come to Christ!" And the Ourian cried, "Christ only!" And every once in awhile they held another prayer meeting in one of the churches, turn about.

And you should have seen the people flocking in! Some to this church, some to that, according to their individual preference, but all to Christ. And often the crowds were so large that they had to go forth and hold a union outdoor service in the square in front. And so the three churches flourish to this day. —Caleb Cobweb in Golden Rule.

With Jesus.

With Jesus, yes, with Jesus—
Are any words so blest?
With Jesus—everlasting joy
And everlasting rest!
With Jesus—all the empty heart
Filled with His perfect love.
With Jesus—perfect peace below
And perfect bliss above!

HE TIPPLES NO MORE

A TRAMP PRINTER OPENS A MODERATE DRINKER'S EYES.

Danger of Tampering With Whisky Made Clear to His Vision—Comfort Without Strong Drink—Terrible Significance of the Words "What Did It."

It was a fair spring morning when there drifted into my printing office a specimen of the tramp printer. He was ragged, thin and weather beaten and bore the unmistakable signs of long and constant contact with red liquor. But, in spite of this, I was glad to see him and gave him hearty welcome. Opening my table drawer, I produced for him a quart of the best "Lincoln county." His old eyes fairly danced in their sockets as he clutched vainly at composure.

"Well," he said, reaching for the bottle, "it is a habit which I seldom indulge, but I have had a nasty tramp of it, and my throat and lungs are so full of dust that it may do me good. But I regard it, sir, as the greatest curse of the age." So saying he gulped down, without a frown or a wink of the eye, a quantity that would have floored me instantly. Replacing the bottle on the table between us, he continued: "Yes, sir, I regard it as the greatest curse of the age. The one thing that is doing more to make invalids and paupers and criminals of us all, and is filling our graveyards and poorhouses and jails today more than all other things combined, is the evil of intemperance. The whisky bottle is the devil's right bower, and the man who distills the poisonous drug is his best friend." All suspicion had now vanished from his mind. Reaching for the bottle again, he went on:

"Take the daily paper of today, sir, and read its numerous dispatches from all parts of the globe, telling of arson, perjury, robbery, theft, rape, murder and every single form and phase of crime in the whole calendar, and ask yourself, 'What did it?' Or take each separate case and trace it back to its origin, and see what did it! You will find that all, without an exception, is directly traceable to the use of alcoholic stimulants. This infernal bottle" (taking it for the sixth time from his mouth and stroking it soothingly) "is a veritable germinator of misery and sin.

"If nobody had ever drunk whisky, nobody would be poor and wretched. The serpent that entered Eden, sir, was a copper worm, and that same snake has trailed its slimy way about the earth since then, and every home it has ever entered has been blighted, and every life it has ever touched has been ruined. Its record is one of want and degradation and shame, its form is a blasphemy, and its birthplace is hell!"

"And now to the point," he resumed after another long pull at the bottle. "I have hit upon a happy idea for battling effectually with this cursed foe to society and good government, and I believe you are a gentleman of enough appreciation to join in it with me. Besides doing humanity an incalculable service, I am going to make a fortune at it, and this I don't mind sharing with you, if you will assist me in the project. I have named it to every newspaper man I have met between here and Boston, but none of them has had judgment and humanity enough to appreciate its possibilities. Now, the first thing you want to do is to put people to thinking. Once get men to weigh the awful question seriously, and the total extermination of the whisky traffic is an easy matter. My purpose is to start a paper. It is to be a temperance paper, but on a novel order. The name of the paper will be What Did It? This will attract the public attention, to start with. Then the contents of the paper will be equally novel. These will consist solely of reports of crime and disaster clipped from the daily press. They will be printed in full, headlines and all, just as they originally appeared, with proper credit given the paper from which they were taken. The only comment of any kind our paper will contain will be a single black type line at the bottom of each article and will be always the same, simply 'What Did It?' This will be enough to make the reader stop and think, and that is all we want. The proper answer will be sufficiently patent to force itself on all."

Springing up excitedly, he demanded with enthusiasm, "What do you think of it?"

"Excellent! Capital!" I responded, for I had touched the bottle a few times myself.

I asked him to dinner with me, but he declined. After dinner I returned to the office and found upon opening the door that he was still there, but the bottle was empty.

He was seated at the table, leaned over, with his head buried in his folded arms. I spoke to him, but he did not answer. I laid my hand on his shoulder, but he did not move. I raised his rough, grimy hand. It was wet with his old heart's last, best tears, and cold in death.

Before him on the table lay a sheet of white paper, and on it was scrawled in unshapely characters the single line:

"What Did It?"

I had been up to this time what people call "a moderate drinker," and had never before been able to see any real harm in an occasional dram. Seldom taking two drinks in the same day, I nevertheless kept a bottle always at hand in my office and at times referred to it for "comfort."

The needed lesson had been taught me. The office bottle went out the office window, never to return again. I resolved from that moment never, God being my helper, to tamper with evil again, and I have kept my resolution unbroken. Nor is it any trouble to find "comfort," but it is the comfort of the consciousness of a day well spent in the harness of duty—a comfort far greater and dearer than any that ever came from the use of strong drink.—R. McL. Fields in Voice.

TEMPERANCE CONGRESS.

All Foes of Alcohol Are Invited to Be Present at Its Deliberations.

The fifth international temperance congress against "the abuse of alcoholic drink" will be held at Basel, Switzerland, Aug. 20, 21 and 22. The fourth congress met at The Hague in 1893. In its circular of invitation addressed to members and friends of temperance and abstinence societies The Hague standing committee invites all who regard alcoholism as a source of diseases, miseries and crimes, and who see it to be their duty to oppose the scourge from motives of patriotism and philanthrophy to take part in the coming congress.

The deliberations of the congress are to be classified in two departments, the first dealing with alcoholism in its moral, hygienic, social and medical relationships, and the second with the means of prevention, suasion and compulsion to be made use of in combating the enemy.

Excepting on matters political or religious, free discussion will be allowed, and the only persons to whom participation in the proceedings will be refused are such as are interested in the production and sale of alcoholic drinks. Each member will pay in advance a donation of five francs, which will entitle him to copies of all official documents, including reports of the papers read. Such papers and the discussion of them may be either in French, German, English or Italian. The treasurer is M. G. W. Bronner, Rue de Dornach, Basel.

To keep pickles well and aid them to retain their freshness when put up in fruit jars rub the inside of the metal caps with lard. Cans that have caps lined with porcelain are much to be preferred for all purposes.

SABBATH SCHOOL.

LESSON IV, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, JULY 28.

Text of the Lesson, Num. x, 29-36—Memory Verses, 33, 34—Golden Text, Num. x, 29—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

29. "And Moses said unto Hobab, the son of Raguel the Midianite, Moses' father-in-law, We are journeying unto the place of which the Lord said, I will give it to you; come thou with us, and we will do thee good, for the Lord hath spoken good concerning Israel." They had been encamped at Horeb many months. On the first day of the first month of the second year the tabernacle was erected and accepted by God and filled with His glory (Ex. xl, 17, 34). Just fifty days later the cloud lifted, and they journeyed from Sinai (Num. x, 11, 12) in the order described in this chapter. Raguel, or Ruel, or Jethro (Ex. ii, 18; iii, 1) was the father of Zipporah, Moses' wife. Hobab is here said to be his son and was probably an intimate friend of Moses in the days of his shepherd life. Truly the Lord had spoken good concerning Israel, as in Ex. vi, 6-8, that wondrous sevenfold, "I will," beginning and ending with "I, Jehovah." Moses believed the word of the Lord. He had respect unto the recompense of the reward (Heb. xi, 26), and because of it had forsaken all his prospects in Egypt. Being fully persuaded of the good things awaiting Israel, he would fain have Hobab to enjoy them too. Have we this spirit?

30. "And he said unto him, I will not go, but I will depart to my own land and to my kindred." Hobab saw no such prospect as opened up to the mind of Moses, and as far as appearances went he felt that he would be better off with his own people. It is difficult for many to esteem the reproach of Christ greater riches than the visible treasures of this world. The young man whom Jesus told to sell all that he had, and take up the cross and follow Him, went away grieved because he had great possessions. Jesus and His sufferings now, with glory hereafter, is the programme for the Christian. If we prefer the world and its pleasures now, we must not complain if we lose the kingdom hereafter.

31. "And he said, Leave us not, I pray thee, forasmuch as thou knowest how we are to encamp in the wilderness, and thou mayest be to us instead of eyes." Moses is now seeking good from Hobab instead of, as a moment ago, offering him good from God. In this Moses is surely wrong. It looks as if for the moment he was forgetting God, and His cloud, and His unerring guidance. So unstable is man even at his best. We think of Simon Peter one moment confessing that Jesus was the Christ, the Son of the Living God, and the next acting as satan's mouthpiece to tempt the Lord to pity Himself and turn from the cross (Math. xvi, 16, 23). How we do need to pray, "Set a watch, O Lord, before my mouth; keep the door of my lips."

32. "And it shall be if thou go with us, yea, it shall be, that what goodness the Lord shall do unto us the same will we do unto thee." Moses now talks more correctly, for we are fully authorized to offer all the riches of God's grace and glory to all who will accept Him through Jesus Christ, but we are not expected to seek any help or guidance from those who are not His. As to offering to others the same goodness He bestows upon us, we remember that Jesus said in His prayer (John xvii, 23), "The glory which thou gavest me, I have given them." Again he said, "All things that the Father hath are mine." (John xvi, 15). And again it is written "All are yours, and ye are Christ's, and Christ is God's." (I Cor. iii, 23). Now since God is willing to give His grace and glory to every one who will come to Him through Jesus Christ, what must He think of us who know this, and yet do little or nothing to make it known to the millions who are still in heathen darkness?

33. "And they departed from the Mount of the Lord three days' journey, and the ark of the covenant of the Lord went before them in the three days' journey, to search out a resting place for them." This was surely better than the eyes or the wisdom of Hobab. How could Moses seem to forget that God had led them and would still lead them? Yet we are apt to do this very thing—we do forget so soon. Three days is very suggestive of resurrection, as in the story of Abraham and Isaac, Jonah, our Lord Jesus, etc. God would have us rest in Jesus crucified and risen. If He be not risen, there is no salvation for any one (I Cor. xv, 14-18). But since He died and rose again and ever liveth, He becomes a resting place for all who receive Him. This rest becomes a glorious reality when we, having accepted Him, see ourselves as crucified and risen with Him, and seated with Him in the heavenlies (Eph. ii, 4-6). Ceasing from our own works, we rest in His finished work (Hab. iv, 3, 10), and wherever He pitches our tent He is our rest.

34. "And the cloud of the Lord was upon them by day when they went out of the camp." The cloud was the visible symbol of the Lord's presence with them, and He by it was their guide, their light, their shield, their avenger, their oracle, their covering (Ex. xiii, 21; xiv, 19, 20, 24-28; Num. ix, 15-23; x, 34; xiv, 14), in fact, all that they needed for all the journey. In the New Testament story we think of the cloud on the Mount of Transfiuration, the cloud that received Him as He ascended from Olivet and the clouds with which He will come again. If we are truly His, we have the assurance that He is with us all the days; that he will never leave us nor forsake us; that he will instruct us in the way in which we should go; that He will hold our hand and help us, and that He will perfect that which concerneth us (Math. xxviii, 20; Heb. xiii, 5; Ps. xxxii, 8; Isa. xli, 13; Ps. cxxxviii, 8). The comfort of all this comes by simply believing it.

35. "And it came to pass, when the ark set forward, that Moses said, Rise up, Lord, and let thine enemies be scattered, and let them that hate thee flee before thee." David, by the spirit, afterward embodied this in at least two of the psalms (Ps. lxviii, 1, 2; Ps. cxxxii, 8). In Joshua iii, 13, the ark is called "the ark of the Lord, the Lord of all the earth." When the people relied upon God who dwelt between the cherubim, their enemies fled before them, but when they relied upon the ark (which was only the symbol of His presence) then their enemies obtained the victory (I Sam. iv. 3, 11). If we rely upon anything but upon the Lord Himself, we will not have peace or victory.

36. "And when it rested, he said, Return, O Lord, unto the many thousands of Israel." Thus, whether on the march or at rest, the great reality of Israel's life was Jehovah in their midst. In proportion as they realized this and acted accordingly, they prospered, but when they forgot Him they failed. It is so with us. He says, "Lo, I am with you always," and when we believe, and thus realize His presence, and count on Him, we have joy and peace and victory, but when we forget His presence we fail.

ILLINOIS PICKINGS.

NEWS NOTES OF INTEREST FROM HERE AND THERE.

Reports by Telegraph of Important Happenings in Our Own State During the Past Few Days—News of Interest to the People of Illinois.

SPRINGFIELD, Ills., July 11.—W. G. Cochran was elected speaker of the house in ratification of the action of the Republican caucus, receiving 87 votes to 35 for Clayton E. Crafts, the Democratic nominee, who failed to get the full Democratic vote—being 26 short—it is said because of Governor Altgeld's opposition to nominating anybody. No business of importance was transacted other than the above. In the senate bills were introduced: To amend the act regarding the assessment, levy and collection of taxes; to arbitrate labor disputes and to amend the appellate court act.

SPRINGFIELD, July 12.—In pursuance of an agreement of the Republicans of both houses to do no business before next Wednesday the senate did nothing of importance at its session and adjourned to Saturday afternoon, which is practically adjournment to Wednesday. In the house bills were introduced: Taxing express companies $2 on each $100 of receipts, telephone companies $2 on each instrument, and insurance companies 2 per cent. on gross amount of premium on business done in this state; compelling public warehouses to pay an annual license of $5 and a tax of one-third of a cent for every bushel of grain handled; resolution looking to the abolition of the fee system in public offices, and a labor arbitration bill. Some more revenue code bills were also introduced.

Altgeld's interview about Crafts created much comment. The governor's friends declare that he will not swerve from his purpose to have Crafts deposed as leader in the house; whereas Crafts' friends say he will use every means in his power to defeat the governor's plan. They say the governor is interfering with rights of the house. Snyder, of Belleville, one of Crafts' opponents, denied in an interview that Governor Altgeld was responsible for the action of some of the Democrats who refused to vote for Crafts. He said the action was the result of a consultation between himself and Perry; that they agreed upon Stockopf as their candidate before the caucus, and sounded such representatives as they believed to be in their way of thinking. They did call upon the governor for advice Tuesday afternoon, and "that's all there was to it."

The committee on rules met in Speaker Cochran's room at once after the house adjourned. Several important changes were made, one of which will prevent "smothering" of bills in sub-committees.

SPRINGFIELD, July 13.—The house held another session before adjourning to Wednesday next, and bills were introduced: To establish justice by deciding all cases on their merits without regard to technicalities, and to enlarge and define the powers of courts and justices of the peace; to tax express companies; to require assessors to give bonds; to tax "foreign" companies operating sleeping and freight car and oil tank lines; to compel the Illinois Central railroad to comply with the act of incorporation regarding the sale of lands.

GOV. ALTGELD A GOOD HORSEMAN.

Tries an Agile Trick with a Rearing Animal and "Gets There."

SPRINGFIELD, Ills., July 12.—Governor Altgeld had a narrow escape from death or serious injury yesterday. He had just mounted a spirited horse preparatory to going to Camp Lincoln to review the Second regiment when the animal began to rear in a dangerous manner. The governor thrust spurs into the animal with considerable vigor, and it reared up to such height that it lost its balance and fell over backwards.

The governor, who is an expert horseman, slipped out of the saddle and sprang to one side just in time to avoid being crushed. A cavalry troop was waiting to escort him to the camp, and several of the men started to his assistance, but the governor declined to take any other horse and regaining his seat when the horse was captured subdued it after a severe struggle and proceeded to camp.

Illinois at the Atlanta Show.

SPRINGFIELD, July 9.—Governor Altgeld has appointed the following to represent Illinois at the International Cotton States exposition at Atlanta, Ga., September, 1895: A. S. Trude and George Schneider, Chicago; Captain William P. Halliday, Cairo. Willis Abbott, of Chicago, is named as secretary of the commission.

Notes of the State.

Alfred Englund, a Mendota, Ills., farmer, was thrown under his horses' feet and kicked about the head and shoulders, receiving fatal injuries.

M. J. Berry, alia M. J. Ryan, alias E. E. Bussy, was arrested at Springfield, Ills., charged with uttering forged checks. He is wanted in Christian county.

George Handley, a convicted wife-beater, while being taken to jail on a train, jumped out of a window at Oliver, Ills., but the officer jumped, too, and recaptured him.

The Ramsey (Ills.) Coal company has shut down on account of water in the mine.

There was only one member in the Illinois senate chamber when it was to have met Saturday morning for the purpose of adjourning to Wednesday. He adjourned. He was Senator Littler.

Missing and Short in His Cash.

SIOUX CITY, Ia., July 10.—W. R. Lysle, confidential bookkeeper of Ingersal & West, commission merchants, disappeared suddenly a week ago. A partial examination of his books has been completed and it shows his shortage amounts to over $20,000. Lysle had been in the employ of the firm for a number of years.

Collapsed Without Warning.

ATLANTIC CITY, July 11.—The social session tendered by Atlantic City lodge to the visiting Elks at the Baltic Avenue Casino last evening ended in a terrible disaster in which fully 100 persons were more or less seriously injured. The session had just opened, and only one of the speakers had been heard when, without the slightest warning, the building, which has not been used for several years, collapsed, and fully 1,000 persons were thrown to the floor beneath. Many women, the wives of the visiting Elks, went down in the ruins.

A man named Frederick Claproth was killed, and it is feared some of the others injured may die.

Begins Suit to Recover $800,000.

SIOUX CITY, July 13.—The Credits Commutation company, of this city, has begun suit against D. T. Hedges in the United States court in Los Angeles, Cala., to recover $800,000 on personal notes given by Hedges to the Union Loan and Trust company, which went under during the financial panic of 1893. Hedges was one of five men who operated the famous railroad syndicate during the boom days in Sioux City. He was the first to knock the props from under the tottering Union Loan and Trust company, resulting in its total collapse.

Horrible Method of Suicide.

OSKALOOSA, Ia., July 11.—Mrs. Phil Conklin committed suicide in a horrible manner at her home in the eastern part of the city, by saturating her clothing with kerosene oil and lighting it. When her husband arose he found her in the back yard burned to death. She was 39 years old and leaves a husband and three small children.

MISS FLAGG'S
LATEST NEW BOOK!
"A Prisoner of Hope."
COMPLETE IN ONE LARGE HANDSOME VOLUME.
Price, $1.25.

KILLED BY A CYCLONE

SEVERAL LIVES LOST IN A STORM IN THE EAST.

Many Buildings Blown to Pieces by the Whirling Terror — Six Street Cars Wrecked—Incidents of the Disaster and the Destruction Done.

NEW YORK, July 15.—The first cyclone in many years has struck New York, and resulted fatally in one instance, besides wrecking a large amount of valuable property. The cyclone descended upon the upper part of east New York, known as Cypress Hills, at 4:30 p. m., continued on its way to the lower plains district, and from there traveled to Woodhaven. The cloud was first seen going over Cypress Hills. It was funnel shaped and hung very close to the ground. At the upper end was a red spot that appeared more like an incankescent light than anything else. The cyclone swept over the cemetery, wrecking handsome and costly monuments. It tore down trees for about 200 feet and then turned into Jamaica avenue. On this street it wrecked six street cars, and half a dozen people were slightly hurt. Thirty houses were wrecked in Woodhaven.

Nine Persons, All Told, Killed.

There was just one person killed in east New York, Mrs. Louisa Ketrequin, who was standing in the door of her house when the storm struck it and demolished it. She was instantly killed. The balance of the casualty list is given as follows, the victims being residents of the villages and vicinities of Cherry Hill, N. J., and Woodhaven, L. I. The dead are: Frank H. Ahrens, aged 8 months; Anton Fischer, laborer; Conrad Friedman, proprietor of the Cherry Hill hotel; Willie Friedman, little son of the hotel keeper; Tony Kolg; Mrs. Jennie Petriquan, of Union Course; two unidentified laborers who had taken refuge in a barn at Cherry Hill.

The more seriously injured are: Mrs. William Ahrens, mother of the dead infant; Willie Ahrens, aged 3 years; Edgar Chinnock, fractured skull; Charles Cole, of Paterson; Anton Hoffman, three ribs broken; Alexander Jones, the village blacksmith; Andrew Suttell, nose, arm, and leg broken.

Freaks of the Kansas Whirler.

There were twenty residents of Woodhaven hit by the various objects which were carried through the air. Chimneys sailed through the air as though they were not heavier than feathers. At Woodhaven a woman was in an outhouse. The house was picked up and carried by the storm for more than a block. Finally the woman was landed on one side of the street and the house on the other. The woman had a miraculous escape from serious injury, receiving only a slight cut on the forehead.

The infant of the Ahrens family was lying in a crib when the crash came. The house was unroofed and a flying stick struck the child in the head, tearing off one of the ears as cleanly as though severed by a surgeon's knife and causing death. When the husband, who is a New York business man, returned the sun was shining brightly and his wife was sitting amid the ruins with the body of her dead child in her arms.

Thousands Visit the Devastation.

Between 40,000 and 50,000 persons visited the scene of the ruin and devastation at Cherry Hill yesterday. Some of the unfortunates whose homes were wrocked sat about during the day wondering what was in store for thom. Hackensack and the other towns have responded promptly to the call for aid made by the people of Cherry Hill. Viewed in the light of day the ruin appeared more complete. Everywhere in the path of the storm were wrecks. The leafless trees that withstood the strain of the whirlwind gave the appearance of midwinter.

Death Roll Decreased by Two.

The two Polish laborers reported killed are alive in the hospital. They are Andrew Sautle, and Anton Hoffman. both are badly injured. Edgar Chinock, the doctors think, will die. His skull is fractured. During the early part of Saturday night the owners of the wrecked dwellings sat about them guarding their ruins, but later a patrol was formed which guarded the streets.

ENDEAVORERS TAKE A REST.

Great Meeting on Boston Common Spoiled by a Big Storm.

BOSTON, July 15.—The weather man after bestowing upon the Christian Endeavor convention since Wednesday his finest weather, Saturday sent upon it a deluge of rain just as the assault upon Mammon was about to culminate in the great out-door religious gathering announced to take place upon Boston Common. On that greon a vast assemblage, estimated at between 40,000 and 60,000 persons, was ready to begin what would have been the greatest religious gathering in the history of the world. President Francis E. Clarke, D. D., glanced fearfully skyward, but opened the services at the appointed hour. Then came the heavy rain, but the discomfort of the thousands of dripping umbrellas did not prevent a mighty rendition of "Onward, Christian Soldier."

Dr. S. F. Smith, author of "America," was then introduced and the thousands sang a verse of that hymn in compliment to its author. By this time the rain was falling in torrents and the president announced an adjournment to the big tents, Endeavor and Williston, near by. About 15,000 found seats and the remaining thousands went away. The subject of the day's addresses was "Good Citizenship" and the usual rallies were held during the day. The junior rally was held and thousands of little Endeavorers were present. State, territorial and provincial rallies were held at night in the respective headquarters and were largely attended.

The programme yesterday included work only for visiting clergymen. The local ministers in general gave place to those who had come from other localities to attend the convention, and it is doubtful if ever in the history of Boston its pulpits were supplied with such an array of eminent preachers. To the more than 50,000 members of the Y. P. S. C. E. the day came as a literal "day of rest," which was well appreciated after last week's hard work. All the churches were packed. Today is the closing day of the convention.

CRASH ON THE GRAND TRUNK.

Thirteen Pilgrims Journeying to St. Anne de Beaupre Are Killed.

SOUTH QUEBEC, Que., July 10.—At Craig's Road station, at 3:45 o'clock in the morning, a pilgrim excursion on the Grand Trunk road from Sherbrooke was boing run in two sections. The first section stopped at Craig's Road to cross an up train, when the second section ran into it, the engine plowing through the Pullman and first-class car. The pilgrims were en route to the famous shrine of St. Anne de Beaupre, where every summer large numbers of sick and crippled gather to invoke the saint to cure them of their diseases. Thirteen were killed and over a score wounded. The passenger cars and the engine are wrecked. The wounded are scattered far and wide among the residences.

The trains carrying the pilgrims were made up of residents from Sherbrooke, Magog, Windsor Mills and surrounding parishes.

Following is a corrected list of the dead and wounded: Dead—Charles Bedart (mail clerk), Iss Bedart, Hector McLeod (engineer), Richard Perkins (fireman), Kev. J.T. Mercier—all of Richmond; Rev. F. P. Dingan, Windsor Mill; Mr. Cogan, Richmond; Miss Valin, and Miss Phaneuf, St Joseph de Levis; Mrs. J. B. Caver, Danville; Miss Delvcourt Sheffield, St. Joseph do Levis; aunt of Miss Lavin, name unknown; John O'Farrell, Capleton—thirteen in all.

Injured—John Cadieux, J. B. Cayer, Seraphine Cayer, Joseph Cayey, Louise Cayer—all of Danvills; Virginia Silvester, Ham; Mr. Francis Fontaine, Broughton; Louis Gaudet, Arthabarcaville; Patrick McHugh, Capleton; Pierre Allard, Richmond; Antonia Baril, Arthabarcaville; Hercules des Coteaux and his wife and son, Danville; Rev. F. Deri Rosiers, Broughton; J. Quinlan, Montreal, badly hurt; Cyrillie Emlllard, Sherbrooke; Delina Gosselin, Sherbrooke; Mr. and Mrs. Hamel, Danville; Mrs. Louis Morin and Olivine Morin, Windsor; Mrs. Frank Caker and 6-year-old daughtor, Danville; Mrs. Zephrim Lamelin, Windsor; Lazre Godbout, Windsor Mills; Joseph Richard, Brompton Falls; Clophas Charest, Coaticooke; Benett Bassler, Pullman car porter, Toronto. Probably one or two of the injured will die.

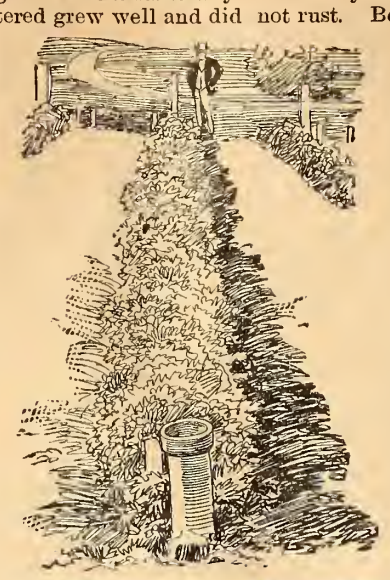
NEW METHOD OF IRRIGATION.

A Simple Plan of Using Tile For Irrigating Small Areas.

Too much cannot be said about the importance of a constant water supply for growing plants. If we could only irrigate properly, the hot, constant sunshine of a drought would make the best possible growing season. Professor F. W. Rane of the West Virginia station tells through the columns of The Rural New Yorker a simple plan of using tile for irrigating small areas which is at least worth trying. He says:



The whole plan is this: Place the tiles slightly in the surface of the ground or at any convenient depth. Give them a slight incline, this varying according as you have pressure or not. In most cases the water is scarce, and the object is to get it to the roots of the plants with as little waste as possible. The plan followed at the station last year was to place common porons 2½ inch draintiles in a continuous row, end to end, on the surface of the soil, and vegetables were planted on either or both sides of the line. The tiles were a foot long, and by pouring in the water at one end of the line it was distributed at the joints throughout the length desired, when the opposite end was stopped up.

Take celery as an example crop for irrigation on uplands. We plant the celery as above stated, and while it is young we have simple surface irrigation; but as the crop grows, we bank it up, and finally have the tile covered, and thus have subirrigation. The tiles are cheap, and last indefinitely. When the celery is harvested, the tiles are dug out also, and piled up or used for subirrigation in the greenhouse beds. Potatoes and various other crops can be grown in the same way. The celery watered grew well and did not rust. Besides this we were able to water 20 times as much space in the same time as in the ordinary way with ditches. Besides saving time this plan delivers water where it is most needed, and we have reason to believe is fully as economical with water as with time.

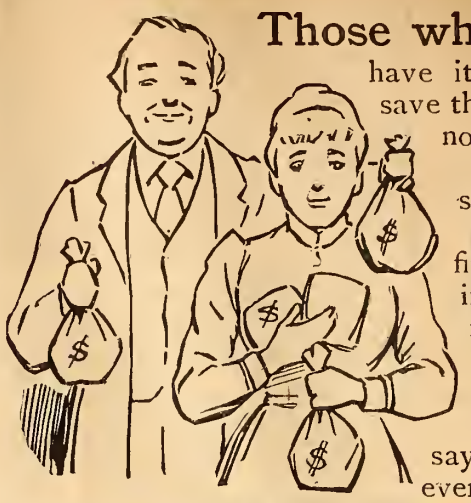
Rows of celery watered in this manner were planted in a potato field, leaving every other space between the potato rows vacant, so that two rows of potatoes could be dug together when ripe. Besides watering the celery, the moisture reached the tops of the potato hills, as was plainly seen every morning by the dampness of the surface throughout the intervening space, thus showing that the watering was sufficient for at least 3 feet 3 inches on each side, or 6 feet 6 inches in all, the rows being 3 feet 3 inches apart. Where the rows were on a slight incline, we slipped a piece of tin between the joints, and held the water where it was needed; then, by pulling it out and inserting it farther down, another section could be treated. The sections can be made longer or shorter, according to the angle at which the ground inclines. This subject is receiving our attention this year, and we hope to be able to present it more fully at a future time, simply offering these suggestions now.



Millet makes good hay if cut just after it has herded out.

The Minnesota legislature seems to have been interested in agricultural education. Appropriations of $60,000 were made for the school of agriculture of the state university.

In a considerable number of trials cottonseed meal has proved injurious when fed to calves or pigs; in a less number of cases when fed to mature hogs. Generally the injury to or death of the animal has occurred when the cottonseed meal has formed a considerable percentage of the ration fed.

A COOK BOOK FREE.

"Table and Kitchen" is the title of a new cook book published by the Price Baking Powder Company, Chicago. Just at this time it will be sent free if you write a postal mentioning the Christian Cynosure. Besides containing over 400 receipts for all kinds of pastry and home cookery, there are many hints for the table and kitchen, showing how to set a table, how to enter the dining-room, etc.; a hundred and one hints in every branch of the culinary art. Cookery of the very finest and richest, as well as of the most economical and home-like, is provided for. Remember "Table and Kitchen" will be sent, postage prepaid, to any lady sending her address (name, town and State) plainly given. A copy in German or Scandinavian will be sent if desired. Postal card is as good as letter. Address Price Baking Powder Co., Chicago, Ill.

Those who have the most have it, as a rule, because they save the most. They're more economical. These people buy Pearline. Proof—in all stores of the better class throughout the land, you'll find the sales of Pearline far in the lead. Now, these economical people wouldn't use Pearline for their washing and cleaning, if they didn't find it to be just what we say—the most economical in every way. Would they?

Send it Back Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled, and if your grocer sends you something in place of Pearline, be honest—send it back. 440 JAMES PYLE, New York.

1. The American Rite of 13 degrees;
2. The Scotch Rite of 33 degrees;
3. The Egyptian Rite of 96 degrees.
4. The Mystic Shrine of one degree.
5. The Eastern Star of 5 degrees for Master Masons and for women. These are side degrees, and not genuine masonry.

The Symbolic degrees, or Blue Lodge of three degrees, are common to every Masonic rite, whether American, Scotch, or Egyptian, or whichever of the Masonic rites, named in Mackey's Masonic Encyclopedia one may choose to investigate.

This chart shows in the Blue Lodge the position of the Worshipful Master and some of the other officers of the lodge. Several positions of the candidate who is being initiated are also shown. In the Master Mason's degree is recognized the murder, burial and resurrection scene so full of religious significance to Freemasons.

Knight Templarism Illustrated. 341 pages, cloth, $1.00; paper, 50c.
A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery.

Scotch Rite Masonry Illustrated. 2 vols. Per vol., cloth, $1.00; paper, 65c.
The complete illustrated ritual of the entire Scottish Rite, comprising all the Masonic degrees from 3rd to 33rd inclusive. The first three degrees are common to all the Masonic Rites, and are fully and accurately given in "Freemasonry Illustrated." Vol. I comprises the degrees from 3rd to 18th inclusive.
Vol. II comprises the degrees from 19th to 33rd inclusive, with the signs, grips, tokens and passwords from 1st to 33rd degree inclusive.

Hand-Book of Freemasonry. 274 pages, flexible cloth, 50c.
By E. Ronayne, Past Master of Keystone Lodge No. 639, Chicago. Gives the complete standard ritual of the first three degrees of Freemasonry.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. 110 pages, paper, 25c.
The genuine old Morgan book republished.

Allyn's Ritual of Freemasonry. By Avery Allyn. Cloth, $5.00.
Contains the fully Illustrated Ritual of the Blue Lodge, Chapter Council and Commandery, 11 of the Scotch Rite Degrees, several Masonic side degrees and what is termed a Key to the Phi Beta Kappa, and the Orange Societies.

Duncan's Masonic Ritual and Monitor. Cloth, $2.50.
Profusely illustrated with explanatory engravings, and containing the ritual and work of the order for the seven degrees, including the Royal Arch. Though extensively used as an Instruction Book and one of the best in the market, it is not as accurate as "Freemasonry Illustrated."

Richardson's Monitor of Freemasonry. Cloth, $1.25; paper, 75c.
Contains the ceremonies of Lodges, Chapters, Encampments, etc. Illustrated. Although extensively used in conferring the higher degrees, it is not only very incomplete but inaccurate especially as regards the first seven degrees, and as to the higher degrees it gives but a description and general idea of the degrees rather than the full ritual.

Look to the East. A ritual of the first three Masonic Degrees by Ralph Lester. Cloth, $2.00.
Notwithstanding the high price this book is very inferior in every way to Freemasonry Illustrated or the Handbook of Freemasonry at a quarter the price.

RAGING FOREST FIRES.

They Are Again Playing Havoc with Property in Michigan.

PETOSKEY, Mich., July 13.—Forest fires have burned up to the village of Brutus, on the Grand Rapids and Indiana railroad north of here, but the village was saved. The fires burned into the Petoskey Roman Catholic cemetery, but the fire department prevented their spreading. There has been heavy loss to crops and standing timber, but rains have now checked the fires. The Western Union has completed its connections. The summer resort—Oden—and the village of Conway, on Crooked lake, and the hamlets of Carpenter and Bay Shore, a few miles west of Petoskey, were in great danger. At Carpenter several buildings caught fire from sparks, but by the most strenuous efforts of men, women and children the mill, lumber yards and town were saved.

Forty-Two Square Miles Devastated.

MUSKEGON, Mich., July 13.—Within one and a half miles of North Muskegon the forest fires have cut out a burned district six by seven miles, in which they have been blazing since Sunday. In the center of the district, on the edge of the great cedar swamp, stands the Van Zant sawmill with its stock of logs and lumber, which scores of farmers are fighting to save. Unless rain comes it is gone. The ground is dry and the fire seems to burn the very soil. Thousands of acres of woodland in Laketon, Fruitland and Dalton townships have been burned over. Fences are burning in all directions and scores of homes are threatened. No rain has fallen this year sufficient to dampen the earth an inch.

Destruction to Valuable Property.

TRAVERSE CITY, Mich., July 13.—Fierce and damaging fires are still raging near Thompsonville, Frankfort and around Wallin. South of Frankfort farm buildings and valuable timber are being destroyed. Around Traverse City the forests are ablaze, but there is as yet no serious damage to property excepting standing timber. Near Solon and Cedar every available man is out fighting the flames to prevent their communicating with farm buildings and mills. There is a pall of dark smoke shrouding this locality. Between here and Thompsonville much valuable timber is being destroyed, but there is no immediate danger to buildings. Thousands of cords of hemlock bark and posts have been burned.

Rain Falls in the Fire District.

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich., July 15.—Specials to The Democrat from points in northern Michigan show that a light rain fell along the Muskegon river and extended north to Cadillac. The rain nearly covered the pine section, and further damage from forest fires is not anticipated there.

DRAKE THE WINNER.

Nominated for Governor by Republicans of Iowa.

DES MOINES, Ia., July 11.—The Republican state convention held in the auditorium of Cavalry Tabernacle was the center of interest to politicians in this state.

When the convention was called to order again at 2 o'clock Governor Jackson and other dignitaries occupied the platform and every seat in the auditorium was filled. Hon. LaFayette Yonng, editor of The Daily Capitol, was elected permanent chairman, and J. W. Willets, of Tama county, secretary. Considerable difficulty was experienced in securing seats for the delegates. Chairman Young was escorted to the chair and made a brief speech in which he said that neither defeat nor success seems to have any effect on the Democratic party. It was needless, he thought, to say anything about the Democrats. They were saying worse things of eaoh other than he dare to say of them. An allusion to the "valley of the shadow of the Democraoy" evoked the wildest applause.

The convention then proceeded to ballot for governor and it required six ballots to settle this matter, Drake beginning at 366 with Harlan next, 248, and gradually climbing—425, 500, 556, 597—to 864½ on the sixth, Harlan having 139 3-14 on that ballot; Parrott, 231 3-14; Harsh, 2; Kamrar, 2, and Ormsby, 2. With the announcement of the vote Chairman Young declared General Drake the nominee of the convention for governor. After prolonged oheering balloting for lieutenant-governor was commenced. Matt Parrott, of Waterloo, was nominated on the third ballot, defeating Lieutenant-Governor Dungan, of Chariton, for re-election. In rapid succession Henry Sabin was renominated for superintendent of public instruction; George W. Perkins for railroad commissioner and Josiah Given for judge of the supreme court.

The resolution of indorsement of Allison, after congratulating the people "upon the fact that the state of Iowa will be represented in the fifty-fourth congress by two senators and eleven representatives, who are zealous and fearless advooates of Republican prinoiples," says: "With especial pride do we remember the distinguished services of our senior senator. * * * We hail with satisfaction the universal desire of the Republicans of the state to continue him in his present field of usefulness until called to the larger services of the nation."

At a meeting of the state central commlttee H. G. McMillan, of Rock Rapids, was elected chairman to succeed James E. Blythe.

Chicago Election Judges Arrested.

CHICAGO, July 13.—Andrew Buchanan and A. E. Gage, Democratic and Republioan judges of election in the twentieth precinct of the First ward, respectively, have been arrested for alleged crookedness in the count of that precinct for representatives in congress last fall, by which Belknap (Rep.) was counted out. Buchanan gave bonds and denied the charge, and Gage went to jail. He is quoted as saying that the two Democratic judges did as they pleased at the election in controversy.

Mail Robbery at Marion, Ind.

MARION, Ind., July 12.—Much excitement was caused here when it was discovered that a number of mailboxes throughout the city had been pried open and rifled. The loss will not be known, but one firm, Osborn Paper company, reports a loss of $826 in money and drafts. The boxes were all on business corners, and the loss it is thought will be heavy.

He Is Short About $8,000.

MARSHALLTOWN, Ia., July 11.—George W. Weeks, one of the leading abstractors, loan and insurance agents of this city, prominent in church and social circles, has been arrestsd, charged with embezzlement. He is short about $8,000.

CORNELL CREW GOES TO PIECES.

Another Disappointment at the Henley Regetta in England.

HENLEY, July 11.—The crowds who collected to witness the second day's competition at the Henley regetta were treated to another fluke, where a hot contest had been expected. Cornell was the fluker this time, but it wasn't suoh a fluke as Leander made. The American crew was pitted against the Trinity Hall crew and had the lead of a boat's length at the half mile. Here Freeborn had a dazy spell and dropped his oar.

Cornell was paralyzed by this, and Trinity Hall shot ahead. Next Hager dropped his oar and Fennell followed. All picked up again, but were evidently exhausted and the Trinity Hall crew went across the line eight lengths ahead; time, 7:15. As Cornell crossed the line Fennell fell in a dead faint, soon recovering, however. In fact the whole crew was "pumped out." The victory was a popular one, for the Englishmen are out of all reason against Cornell for not stopping when Leander made its fluke of the day before.

This event makes it certain that the challenge cup will not go to America. Cornell and its friends had one consolation during the day. The Thames Rowing club four beat "out of sight" a Leander four, all members of the crew that fluked Tuesday, and as it happens the four who have been bitterest in their criticisms of the Cornell boys.

The Grand Challenge oup was won by the Trinity Hall (Cambridge) orew, which defeated the Cornell boys Wednesday. The final heat was rowed yesterday morning, when the Trinity club oarsmen easily defeated the New College (Oxford) crew. The trustees of Cornell university who are now here have decided to bring two crews to Henley in 1896. Secretary Cooper, of the regatta committee, heartily approves the proposition, and offers the Cornell men every inducement and facility. He asserts that this will be the best answer to the criticisms passed upon the oonduct of the Cornell orew now at Henley.

CHICAGO ALDERMEN INDICTED.

Martin and Finkler Will Have to Answer to Solicitation of Bribes.

CHICAGO, July 13.—Late yesterday afternoon the special grand jury called to investigate alleged corruption in the city council relative to Alderman Martin's ice ordinance, voted to indict Alderman William Finkler on two charges of soliciting bribes, and Alderman Charles Martin on similar charges. These "true bills" are expeoted to be returned to Judge Tuthill today. Fred L. Rabe, an ice dealer, told the grand jury that Alderman Martin demanded $500 from him. Upon this representation one indictment was found.

Other indiotments against Alderman Martin were found on the testimony of J. P. Smith, of J. P. Smith & Company. Alderman Finkler was indicted on evidence furnished by J. H. Williams, of the Washington Ice company, and C. B. Shedd and E. A. Shedd, of the Knickerbocker Ice company. These men told of negotiations in Alderman Finkler's office during which the price asked dwindled from $50,000 in a lump to $750 for each of the big companies, and what could be gotten out of the smaller companies.

Smallpox Attacks a Family.

CLEVELAND, July 12.—Five oases of smallpox have developed in the family of David Reece, a tin worker at Ætnaville, O. One child has died and half the people in the village attended the funeral, not knowing the nature of the disease.

Christ said: "If ye love me keep my commandments." How we measure up along the line of these commandments is about the safest test of our religion. The moral law is as much a standard of Christian conduct to-day as ever.

Rev. John A. Dowie, while conducting religious service in his Tabernacle, last Sabbath, at 6020 Edgerton Ave., before an audience of 1,000 people, was again arrested and taken from his pulpit to a justice court, where he was promptly released on bail.

It is the little foxes that destroy the vines; the little moth in the closet that does the mischief; the little streamlet that makes the breech in the levee; so it is the so-called minor secret order that many consider harmless which opens the way for the order of open blasphemy, disloyalty and most widespread moral mischief.

A few evenings after their marriage the young husband excused himself to his bride saying that he belonged to the lodge of Elks and must attend their meeting that night. Putting her arm in his and looking him pleadingly in the face she inquired: "Do you really prefer the company of those Elks to that of your own little 'dear?'"

Sojourner Truth, the celebrated centenarian negress philosopher, once said, "If de fust woman God ever made was strong 'nough to tu'n de wo'ld upside down all 'lone, su'ly dese all togedder ought to be able to tu'n it back and get it right side up again; and now dat dey is askin' to do it, de men better let 'em." She was in favor of giving women the ballot.

It has been said that about one-fourth of the Bible is composed of prescriptions for nations, for politicians and men in their civil relations. It follows, then, if one-fourth of a minister's sermons are not along the line of applying the Bible to politics, then he is not giving the medicine as God has put it up. And the result will be political corruption, which will largely undo the pastor's work.

As in the agricultural so in the moral vineyard, but a small portion of the farmer's time is required to plant the seed. Much more time must be given to cultivation, keeping down the weeds, and keeping up the fences. So in this age much more of the pastor's time is required in keeping down the weeds of error and contending against systems of evil that neutralize his work than in merely disseminating divine truth. The pastor who is not a reformer is like a farmer who lets the weeds grow.

Does Paul mean that the recognition of Christ's law and authority is limited to the church or to the individual when he says, "That at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and tnings in earth, and things under the earth; and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord to the glory of God the Father." Such sweeping language is evidently intended to warn against the sin of ignoring Christ and his law in any organization. We should "in all our ways acknowledge him, and he will direct our paths."

For or against Christ is the momentous question that will soon absorb every other. It is steadily coming to the front and will not down. The devil now tries to persuade men that they can only settle this question as individuals; that it is one with which organizations have nothing to do. Many argue that Christ's authority and law are limited to the church, that he does not ask recognition of any other institution. If this theory is true then we can bring no charge against Masons or politicians for ignoring him in the lodge and in politics.

Bro. J. W. Wood, our worthy co-worker at Baraboo, Wis., writes calling our attention to instances of keepers of the Seventh day being fined and imprisoned in Tennessee for working on the First day. The editor wishes to say with emphasis, that he has long deplored such prosecutions, and will embrace every opportunity of opposing them. Just as our government during the war exempted from the draft members of the Friends church because of their conscientious convictions against war, so it should exempt from keeping the First day Sabbath those who conscientiously observe the Seventh day.

Missionaries say there are seven American barkeepers in the village of Nazareth, the home of the Saviour. The New York Tribune thinks, if it be true, "it is time for the institution there of a temperance crusade of unusual zeal and energy. Mahomet had no use for bar-keepers, and they have no standing in the Koran, and are only allowed in territories of Islam in deference to a supposed sentiment in their favor on the part of foreign visitors. But there are some shrines and holy places in which they should be forbidden to compound their elixirs, or to put in any appearance, official or other, and that Nazareth is one of them is not to be for a moment doubted."

An exchange says it would be abhorrant to put the name of Jesus into a political platform, and thus require unbelieving members of the party to recognize his supremacy. Is it not quite as abhorrant to require believers in Christ's supremacy to recognize the will of the people as supreme or to swear to the Masonic covennat as supreme? thus displacing Christ from the head of his own moral system. Is not the conscience of the Christian entitled to as much respect as that of the unbeliever?

The Boston "Home Light" says: "This is what a lady wrote her sister the next day after receiving the blessed enlightenment and enlargement of the dark and close lodge: 'I have joined the ———; and was initiated last night, and today am very sorry; would give worlds, almost, if I could retrace the step I have taken.' Retracing steps is difficult; the easier and better way is not to take them. But there is still one thing that can be done, and that is to stop and take no new steps of the same kind." The president of an Indiana Y. M. C. A. said to us, recently: "My sister, who was an active member of the church, lost her Christian experience and her interest in the church from the hour when she was initiated into a college secret society."

We are as much opposed to the union of church and state as any one. Our forefathers came through the fires of persecution in Scotland on that question. But we believe the state has the same right as the church to go to the Bible as the fountain of law. The Bible is as much a legal text-book for the state as for the church. How, then, are church and state to be kept separate? By clearly drawing the line between civil law and ecclesiastical law. The latter pertains only to the church; to its doctrines, worship, government and discipline. These are never to be enforced by civil penalties, like the laws of the state. This, alone, separates church and state by a wide difference. We protest against any attempt to compel people, by civil law, to build churches, or support any ecclesiastical system.

Several years ago when we were in Cincinnati we visited the Western Tract and Book Society of the Presbyterian church. An elderly minister, who had long been in charge of the house, gave us this instance of the intolerant spirit and power of the lodge. He said they once published and attempted to carry in their stock of books, "The Character, Claims and Practical Workings of Freemasonry," by Pres. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. But they received letters from men threatening to withdraw their support unless they dropped that book from their list, which they were finally compelled to do, selling the copyright to Ezra A. Cook, of Chicago. They also transferred to Mr. Cook another Anti-masonic book which they were afraid to carry. What an illustration of the lodges' power to suppress anti-lodge testimony in the great Presbyterian church.

IMMORALITY OF MASONIC OATHS.

BY E. RONAYNE, PAST MASTER KEYSTONE LODGE, NO. 639, CHICAGO.

Speaking of the illegal oaths and the horrible penalties of death administered in all lodges of Freemasons, I am reminded of the boast so constantly made by members of that institution, that "If a man lives up to his Masonic obligation he will be a good man; and that Masonry is as good a religion as any one can have." Now although the first oath administered in a lodge of Masons, as I have already explained, is yet in the above connection, and as regards Masonic duty as between man and man, the Master Mason's oath is the one always referred to. During a long experience in Masonic lodges and filling all the chairs from Junior Deacon up to that of Worshipful Master, I have heard Masons constantly boasting of the goodness of Masonry, and that if a man would only live up to his Masonic obligations he would certainly be all right.

On hearing this assertion always on the lips of Masons, I used to ask the question, "But did you ever know of any man who has lived up to his Masonic oath?" And the answer invariably has been, "No, I have never known or heard of such a man." No Mason has ever lived up to, or even can live up to, his Masonic oath; and hence every Mason in the country, and in fact in the world, is a Masonic perjurer, so far as that goes. But suppose a man did live up to his Masonic oath both in letter and spirit, how much better would that make him than any other good man outside of Masonry? Can Masonic oaths make a bad man at heart outwardly good? Not a bit of it. Masonic oaths never did and never can make any man good.

IN THE MASTER MASON'S OATH

there are eleven clauses besides the one binding the candidate to life-long secrecy; and how living up to every one of these twelve commandments can make a man better than his neighbor who knows nothing of Masonry is possibly one of the sublime mysteries of the craft. According to clause first, a Mason is bound to "conform to, and abide by all the laws, rules and regulations of the Master Mason's degree," and of a Master Mason's lodge, and to "ever support the constitution, laws and edicts of the Grand Lodge." Now let it be remembered that at the time a man swears to all this, he knows nothing whatever of "the laws, rules and regulations of the Master Mason's degree;" and furthermore, he may know absolutely nothing of them for years to come. How then, may I ask, will the taking of this oath make him a better man or add to his moral qualities? He swears to support and maintain the constitution, laws and edicts of the Grand Lodge; but these very same "constitution, laws and edicts" may not be framed and promulgated for twenty years to come, and yet he swears to maintain and support them all, no matter what they might be. Is this calculated to make a man good or honest or moral? Is this the way in which oaths are administered in all our courts and in connection with all the functions of our government? Does an illegal oath make a man good? Then if it does, surely Masons must be good men, because and without any warrant whatever under our constitution.

In the second clause he swears to answer and obey all due signs and summons sent from a lodge or given by a brother Mason. Now how does living up to this part of the Masonic oath have a tendency to make a man good or moral or honest? Is there any peculiar virtue in the signs and grips that can make any man better, or in obeying a lodge summons that will make him moral or upright? Now the reader will please notice that I am not accusing Masons of anything, not even of being honest and moral and upright. I am simply looking into the Master Mason's oath to see if we can find anything in it to make men better; and if we can, then of course every man, and every woman also, ought to be a Freemason. What do you say, brother; how does this proposition strike you?

In clause third the candidate is sworn to keep the secrets of a brother Mason, "murder and treason excepted, and then only at his own option." A Mason may cheat his employer, he may steal money from the cash drawer, he may commit assault with a deadly weapon, he may be guilty of the crime of rape, or he may have committed arson, but his brother Mason is sworn to keep his crime or crimes a secret. A Mason is sworn as a witness in a court of law but because he has sworn in a Masonic lodge to keep all his secrets but two. Does this part of the Masonic oath tend to make a man good and honest and truthful—a good citizen and a good member of society? Does it, my dear brother Mason? Now look at this thing calmly—don't get angry; be a man; does this part of the Masonic oath make a man better?

In clause four the Mason is sworn to aid and assist ALL distressed worthy brother Master Masons, their widows and orphans, "they applying to him as such without material injury to himself or family." To aid and assist those in distress is surely a very laudable and noble act. Nothing can be very much better than to feed the hungry and clothe the naked; but when a man does this under compulsion; when a man does this because he swears to do it, then all the goodness and virtue of the act is gone, and the act itself becomes a MATTER OF PURE SELFISHNESS.

But Masons are sworn to aid and assist only Masons, only those who can give certain grips and signs and passwords, and then even they don't live up to their oath.

But suppose a man did live up to this part of the obligation, how much better would that make him? Why, it would make him selfish, narrow-minded, clannish, and even suspicious of every poor man who applied to him for aid; and every old Freemason knows this to be so. During the winter of 1871–72 the Masonic Board of Relief of Chicago received $90,640 for the relief of Masons burned out in the great fire, and $60,000 of that amount was deliberately misappropriated by D. C. Cregier and his henchmen giving the money to lodges not burned out, and to purchase tom-fool regalia and gew-gaws for others. I have personal knowledge of this, for I was at the time a member of the board, and the only one who voted against that

GRAND MASONIC STEAL.

Oh, yes, living up to your obligation makes you a wonderful fellow, don't it? It makes you a cringing slave, afraid to call your soul your own, just as I have seen Masons act a thousand times when brought face to face with moral duty.

In the seventh clause of the Master Mason's oath the candidate is sworn not to "cheat, wrong or defraud a lodge of Master Masons nor a brother of that degree." But what about cheating or defrauding other institutions or other individuals? It would be something if Masons were sworn not to cheat, wrong or defraud any one at all; but swearing not to cheat, wrong or defraud one another only in the first place, and must be bound under oath to act a kind of square toward their fellow members. Cheat whom you please and when you please, if you get a fair chance, but you must not cheat, wrong or defraud the lodge nor a brother Mason, is the plain inference from the language of this clause; and yet some Freemasons are so wilfully stupid as to tell us and try to make themselves believe that living up to Masonic oaths makes a man good.

SLAYING OF THE WITNESSES.

BY REV. J. R. WYLIE.

The subject of the witnesses referred to in the eleventh chapter of Revelation has proved to be one of the most difficult to all interpreters of the Word of God. It is almost worth a man's reputation to risk an opinion on the subject. The first question is: Who are the witnesses? We will not undertake to decide this point any farther than to say, that the witnesses evidently embrace all organized Christians, bearing a faithful and full testimony to the truth of Christ. The number "two" indicates a sufficient testimony.

A second question is, What is meant by the slaying of the witnesses? It may mean either the silencing of their testimony or the making of their testimony ineffectual, or the bringing of their testimony into reproach. This could be done by a literal slaying; but it can be done by what is less than physical death.

Another interesting question is, When were these witnesses slain? This is the point we wish to consider. Did anything transpire in 1893 that might be interpreted as the slaying of the witnesses? With our statements thus far all will more or less agree, but from this interpretation many will no doubt differ. In stating my views I do not wish to be considered dogmatic; I merely suggest thoughts for consideration.

It was in the year 1893 that the great International Columbian Exposition was held in the city of Chicago. During several years preparations had been going on for this greatest of all world shows, the greatest that ever was, or possibly ever will be. It was a national affair. The nation, through its representatives in Congress, settled the time and place, and to a great extent the character of the exposition. The whole world was invited. The whole world was there, at least through their representatives.

There never had been such an opportunity for witnessing for Christ presented on this globe. We, as a professed Christian nation, with our professed Christian churches, could have proved incontrovertibly to the world that the foundation of all goodness, greatness and happiness in this world, whether for the individual, family, church or nation, was to be found only in Christ and his Word. Did we do it? Did we try to do it? We all know the result. With the Fair open on the Sabbath, with liquor sold on the grounds, with the vilest impurity displayed in the name of art, with every form of wickedness festering both within and without the Fair grounds, with all religions meeting on a common level in the World's Parliament of Religions, what could we expect but that the representatives of every form of heathenism and wickedness should go home, believing that their gods were as good and great, if not better and greater, than the Christian's God; that the founders of their religions were the equals if not the superiors of Christ; and that their doctrines, lives and practices were purer and nobler than whose who believed in Christianity.

You ask: Were there not noble efforts to offset this influence? We answer, yes. But they were so few and feeble in comparison with the onward sweep of the greatest show on earth, that they were looked upon by the multitudes of the world as little pebbles and snags in the great life current of our civilization, which only gave a little variety to the irresistible rush of its mighty tide. Those efforts for good no doubt impressed those engaged in them and their sympathizers, but who else was touched? Where are the results in the lives even of those who speak well of these efforts? It seems to me that the testimony of God was silenced, made ineffectual and a mere matter of reproach in the eyes of the world, and it still remains so to-day. The witnesses, in an important sense, were slain; figuratively speaking they are lying dead in the streets of the great city to-day.

THE REDEMPTION OF AFRICA.

BY REV. H. W. JOHNSTON.

I was talking with a minister recently about Africa, and he outlined his hopes after this fashion. The reformation of the home land and in the coming times of distress and trouble our nation and others will acknowledge Christ and become Christian nations. Then these Christian nations will undertake to open up Africa to civilization, and railroads will be built, industries introduced, schools established, and by this politico-philanthropic movement will be brought to pass the prediction that "nations shall be born in a day." I promised to make some comment on this theory:

1. Such ideal Christian governments never have been; nor is it promised that there will be such before the coming of Christ.

2. It is hard to conceive of such universal unselfishness when to-day not even the church is willing to be taxed to send the Gospel abroad. The mission receipts of all foreign societies is largely the gifts of the few interested ones rather than the gift of the church.

3. Such a philanthropic movement would require an army of true Christians officers, either white men or native. At the present time all efforts of the English and other governments to advance civilization among heathen tribes is hindered by the lack of faithful men in the minor offices. Such men are not obtainable in heathen Africa.

4. The inhospitable climate limits the possible white population. Hence all advance in Africa will largely depend on the raising up of faithful co-workers out of the native population who will bear the burden of the work both governmental and ecclessiastical under white supervision.

5. Railroads can be built in Africa, but only to a very limited extent can they be made self-sustaining without a great development of the productions of the country.

6. There can be no material prosperity built up in Africa without the development of farming, mining or manufacturing interests. Perhaps the farming interest promises the earliest results, yet development in this line must be very slow, from the fact that the African soil can not be cropped several years in succession; hence plows and other utensils can not be introduced without the aid also of fertilizers, as the present method of renewing the land is by allowing it to grow up for about three years in bushes.

7. Finally, African government can be revolutionized, and African manner of life could largely be, by outside power and capital, but African belief remain unchanged. Only by the preaching of the Gospel according to the divine plan, bringing the sword of the Holy Spirit into contact with the individual hearts, can the present belief in devils, sorcery, witchcraft and fetiches be dislodged by faith in Christ.

So the writer believes in missions as now conducted with such improvements as experience may make possible. He believes in strong, industrial mission homes where will be trained the native boys and girls that will be ministers, officials and merchants of the coming generation. This slow, laborious groundwork will precede the possibility of a Christian civilization in Africa.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE.

BY REV. JOHN BROWN.

Christ permits a man to put away his wife for "fornication," but for nothing else, and declares that "whosoever shall marry her that is divorced" even for that cause, "committeth adultery." Matt. 5: 32. But the man who divorces his wife for any cause whatever is not permitted to marry another. "Whosoever shall put away his wife, and marry another, committeth adultery against her. And if a woman shall put away her husband, and be married to another, she committeth adultery." Mark 10: 11, 12. The man who marries a divorced woman, the divorced woman herself and the man who divorced her—if he shall marry another—are all guilty of adultery. Why? Because the marriage relation is not dissolved. The divorced woman is still the wife of the man that divorced her, though living apart, and he is still the husband of the divorced wife.

In Matt. 19: 9, there is an apparent exception. "Whosoever shall put away his wife—except for fornication—and shall marry another," etc. But the exception is only apparent. It applies to the crime of the woman (Matt. 5: 32)—not to the liberty of the man. I admit that this expression is rather obscure; "for all things in Scripture are not alike plain in themselves, nor alike clear unto all. . . . . The infallible rule of interpretation is the Scripture itself; and therefore, when there is a question about the true and full sense of any Scripture, it must be searched and known by other places that speak more clearly." Westminster Confession of Faith, Chap. 1, Sec. 7, 9. According to this rule, which, I think, is a good one, the obscure expression in the first clause of Matt. 19: 9 ought to be explained "by other places that speak more clearly." Matt. 5: 32; 19: 9 (latter clause), Mark 10: 11, 12; Rom. 7: 2, 3; 1. Cor. 7: 10, 11.

Popular language—and the Bible is written in a popular style—is not necessarily grammatically and mathematically exact, and ought not to be pressed too closely. For example, when Paul says, "Let the deacons be the husbands of one wife" (Tim. 3: 12), does he mean that the deacons are only to have one wife among them all? Does he not mean that each is to have one wife only? So when Christ says, "Whosoever shall put away his wife except for fornication, and marry another," etc, there must be an elipsis which needs to be filled up in order to complete the sense, and make the text harmonize with itself and with the Scriptures in general. His meaning is that the crime specified is the only lawful excuse for divorce—not for marrying another.

Nor is willful desertion a sufficient reason either for divorce or re-marriage. If a wife, voluntarily, desert her husband, "let her remain unmarried, or be reconciled to her husband, and let not the husband put away his wife". 1 Cor. 7: 11. The marriage relation can only be dissolved by death. "For the woman which hath an husband is bound by the law to her husband, so long as he liveth; but if the husband be dead, she is loosed from the law of her husband. So then if while her husband liveth she shall be married to another man, she shall be called an adulteress; but if the husband be dead, she is free from that law; so that she is no adultress, though she be married to another man." Rom. 7: 2, 3. Hence it follows:

1. That the laws of many States on this point are in direct opposition to the law of Christ.

2. That those who marry after divorce are living in adultery. It is their duty, therefore, to repent and forsake unlawful connections. I admit that this is a hard case; but not so hard as to suffer eternal torment in hell.

3. That those ministers who solemnize such marriages sanction adultery.

4. That churches ought not to tolerate such cases, and if they do, Christians ought to come out from among them and be separate. 1. Cor. 5: 13; 2. Cor. 6: 14–17.

But God requires that purity of heart which no human law can reach, but without which no man shall see the Lord. Matt. 5: 8; Heb. 12: 14. "Who can understand his errors? Cleanse thou me from secret faults. Psa. 19: 12. "If thou, Jehovah, shouldst mark iniquity, O Lord, who shall stand? But there is forgiveness with thee, that thou mayest be feared." Psa. 130: 4.

KNIGHTS TEMPLAR.

Knighthood and chivalry are terms inherited from a generation long dead. But they suggest an ideal toward which all modern social history is striving, and a characteristic existing in greater completeness while that ideal grows into fuller embodiment. It is not necessary to discuss the personal qualities of true or recreant knights whose fame or infamy has survived their rusted armor. Whether De Molay was innocent, or went from expiring flames to fires unquenchable, is a needless question now. It is enough to know that from the days of the crusades the spirit of the cross has been honored, the pride of the strong has been to protect the weak, and language has been enriched with the words knight and chivalry, not more noble in suggestion than they are clear in meaning.

EARLY KNIGHTS A CLASS.

Chivalry is not now restricted to a class; perhaps it never was. Knightly men who win their spurs and wear them, but never assume a distinctive name, are to be found everywhere. But Templars and Hospitallers, and others of that earlier time, were banded, inducted and dubbed knights. They were recognized as a class distinguished from all other classes. Even the armor-bearer who accompanied a knight and shared his fortunes was not called a knight but an esquire.

EXTERNAL MARKS OF THE CLASS.

Knight is a word that calls up a picture. At the summons of that name comes a mounted and armored figure. Chivalry is akin to our word cavalry, and is from cheval, the French word for horse. Horsemanship was a knightly accomplishment. Scott made Ivanhoe march his horse from the tent where his spear had rung its challenge on the shield, backward through the lists to his position. An earlier author and poet had said:

> "A knight ther was, and that a worthy man,
> That fro the time that he first began
> To ridin out, he lovid chevalrie,
> Trouth and honour, fredome and curtesy."

The knight himself was clothed in defensive armor like one who rode to meet a warlike foe. Nor did he ride without his lance or sword. It was his office to fight the Moslem infidel, or rescue an imperiled maiden like Rebecca, for whom Ivanhoe dared the chances of the tournament. He was a soldier, a cavalryman with clashing armor and honorable spurs. His steed was a warhorse, his toil was battle, and his recreation was the perilous tournament.

THE INTERNAL MARKS.

Character was even more essential to chivalry. Chivalry itself was character. It combined courage, generosity and self-restraint. The dash of the fearless hero, the self-forgetfulness of the man of honor and brave protector, and the gentleness and chastity of the true gentleman and romantic lover, all were there.

PURPOSE THE TRUE TEST.

Purpose lies near the core of character. Activity guided by purpose was essential to knighthood. The knight's horse was to go somewhere; the lance was to be laid in rest that it might point somewhere. Ancient knighthood, like true modern chivalry, was purpose or it was nothing. Purpose embodied made its form. It protected pilgrimages and conducted crusades.

> "To ride abroad redressing human wrongs;
> To lead sweet lives in purest chastity;
> To love one maiden only, cleave to her,
> And worship her by years of noble deeds
> Until they win her,"

was the purpose and the consummation of knighthood.

SOME OF THE TESTS.

Form, character and purpose, then, prove knighthood, and are the tests by which it is to be tried. Let history, and let more private affection and gratitude weave chaplets for the brows or the graves of our later knights who proudly forbear even to ask the name. Too knightly to seek a mere title, we restrict them to none Let the deep gratitude of rescued souls, and of a nation proud of their fame, be their fuller meed of honor.

But we will not scruple to challenge those others who themselves challenge our recognition. They speak for themselves and we may speak of them. They resume the title of an early order. Thus they seem to claim a place with those who, because they had their headquarters on Mount Moriah, were called Templars, and whose purpose was the protection of pilgrims in the Holy Land.

Is this new candidate a true modern knight, or have we here only a skeleton in armor? Or have we, worse still, only a name stolen from a tomb? "Vox et praeterea nihil."

We know that the real Templars left the field long ago.

> "The knights are dust,
> And their good swords are rust."

The old tests they bore must be applied to all who come in their name. LANCE.

NARROW GUAGE EDITORS.

There are many editors who are afraid to publish against such popular evils as secret societies lest they narrow their circulation. Such papers are not broad in the true sense, but narrow. A paper is broad only when its columns are open for the publication of all reform truth. The Christian Instructor sets this matter in a clear light when it says:

"In vain do you search the great Presbyterian journals for a clear and steadfast testimony against the giant evil of secret associations as such. They are valiant in some respects for a Scriptural creed and an orthodox confession. We rejoice at this. It is what the times need above all things. The pure and clear sound of the Gospel of Christ from every corner of the land would send the demons of iniquity scampering to their holes. But when we make exceptions in favor of some particular evil, that we will not condemn, it very much weakens our testimony and raises the question whether we are entirely honest in our zeal for the truth. The broad Christian is the man in favor of all truth and against all that which is contrary to or inconsistent with it. The narrow Christian is one who only partially maintains the truth and allows some errors and sins to pass unchallenged. He is not out and out for righteousness as God reveals it and against everything contrary to it, but very tolerant of stray evils.

"This may be broadness in the eyes of the world. But the world has eminently narrow and selfish views while God is broad, generous and enlarged in his all comprehensiveness. We should like to see more of this same spirit in the great journals of all the churches. It would be a fine example to set before the less influential leaders of opinion. It would help to convince the skeptical, that Christians are willing to practice what they preach so generously, subjection wholly to the Word of Christ. To question and condemn the preaching of certain abstract and abstruse doctrines with severity and then swallow at one gulp such a camel of Baal-worship as is found in the lodge is an astonishing feat.

"A man is cast out for preaching one false doctrine, but another man who brings in a whole system of corruption gets a chief seat at the table. It is time somebody would say to these editors: 'Ye are the men who are doing this thing.'"

LODGE AND THE CHURCH.

In a recent number of the Standard is an article from the pen of G. M. Anderson, showing the superior benevolence of the lodge over that of the church. I am sure such an article will do much harm wherever its theory may be accepted. I consider it very misleading.

We must admit the truth of his statement that in many cities the number of lodges far exceeds the number of churches. I am very sorry that this is true. Get the number of lodges in any given city, and you will know the number of narrow, selfish cliques in that city.

Admitting that the church is not doing what it ought to do for the poor and needy—and this is certainly true—yet even under present conditions the benevolence of the church is as high above the boasted benevolence of the lodge as the heaven is high above the earth. Those who need benevolence most, those who are the most helpless, such as Jesus especially came to save: the poor, the lame, the halt, the blind, the leprous and the outcast, would be black-balled by any lodge known to me; but the church extends her open arms to all such, and lifts them up to a higher and better life.

Why does the lodge reject all such? They could not add to the wealth of the lodge! They could not pay their dues and assessments in the lodge! And here is the proper distinction between the church and the lodge. The former is organized for benevolence; the latter for mutual benefit in a financial way. Any applicant for admission who is known to be unsound in body can not get into the lodge. Would the church exclude such? Only strong, free, white men, who are able to pay, can come into the lodge fellowship. Such persons seldom need any benevolent assistance, and none know this better than those who manipulate the lodges.

The so-called benevolence of the lodges is simply to meet obligations that have been paid for, and generally the recipient of the help gets back very little of the amount he has paid into the lodge through a long series of years. According to the recent report of the Odd-fellows in Illinois, over three hundred thousand dollars came into the treasury of the society last year. How much of this was paid for benevolence, so-called? About one-third. What becomes of the other two hundred thousand dollars? These societies are becoming great moneyed corporations; their chief officers receive princely salaries; their benevolence takes from the members their hard-earned savings and puts them into magnificent temples in every city of the land.

The church is a benevolent society which has been organized to do good; the lodge is a mutual aid society, organized to receive good. The church has learned from the Bible that it is more blessed to give than to receive; the lodge has learned from the god of this world that it is more blessed to receive than to give.

In the article I am criticising the writer says that ninety per cent. of church members feel under no obligation to help their sick or bury their dead. This would be a terrible arraignment if true; but I have every reason to reject the statement as false and pernicious. I have had large experience in pastoral and evangelistic work, and I have never met such conditions as here described. The church very generally cares for its poor, its sick and dying. Of course it could do very much more of this work if the lodge members in the church would not divert so much of the Lord's money from the church to worldly institutions. When a man belongs to the Masons, Odd-fellows, Knights of Pythias and other orders, it usually turns out that he has not much left for the church.

What the church does it does freely and unselfishly. It gives, and asks not, wants not, a return. This is pure benevolence. It does not expend all upon itself, but reaches to the ends of the earth. Its benevolence is world-wide and all-embracing. It is a sad commentary upon our civilization that so many are turning from the pure benevolence and philanthropy of the church to the selfish, clannish societies of men.—Prof. Simpson Ely, in Christian Standard.

All respectable people stand amazed when they read of Christ rejected of men, Christ betrayed by Judas, Christ abused by the mob, Christ on trial before Pilate and delivered to crucifixion by Pilate; and yet many of Christ's professed friends can see his Word set at naught and defied by the "Sunday" mails and the "Sunday" street-cars and trains and, still worse, the "Sunday newspaper and the "Sunday" saloon, apparently without a pang of sorrow or a thought of indignation. Such persons perhaps could have smiled unmoved at Pharaoh's defiant, blasphemous question, "Who is the Lord that I should obey his voice?" —The Aurora.

REFORM NEWS.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR CONVENTION.

BOSTON, July 17, 1895.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Fifty-six thousand and four hundred Endeavorers have come to our city, registered their names, visited the places of historic interest, accomplished their mission, and most of them are now speeding homeward. Comparatively few remain for later trains, and our streets, that for the past week have, during the intervals between sessions, been thronged with smiling, happy young men and maidens, have resumed their wonted appearance.

Much was anticipated by our citizens in this cosmopolitan gathering, but more has been realized. The home forces were thoroughly organized and ably officered, but there was not a little anxious thought and earnest prayer over the question of receiving and caring for an army of fifty or possibly seventy-five thousand strangers. The work has now been successfully accomplished, and a general feeling of satisfaction and gratitude is the reward of each one of the host of patient, indefatigable workers. If our churches and missions and every good cause in our city fails to receive a new and upward impulse, it will be from no fault of the guests who have honored us by their presence and cheered us by their earnest words. I have not learned of a single casuality, or of an arrest for any kind of misdemeanor. No extra police were required; and those of the public guardians whom I have interrogated, assure me that they have never seen a more orderly, well-disposed company; and prominent railroad officials speak in terms of the highest commendation of the intelligence and forbearance of their patrons. Decorations were more profuse than I have seen on any former occasion, with the exception of saloons, lodges and theaters, which extended no tokens of welcome, and withheld all public expression of rejoicing or approval.

Boston's restrictions on the distribution of literature in the parks and upon public thoroughfares are very stringent and the lines were drawn with unusual rigor at this gathering, the officers of the convention co-operating with the civil authorities. Nevertheless, assisted by my son, W. B., and other volunteer helpers, I have the satisfaction of knowing that over 15,000 tracts, containing the faces and testimonies of Wendell Phillips and the late Dr. A. J. Gordon, found their way into the hands of these enthusiastic Christian workers, and that already fruit has been gathered from this quiet sowing. Incidents characteristic of our work were not wanting, but these are so common that I will mention but one. Two ladies passing each received a tract. They paused a few steps away to read. One, reducing her tract to fragments and pressing it into a wad, returned it in my face, with the emphatic declaration: "You ought to be ashamed of yourself." I responded by lifting my hat and thanking her for the unmerited courtesy, and asking what is wrong with Wendell Phillips, to which she replied: "Wendell Phillips is all right, but you are a fraud." She hastily withdrew and I refrained from any expression of opinion concerning her methods of Christian Endeavor.

There are numerous instances in which I see "the good hand of our God," and not the least came through the good offices and timely forethought of our beloved brother, P. B. Williams, from whom I received the following official endorsement:

"PORTLAND, Ore., July 1, 1895.—Rev. J. P. Stoddard and wife. My dear friends: At a meeting of the Y. P. S. C. E., of the U. B. church of this city, last evening, you were unanimously elected to represent our society at the Y. P. S. C. E. convention in your city, July 10th inst. I hope you will have a good meeting. Your brother in Christ, P. B. WILLIAMS."

On account of ill health Mrs. Stoddard was unable to attend. I presented my commission at headquarters, received my credentials and spoke by request on Sabbath evening at the headquarters of the Oregon and South Carolina delegates, in the First Congregational church, East Somerville. The house was well filled by between seven and eight hundred people. The pastor presiding read my letter of appointment and introduced me as the properly accredited delegate. As this branch of the church is not so well known in the East as it is in the West, it seemed fitting that I should say something of their distinctive principles.

I said the true United Brethren are Trinitarian in doctrine, evangelical in faith, zealous in every good work and regulated by a modified form of Congregational polity. They are opposed to formality; have a good record on the anti-slavery question; are intolerant of the rum curse, and are uncompromisingly averse to foreign interference with our domestic affairs, and that they actively oppose oath-bound secret societies. Apprehending that this last negation might be a novel feature to some present, I spoke somewhat at length on the reasons why it had been adopted. 1st. Because Masonry, Odd-fellowship, the Knights of Pythias and kindred orders were Christless religions. 2nd. Their oaths were prejudicial to justice in our courts. 3d. They were a violation of the command not to be unequally with unbelievers. 4th. Their influence in the family is un-Christian and injurious, and lastly called attention to the testimony of some other church, and of distinguished clergymen and statesmen, whose views are in harmony with the position of the United Brethren on this subject. The attention was excellent, and I was encouraged by the hearty commendations volunteered by quite a number after the meeting closed.

Since writing the above I have learned of one saloon that decorated in honor of the Christian Endeavor convention. The fact was reported at the prayer service in Bro. Barton's church, and a goodly company of volunteers at once accepted the challenge and repairing to the place held a very interesting prayer and song service, where such a service was not a common occurrence. There is very much of which I should gladly write, but have already ventured beyond a proper limit. I have done so understanding that the New England letter from your regular contributor was to be omitted next week.

FROM THE PACIFIC COAST.

PORTLAND, Ore., July 12, 1895.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—It was my privilege to listen to our new pastor on the last Sabbath in June. He preached two good sermons. I think he will do a good work this year. I had been invited to speak on the lodge question at the Woodburn camp meeting, but just as I was arranging to start, a messenger came for me to go to Pleasant View on Washington Circuit. This is where I traveled the first two years I was on the coast. It was pleasant to meet old friends again and speak to them on the importance of salvation from all sin through Jesus the only Saviour. I commenced on Tuesday night, and spoke every night during the week. One brother took his horse and saddle and went up and down the ridge for miles announcing the meeting. We had excellent congregations.

On Sabbath, July 7, I spoke three times to very good congregations. At three o'clock I spoke on the lodge question directly. The house was crowded; the door was full and many on the outside trying to get in. The lodgeites and their jack Masons were ill at ease. They twisted and squirmed. One minister started in to laugh it off, but the laugh wore out before he went far.

One Mason pronounced it a very rotten address. I said, I confess it was, for Masonry is the rottenest subject in the land, and you must confess that I stuck to my subject. This address was well received by the better thinking people.

In the evening the house was crowded again. There were several who made a start to serve God, and two united with the church. I secured one subscription to the Cynosure, and took a good subscription to the support of the pastor. On Monday, after uniting in marriage Mr. Simeon May and Amy E. Holce, I returned home. This trip was a success. I advertised our convention quite extensively. P. B. WILLIAMS.

FAILURE TO SHUT OFF THE LIGHT.

ST. PAUL, Minn., July 15, '95.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—It was a hot Sabbath afternoon, June 30, at Clear Lake, Iowa, where 10,000 people assembled to hear Dr. Talmage. Fourteen years had cast their sunshine and shadow upon him since I heard him, in his tabernacle in Brooklyn, preach a sermon on the marriage of Adam and Eve. But he is none the less interesting today than then. At Clear Lake his text was, "The people that do know their God shall be strong and do exploits." Dan. 11: 32. He said all could not do exploits in science and inventions, but all might, by a knowledge of God, be strong and do exploits in saving a man, saving a woman, saving a child. The wicked were reproved and the good incited to higher motives for usefulness in the service of God and humanity. He thinks that this world has seen its last international war, and that the world is on the high road to prosperity, peace and blessedness. And so the doctor would have it.

On the evening of the same day, June 30, an Anti-masonic meeting was held in the public park. Many Freemasons were present and heard their institution condemned by the Word of God, and the way of salvation from Masonry pointed out. Bro. Theron Palmette was on the stage and testified of his personal acquaintance with Elder David Bernard, stating that after Captain Morgan was murdered, and Elder Bernard had seceded from Masonry, he had attended his ministry of the Gospel and heard him preach during four years. The young people from the churches did the singing.

On Monday evening, July 1, another meeting was held at the same place, which was not quite so pleasant as the one on Sabbath evening had been. A Freemason, under the influence of Masonic refreshments, which had made him lightheaded and so hardened his brain that his mind was not susceptible of good influences—in short, a drunken Freemason, interfered with the meeting by impertinent and insulting remarks, with a view of breaking up the meeting; however, the meeting proceeded to its close, when the said drunken Freemason procured a supply of eggs and stones with which to pelt the speaker.

The Y. M. C. A. hall had been engaged for Sabbath evening for the sum of $5, but when the meeting was announced the Y. M. C. A. secretary broke the contract and refused the hall for our purpose Another hall had been engaged for Monday evening, but when the announcement of the meeting was made from the stand in the park on Sabbath evening, it was in like manner refused. The churches were all refused (save the Lutheran), hence the meetings were held in the park.

On Tuesday evening, July 2, at Lyle, Minn., an open air meeting was held; churches refused. A brass band was played until quite late in the evening, which, however, had brought quite a concourse of people together, and the opportunity was embraced to speak to the people about the salvation of their souls, and but little was said about secret societies. At parting the Congregational pastor said, perhaps when I go there again I may speak in his church.

CORRESPONDENCE.

LETTER FROM WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 17, 1885.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The Washington attendance at the meetings of the fifth international convention of the Baptist Young People's Union of America, which began to-day in Baltimore, will be large, as Washingtonians can go over in an hour, and the railroad fare has been cut in half. The Baptists are strong in the District of Columbia, and as hard workers are not surpassed by the members of any denomination. Not a few of the Baptist Endeavorers, who have been to the big Christian Endeavor Convention at Boston, will stop over at Baltimore on their way home to add their enthusiasm to the Baptist Young People's meetings.

The pulpit of the late Gen. Green Clay Smith was filled Sabbath by a well-known government official, Rev. Dr. G. W. Sanderlin, who preached from Isaiah 9: 6. "His name shall be called Wonderful," a prophecy of the coming Messiah which was fully believed in by the ancient Jews. Dr. Sanderlin came to Washington from Raleigh, N. C., to accept the position of Deputy Auditor for the Interior Department. He was once pastor of the Franklin Square church in Baltimore, and for a time preached at Goldsboro, N. C. There was some talk about his being asked to fill the vacant pulpit permanently, but his friends do not think he would care to accept the responsibilities of the place. Many regard Rev. William P. Throgmorton, of Fort Smith, Ark., as the coming pastor. He passed through Washington this week, on his way to the Young People's convention at Baltimore, and will occupy the pulpit of the Metropolitan Baptist church next Sabbath, and no one will be surprised if he should receive a formal call from the church. He is well known as a church builder and as a controversialist, among Baptists of the southwest.

Rev. Alexander Bielaski, who made his first step towards becoming a minister of the Gospel at a meeting of the Washington Y. M. C. A. about twenty years ago, was the principal talker at the last Gospel meeting of that organization. His topic, which was well handled, was the "Unlimited Evidence of Christ." Mr. L. Loomis, of Asbury Park, also took part in the meeting. The international educational exhibit of the Y. M. C. A. of North America, which is now open at the building of the association, has drawn largely, when the season is taken into consideration. It is an exhibit that everybody should see. It shows at a glance what this excellent organization is doing for the young men upon whom the future welfare of our country depends. C. A. S.

BOSTON CONVENTION POINTS.

BOSTON, July 17, 1895.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The Christian Endeavor movement, whose annual convention here closed this week, started fourteen years ago. Now it has 40,000 societies and 2,500,000 members, representing all the States and Territories, the provinces of Canada, Mexico, South America, England, France, Germany, Russia, Italy, Turkey, China, Japan, India, Australia, Africa, the Islands of the Sea—it is world wide. The motto of the convention was, "All the world for Christ." Dr. Dixon of Brooklyn said: "Christ's devotion to truth was as narrow as a razor's edge; his sympathies as wide as the world. The believer should seek the things that make for peace. But next to peace he should fight for the truth. He must make war on all wrong."

There where 56,435 delegates enrolled at this convention. Three meetings were held simultaneously in Mechanic's Building, and in two tents on the Common, Tent Endeavor and Tent Fillis-ton. Looking down over this sea of faces from the platform so many faces seemed illuminated with the light from above, and listening to their singing, men and women from almost every nation under heaven, their hearts seemed united by the life of Christ, as they were I hope purified by the blood of Christ, I could not help saying: "This is the perfection of beauty, the joy of the whole earth."

The church is the habitation of God through the Spirit. The condition of God's dwelling in the temple were that it be built according to the pattern revealed to Solomon, and that the ordinances be administered according to his word. The conditions of the Spirit of Christ abiding in his church are that she "be built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone, in whom all the building, fitly framed together, groweth up into an holy temple in the Lord." God dwells in a united church, in which the simple rites of his worship are administered and by which the Gospel is proclaimed. The reason the church is not blessed with victory is that her forces are divided and her efforts neutralized. "That they all may be one, as thou Father art in me and I in thee, that they may be one in us; that the world may believe that thou hast sent me." What the world needs is the testimony of a united church. Dr. McCrory said: "The colonies were separated by local interests and jealousies; but when it came to making common cause against a foreign tyranny they stood shoulder to shoulder in the Revolution. And after that they formed the Union, each State retaining its individuality. I am not in favor of surrendering denominational distinctions. But the time has come for the reformed churches to make common cause in the war on Satan's kingdom."

The good citizenship movement of the Endeavor work is destined to regenerate our civil and political life. A speaker said: "Christ is the king. The seven-fold operations of the Holy Spirit are subject to him. He reigns by the Spirit. The Holy Spirit must dominate our national and civil life. He must dominate our political parties. He must reign in the hearts of President and Congressmen, of governors and legislators, of mayors and city councilmen, of judges, marshals and policemen. But the Spirit operates through the law of God. Christ's authority and law must be recognized by municipal, state and national officers. God should be recognized as the source of all authority, the Lord Jesus Christ as the ruler of nations, and the Bible as the foundation of all law in every state and national platform of every political party, in every state and our national Constitution, in the President's messages to Congress, and in the Thanksgiving proclamation of governors and President."

The apostles were to begin at Jerusalem. "Out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem." They were to be Christ's witnesses in Jerusalem and Judea and Samaria and unto the uttermost ends of the earth. Christian Endeavor seems to be one method of the church arising to bring all nations to Christ.

J. M. FOSTER.

WARNING TO THE YOUNG.

EFFINGHAM, Kan., July 11, 1895.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—It was my duty a few Sabbaths ago to call the attention of my congregation to the evils of the lodge. It came to light recently that four of our young boys had been stealing carpenter's tools; and it was discovered through their confession that they had formed what they called a lodge, binding themselves together in the bonds of secrecy by a strong oath, and they had their password, etc. On the 4th of July they intended to take the road for plunder.

On the Sabbath morning following the exposure, at the close of the service, I called the attention of the people to the revelations of the past week. I remarked that there were two things that ought to be observed in this connection. The dime novel figured in this sad affair. Parents were urged to seek to keep all such literature from their boys, and also to teach them to read good literature. And then reference was made to the lodge feature of the revelations. The fathers of the boys are every one of them members of one or more secret societies. If fathers will go where they do not want their boys to go, and will take oaths or pledge themselves to keep from their boys what they do in those places, is it any wonder that boys will take oaths from one another to keep from their fathers where they go and what they do at certain times and places?

I very plainly but tenderly showed the sad influence of the concealment of our actions from our children. Wives, whose husbands were in the lodge, commended me for the words of warning. Some of the people present looked astounded that one should say anything but sweet and smooth things of their darling pets.

The Cynosure is a welcome visitor to my home, and I hope to have my children read your literature when they grow old enough to read such with profit. Continue the good work.

WAYSIDE NOTES.

BUFFALO, N. Y., July 13, 1895.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—After attending to some real estate matters for the N. C. A., in Detroit, Mich., I called upon friends of the Cynosure, among whom is George W. Clark, who celebrated his 84th birthday on the fifth of this month. Age has not dimmed his interest in all things that build up the kingdom of Christ. He regrets that his physical weakness prevents his attendance at our convention. It is now more than fifty years ago since he first voted at a national election for the prohibition of the liquor traffic. He said that the platform of 1840 had a prohibition plank in it, and he voted for its candidate, the Hon. James G. Birney.

Brother Clark has clasped hands with nearly every prominent Abolitionist, Prohibitionist and anti-secretist that has lived in our country during the present century. Notwithstanding all has not been accomplished that he has labored for, he realizes that he has been right, and on the side of God, and that when he stands before the Lord to be judged for his stewardship, that he will have some fruit to the honor of God that will not be burned up. Paul wrote to Timothy "that all they which are in Asia are turned away from me." Yet Paul was not discouraged; neither did he give up the fight but said, "nevertheless I am not ashamed for I know whom I have believed." How many of our readers can say with Paul and Brother Clark that they will not be discouraged though the whole world turn away from them?

It means something to be identified with the N. C. A. It means to the Christians to-day what it meant in the apostles' time when the simple declaration of faith in Christ brought about ostracism and persecution. No wonder that some cease to labor with us, when other forms of religious activity, such as the Christian Endeavor, make religion popular, and bring to its workers no cross. Said one of our former co-workers to me, "I used to be with you, but I have learned that one might as well beat against the air." To be identified with the N. C. A. is to preach that Jesus Christ is the only Saviour, and that the secret lodge altars are the altars of Satan. The proof of the truthfulness of this statement is abundant in every town. It is even true of those lodges which use the name of Christ in their religious ritual. A Methodist missionary to the wild Indians, whom I met in Clifton, Ont., as we were watching the Orangemen parade, said that the confession of Christ by some of these secret societies reminded him of some of the Indians among whom he labored. After preaching to them he would ask for testimonies. Many would testify that they believed in Jesus, that they wanted to be saved by him, but after the meeting they would go off and have a "ghost dance." This is a chief ceremony in their pagan religion.

I examined the badges of the Orangemen. Among the emblems was an open Bible, and the member with whom I conversed said "we are religious; we have a chaplain, and many of our members are Methodists." On these badges was a soldier or armed knight on horseback, and also the little red schoolhouse, as well as an open Bible. "Yes," said the Orangeman, "we have our lodge dances." Some of the Orangemen were profane; some smoking and drinking, and some were Methodists! How far removed is such a semi-religious organization from a church of Satan? or their religious condition really different from that of the wild Indians among whom our Methodist friend labors? A man is beating against something more than air in opposing such a strange medley—its power is the prince of the powers of the air.

I find that Rev. A. Thomson's prophecy as to the effect of secret societies upon the W. C. T. U. is beinning to have its fulfillment in some places. In Detroit the leaders have gone into the hives of the Maccabees with such zeal that the local W. C. T. U. is having a struggle to live.

You will be interested to learn how the lady Maccabees enforce "charity." Article 13 of their by-laws reads: "Visiting committee, whose duty it shall be to visit sick families of our hive. This committee shall be furnished a correct list of the names of members of this hive, and may, when necessary, request one or more of the ladies to attend any sick member or their families and render such assistance as may be necessary. If any lady refuses to go, or send a substitute when called upon, she shall be fined the sum of fifty cents."

In Detroit a gentleman was eloquently enlightening me on the hatred to free speech shown by the Catholics in their treatment of the priests who secede and expose the principles and practices of the Church of Rome. I said to him, "every false system loves darkness," hence Freemasons have used the same tactics towards their opposers that the Catholics use. Men have been mobbed, murdered, thrown out of employment, their business destroyed, because they exposed the principles and practices of the Freemasons. My friend's zeal for free speech seemed to suddenly cool, but we hope for his conversion to a full, rounded-out, well-balanced defender of free speech. An American, not an A. P. A. rian.

At Niagara Falls, Ont., I called upon an old subscriber, Robert Gunn, who spent the first twenty-five years of his manhood as a British soldier. He has proved himself in the moral conflict of his native place "faithful among the faithless found." After his soldier life had ended he came to Canada, where his ability secured a good position in a railway office. His co-workers on a certain occasion were cursing a minister who had told his hearers what Freemasonry was. Mr. Gunn said, "He is a stranger to you, why do you curse him? You say he is a perjured villian. If he has perjured himself because he has told what he swore that he would not tell, then he must have told the truth about Freemasonry." Instead of a manly acknowledgment that they had been caught in their own trap, and being ashamed of their effort to suppress free speech by slandering a stranger, they turned their energy toward their fellow-worker and secured his discharge. I commend to Brother Gunn the following verse from a hymn of Isaac Watts, which I had the pleasure of copying from the original manuscript:

"All things shall work for good to those Who love and fear the Lord.
My foes for all their brags and braves,
Shall never work mine ill,
For they are but my father's slaves
And must perform his will;
Whatever mischiefs they project
Upon his ssints to bring,
No more or less shall they effect,
Then he permits them in."

If you are ever in Clifton, Ont., and wish to come to the American side, I will tell you a secret. It seems that the Suspension Bridge Company required of the Erie Railroad Company a clause in their charter forbidding them to ever charge for carrying passengers across the bridge; but they neglected to have the railroad company insert a clause forbidding them to carry passengers across the bridge, hence any one who wishes a free ride has only to get onto an Erie train. Passengers are carried but no toll collected. The same ride on any other train costs twenty-five cents. A walk across costs ten cents.

I have an invitation to spend the Sabbath at the home of Mr. R. C. Guild of this city, whose father is a well-known Prohibitionist of Illinois.

W. I. PHILLIPS.

AN AWAKENED SOUL.

EMBARRASS, Wis., July 15, 1895.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—As I take up the Cynosure and read the caption of an article by our excellent brother, W. B. Stoddard, where he speaks of the need of people being stirred to greater effort, I said to myself, I am feeling and doing all I can, unless I have more power given me to feel and to do. For oh, is it not enough to move the most insensible to see the condition of our land in connection with secret societies? How they are multiplying and exerting their baneful influence everywhere!

I often hear people use the "good man" argument. They say the lodge must be good or so many good men, even ministers, would not belong to them. As a lady said to me lately, when I was trying to show her a little of their pernicious influence: "Our minister belongs to the Masons and his wife to the Eastern Star, and they are good people, and I am sure they would not belong to a bad institution." So that ends the matter. I dare not express all I feel on this momentous subject. The Lord help us! I do despise almost everything connected with the whole brood of secret orders. If there is a seeming good it only proves a snare. I abhor their barbarous oaths and their silly ceremonies and their deception.

But above all to be deplored is the way they treat, or rather ignore, our blessed Lord. For as I heard our good Bro. Fenton say once, the lodge will not have anything to do with Christ or say of him that is not dishonorable. I am almost horrified at the thought. Poor blind souls, and many of them leading the blind, and how many must fall into the ditch! But in God, and in him alone, we trust; for all human probabilities are against us. Yet so it was in the days of slavery. When hope was almost dead the Almighty made short work of slavery. And so do we hope it will be again. Man's extremity may prove God's opportunity. Oh, may he hasten the day when every last secret lodge shall be forever swept out of existence! (MRS.) J. GRIFFIN.

STORM CLOUDS GATHERING.

WORCESTER, Mass., July 6, 1895.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Failing to make connections, I am here for an hour enroute for Putnam, Conn. I find Bro. Pratt well, and busy with the wants of his numerous customers; and as my time is too limited to call on friends more remote, I will improve the hour in sending a hasty note to the Cynosure. The evil effects of secret societies in engendering class hostility found marked expression in the celebrations on the 4th inst. in New England. In some instances performances approximated a religious hostility rather than a healthy rivalry in expressing admiration and loyalty to American institutions. Trouble had been anticipated in East Boston, and, as the sequel showed, with good reason; but in spite of extra precautionary measures, a conflict occurred in which one man lost his life and a number were seriously injured.

The real inspiration of the disturbance was a feeling of animosity between the A. P. A. and Roman Catholic societies, though the ostensible pretext was the display of a miniature "Red Schoolhouse" in the procession. Apparently each party had been loaded up by inflammatory speeches until, like "cannon crackers," they were ready to explode at the slightest concussion. Two hundred and fifty policemen assigned to special service were able to guard the "Little Red Schoolhouse" in its patriotic mission. The turbulent elements broke out soon after the pressure was removed, and the papers tell of a scene of wild confusion that followed. Some twenty pistol shots fired at random sent those who were not killed or too seriously wounded to make their escape flying for shelter, and brought a squad of police to the rescue. As a single incident this sad occurrence is not alarming; but when considered as an expression of a widely-diffused feeling which only awaits some pretext for a general assertion, it becomes exceedingly significant.

It is an augury of what is to come when plans are matured, and factions become strong, and the masses are fired by the intemperate harangues of their leaders, until mob violence supersedes constitutional authority, and cliques and clans and religious orders multiply until no man is free to exercise his right of citizenship because he is subject to the dictation of some "supreme" A. P. A. or priest or bishop or pope or anti-Christian, un-American compact to which he has pledged or sworn his first allegiance. Rivalries will exist while men are jealous of each other, but no wide-spread conspiracy can spring up, involving two or more parties in deadly hostility, in the light. The native element of conspiracy is darkness; and not until they attain a stage of maturity that inspires their leaders with confidence do they venture out from their secret recesses.

4:00 P. M.—I stopped over here at North Grovnerdale to call on a friend of whom I had heard but never seen. My welcome was most cordial and our brief interview refreshing. I am always glad to meet a man who is conscientious, discreet and willing to follow the truth as far as he sees it. May the Lord raise up many such Holy Ghost helpers in New England and all over the country, now that the fields are ripe for the harvest. JAMES P. STODDARD.

HOW TO PREVENT "RIGGS' DISEASE."

A Sure Destroyer of Teeth, Seldom Detected Until Too Late.

Riggs' disease of the gums is a recession of the flesh from the teeth scarcely perceptible to the sufferer. The enamel of the teeth is several times thicker above and below the skin than under it. What is called the normal line of the gum, the dentine or enameled portion, is not exposed, and nature provides the heavier shell coating to protect the visible part not only from cold and climatic conditions, but from the danger generated by small microbes floating about the mouth after eating.

When the gums recede from the teeth toward the root, the dentine is left a helpless prey to every acid the mouth contains, and decay begins at the top, cutting off all hope of saving the lower part.

This recession is rarely visible except to the dentist. Its probable effect is slight bleeding of the gums whenever a stiff brush is used, while the teeth seemingly remain in their normal condition.

The cause of the irritation is tartar poison.

The saliva of the mouth is partly formed of phosphate of lime, which, by chemical action, is converted into tartar. This fastens itself upon the roots of the teeth, and irritating the tender membrane causes a bleeding, sore condition.

In this weakened, porous condition these innumerable microbes that lurk in the cavities of the mouth float out from their hiding places and seize upon the wounded line of skin. This is the fatal condition, and only the most careful treatment dislodges them. The tartar substance becomes poisonous, and the whole eats its way into the gums, which slough and gradually decrease.

Of course this disease is not common to every mouth. It is caused primarily by an acid condition of the saliva, hereditary in some constitutions, and its earliest arrester is an antiseptic. Should, however, any bleeding occur in brushing, a dentist's help should be called in.

The treatment for it continues from six months to a year, and even then the disease is only arrested; the re-establishment of the gum is never assured.

The nature of the disease is so insidious that prudent women should see to it that the mouth is frequently examined. Any dentist can tell whether a person is inclined to this condition and at once remove the tartar and advise an antiseptic that destroys the microbes.

In fact, some such preparation should be frequently used to retain a healthy condition of every part of the mouth.

A 2 per cent solution of salicylic acid is especially recommended by the profession.

How to Cook Plank Shad at Home.

Take a long narrow baking pan and put it on the stove with a piece of beef suet to try out slowly. Split a roe shad as for broiling, dry it well inside and out with a clean white cloth, rub it with quite a little salt and after rubbing the pan with the melting suet lay the fish, skin up, in the bottom and set it in a hot oven. Let it brown and sizzle till it is puffed in tiny blisters all over the top, and then you can be pretty sure it is done. Slide it out on a hot platter and serve garnished with lemon and parsley. Cooked in this way, all the rich juices of the fish are preserved, and there is not so much odor through the house.

How to Clean Wall Paper.

The easiest method of cleaning the dusty and somewhat blackened surface is to arm one's self with a broom, over which is pinned some cotton flannel, which must be changed frequently, as the flannel will soon be in such a condition that to continue its use would smear the walls with dust and soot. Go over the ceiling first with long, even, firm strokes, then do the walls in the same way.

Another way to clean the paper is to have on hand several loaves of stale bread and use instead of the broom and cloth. Cut off the crust from the long end of the loaf and rub the paper with it, cutting off a thin slice as soon as the crumbs become soiled. This is a tedious method, but it is effective.

To remove a grease spot, lay coarse brown paper over it and pass a hot iron over the brown paper. Repeat this process, using a fresh piece of paper until the spot disappears.

How to Polish a Stove.

Put on a pair of stout leather gloves and apply the blacking with the round part of an ordinary shoe brush, called a dauber. The other side of the same brush is used in polishing with light, even strokes, like an expert bootblack. Soft paper bags, such as come from the grocer, kept to accumulate, are used two or three at a time slipped over the glove, and rubbed over the stove once each day. Polish need only be applied once a week. Wipe all dust from the stove before applying polish.

CONSUMPTION

TO THE EDITOR—Please inform your readers that I have a positive remedy for the above named disease. By its timely use thousands of hopeless cases have been permanently cured. I shall be glad to send two bottles of my remedy free to any of your readers who have consumption if they will send me their express and post office address. T. A. Slocum, M. REV. M. A. GAULT, - - - EDITOR.
WM. I. PHILLIPS, - - - PUBLISHER.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JULY 25, 1895.

"FRATERNITIES AND TAXATION."

Under this caption the Voice of Masonry publishes the following from the Indiana Pythian of Indianapolis:

"State Auditor Henderson during his incumbency submitted to Attorney-General Smith these questions: (1) Is the property of such organizations as the Odd-fellows, Masons and similar societies exempt from taxation under clause five, section five of the new law concerning taxation? (2) Where the property, or portion thereof, of such organizations is occupied for business or other purposes, what part, if any thereof, is to be subjected to taxation?

"In answering the question the Attoreey-General calls attention to the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of the City of Indianapolis vs. the Grand Master, etc., of the Grand Lodge of Indiana, in which it was held that the Masonic order came under the head of charitable institutions. This conclusion, the Attorney-General says, seems never to have been reversed or modified, and says he: 'A definition so comprehensive, it would seem, embraces many, if not all, of the fraternities of the State, the prime object of which is the dispensation of charity, either to the public or amongst its members.'

"Clearly, under this decision, property belonging to the Knights of Pythias, Odd-fellows or Masons comes within the exemption of section five, above referred to, and is not subject to taxation."

Considering the vast amount of wealth invested in fraternity halls and temples, we believe the question of equal taxation of the property of all organizations, even including that of churches, is one of growing importance.

LOYALTY TO CHRIST.

The Patriot-Phalanx, of Indianapolis, says that nearly all prohibition platforms, State and national, acknowledge Almighty God as the source of all true government, and his law as the standard to which all human enactments must conform. It states that the principle which these words embody may be called a distinctive doctrine of that party. But the Patriot Phalanx seriously objects to an amendment by the Pennsylvania convention, adding the following: "And Jesus Christ as the ruler of nations." It says that this seems simply a pious phrase thrown in to catch votes; that when they acknowledge Almighty God the source of all true government, they acknowledge Christ, for Christ is God. But their most serious objection is that if Christ is recognized as the ruler of the United States, those who do not believe, love and serve him must be traitors; and they ought, at least, to be deprived of the ballot. Thus they say, to make citizenship dependent upon faith is abhorrent to all right feelings.

The Patriot-Phalanx has certainly failed to look up the Bible on this point. There can be but one meaning to the words of our Lord when he says: "For the Father judgeth no man; but hath committed all judgement unto the Son: That all men should honor the Son even as they honor the Father. He that honoreth not the Son honoreth not the Father which hath sent him." Again, John in his epistle 2: 23 says: "Whosoever denieth the Son the same hath not the Father." He says again, that the failure to confess Christ is the spirit of anti-Christ, for "who is a liar but he that denieth that Jesus is the Christ. He is anti-Christ that denieth the Father and the Son."

We do not accuse the editors of the Patriot-Phalanx of being Freemasons, yet they have adapted the Masonic theory of attempting to organize a political brotherhood by excluding Christ. Freemasons go so far as to cut the name of Christ out of his own Testament and exclude it from their rituals and prayers. Their influence was powerful in France a century ago and had much to do in inducing our Revolutionary fathers to exclude the name of Christ, and even Almighty God, from our national Constitution. This false Christless religion, which has its altars erected in every town, is, we believe, chiefly responsible for the exclusion of the name of Christ from all our State constitutions, and from our political platforms. So powerful is this anti-Christian lodge sentiment, that not even a Presbyterian President, Harrison, dare recognize Christ's name in his Thanksgiving proclamation. Now, as the Bible declares, no man cometh unto the Father except by Christ, of what avail is it to acknowledge Almighty God in a political platform or anywhere else, while we ignore that name which is above every name?

STUDY BREVITY.

In Cyrus Field's advice to young men on how to get rich, he says among other things: "Be honest, and be brief. I don't believe in long business letters. There is no business so important that you cannot put the whole of it upon one sheet of paper."

The testimony of this man who was so successful in business, and who accumulated his millions of wealth, was that he made the cultivation of brevity in all things a prime feature of his character. Therefore whether we write an editorial, or letter, or article for publication, let us study brevity. Let us make no palaver of beginning, or palaver of ending. Let us dash into the midst of what we want to say, say it and quit. The essays in the magazines and reviews could in almost every case be shortened by at least one-half, and be the better for it. Life is too short in our century for a deluge of words.

ALL-ROUND REFORMERS AGAIN.

Dr. D. M. Gillespie's letter on "All-round Reformers," in a late Cynosure, has awakened much thought on the subject. The doctor is a close Bible student, and will pass examination on the Bible solution of almost all reform questions. If the Bible presents a straightedge, by the measurement of which all reform are to be tested, then it does seem that reformers accepting Bible teaching should present a more unbroken front. And certainly in unity would come much greater strength. Among the letters which Dr. Gillespie's plan has called out, was one published last week from a clear-headed Kansas pastor. We here give another from an equally clear-headed Connecticut pastor, who writes:

"Dr. Gillespie's proposed society to combine 'all-round' reformers would be an addition to the societies whose number his plan proposes to reduce instead of increasing.

"Art. 2 of his constitution is the indicative one. Art. 6 is the test of eligibility to membership. The latter requires 'full sympathy' with all contained in the former.

"There may be a few reformers, or even many, who are in full sympathy with all the objects set forth in Art. 2, yet in the case of many whose membership would be desired, the test of Art. 6, applied to Art. 2, would probably prove exclusive rather than inclusive. I think that some of the friends prominent in the National Christian Association regard me, for example, as a reformer. They think me in sympathy with them, and they welcome help. A virtual allusion to work of mine is found in the very number that contains this constitution. But a camel would get through a needle's eye and back again before my conscience or 'full sympathy' could squeeze through Art. 2. I get along smoothly until I reach 'equal suffrage under proper restrictions.' Here I wish to know what is meant by 'equal suffrage,' and what is meant by 'proper restrictions.' I do not claim 'full sympathy' with all that some would include under the former phrase. I do not know the meaning of 'proper.' I do not pretend to be wise concerning 'equal taxation,' or clear as to what the doctor regards as equal taxation. What may be subsequently admitted as 'kindred reforms,' I don't know, and I am too Anti-masonic to be willing to assume the obligation concerning them until I do know. How can I tell whether or not I am in 'full sympathy' with what the doctor regards as 'kindred reforms,' or with what may be brought in by other members through that gate ajar?

"Then comes the obligation to political candidates. This might be a shade better than being a Royal Arch Mason, but I think it will be after I cease to be a reformer when I pledge my political action to an association of any kind. Besides I am already under a previous oath to the government.

"If the doctor's idea is feasible, then what does the church lack of being the society proposed? If the church fails as yet to combine reformers, what society can hope at once to combine them. Formal gathering is not what will attain the end. Truth is the thing that unites men and breaks down the bars of form. Life works outward from within, and no sculptor was ever so skillful as to carve marble so perfectly that a heart would beat within.

"I value form, and would not carry my point beyond itself. But I do believe that our work is to make light shine rather than to create organizations. Yet this is not strictly the point I am trying to make here. I hold that the society proposed would fail to combine reformers, and would introduce a new annex out into which some would go. This would still farther separate workers instead of uniting them. It would take out the 'all-round' reformers, and leave the rest of us abandoned in a measure by an important part of our force. The 'all-round' society, on its part, would lack our momentum. The fact is, that even temperance workers, alone, cannot be kept together. The Woman's Suffrage element is another division. Then may come diverse notions of taxation or some financial idea. The fact is obvious that 'full sympathy' with everything that everybody counts a reform, mentioned explicity or left in vague possibility under the omnibus clause 'kindred reforms,' cannot be expected to make its home in every reformer's bosom. The new society would be a new section and would make a new division. Yet the reason urged for its formation is that there are already too many divisions."

THE LOVEJOY MONUMENT.

We are glad to know that an association has been formed for the purpose of erecting a monument to the memory of Elijah P. Lovejoy. Every Cynosure reader will be interested in this worthy object, and we take pleasure in publishing the following statement from the President of the Association:

"Nearly sixty years have passed since Elijah Parish Lovejoy died in defense of the great and precious principles—principles that can never die. He was killed for pointing out, with voice and pen, the evils of American slavery, and urging gradual emancipation as the remedy therefor. He was killed for asserting that liberty of speech and of the press, without which there can be no genuine and permanent liberty for any man, white or black; and without which any form of popular government is a snare and a sham—liable at any time to be bought by the purse or crushed by the sword. For these deathless principles, as applicable to every question about which men differ, and therefore desire to discuss, as to slavery—principles which will live and breathe and burn when the dark memories of American slavery had faded into the mists of dim tradition—Lovejoy laid down his young life, so full of brilliant promise. The victim was worthy of the altar—and there can be no higher praise.

"For twenty-five years or more, the grave of this hero and martyr was unmarked, and narrowly escaped utter oblivion. For thirty years it has been marked only by a simple stone of remembrance. The Legislature of Illinois, at its last session, appropriated $25,000 for a suitable momument, coupled, however, with the condition of an additional $12,500 be raised by public subscription. Unless this is done by Jan. 1, 1896, the appropriation is void. Surely no rhetorical appeal ought to be necessary for such an object. It is due not only to Lovejoy, but to the State and the nation, that the crime of Nov. 7, 1837, shall have long-delayed atonement as monumental granite and bronze can give. The site set apart in the Alton City cemetery for the proposed monument, is a circular plat on a lofty bluff overlooking the Mississippi and Misssuri rivers, and a wide expanse of country in Illinois and Missouri. The location is unsurpassed for beauty and sightliness. The monument will be in full view of every train passing through the city and from every steamer on the two great rivers of the West.

"We therefore call upon all lovers of liberty throughout the United States; all beneficiaries of the freedom of speech and of the press, which is to-day our richest inheritance, to aid us in this commemorative work. We must raise $12,500 by the 1st of January next, or the conditional appropriation made by the State of Illinois is lost for this purpose. We wish to close the mattet up without delay—in thirty days, if possible, and ask all who revere the name and fame of Lovejoy to forward their contributions without delay. Make all drafts or money orders payable to John E. Hayner, Alton, Ill., President of the Alton Savings Bank, who is the treasurer of this Association. All remittances will be personally and publicly acknowledged."

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Bro. Lewis Johnston, a colored graduate of Geneva College, and of the Reformed Presbyterian Seminary, is one of the editors of the Enterprise of Pine Bluff, Ark, a radical temperance reform paper. The paper bears the impress of Bro. Johnston's fine editorial ability.

—Bro. S. J. Peter, formerly of Winfield, Kan., has removed to Pawnee, Oklahoma. He writes: "This is a terribly lodge-ridden town, but there is at least one here now who will speak out on the Bible line of entire separation from all such works of darkness. If you will send me some Lodge Lamps I will get up a club here."

—Bro. John M. Snodgrass, of West Liberty, Pa., orders the Cynosure sent to a friend in hopes of interesting him permanently in our work. This is the kind of faith which in former years enlarged the subscription list of the paper. Such investments accompanied by earnest believing prayer are sure to bear fruit sooner or later.

—Dr. D. M. Gillespie, of Clay Center, Kan., has published a valuable book of 270 pages which ought to be in every home. It is entitled "The Believer's Hand Book," and to those who accept Bible authority it is invaluable as presenting in clear, concise form "what saith the Scriptures" on all important reform issues of the day. The price is only fifty cents.

—Prof. W. C. O. Jacques, president of the only distinctively art school for colored people, will make an astonishingly large and creditable art exhibit in the Negro Building at the Cotton States and International Exposition at Atlanta. The art department of the State University of Louisville, Kentucky, will also make a display of art work by colored artists.

—Rev. R. M. Messick of the Christian church, Higginsville, Mo., writes to Prof. Simpson Ely of his article on "The Church and the Lodge" which we copy this week from the Christian Standard: "I have just read your most excellent article in the Standard of July 13. I wish it could appear in every paper in our ranks. I thank you from the very bottom of my heart for the expression of your convictions on that subject. God bless you."

—Bro. Wm. Swarts, of Wenona, Ill., in sending his renewal says: "I cannot do without the Cynosure. I took a degree once in a Masonic lodge, and that one was more than I wanted. I learned their horrid oath, and I hope the good Lord will forgive me for it. If there is an institution on earth that is of the devil, it is Freemasonry. The two last preachers on this charge were both Freemasons; I have gone to hear them, but refuse to help to pay their salary."

—The Century for July contains a notable little speech by Webster never before published, and probably not delivered. It is in Mr. Webster's manuscript and bears, in his handwriting, the indorsement "Notes and Memoranda for a Speech on my Resolutions," the resolutions in question being his demand for information from Mr. Madison's government regarding the treatment of the United States by Napoleon, which led to the friction between this country and France in 1813.

—J. C. Yoder, of Lancaster, Pa., says that at the annual meeting of the German Baptist Brethren, a committee was appointed to go to Huntington, Pa., and investigate the charge that Masonic members are tolerated in the church. The president of the college, and the secretary of the Dunkard church at Huntington are members of the lodge. The president of the college is a minister in the Dunkard church and has kept his lodge membership a secret for a long time. Bro. Yoder says: "I have twenty years' experience in opposing secrecy in the Dunkard church. I need a medium to enlarge my field of labor. Is the Cynosure open for me?" [Editor—To be sure.]

—One of the best literary magazines that comes to our table is McClure's. A good illustration of how to get on at college, is furnished by the founder of McClure's Magazine. He was a poor Indiana boy with no material resources and with unlimited ambition. He boarded himself while working his way through Knox College, of which Dr. Jonathan Blanchard was once president. He peddled notions during vacations, worked his passage across the Atlantic and finally became the founder of this magazine by indomitable energy and hard work.

—The Christian Reformer, of Pittsburgh, says that "Rev. J. M. Foster sent an earnest protest to the Boston dailies against the desecration of the Sabbath by the Illinois delegation arriving in the city on Sabbath afternoon, and some other bodies of delegates arriving on Monday morning, after traveling on the Lord's day. Not a paper published the protest. Mr. Foster also sent a protest to President Clark, and asked that such desecration of the Sabbath be condemned by the convention. The reply was an apology, and an expression of thanks for the interest manifested in the cause. The Christian Endeavor movement will be shorn of its power if it does not speak out in its great conventions for the Sabbath and the Sabbath's Lord."

—The Social Economist for July opens with an argument by Abraham Lincoln in favor of a Bank of the United States against a Sub-Treasury, made in the course of a debate at Springfield, Ill., in 1839, and since that date now first published. It had escaped the knowledge of all of Lincoln's numerous biographers. It shows that Lincoln was as attentive to financial and administrative problems as to slavery and other economic and great moral issues. It is of special value at a time when the government finds itself compelled to employ foreign bankers to keep gold in the Federal Treasury. It shows that Mr. Lincoln was firmly convinced that a government bank was essential to a "Sound Money" policy for reasons which are permanent and in full force to-day.

—Hon. Isaac T. Gibson, of Salem, Iowa, who for several years was State chairman of the Prohibition party, writes us as follows: "Some years since there was some controversy in the Cynosure as to who was the editor of the first anti-slavery paper in the United States. I have investigated that matter since and am satisfied that Elihu Embree was the editor, and that the Emancipator was the first paper entirely devoted to the abolition of slavery, and published, too, in a slave State. I suppose you exchange with the American Friend. In number 28, page 675, is a short article on the above subject, which I would be glad to see in the Cynosure. If the statements therein can be controverted successfully I would be glad it was done and have the question settled."

—Rev. W. M. Howie, of this city, says the Midland, "has been appointed by the Board of Home Missions to take charge of our work at Seattle, Wash. This is a most important mission. Seattle is one of the chief cities of the great northwest, growing rapidly, and doubtless destined to be one of the great cities of our country. Bro. Howie has been a most diligent laborer and efficient missionary in our Third Church, Chicago, and goes to the coast with the best wishes of a very large number of friends. With his family he expects to arrive in Seattle before the first Sabbath in August. We wish for him great success in this new and important field of labor." Bro. Howie has done valuable work in the anti-secret reform, and will be a reinforcement on the Pacific Coast.

—Rev. E. S. Bunce, of Lawrence, Kan., in renewing his subscription sends these cheering words: "Please accept the inclosed and continue the Christian Cynosure, for I can't well do with out it. My name was on the list of subscribers at its first issue. I hailed with joy the organization of the Association, and it has had my prayers and tears through the years of its onward march to the present, and will have them still. I think our workers for the truth as it is in Christ Jesus are on the right line, and have reached the vital point, showing the anti-Christian and infidel character of the lodge system. I would say, turn on the light. I keep my papers traveling, and I wish I could do more; but I am an old man and in poor circumstances. I approve of the Lodge Lamp but can't increase expenses. My room would be dark to me without the Cynosure."

—The Home Light, of Boston, is an extremely neat little four-page monthly, published by Mrs. Anna E. Stoddard, and edited by Miss Elizabeth E. Flagg, price, only 15 cents a year. It is filled with choice testimony against the lodge, and being in small, clear type, makes a excellent folder to enclose in a letter. The women state the object of the paper in these words:

"This paper is the property of the women of the National Christian Association, and is designed to strengthen the cause of righteousness by encouraging those already interested in the pulling down of the strongholds of Satan as found in the secret lodges, and also to enlighten our sisters who have never investigated the subject. We hope for the hearty co-operation of all the women now interested in this branch of God's work."

—An Eastern pastor writes: "I am glad to find in the Cynosure of July 18 the letter of Pastor P. B. Linaweaver, of Kent, Ill., and I hope that we shall hear from him again. Can he also give us a further word on the point he urges where he says that Nicodemus 'must have known that the candidate must be baptized before he could be admitted as a Gentile proselyte into the Jewish church?' Can he cite a historical reference that will enable us to believe that Nicodemus had such knowledge at that time? I do not at present know where to look for satisfactory evidence that Jewish proselyte baptism came into use before the destruction of the Jewish temple. My inquiry does not relate to any time later than say, a third of a century after Nicodemus came to Christ by night. It does, however, cover all the time previous to the destruction of Jerusalem. Is there any allusion to Jewish proselyte baptism that implies its use before the temple was destroyed?"

—A subscriber writing from a Wisconsin town says: "The editor of the Cynosure said recently: Have you any neighbors to whom you have not given a copy of the Cynosure, and whom you have not asked to subscribed? To which I answer, I have, but I do not know an individual who could take the paper and not lose a social position, and largely his means of earning a livelihood. Here it requires almost as much courage to oppose the lodge as to face a cannon on the field of battle. I have been an opponent of the lodge for more than twenty years, and long before I knew of the existence of the Cynosure, with the result that my name has been of necessity eliminated from the pages of Dun and Bradstreet, and where I undertook to do business, I found few customers. I am compelled by this fact to pursue a closer economy than is pleasant to one of my nature. How refreshing it would be to meet and converse with one of your Association. If you know of any traveling this way encourage him to stop off. I would like to meet a man who appreciates the Cynosure and the truly gallant souls connected with it."

—In the July Scribner there is a history of the last quarter-century in the United States by Pres. E. Benj. Andrews, in which he warns of that dangerous secret society the Molly Maguires. He gives these as samples of admonitions this order was accustomed to send to offending parties:

"Now men i have warented ye before and i willnt warind you no mor—but i will gwrintee you the will be the report of the revolver."

A rude drawing of a revolver was subjoined as the author's sign manual.

Others were:

"NOTICE

"Any blackleg that takes a Union Man's job While He is standing for His Rights will have a hard Road to travel and if He don't he will have to Suffer the Consequences."

This "Notice" was followed by a picture of a dead man in his coffin, and signed "BEACHER AND TILTON."

CHURCH OF CHRIST WAVING ITS GLORY IN THE SKY.

Infidelity Has Done Nothing For the World, Says Rev. Madison C. Peters—All the Good In the World Has Been Wrought by Christianity.

On the 12th and 13th of July Madison C. Peters, D. D., lectured at Mont Eagle, Tenn., before the Chautauqua assembly, and on Sunday, July 14, he preached.

TEXT.—He shall not fail nor be discouraged till he have set judgment in the earth, and the isles of the sea shall wait for the law.—Isaiah xlii, 4.

The object of Christ's coming is the conquest of the world. The principles of truth which he teaches are everywhere to be understood and practiced and the principles of all governments are to be brought into harmony with his word.

A little over 1,800 years ago Christ died in the hands of his enemies. He had gathered a few publicans and fishermen about him, who were commissioned to preach his gospel and disciple all nations. They began their work in Jerusalem, the very furnace of persecution. Every effort was made to crush the new religion; every species of torture was inflicted on its votaries. From the hill of Calvary it diffused its blessings among the cities of Asia and the islands of Greece, over the deserts of Arabia and the European continent. It found its way to imperial Rome, and in less than 300 years it entered the palace and waved its banners over the proud dwelling of Cæsar!

Unaided by any, opposed by all, Christianity triumphed, and triumphed, too, in spite of all its foes. Thrones have fallen, empires have perished, confederations dissolved and nations vanished, but the church of Christ still stands in triumph, its branches waving in glory in the sky.

Failure of Infidelity.

Infidelity has done nothing for the world—built no temples, erected no colleges, organized no charities, originated no science, freed no slaves, pioneered no new countries for civilization, nowhere ever created a single virtue, revealed a new beauty or kindled a star of hope.

If you want infidelity's record of organized endeavor to regenerate mankind, turn to the history of the French revolution.

Opposition Abandoned.

The most hostile theories against Christianity—Strauss, Renan, Voltaire, Paine, Baur, Hilgenfeld and Schwegler—have all in turn been speedily abandoned, and the best thought of the age bows reverently to Christianity. I hear of a man traveling around the country lecturing on "The Mistakes of Moses." I would not give 5 cents to hear the infidel on "The Mistakes of Moses," but I would give $50 to hear Moses on "The Mistakes of the Infidel."

One Hundred Years Ago.

A little over 100 years ago England was under the dominion of infidelity; today the Bible is the textbook of every British youth. One hundred years ago infidelity was predominant in Germany, but in our day the masters of her mind are devout believers.

Christianity and civilization are identical. While other religions burrow among the superstitious and uncultured, Christianity is spreading most in the most advanced and cultured nations. China has been penetrated by missionary pioneers from Tibet on the west to Burma on the south, and fully one-half of its provinces, from Hongkong and Canton as far as Peking, have been occupied by a chain of missionaries which take in the principal cities of the empire. Japan—progressive Japan—is already rejoicing in the organization of scores of evangelical churches.

In the Mohammedan countries, from the Balkan mountains on the north to Bagdad on the south, from Egypt on the west to Persia on the east, central points in the most prominent cities have been established for the evangelization of the Moslem population. The advancing surges of a mighty revolution are encompassing India, conquering and subjugating the very core of India's heart with a new civilization. With the Bible translated into over 300 different languages and dialects, with missionary stations planted on every shore, with the dark continents opened for the heralds of salvation, with all the appliances of modern science and the activities of modern enterprise and intellect, all make the way for the gospel to reach the very ends of the earth.

Startling Statistics.

We have in the United States today 111,036 ministers, 165,177 congregations and 142,521 church edifices and a total number of 20,612,806 communicants. From 1810 to 1894 the Christians of America contributed $101,561,964 for foreign missions, and from 1820 to 1894 $138,893,303 for home missions. The receipts of the religious publication houses of the evangelical churches of the United States from 1881 to 1894 were $55,475,277. At the beginning of the present century there were about 200,000,000 Christians, but in 1890 the number was 492,865,000. Under Protestant governments there are now 520,103,190 souls, under Roman Catholic 242,822,264, while the eastern church has 127,975,823—total under Christian governments, 890,901,277 of the world's 1,500,000,000 population.

Christianity is the living faith of the world's best civilization. Its grand facts are constellated in eternal beauty. The mighty attraction of the cross shall yet draw men to the crucified, and Jesus shall see the travail of his soul and be satisfied. Amid all the storms that rend the heavens and shake the earth the church of Jesus Christ shall dwell securely under the shadow of the Almighty. He who hath planted it hath said, "The gates of hell shall not prevail against it."

Chicago Women's Enterprise.

Thirty-three of the women's clubs of Chicago—fancy what activities are conveyed in that list—have united to support "The Model Workshop and Lodging House association," which is incorporated for the purpose of owning property. Dr. Sarah Hackett Stevenson is its president. At present the lodging house is occupying temporary quarters, which, although the enterprise is new, are already proving too small for the number of women who are availing themselves of this opportunity. A Chicago paper states that as many as 20 women, on the average, spend the night at the house, the charge being 15 cents a night, which includes a bath and a clean nightgown. Think of the comfort of the poor wayfarer with such a grateful provision as this last. There is a sitting room, which all are privileged to use, and also a library.

There is as yet no workshop, as lack of room prevents it, but women are allowed to pay for lodging by doing housework and sewing. When the workshop is established, it will furnish many different kinds of work. One of the most interesting and valuable things about this portion of the enterprise is that especial pains will be taken to work against the sweatshops. When it is possible, work is found for those who wish it. As soon as the funds are raised the association will build, but it has wisely gone to work in showing the need for its work by renting quarters first and not waiting for a lot, bricks and mortar.—Chicago Letter.

Women In Public Office.

There are three licensed woman doctors in the summer corps of medical inspectors appointed by the board of health. All of them are youthful spinsters: Miss Mitchell, M. D., Miss Deane, M. D., and Miss Weiss, M. D. The other doctors of the body offered no objection to the selection of these three inspectors, all of whom are said to be fully qualified to perform the duties of their office. Their salary is $100 a month, and we have no doubt they will earn it by faithful service. It is a most laborious duty to which they have been appointed.

With women laboring for the board of health and for the board of education and for the street cleaning department, there can be no ground of complaint that women are excluded from public office. Several of them have been anxious to get employment in the police department, and it is possible that some women are already employed there. They have sought for places this year in all the municipal departments, including those of law, finance, excise and public works, and their claims have received a full measure of attention.

There is no doubt that hundreds of women are as well fitted as men are likely to be for public office. It is a mournful circumstance that all women do not become wives after they have reached the marriageable age.—New York Sun.

Daughters of Veterans of 1776.

The item going the rounds to the effect that there are only seven daughters of Revolutionary soldiers in the United States has resulted in the development of the fact that Vermont has at least five daughters of the Revolution of the first generation. The two venerable ladies of Bennington included in the current item are two sisters who married brothers named Buck. The St. Albans Messenger discovered a third in the person of Mrs. E. P. Jones of Georgia, who, in spite of her 93 years, is blessed with undiminished intellect and general good health. The Woodstock Standard now comes to the front with two additional daughters of the Revolution. The first mentioned is Mrs. Sarepta Cowen of Quechee, who is 74 years of age, and who has two brothers, Charles R. Whitman of Quechee, aged 81, and William Whitman of Brattleboro, aged nearly 79. Mrs. Betsy H. Pelton of Woodstock, who is 90 years old, is another, her father, John M. Call, having served five years in the war of the Revolution and two years afterward in the standing army.—Boston Herald.

A Princess' Bridal Veil.

The bridal veil worn by the Princess Helene of Orleans was of a unique design and was a marvel of exquisite beauty. It is the product of the most skillful workers at Bayenx and is a scarf of the finest white chantilly lace fully 4 yards long. The lower edge has a broad floral border, the pattern decreasing in size till the portion worn on the head consists merely of fragile meshwork. The center is quite plain, but on the part which fell over the train are two graceful branches uniting in a wreath of flowers. The novelty of the design is that in the center of the wreath are embroidered in heraldic colors the arms of the two families in point d'Alencon. On one side is the white cross of Savoy in silver and on the other the golden lilies of the house of Orleans on a field azure. The crown of the princes of Savoy surmounts the whole. The effect of the colors in the midst of the fine foamy lace is described as singularly beautiful.—London Lady.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic For the Week Beginning July 28. Comment by Rev. S. H. Doyle.

TOPIC.—Our Christian journey—helps and hindrances.—Math. vii, 13, 14; John xiv, 1-6.

This life has often been compared to a pilgrimage or a journey. In answer to Pharaoh's question concerning his age, Jacob said, "The days of the years of my pilgrimage are 130 years." Christ also spoke of the Christian's journey from earth to heaven in the same way where He said, "I am the way." The Christian's life resembles a journey in many particulars, not least of which is the fact that as on an important journey we are likely to meet some difficulties and obstacles, and some things that cheer and encourage us, so also it is in the Christian life. These hindrances and helps are to occupy our attention.

1. The Hindrances (Math. vii, 13, 14). These hindrances are here placed before us in a twofold light. The Christian journey is difficult to begin and to continue in, while, on the other hand, the opposite way is easy to enter and to follow. The first great hindrance to the Christian life is the fact that it is so much easier to travel the other way. "Wide is the gate and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many there be that go in thereat." It is easier to do wrong than to do right. It is easier to live a sinful life than a sinless one. Our natural desires, the influences of life about us all tend to draw us from God rather than to Him. Broad and wide and easy is the wrong way. The second hindrance lies in the fact that the Christian journey is hard to enter and to continue in. "Strait is the gate and narrow is the way which leadeth unto life." It is not always an easy thing to become a Christian. We must turn our backs upon what has been dear to us. The heart must be changed, the life must be transformed. It is even more difficult still to live the Christian life. The way is narrow. Only a few are traveling it. There are obstacles to be overcome; there are crosses to be borne; there are temptations to be resisted and trials and tribulations to be endured.

2. The Helps (John xiv, 1-6). All is not hindrance. We have help and all helps may be summed up in Christ. He is the way and by Him at last we may enter in. The Lord is our helper, the Lord strong and mighty, who in the darkest hour of affliction, in the moment of greatest difficulty, in the time of strongest temptation is able to sustain us. Lean upon Christ. Trust Him. Enter in by Him and all will be well.

Bible Readings.—Deut. xxxi, 6; Ps. xvi, 11; xxiii, 4; xxxiii, 20; xxxvii, 5; cxix, 5, 105; cxxi, 1; Isa. xxxv, 8; xliii, 2; Jer. l, 4, 5; Hos. xiii, 9; Math. iv, 1-11; xxviii, 19, 20; Mark ix, 24; xiii, 24-27; Luke xiii, 24; John xvi, 33; Acts xvi, 16, 17; Rom. viii, 35-39; I Cor. x, 13; I Thess. ii, 17, 18; Heb. iv, 14-16; I Pet. ii, 21; I John iv, 4; v, 4; Rev. ii, 7-10.

Growth of Endeavor In Ohio.

The Ohio Christian Endeavor union was organized April 15, 1887, in a convention held at Springfield, O. At this convention there were 38 delegates from outside the city. Eight years ago Ohio had about 135 societies, with a membership of perhaps 3,000. Now the state contains no less than 2,500 societies, with probably 100,000 members.—Golden Rule.

The Largest Union.

The Philadelphia union, with its 444 societies, is the largest in the world, says The Golden Rule. It counts on its rolls societies in two blind asylums, in rescue missions, in the almshouse, in the county jail, the Magdalene Home, the House of Refuge, and the Sunday Breakfast association. Surely here is a varied endeavor.

The Greatest of All.

He only is great of heart who floods the world with a great affection. He only is great of mind who stirs the world with great thoughts. He only is great of will who does something to shape the world to a great career, and he is greatest who does the most of all these things and does them best.—R. D. Hitchcock.

The Christian Test.

What does the world count a test of Christian discipleship? The answer is in the words of the Master Himself, "By this shall all men know that ye are My disciples, if ye have love one to another." This is our badge, our royal insignia, placed on our breasts by the King Himself.—William T. Ellis.

Christian Endeavor Gossip.

The Naval society of 27 members aboard the United States steamship Thetis are the only enlisted men who conduct regular Sunday services on a naval vessel. The services always close with the singing of "America" and the "Doxology."

The Cleveland Endeavorers have decided to erect 20 free drinking fountains in that city. A true good citizenship endeavor.

The colored family servant of one of the members of the Highland Presbyterian Endeavor society of Louisville has been created an honorary member of the society.

FOR YOUNG FOLKS.

About Cowards.

Here is a little talk between a boy who is a great hunter for his age and a lady of his acquaintance, which shows that cowardice depends sometimes upon the way things are looked at.

"A rabbit," said the young hunter, "is the most awful coward that there is in the world. My! How he does run from a hunter!"

"So you think the rabbit is a coward, eh?"

"Why, of course."

"Well, let us 'suppose' a little. Suppose you were about 6 or 8 inches tall."

"Well?"

"And had good, strong, swift legs."

"Yes?"

"And didn't have any gun, and a great, big fellow came after you, who did have one. What would you do?"

"What should I do? I should streak it like lightning!"

"I think you would, and I think, too, that you would have your own ideas as to who was the coward!"—Atlanta Constitution.

Some Answers.

In one of the Buffalo public school examinations the pupils were required to write a stanza of "America." Some of the verses submitted were remarkable. Here is one of them:

My country 'tis of thee
Sweet land of number three Of the I stand.
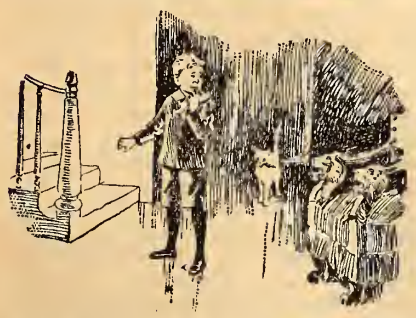
Land where my fathers die,
Land of the pilgrims' pie,
From every mountain sigh
Let freedom ring.

Another pupil started off in this way:

My country 'tis of three
Sweet land of libert tea.

Curious answers were given to other questions in the examination. For instance: Question—Who is the chief executive of the nation? Answer—Chief Cleveland. Question—Tell all you know about him. Answer—He has two babies. Another question was, "What becomes of the water in Lake Erie?" and to this one youngster replied, "We drink it," while another said, "It washes out the Hamburg canal."—New York Tribune.



Tommy's Confession.

I'm fond of nice stories of giants and witches
Who live all alone by themselves,

Of gnomes underground who are guarding their riches
And dragons and goblins and elves.

I love tales of wizards with stern, bearded faces
And wands and long robes of deep red.

But—I wish there were not quite so many dark places
To be passed when I'm going to bed.
—Frederick B. Opper in St. Nicholas.

Watch the Toads.

While you are away this summer go out any evening after a rain to the nearest electric light—and these are scattered now in so many country places that it will be easy to find, even in a small town—and watch the cleverness of those apparently stupid, blinking creatures, the toads. They have learned, since electric lights have been introduced, that their strong glare attracts great numbers of little insects, gnats, flies and various flying bugs. These are soon dazzled by the brilliant flame and fly recklessly into it, when they are burned and fall to the ground. In the circle of the light below, on the ground, sits Master Toad, with his mouth often open, and catches his supper without having to hunt for it. The other evening, in a little park in a suburban town, 14 toads were counted, perfectly motionless save for the occasional snap of their mouths, which told of frequent trapping of the foolish flies.—New York Times.

Battledoor and Shuttlecock.

The old game of battledoor and shuttlecock, which is still sold by toy dealers, but seldom played, is being revived as an exercise in physical culture. To be of benefit it must be played somewhat differently from former methods. The girl should throw the knee well forward and hold the bat high above her head, with the arm in a straight line up from the shoulder. If the ball be tossed in this way, the right muscles are brought into play.

A Rich Little Lady.

Lady Mary Hamilton-Douglas, the 11-year-old daughter of the late Duke of Hamilton, will be one of the richest heiresses of the age. Her father could not leave her his titles, but left her the bulk of his property, including the isle of Arran, which is larger than the isle of Wight. Her income now is $800,000 a year and will be $1,250,000 by the time she comes of age.

Knew Those Two Also.

"I know all the countries in Europe now except two," said a North Side maiden of primary grade to her teacher in geography.

"And what are those two, dear?" warily inquired the teacher.

"Servia and Roumania," was the prompt response.—Chicago Tribune.

ABSINTHE AND BITTERS.

How the French Increase the Evils of Alcohol Drinking.

There is no doubt the drink question is complicated all over France with the growth of absinthe and bitters drinking before meals. Here the evils of alcohol are increased by the hurtful qualities of the herbs—absinthe (wormwood), hyssop, fennel, anise, badiane (Chinese anise seed), angelica, wild marjoram and the various mints—which are infused in the distillation.

Dr. Magnan, at St. Anne's hospital For the Insane, with others of the Paris faculty, has investigated this subject by practical experiments with dogs. The essence of absinthe (the most poisonous of all these substances), hyssop and fennel when injected in light quantity produced direct epileptic attacks. The others simply stupefied.

This is further illustrated by the notorious and public increase of epilepsy and epileptiform attacks in Paris and by the necessity to which the city has now come of building a special asylum for alcoholics. This is to be at Ville-Evrard and is to furnish accommodations for nearly 1,500 patients, who will thus be finally separated from those who are deranged mentally from other causes.

Perhaps the worst effect of this alcoholism, which is often not chronic drunkenness, is found by doctors in the children of its victims. These are sometimes intelligent, but they are regularly unbalanced and impulsive and often enough tuberculous, epileptic or imbecile and without physical resistance.—Cor. New York Tribune.

What They Drink In Foreign Countries.

In the British "Brewers' Almanack" Mr. A. J. Mott publishes a calculation of the alcoholic consumption of Great Britain as about 4 gallons of proof spirits per head of the population, that of France at about 6 gallons, that of Germany at about 5½ gallons, that of Austria-Hungary at about 4 gallons, that of Italy at about 4¼ gallons, that of Spain at about 5 gallons and that of Belgium at about 6 gallons. Without going into the same detail Mr. Mott reckons that Switzerland, Denmark, Holland, Sweden and Norway "show an average consumption equal to from 4 to 6 gallons proof spirit, the statistics being generally imperfect. The real consumption in Russia," he adds, "is not known, but is probably about the same."

Drunkards Not Wanted.

The recent discharge of a considerable number of employees of the Santa Fe railway has started a story that the Santa Fe had inaugurated a crusade against drinking. General Superintendent Mudge says: "It has always been the rule of the road that trainmen should not drink. The safety of the public demands that they should not, and we insist upon the enforcement of the rule. We do not allow our trainmen to frequent joints or saloons at any time."—Exchange.

Destroys Bodily Vitality.

Alcohol is so insidious and so deadly in its character that there is no other article or material in nature that is so well calculated to produce disease and consequent crime and misery. Its acrid, poisonous nature is also attested by the most eminent scientists as the most virulent poison. One-half an ounce of pure alcohol taken into the system will paralyze the nerve centers and kill just as surely and as quickly as a stroke of lightning, and the same poison when taken in the form of whisky, beer, wine, brandy or other alcoholic beverage is so antagonistic to the vitality of the system that its effects cannot be entirely eliminated even by total abstinence, but will remain in the system, more or less, making it less able to resist attacks of rheumatism, diphtheria, pneumonia or other dangerous diseases.—Demorest's Magazine.

A Thoughtful Lad.

A jaunty young woman tossed a half withered rose into the street just before she went up the steps to the bridge. A Hop 'o My Thumb newsboy instantly darted out from the crowd to pick it up. He buttoned his jacket over it very carefully, and then, nodding to his companions, explained, in a half ashamed way, "My sister, she likes posies."—New York Herald.

Loving Words.

Loving words will cost but little
Journeying up the hill of life,
But they make the weak and weary
Stronger, braver for the strife.
Do you count them only trifles?
What to earth are sun and rain?
Never was a kind word wasted;
Never one was said in vain.

When the cares of life are many,
And its burdens heavy grow
For the ones who walk beside you.
If you love them, tell them so.
What you count of little value
Has an almost magic power,
And beneath that cheering sunshine
Hearts will blossom like a flower.

So, as up life's hill we journey,
Let us scatter all the way
Kindly words, to be as sunshine
In the dark and cloudy day.
Grudge no loving word, my sister,
As along through life you go,
To the ones who journey with you.
If you love them, tell them so.

SABBATH SCHOOL.

LESSON V, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, AUG. 4.

Text of the Lesson, Num. xiii, 17-20, 23-33—Memory Verses, 20—Golden Text, Num. xiv, 9—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

17. Having left Horeb, where they had been so long encamped, they came to Kadesh-barnea, on the south border of the land, which was 11 days' journey from Horeb. Here the people asked that spies might be sent to search out the land and bring word as to the best way to enter (Deut. i, 2, 21, 22). It seems strange that Moses should be pleased with this thought of sending spies when God had said that it was a good and large land flowing with milk and honey (Ex. iii, 8), and when God Himself always went before them in the cloud, but we remember the story of Hobab.

18. Since God had testified as to the land and had said that He would give it to them, what did it matter whether the inhabitants were few or many, strong or weak? Had not the God of Israel shown them His power in Egypt and at the Red sea, and was not His presence a sufficient assurance? But they did so forget God, just as we do.

19. It looks as if they were going to see if God meant what He said, and if He was as good as His word (Ex. xiii, 5; xxxiii, 2, 3). But one may say, Why find fault with the spies when God commanded them (verses 1, 2)? But a little attention to Deut. i, 22, will show that God only permitted them to have their own way in this matter, as He did afterward in that of a king (I Sam. viii, 6, 7, 21, 22).

20. It seems odd to tell them to be of good courage when unbelief was sending them forth. It requires faith in God to make any one to be of good courage, but going to see if His word was true would hardly tend to courage. Listen to Paul in the storm at sea when everything seemed against him, "I believe God, that it shall be even as it was told me" (Acts xxvii, 25).

23, 24. One would think that all fears would be dispelled by a visit to the very place where Abraham, Isaac and Jacob lay buried. How could they help thinking of the faith of Abraham and being strengthened thereby? Then such grapes and pomegranates and figs—how could their hearts help crying out, "It is all just as He said?" Some one has suggested that these two carrying the grapes make us think of the Old and New Testaments—the one ahead did not see what he was carrying, but the one behind saw both the one ahead and the grapes too. Yet both carried the same fruit. Jesus, the True Vine, is the burden of the whole book, but is more clearly revealed in the New Testament.

25. "And they returned from searching of the land after 40 days." And because of their unbelief they, though so nearly possessing the land, were turned back into the wilderness to wander for 40 years, a year for each day (Num. xiv, 34). Some time we will see a deeper meaning in all the "forty day" experiences of Scripture.

26, 27. They could not but bring a good report of the land; they could not say aught else concerning it than "Surely it floweth with milk and honey, and this is the fruit of it." God always means what He says, and we are perfectly safe in taking Him at His word. When He makes a statement, we must either honor Him by believing it, or dishonor Him by our unbelief and make Him a liar (I John v, 10). Rather let us believe His every word, and thus set to our seal that God is true.

28, 29. "Nevertheless the people be strong." And so they talk of the giants, and all the inhabitants of the land and the walled cities. God had mentioned these nations and had said that He would drive them out (Ex. xxxiv, 11). Observe His sevenfold "I will," beginning and ending with "I am Jehovah," in Ex. vi, 6-8, and see what desperate unbelief these men were guilty of in putting the least obstacle before the people, instead of the living God who had already done so wondrously for them. It is refreshing to turn to Caleb, and listen to him.

30. "Let us go up at once and possess it, for we are well able to overcome it." Here is confidence in God, and it is well founded—it rests on His power who made all things and of whom the prophet said, "Ah, Lord God, behold Thou hast made the heaven and the earth by Thy great power and stretched out arm, and there is nothing too hard for Thee" (Jer. xxxii, 17). These encouraging words by which Caleb sought to still the people were from his heart (Joshua xiv, 12), for he wholly followed the Lord.

31. "We be not able to go up against the people, for they are stronger than we." It was not a question of "they and we," but only of them and God. He who brought them out of Egypt was able to bring them into Canaan, and in that light Caleb and Joshua saw it, for they said, "The Lord is with us; fear them not" (xiv, 9). Until we have learned our own inability to save ourselves, we will not be likely to let the Lord save us, and until we have learned our inability to keep ourselves we will not know the joy of His keeping power. We want a deeper knowledge and experience of all that is included in the words, "Not I, but Christ."

32, 33. "They and We" was to the unbelievers suggestive of giants and grasshoppers, and resulted in much weeping and murmuring on the part of the people, and a call for a new captain who would lead them back to Egypt, so that the Lord had to say to Moses: "How long will this people provoke Me? How long will it be ere they believe Me, for all the signs which I have shewed among them?" (xiv, 11.) If we place ourselves face to face with our difficulties, we will ofttimes be discouraged, but when we place our difficulties face to face with God, then victory is sure, and peace and joy are ours. The matter that He makes His own is as good as accomplished. In quietness and in confidence is our strength (Isa. xxx, 15).

CAUGHT IN A WRECK.

TRAIN CRASHES THROUGH A BRIDGE IN COLORADO.

Wife of the Bridge Engineer Among the Dead—Twenty Cars Piled on Top of the Victims—Steampipe Bursts on Board the Unfortunate Ericsson.

DENVER, July 18.—A special to The Times from Monument, Colo., says: The local freight on the Santa Fe road fell through the bridge at this place, burying beneath the wreck Mrs. Albert Cooper, and a number of the Santa Fe bridge gang who were rebuilding the bridge. Twenty cars are piled promiscuously on top of the victims. As near as can be learned the local freight, loaded heavily with lumber and stone, passed upon the bridge. As the engine neared the south end the workmen underneath saw the bridge rock and shouted an alarm to their comrades. Before the danger could be realized the engine and twenty cars came crashing through, burying those who could not get out of the way beneath the crushing weight.

Three Killed and Three Fatally Hurt.

Three persons were killed; three others will die. The immense weight of the train, bridge timbers and stones fell on Mrs. Cooper, who had just brought her husband's lunch. Conductor Glaze jumped and was saved, as did Fireman Frye. J. C. Childers, boss carpenter, saw the peril of Mrs. Cooper and jumped off the bridge to save her, and was carried under the ruins with her. The bridge was over a gulch known as Dirty Woman's gulch. It has always been a frail structure and this awful catastrophe was frequently predicted.

The work of clearing the wreck is being pushed rapidly. But for the bodies underneath the debris would be burned. The cars are ground into splinters, and are mixed in with heavy bridge timbers, stone and freight.

List of the Casualties.

The list of killed and wounded is as follows: Killed—Mrs. Albert Cooper and J. C. Childers, Kansas City, Mo.; unknown tramp. Injured—Mark Wickens, engineer; Charles Gardner, brakeman, J. N. Erby, brakeman—all three fatally; James Call, hip broken; Henry Allen, broken leg; Charles Rue, leg broken; Wallace Cooper, Lamar, Colo., head cut and back hurt; J. W. Cole, bridge contractor, broken arm; Charles Stonehouse, foreman bridge gang, both legs broken; H. C. Beokert, head and sheulders cut; —— Shaw, hip crushed, head cut; Chas. Hallock, back hurt.

GREAT FIRE AT CINCINNATI.

Two Firemen Killed and Eighteen Other Persons Injured.

CINCINNATI, O., July 18.—Two firemen were killed and eighteen injured at the fire that started in Seaman's tobacco warehouse. Loss, $175,000, well insured.

Following are the dead: Captain Michael M. Healy, fire company No. 29; Thomas W. Wiseby, pipeman company 8. Lieutenant F. B. Newman, of No. 29, was dangerously hurt; Theodore Simpson, bookkeeper, hip fractured; Louis Busch, æronaut, skull fractured. The others were painfully injured, but are doing well.

The fire started in the five-story hay and feed warehouse of J. H. Hermesch & Company, at Water and Walnut streets. It spread so as to threaten the entire square bounded by Walnut, Water, Vine and Front streets, and another alarm soon called out the whole fire department. The flames at times came near reaching the buildings across the streets. The warehouse went up like an explosion. Then the fire spread to Nelson, Morris & Company's large stables, but their large warehouse stood fire proof.

NINE MINERS IMPRISONED.

Caught in a Cave-in of Rock in the Pewabic Mine.

IRON MOUNTAIN, Mich., July 18.—Just as the miners in the Pewabic mine were quitting work an immense cave-in of rock occurred on the first level, and nine miners were imprisoned. It is feared that some of the men were caught and crushed to death. Fully forty feet of rocks and timber must be excavated before the men can be released. Communication has been established with the imprisoned miners by hammering on a pipe which supplies the room with air.

IRON MOUNTAIN, Minn., July 20.—Hundreds of people surrounded the shaft of the Pewabic mine when the rescuing party penetrated the fallen rock and reached the chamber where nine men had been imprisoned since 6 o'clock Wednesday evening. The men were all alive and unhurt, but they looked the worse for their experience, as they had had no drinking water and nothing to eat at all. They had drifted into the fallen rock from their side twenty feet. Superintendent Brown had nourishment ready for them, and after partaking of it they were all driven to their respective homes.

ACCIDENT ON THE ERICSSON.

Five Sailors Scalded by the Bursting of a Hot Water Pipe.

NEW LONDON, Conn., July 18.—Five sailors, members of the engineer's gang on the torpedo boat Ericsson, were terribly scalded by the bursting of a hot water pipe in the engine room while the boat was out on a run preliminary to her speed trial, which is soon to take place. The men were all brought to this city in the lightbouse tender Cactus. Their names and residences are as follows: Austin Williams, New York city; Joseph Hamilton, New York City; David Cody, Jersey City; William Merwin, Dubuque, Ia.; Jacob Strinsky, Dubuque, Ia.

Arrested for a Big Embezzlement.

NEW YORK, July 18.—Arthur Newsan, late magistrate on the island of Trinidad, has been arrested in Brooklyn upon the charge of embezzling $250,000 from estates of which he was the administrator. He fled from Trinidad early in 1893.

An American-born Chinaman has applied to the New York civil service board for appointment as a patrolman to do special duty in tracking Chinese criminals.

MISS FLAGG'S
LATEST NEW BOOK!
"A Prisoner of Hope."
COMPLETE IN ONE LARGE HANDSOME VOLUME.
Price, $1.25.

We heartily commend this new work, by Elizabeth E. Flagg, to all our friends. The narrative originated in her personal experience, two or three years ago, when she sought relief and restoration from the results of a painful accident. In that search she availed herself of a unique healer in New Jersey, whom she graphically described, at that time, in her weekly letters to this paper. The ideas created in her mind by that experience form the basis of this well-told story, and thoughtful readers will peruse it with interest. While all may not agree with its deductions, ministers of the Gospel, students in seminaries and intelligent home circles will find it pleasant food for thought. We sell it for $1.25 per copy postage prepaid.

ILLINOIS PICKINGS.

NEWS NOTES OF INTEREST FROM HERE AND THERE.

Reports by Telegraph of Important Happenings in Our Own State During the Past Few Days—News of Interest to the People of Illinois.

SPRINGFIELD, Ills., July 17.—Only five senators were present when that body came to order and no business was done. In the house all labor arbitration bills were read the first time, as were revenue bills.

SPRINGFIELD, July 18.—Littler introduced in the senate a bill which he claims will increase the assessment value of the property of Illinois to $4,000,000,000. It contemplates a complete revision of the present law concerning assessments and the collection of taxes, and contains 268 sections. It abolishes the town, county and state equalizatien boards, town collectors and assessors, the treasurer being made collector. The assessor is elected for four years and swears in his oath to put the oath to all who sign schedules of taxable property. Bills were introduced: Providing a tax levy of $750,000 a year for the next two years; creating a state labor arbitration board, and several others. A joint resolution to pay the funeral expenses of the late Speaker Myere was adopted. The house tabled a resolution to inquire into the validity of the inheritance tax law. The Hogan labor arbitration bill was discussed without action. The afternoon in both houses was devoted to eulogies on the late Speaker Myers.

SPRINGFIELD, July 19.—The legislature was supplied with a report on state finances by the state treasurer, which showed liabilities from July 1, 1897, to July 1, 1898, of $4,700,140.09, and assets for the same time of $850,000. The senate adopted the report of the special committee on state revenue, which was based on the caucus committee's report declaring that there was sufficient revenue. Bills were introduced: To tax telephones and to regulate sleeping car charges; also a labor arbitration bill and some bills for reform of court practice. In the house bills were introduced: To punish bribery of legislators and fraudulent alteration of bills, etc. The labor arbitration bill was amended so as to apply to employers of twenty-five or more persons. The bill was completed in committee of the whole and advanced to third reading in the house.

At a caucus of the house Republicans it was decided to ask the senate to meet in joint caucus next Tuesday to decide on a policy for the session.

SPRINGFIELD, Ills., July 20.—Representative Merriam had a resolution ready to introduce in the house, but the fact leaked out and the house adjourned when the journal had been read. Merriam's resolution is to investigate the alleged legislative boodlery which has been mooted so long. He had a seance with the steering committee later, and when he came out said he would act in the matter independently of steering committee or anybody else. In the senate a labor arbitration bill was reported favorably and advanced to second reading. Bills were introduced to tax express companies 1 per cent. and give the board of railway and warehouse commissioners the privilege of fixing their rates, and one to provide for penitentiary management as to the prisoners.

The Mob at the Ball Game.

QUINCY, Ills., July 22.—After the ball game here a crowd made an attempt to lynch Umpire Frank Heath, of Pontiac, Ills., and was only prevented by the police and sheriff, the latter backed up by a posse. It was claimed that the umpire had "robbed" Quincy of the last two games. He was roughly handled before the officers could get him away from the crowd.

His Wife Dies of the Shock.

QUINCY, Ills., July 19.—J. H. Grosh was terribly injured in a runaway, was brought home and his wife died of the shock. She was a sister of Rev. Barton Cartwright, of Oregon, Ills., the oldest Methodist minister, in the west. Mrs. A. D. Kaeltz also died yesterday. She was the oldest settler in Quincy, having come here in 1838.

Brave Girl Loses Her Life.

FAIRFIELD, Ills., July 22.—Miss Emma Swan, a photographer of this city, was drowned in the Little Wabash river, about twelve miles from here. She was one of five other girls who went to the assistance of Miss Grace Martin, who was drowning Gentlemen of the party had to rescue those who were saved.

IN OPEN REBELLION.

The People of Pender, Neb., Preparing to Resist Uncle Sam.

OMAHA, July 18.—A committee representing the settlers evicted on the reservation is in Omaha purchasing 100 rifles with 100 loaded shells for each. They will be taken to Pender and Captain Beck and his armed Indians surrounded and captured even if blood flows. Captain Beck represents the United States government in the fight.

Hon. W. E. Peebles and G. S. Harris are the committee appointed by the evicted farmers to purchase Winchesters and ammunition. Peebles said: "We are in Omaha for the purpose of buying 100 Winchester rifles and 10,000 cartridges. Tuesday Judge Norris, of Ponca, issued an injunction restraining Indian Agent Beck from ejecting the settlers from the Winnebago reservation. Beck has disregarded the terms of that injunction and has been and now is putting the settlers off the lands which they have leased from the Indians.

"We are not a warlike people in Thurston county, but we propose to see that the law is obeyed. After the injunction was issued and notices served upon Beck, instead of calling off his police he continued his evictions, arresting and handcuffing the men like convicts. The women and children his Indian police loaded into wagons and hauled to the boundary line of the reservation, where they and their belongings were dumped in a heap. The crops and personal belongings of the settlers have been left without protection to be destroyed by the herds of cattle that may range through them.

"Today a paper was prepared and circulated among the business men and best citizens of the town. When we left between fifty and sixty signatures had been secured, each man pledging himself to the following: 'We, the undersigned citizens and residents of Thurston county, agree to support the sheriff of the said Thurston county in executing the order of the state courts.' Each subscriber has agreed to supply himself with a Winchester rifle and 100 cartridges, all to be placed at the disposal of the sheriff of Thurston county."

It may be stated here that Captain Beck is acting with the full approval of the government at Washington.

MONUMENTAL STRUCTURE

ERECTED FOR A GREAT BUSINESS.

THE PRODUCT MANUFACTURED UNDER ITS ROOF GOES INTO NEARLY EVERY HOME IN THE LAND.

James Pyle of New York, the manufacturer of the celebrated Pearline washing compound, is now erecting a handsome and towering warehouse on the N. W. corner of Washington and Charlton Streets, N. Y. City. This building is a magnificent monument to the power of advertising skillfully directed, in connection with an article of real merit.

Although James Pyle established the firm over forty years ago, Pearline has been its staple trade for little more than 13 years. Mr. Pyle was at that time convinced that he had a meritorious article, and believed that by putting it before the public in a proper manner, a need for its use would be recognized and a fine business built up in consequence.

A limit was set, with the idea that should the sales of Pearline reach a certain amount he would be thoroughly satisfied. This limit of satisfaction was so far from being too high, that at present and for years past, from twelve to fifteen times the expected volume of yearly business has been done by Mr. Pyle.

The need for larger space and greater accommodations to fit this wonderful growth has been felt for a considerable time past, and this new building is designed to meet the want. It is ten stories high, of granite, brick and steel, the lower three stories being of granite, and the upper seven of brick with granite trimmings. The building is absolutely fireproof, floors throughout being of asphalt and the roof of gravel and tile. Five elevators will supply ample facilities for passengers and freight. It would be difficult to find a structure so admirably adapted for the uses to which the owners have decided to put it. Nearly eight city lots are covered by the building, and it is visible from Sandy Hook, Yonkers, Jersey City Heights and points between.

WHERE PEARLINE WILL BE MANUFACTURED.

When Pearline was first put upon the market, soap makers throughout the country laughed at the idea of any washing compound, however good, supplanting the old-fashioned soap. Events have however proved them in error, for Pearline has become a household word throughout the length and breadth of the country, and most soap makers are now striving for a washing compound trade.

In the course of a year nearly forty millions of packages of Pearline are consumed in the United States. Such figures as these stun the imagination in its efforts to realize them.

For the last few years Mr. James Pyle has been assisted in the business by his sons, James T. and W. S. Pyle.

YOUNG BAPTISTS ARE THROUGH.

Close of the Great Religious Convention in the Monument City.

BALTIMORE, July 22.—The service on Sunday morning—the beginning of the last day of the fifth annual International convention of the Baptist Young People's union—was particularly impressive. Delegates and visitors were present in great numbers in the mammoth tent and leave takings were begun. At 10 o'clock there was an adjournment to church services, the pulpit of every Evangelist church in Baltimore being occupied by a Baptist preacher.

In the afternoon there was a second praise and prayer service, Rev. B. E. Lovett, of Davenport, Ia., being the leader. During the afternoon service in the great tent there was a "junior rally" in the Fuller Memorial Baptist church. In the evening the closing ceremony was held, being largely a service of praise led by a great choir. A number of addresses were also delivered, among them one by President Chapman. During the singing the service was illuminated by heaven's electric light and heaven's artillery added to the sound of the chorus.

The end of the session was largely taken up with reports from different states, all of a glowing character. It was a love feast for the whole time, and did not close until 11 p. m., when the Baptist Young People's union convention closed for the year.

Fire Makes a Hole in the Town.

OELWEIN, Ia., July 18.—The business part of Altavesta, Ia., a small town on the Chicago Great Western railway, about fifty miles north of here, was nearly consumed by fire. The fire started in a barn and is supposed to have been set by tramps. The loss reported is $39,500; insurance, $17,000.

HAYMAKERS' CONVENIENCES.

An Ohio Hay Carrier—A Cheap Home-made Hay Elevator.

A homemade hay carrier attachment is shown at A in the sketch, which illustrates a portion of the barn. This attachment consists of a piece of wood 2 by 2 inches of good oak. At either end is securely bolted a clevis—one to be attached to the hay carrier pulley above and the other to harpoon. The length of the wood piece is such as to just allow of the hay to clear the tie at F. To each purline—B and C in cut—is attached a pully near the middle of the bay. Over each of these pulleys passes a rope. One end is fastened to the attachment at E, and the other end hangs loosely in the bay. Be sure the ropes are long enough to reach to the bottom of the hay when the harpoon is on the wagon.

An Ohio Farmer correspondent describes the operation as follows: After the harpoon is loaded and it is desired to drop the hay toward the end of the bay marked D the man in the bay grasps the end of the rope at D and pulls the harpoon toward the pulley at B, while the man on the load pulls the trip rope. The operation of the other rope is the same. The attachment at A is valuable in mowing clover hay, as the hay does not pack in the middle as it does when every forkful is in one place. When the mow gets too full to use the attachment, remove it and attach the harpoon to the carrier in the usual way.

A Prairie Farmer correspondent gives an illustrated description of a home-made hay elevator that he has used with success. He writes: Take an old straw stacker of a thrashing machine and attach it to a sled, the runners being made of plank 2 by 8 inches and 14 feet long, with two upright poles, well braced, 14 feet long and between which the carrier is elevated. Make the carrier 4 feet wide. If you have an old straw stacker that is not 4 feet wide take the two shafts to a blacksmith and have him weld in a piece to make them that width.

If you have to buy the belting, get it 2 inches wide. If your pulley is only 1¼ inches wide, put an inch board on the shaft to receive the belt. In about every fifth slot drive in four or five pegs 1½ to 2 inches long, which will prevent the hay from slipping back. Attach it to a horsepower with 70 to 85 revolutions. A carrier with two belts will elevate 10 to 12 tons a day and one with three belts from 15 to 18 tons a day. Stake sled firmly down.

Making Alfalfa Hay.

The conversion of a heavy mass of alfalfa into a choice quality of hay is an operation calling for no small degree of skill and experience. A method practiced in some sections and described in Arid America is to rake the alfalfa while quite green into windrows, where it is allowed to cure somewhat more, and finally to make it into moderate sized cocks, in which it is allowed to stand until ready for the stack. This process makes very nice hay, but where a large acreage is to be taken care of it is too slow and expensive. Alfalfa may be cured with entire success in the windrow, but it is important, when cured in this way, that there be ample facilities for putting it into the stack very rapidly when ready, otherwise it will become too dry, and much of it will be lost in the handling, especially if it has to be carried from the field on wagons. Alfalfa should be cut on the first appearance of bloom, as experiments have proved its nutritive ratio to be considerably higher at that stage than later on.

Government Board of Irrigation.

A government board of irrigation has been organized, with the following members, to study the arid lands question: Mark W. Harrington, chief of the weather bureau; Charles W. Irish, chief of the office of irrigation inquiry; Milton Whitney, chief of the division of agricultural soils; B. E. Fernow, chief of the forestry division; B. T. Galloway, chief of the division of vegetable pathology; Charles D. Walcott, director of the United States geological survey; Daniel M. Browning, commissioner of Indian affairs; Henry Gannett, chief topographer of the geological survey, and F. H. Newell, chief of the division of hydrography, geological survey, and secretary of the board.

In the Potato Field.

Experiments have been reported at the Wisconsin station testing the distance apart to plant potatoes for the greatest yield. The distance of the rows remained the same, while the variations were between the hills. The check row system with hills 38 inches apart each way was compared against the drills at 19 inches apart, and with the conclusion that there was no loss with the hills the long distance apart. It will take a long time to convince Aroostook potato planters of the reliance of such conclusions, says Maine Farmer.

On the Country Road.

It is to be regretted that chinch bugs are found in great numbers over large areas of the country.

SIGNAL TRIUMPHS WON

By Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder.

Two signal triumphs have been achieved by Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder. First it received Highest Award and Diploma at the World's Columbian Exposition of 1893. Next it secured Highest Award and Gold Medal at the California Midwinter Fair of 1894. At both Fairs it surpassed all competitors in every respect. The award, in each instance, was for strongest leavening power, perfect purity and general excellence. It was sustained by the unanimous vote of the judges.

The victory at Chicago establishes the supremacy of Dr. Price's as "The Foremost Baking Powder in the World." The triumph at San Francisco confirms and emphasizes it.

MASONIC CHART.

ILLUSTRATING THE RELATION OF SOME OF THE DEGREES AND RITES IN FREEMASONRY TO EACH OTHER.

The accompanying chart represents one hundred and forty two degrees.

1. The American Rite of 13 degrees;
2. The Scotch Rite of 33 degrees;
3. The Egyptian Rite of 96 degrees.
4. The Mystic Shrine of one degree.
5. The Eastern Star of 5 degrees for Master Masons and for women. These are side degrees, and not genuine masonry.

The Symbolic degrees, or Blue Lodge of three degrees, are common to every Masonic rite, whether American, Scotch, or Egyptian, or whichever of the Masonic rites, named in Mackey's Masonic Encyclopedia one may choose to investigate.

This chart shows in the Blue Lodge the position of the Worshipful Master and some of the other officers of the lodge. Several positions of the candidate who is being initiated are also shown. In the Master Mason's degree is recognized the murder, burial and resurrection scene so full of religious significance to Freemasons.

A complete expositon of the Blue Lodge and Chapter consisting of seven degrees. Profusely illustrated.

Knight Templarism Illustrated. 341 pages, cloth, $1.00; paper, 50c.
A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery.

Scotch Rite Masonry Illustrated. 2 vols. Per vol., cloth, $1.00; paper, 65c.
The complete illustrated ritual of the entire Scottish Rite, comprising all the Masonic degrees from 3rd to 33rd inclusive. The first three degrees are common to all the Masonic Rites, and are fully and accurately given in "Freemasonry Illustrated." Vol. I comprises the degrees from 3rd to 18th inclusive.
Vol. II comprises the degrees from 19th to 33rd inclusive, with the signs, grips, tokens and passwords from 1st to 33rd degree inclusive.

Hand-Book of Freemasonry. 274 pages, flexible cloth, 50c.
By E. Ronayne, Past Master of Keystone Lodge No. 639, Chicago. Gives the complete standard ritual of the first three degrees of Freemasonry.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. 110 pages, paper, 25c.
The genuine old Morgan book republished.

Allyn's Ritual of Freemasonry. By Avery Allyn. Cloth, $5.00.
Contains the fully Illustrated Ritual of the Blue Lodge, Chapter Council and Commandery, 11 of the Scotch Rite Degrees, several Masonic side degrees and what is termed a Key to the Phi Beta Kappa, and the Orange Societies.

Duncan's Masonic Ritual and Monitor. Cloth, $2.50.
Profusely illustrated with explanatory engravings, and containing the ritual and work of the order for the seven degrees, including the Royal Arch. Though extensively used as an Instruction Book and one of the best in the market, it is not as accurate as "Freemasonry Illustrated."

Richardson's Monitor of Freemasonry. Cloth, $1.25; paper, 75c.
Contains the ceremonies of Lodges, Chapters, Encampments, etc. Illustrated. Although extensively used in conferring the higher degrees, it is not only very incomplete but inaccurate especially as regards the first seven degrees, and as to the higher degrees it gives but a description and general idea of the degrees rather than the full ritual.

Look to the East. A ritual of the first three Masonic Degrees by Ralph Lester. Cloth, $2.00.
Notwithstanding the high price this book is very inferior in every way to Freemasonry Illustrated or the Handbook of Freemasonry at a quarter the price.

Freemasonry a Fourfold Conspiracy. 16 pages, 5c.
Address of Pres. J. Blanchard. This is a most convincing argument against the lodge.

Sermon on Masonry. 16 pages, 5c. By Rev. W. P. McNary, pastor United Presbyterian church.

ON ODD-FELLOWSHIP.

Revised Odd-fellowship Illustrated. The complete revised ritual of the Lodge, Encampment and Rebekah (ladies) degrees, profusely illustrated, and guaranteed to be strictly accurate; with a sketch of the origin, history and character of the order, over one hundred foot-note quotations from standard authorities, showing the character and teachings of the order, and an analysis of each degree by ex-President J. Blanchard. This ritual corresponds exactly with the "Charge Books" furnished by the Sovereign Grand Lodge. In cloth, $1.00; paper cover, 50cts.

Odd-fellowship Judged by its own utterances; its doctrine and practice examined in the light of God's Word. By Rev. J. H. Brockman. This is an exceedingly interesting, clear discussion of the character of Odd-fellowship, in the form of a dialogue. In cloth 50cts; paper covers, 25cts.

Sermon on Odd-fellowship and other secret societies, by Rev. J. Sarver, pastor Evangelical Lutheran church. This is a very clear argument against secretism of all forms, and the duty to disfellowship Odd fellows, Freemasons, Knights of Pythias and Grangers, is clearly shown by their confessed character as found in their own publications. 10cts each.

Odd-fellowship: ITS HISTORY AND ITS WORK. By President J. Blanchard. A new pamphlet with cover. Postpaid. 5 cts

Masonic Oaths Null and Void: OR FREEMASONRY SELF-CONVICTED. This is a book for the times. The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. 207 pages. Postpaid, 40 cents each.

Judge Whitney's Defense before THE GRAND LODGE OF ILLINOIS. Judge Daniel H. Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. H. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge, but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each.

General Washington Opposed to SECRET SOCIETIES. This is a re-publication of Governor Joseph Ritner's "Vindication of General Washington from the Stigma of Adherence to Secret Societies," communicated to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, March 8, 1837, at their special request. To this is added the fact that three high Masons were the only persons who opposed a vote of thanks to Washington on his retirement to private life—undoubtedly because they considered him a seceding Freemason. 10cts each.

Morgan's Exposition, Abduction AND MURDER, AND OATHS OF 33 DEGREES. Composed of "Freemasonry Exposed," by Capt. Wm. Morgan;" "History of the Abduction and Murder of Morgan;" "Valance's Confession of the Murder of Capt. Wm. DEBATE ON THE SILVER ISSUE.

Harvey and Horr Dispute for Three Hours a Day at Chicago.

CHICAGO, July 18.—Harvey and Horr, the silver and gold champions respectively, tackled the demonetization of silver the second time they crossed swords at the Illinois club. At the beginning, however, Horr read history to prove that the world was not so bad off in the latter days of the Roman empire, and that the condition of laboring men particularly was exceptionally good. Harvey rejoined with references to history to prove that he was right.

There was a dispute as to a quotation in "Coin's Financial School" from the law legalizing foreign coins in this country, Horr showing that Harvey had left out the section relating to gold. Harvey said practically that he did not need that section, his point being made on silver. On the demonetization act he insisted that it was conceived in sin and passed in iniquity, while Horr declared that no act of congress had ever been passed more openly.

CHICAGO, July 19.—The sensational feature of the third day's debate on silver between Horr and Harvey was the charge made by the latter that the silver demonetization bill of 1873 as passed by congress did not demonetize the silver dollar at all, and that demonetization was obtained by mutilating the bill when it was enrolled. The base of the charge was the alleged general corruption at that time of congressmen, and extracts from speeches during and after the debate on the bill in which members of the house said no change was made in the then existing values of the coinage, and that they did not know the bill demonetized silver.

Horr declared the charges of general corruption false and quoted Kelly, of Pennsylvania, against Kelly as quoted by Harvey. Kelly long after the passage of the bill, said he did not know it demonetized silver, although he was chairman of the house committee which had it in charge. Horr showed where Kelly during the debate on the bill had distinctly stated that the bill did demonetize the silver dollar. Horr's history of the consideration of the bill was exhaustive, and he followed it every step for three years it was before congress. Harvey's time was largely taken up with showing corruption in congress at that period, which he claimed added force to the charge of conspiracy as to this particular bill.

SCORES DROWNED.

Many Lives Lost in a Steamship Disaster in the Gulf of Genoa.

GENOA, July 22.—The Italian steamers Ortega and Mariap collided off Isola del Pinta at the entrance of the Gulf of Genoa. The latter sank and 148 people were drowned. The Marlap was bound from Naples to La Plata. There was a crew of seventeen and the passengers numbered 173. She was calling here en route to her destination. She was entering the Gulf of Genoa at 1:30 o'clock in the morning when she met the Ortega outbound. They only noticed each other when a collision was inevitable. The bow of the Ortega crashed into the starboard side of the Mariap, penetrating six yards and ripping up the Mariap like matchwood. The water rushed in through the hole and the Marlap sank in three minutes.

The majority of the passengers were asleep at the time of the accident and had no time to escape after the alarm was given. They were engulfed with the vessel. The Ortega remained on the spot until 6 a. m. in order to pick up the survivors. She rescued fourteen of the crew and twenty-eight of the passengers of the Mariap. Other steamers were dispatched to the scene of the disaster to search for further survivors. The Ortega's bow was smashed for a space of twelve feet along the water line. There is some comment upon the fact brought to mind by the disaster that the Ortega once collided on the same spot with the French steamer Oncle Joseph.

At the conclusion of the sitting of the chamber at Rome the minister of marine announced the news of the disaster in the midst of profund silence, adding that an officer, a seaman, a stoker and 145 passengers of the Marlap had perished. The Ortega had twenty-five passengers on board. The Mariap's captain was named Ferrara. The chamber has ordered an inquiry into the disaster.

WANT HOLMES AT CHICAGO.

Where They Hope to Hang Him—Investigators Hurt in an Explosion.

CHICAGO, July 22.—It is the intention of the Chicago police to make every effort to have Holmes, the insurance swindler, brought here to answer the charge of having murdered the Williams' sisters. It has developed that the substance on which the first report of the finding of Minnie Williams was based was in the hands of Detective Geyer. It is said that he visited Chicago a week ago, and when he left he carried with him positive evidence that the body had been burned in the stove in Holmes' office. Another wife of Holmes has been found in the person of Mrs. H. H. Holmes, of Wilmette, a suburb of this city. This is his fourth.

While the workmen were digging in the cellar of the Sixty-third street house they came across a large tank, used by Holmes in experimenting on some new manufacturing process. Some of them got into the tank and the fumes nearly killed them. They were gotten out alive, but much prostrated. A match was lighted and an explosion took place, severely burning four men.

That Missing Express Package.

OMAHA, Neb., July 19.—William H. Quick, general superintendent of the western division of the United States Express company, is in the city with a view of locating the package containing $6,000 missing from the United States express office in this city. He was not certain that the money had ever reached the Omaha office but four Omaha employes are on the carpet.

Cashier and Funds Missing.

RICHMOND, Mo., July 17.—Cashier L. T. Parrish, of the Farmers' bank of Orrick, Mo., has left that place quietly and it is said that from $15,000 to $20,000 of the bank's money is also missing. An expert has been sent for. Parrish was last seen in Kansas City last Wednesday.

Columbian Catholic Summer School.

MADISON, Wis., July 18.—The attendance at the Columbian Catholic summer school, the western Catholic Chautauqua, is larger than the most sanguine had anticipated, and every incoming train brings its quota of visitors.

STRIKING MINERS STOP ALL WORK.

In Full Control of Things at Negaunee and Ishpeming.

MARQUETTE, Mich., July 20.—The Ishpeming and Negaunee striking miners have stopped all work on the streets at Ishpeming, and declared their intention of stopping labor of every description until the struggle with the miners is ended. Samuel Hoar, operating the Star West mine on a contract, himself a laboring man, begged the men to let him go on with his contract. He declared that failure to keep his contract meant ruin to him.

He offered to pay the rates asked by the men, but they refused to allow him to work the mine, declaring that no mine would be permitted to work until granted the rates demanded. A meeting of Ishpeming business men was held last evening and the strikers were addressed by merchants, who promised their hearty support in the struggle. The business men carried a banner reading, "We, the business men of Ishpeming, are in favor of this movement and hope the men will succeed."

Silver Conference at Chicago.

CHICAGO, July 20.—The executive committee appointed by the recent silver convention at Memphis has been in conference here with the members of the Bimetallic league, with ex-Representative Sibley as chairman. The issue discussed was the advisability of separate political action in the campaign of next year, and this developed a difficulty, the southern members wanting to work inside the Democratic party, and the northern men preferring a new party. The matter was smoothed over, but Henry S. Miller, of this city, a new party man, was elected permanent chairman, five of the seven members of the executive committee being of the same element.

THE DEATH RECORD.

Mrs. N. K. FAIRBANK, wife of the Chicago capitalist, at Chicago.

HUGH MCKITTRICK, pioneer business man of St. Louis, at St. Louis.

Professor NORTON S. TOWNSEND, of the Ohio State university, at Columbus, O.

Professor STEPHEN J. YOUNG of Bowdoin college, at Brunswick, Me.

JACOB L. MITCHENER, old-time beef packer, at Kansas City.

A. N. TOWNE, president and general manager of the Southern Pacific road, at San Francisco.

It is your duty as well as privilege to look young as long as you can. One way to do so is by dressing your hair with Ayer's Hair Vigor. It causes the hair to retain its color and fullness to a late period of life, and keeps the scalp in good, healthy condition.

Dandruff forms when the glands of the skin are weakened, and if neglected, baldness is sure to follow. Hall's Hair Renewer is the best preventive.

"The Crack Train of the World."

A prominent New York merchant and importer of leather goods said in our hearing the other day, "I have traveled all over Europe and America, and I consider the train which leaves Chicago every day at 6:30 P. M. for St. Paul and Minneapolis, via the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway, 'The Crack Train of the World.'"

In which statement thousands of others heartily concur.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.....16

Pine Bluff, Ark., is full of lodges and saloons. The Cotton Belt railroad recently moved its machine shops from Pine Bluff to Texarkana, because it had voted out the saloons.

Rev. Dr. Villars, M. E. pastor at Polo, Ill., addressed an audience of 5,000 at Clinton, July 4, on the subject, "Cost, Privilege and Responsibility of American Citizenship." He was pastor at Clinton years ago.

In European countries strong efforts are being made to lessen the mail service on Sabbath, while in this country in many sections it is on the increase. Christian people could lessen this evil by doing their mailing early in the week.

In his ode to the memory of Frederick Douglass, Theodore Tilton writes:

"My country hark to me!
Let us in yonder capitol of ours
Mould him a statue of enduring brass
Out of the broken chains of slaves set free."

While our politics do not always harmonize with those of the New York Tribune, yet our readers know that it is one of the best general newspapers in the country. We have arranged with its publishers to send it and the Cynosure to any one for $1.60 a year, which will give forty pages of reading every week.

Rev. John S. Duncan well says in the Statesman Sunday-school discussion, "Those who feel themselves to be as grasshoppers will not be much better than grasshoppers. Men are estimated by others much as they estimate themselves. If they are in their own eyes as grasshoppers, they will be grasshoppers in the eyes of others."

"Your husband was an honest citizen and highly accomplished gentleman," said some Odd-fellows to the widow of a deceased member. Yes," she replied, wiping away her tears; "so I have been informed. For you know I saw very little of him at home because he belonged to half a dozen lodges."

Prayers and longings for the union of Christians are much in the air of our day. How to unite Christians and churches is becoming more and more an absorbing question. Of one thing we are certain, that lodge members must be rooted out of the churches before they can unite. Help us to destroy the lodge evil and the greatest barrier to Christian unity will be removed.

The new Scottish Rite Temple to be erected in Indianapolis will cost $125,000. Many prominent Masons from all over the State were present June 4, when the corner-stone was laid with imposing ceremonies. Let the Indiana people take note that according to a recent decision of the State Supreme Court, this Masonic property is exempt from taxation, which causes the burden to rest heavier upon the home of the humble toiler.

The interpretation of the recent decree from Rome in regard to the exclusion from the Romish church of Odd-fellows, Knights of Pythias and Sons of Temperance, has received another promulgation from Satolli, in a letter to the Archbishop of Milwaukee. He says: "Some journals affirm that this decree has by superior authority been discouraged and suspended. His eminence greatly deplores this, and again recommends that the decree be published and enforced."

Eli Perkins, who belongs to the A. O. U. W., was asked why the members were called "Ancient Workmen." "That is a lodge secret," said Eli, mysteriously, "and I wouldn't tell anyone outside the lodge, unless they were sworn to secrecy." The reporter then took the oath of secrecy, and said: "Now, Eli, why are they called Ancient Workmen?" Eli answered in a low whisper, "It was because it was so long ago—such ancient times, that any of us were known to work."

Coming down on the train July 4th from Wisconsin with Dr. P. S. Henson he gave us his experience with Freemasonry. He said: "When a young man I took the first three degrees. When I got through the first it sickened me, and I told them I could stand no more, but they kept telling me I would find it better as I went along. But when I took the third degree I told them I could not stomach any more. What I most objected to was its claims of being a religion, and yet leaving out Christ. I have never had anything to do with the lodge since."

The Masonic Chronicle warns its readers of the "unrest, uncertainty and feeling of moral disquietude, and mental and spiritual conoclasm which are becoming alarmingly prevalent." The Chronicle then wisely asks: "Has Masonry nothing to oppose against the rising tide of levity, immorality and lawlessness but a few flimsy barriers of acacia wood bound together by the shreds of half a dozen secrets? Are we to sit quietly by and see the very existence of good government and social order destroyed, while we chew the cud of silence and dream of the lost word?"

In Chicago this summer the masses seem to have gone crazy for Sunday excursions. The great steamers, Virginia and Whaleback, making the round trip to Milwaukee, are loaded on Sabbath until there is scarcely standing room. Stretched across the streets are large advertisements of Sunday railroad excursions out to the lakeside resorts. The rates are greatly reduced and attract large crowds. These excursions are almost invariably led by secret lodges, which in this way have become the most subtle and dangerous foes of the Sabbath. A Sabbath reform movement which dares not deal with the lodge question, is governed more by policy than fidelity to Christ.

Our correspondents, to whom we are so much indebted for valuable contributions, will please bear in mind that this paper was established by the sacrifice of much prayer, labor, money and reputation, for the express purpose of bearing testimony against the growing evil of secret societies, which in our day are threatening the very existence of both church and state. The Cynosure stands almost alone as a witness for this important truth. How few of the publications of our day dare to speak out on this subject. We therefore entreat our contributors to confine their pens as far as possible to the discussion of the question of secret societies. Our temptation often is to allow other issues, for the discussion of which the columns of almost every paper in the land are open, to crowd out this vital question. Remember the Cynosure is sui generis; one North star in the heavens, one Cynosure on earth. No other paper is devoted exclusively to the question of anti-secrecy. In discussing other reform questions let it be to show their relation to this, the most imminent foe of the republic.

The absorbing sensation in the Chicago daily press of late is the unearthing of the murders of H. H. Holmes. It appears that he has carried on for years the horrible business of murdering people for their life insurance, and cremating their bodies to conceal the crime. It raises the question, if the practice of insuring life does not offer temptations to commit such crimes? The Fraternal Messenger, a lodge organ published at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, raises the question of paying the life insurance policies of members of the order who commit suicide. It says: "There have been 362 members of the Royal Arcanum who have committed suicide since the organization of the order, and more than a million dollars have been paid to their beneficiaries. In my opinion, one of the foremost problems which confronts our order, is whether or not our policy of paying these claims without question should be continued. It is worthy of note that there were seven suicides during the year who had been members of the order less than twelve months." This is certainly a fearful reflection upon the morality of such an order.

ADHERING MASONS PERJURED.

BY SECRETARY W. I. PHILLIPS.

The Voice of Masonry for July, 1895, admits it. It acknowledges it with sorrow and says, "don't do it, don't!" Freemasons use printed rituals, notwithstanding their oath to have their "tongue torn out by its roots" if they should ever make their secrets known by printed page. Is not the Voice of Masonry guilty in telling the secret that has been generally known for many years? In fact, it is advertising the fact that the lodge is now and has long been selling pretended secrets for $25 to $50 that can be bought for forty cents.

Will the Voice of Masonry turn around now and call itself "perjured villain?" Will it stick out its tongue and receive the penalty? Freemasons generally know that their so called secrets are published, and they are published not only by well-known Masons, but by responsible Masonic publishing houses. The Masonic claim to antiquity was awe inspiring to merely contemplate, when the National Christian Association began to call attention to the facts as to its modern origin, and now well-informed Masons make no claim that speculative Masonry of today is even 200 years old. Are they going to stop lying about their "secrets" and acknowledge the truth that they have been published and on the market for the last hundred years? It looks like it. The July (1895) Voice of Masonry says:

> From that time (1717) to this a standard ritual has existed and been taught. Sometimes a few brethren have thought the oral method of promulgating the standard work slow. They have planned and put into use in some jurisdictions very ingenius ciphers. Wherever used their "ciphers" have caused trouble, because no cipher can be invented that can not be read by an expert. In Kansas in 1894, the Capitular Grand Lecturer devoted all his time to a search for ciphers astray, and his report of the matter fills six printed pages. The fact is, ciphers are wrong, and wherever they exist should be destroyed.

Why is the Voice of Masonry so mealy-mouthed over this infraction of the Masonic oath? Simply because of the general use of exposes by Freemasons. They do not confine themselves to "ciphers." Many prefer "Freemasonry Illustrated." Many Worshipful Masters are too "slow" mentally to learn the mess of intellectual nothingness which is found in their secret ritual. Just think of the plight of the ordinary Worshipful Master who should have to repeat all of that stuff orally. But think of it, Masons murdered Pritchard, Morgan and others for doing exactly what other brethren were doing and are doing; the only difference being that Morgan and his compatriots did it for their country's good, as a duty due it, while the others, says the Voice, did it for the good of the order, because they thought the oral method too slow a way for promulgating the standard work. The Voice of Masonry says to the brethren: "Get the secret work lawfully or not at all." How lamblike has the lion become.

But bleat never so softly it will all be in vain, for Masonic oath or no Masonic oath, the kind of material that most Worshipful Masters are made of makes printed helps a necessity to them. The harm to the human mind in filling it with the dreary mass found in secret society rituals is of the same kind in effect as the use of tobacco, alcohol and other narcotics, or the table tipping of spiritualists—it unfits the mind for receiving.

Elmira, N. Y., July 20, 1895.

SLAYING OF THE WITNESSES.

BY REV. J. R WYLIE.

(Concluded)

Let us look at this question a little more in detail. The witnesses seem to have been alive at the beginning of the preparations for this great exposition, and their power was felt to some extent. They witnessed more or less against all the evils that seemed likely to appear in connection with this great effort to give our nation a world-wide fame. But their efforts were directed particularly against intemperance, impurity in art and Sabbath opening. It was not Sabbath desecration in general as some suppose.

These efforts might be called respectively the center, left and right wings of the witnessing army. Behind these efforts were marshaled all the religious and moral forces of our land, and to some extent of the world, for we had the sympathy of all the good in all lands. Behind the center was the great Prohibition party, the greater Women's Christian Temperance Union, and all reform associations and leagues and all the churches that were worthy of a name. There seemed to be no doubt about the success of the center. Behind the right wing were all these forces, in many instances, it is true, with a lessened zeal; but this was compensated for by a Centennial precedent, and a common custom of law which enabled us to seek and obtain the aid of Congress on this wing. With this aid we had high hopes that this wing would also be victorious. The left wing was not as strongly supported as the center and right wings, but we hoped that the success of these would carry it through to victory.

We have not time or space to describe the battle in detail. We all know the result. The left wing was soon abandoned. We ceased to plead for purity in art. The center also soon gave way. The great Prohibition party and the greater W. C. T. U. took to flight seemingly without a struggle. So far as I remember, they gave but one shout in the line of victory. Once they said, we will win or wash our hands clean from this iniquity. This was not a threatened boycott, but the position of holy righteous dissent; the only position we can take in matters of right and wrong, and the only position that will bring the victory to any cause. They raised this victorious shout once, and then the attractions of the big show swallowed them up. The struggle now concentrated on the right wing, the defense of the Sabbath. You are aware that it was fought with more or less zeal here until after the opening of the Fair. But the effort on the side of the witnesses declined rapidly as the end drew near.

We will notice only a few of the greater efforts of the larger and stronger organizations who stood behind this wing of the witnessing army. Let us first look at the Y. P. S. C. E. with its millions of members. In 1892, at the New York convention, led by the Ohio delegation, it raised with 30,000 voices that glorious shout:

> "Ho! hi! ho! O-hi-o!
> We won't go! We won't go!
> To the World's Fair,
> If open on the Sabbath,
> Or liquor is sold there!"

Here we have again holy righteous dissent; the shout of victory. It was a mighty shout from a mighty host. It seemed like "the willing people, in the beauties of holiness, in the dew of their youth." spoken of in Ps. 110: 3. At the next convention in Montreal in 1893 we have a few weak resolutions, the feeble utterances of a dying witness, and then every Christian Endeavorer who felt like it and had the cash went to the World's Fair.

The action of this society is a type of the action of all other organizations and all the churches. They passed lifeless resolutions and then took in the show. I distinctly recall one of the church meetings that closed the discussion on this subject of Sabbath closing. In the course of the discusssion some of the more zealous young men tried to couple the temperance issue with the Sabbath, and take the same stand that they had taken on the two previous years. A leader in the Sabbath discussion opposed this with the statement that if they took that stand then a Christian could not stop in a hotel where liquor is sold, thus confounding profit and pleasure with a frequent necessity. He was effectually answered that if he could not enter the Fair if open on the Sabbath, then according to his logic he could stop in but few hotels or ride on but few railroads, for almost all most grossly violate the Sabbath. There is a heaven-wide distinction between a necessity and a profit or pleasure. God permits work of necessity on the Sabbath, but he does not permit profit or pleasure.

Another leader argued that "the sale of liquor on the Fair grounds was well regulated and respectable." He was effectually answered by Dr. Herrick Johnson's statement: "Low license means your son; high license means your daughter." Another prominent leader said: "The battle has been mainly fought on the Sabbath wing, and we ought to be willing to let temperance and purity in art go if we can only save the Sabbath causes; and it would be breaking faith with the managers of the Fair, if after they would close the gates on the Sabbath, we would refuse to go to the Fair for some other cause." He was asked who had given such a pledge of faith. He was also asked, "If as the general of an army he would claim a victory if he came out of the battle with his center and left wing annihilated and his right wing badly crippled, while the enemy was triumphant everywhere except a little check in his left wing?"

The final result was we stood up and took a pledge which every one was to interpret as he pleased, and hence was worthless. Organized, faithful and full witnessing for Christ seemed to have been silenced. Did it not appear as if the witnesses were slain by the world-beast, "in the great city, spiritually called Sodom and Egypt, where our Lord was crucified" in the Jerusalem of a corrupt church? The bodies of these witnesses are still visible. We have the churches, the reform societies, the W. C. T. U., etc, but they are powerless Their testimony is silenced.

It is rendered ineffectual and made a reproach in the eyes of the world powers. They know the strength of all these moral forces and count it but weakness. All evil is on the increase, intemperance leading the van.

IMMORALITY OF MASONIC OATHS.

BY E. RONAYNE, PAST MASTER KEYSTONE LODGE, NO. 639, CHICAGO.

(Concluded.)

In clause eighth of the Master Mason's oath, the candidate is sworn not to knowingly strike a brother Master Mason nor otherwise do him personal violence in anger," etc. No; a Mason may strike and cut and hack and shoot any other man, but he must never strike or do personal violence to his brother Mason; and by living up to this part of his oath he'll be every thing that's good and kind and proper. He may torture his wife to death; he may kick her black and blue; he may even kill her, provided the law don't find him out; but he must by no means strike a brother; and living up to this clause of the oath he'll be surely a good man. Well, my brother Mason, did you ever know of such another sham as Masonry, or could you or a bigger burlesque on common sense than the Masonic oath? No. For pure downright humbug Freemasonry, I believe, is far ahead of any thing in that line existing among civilized nations. But let us examine one more clause—the nineth.

CONCEIVE OF A GREATER FRAUD

In this clause a preacher, we'll suppose, swears most solemnly that he "will not have illicit carnal intercourse with a Master Mason's wife, mother, sister or daughter, knowing them to be such." Now what is the plain influence, and in fact the only influence, from this language? Why, simply this, that Freemasonary regards him in the first place as a libertine, debauche or roue, but solemnly swears him to respect the chastity of those who are near and dear to the lodge members. This part of the Masonic oath is like everything else in Masonry, it is and ought to disgust any honest, right-minded man against the institution forever.

But now one more reference to the Master Mason's oath and I shall have done for the present. In the tenth clause the candidate swears that he "will not give the grand hailing sign or sign of distress of a Master Mason except in real distress or in case of the most imminent danger," and that should he see the sign given he "will immediately repair to the relief of the person so giving it, should there be a greater posibility of saving his life than losing his own." Now how can the living up to this part of the Mason's oath make a man good or honorable or honest. I claim that it will make him a perjurer, and for which he ought to

"DO TIME" IN THE PENITENTIARY.

Let us suppose a Mason standing as a criminal at the bar of one of our courts. A jury is impaneled, and one of the jurors is a Mason and sworn as above to help his brother Mason. As a juror he is sworn to render a verdict according to the law and the evidence. In the meantime the case is progressing. The prosecution is going hard against the Masonic culprit; he finds himself "in real distress"—"in imminent danger" of the prison or it may be the gallows, and as a last resort he makes the sign of distress of a Master Mason. And, by the way, that sign is intended for just such emergencies. His brother Mason on the jury sees that sign given and has already solemnly sworn to obey it, and so to "immediately fly to the relief" of his distressed brother. Now I submit the question to any citizen, be he honest or dishonest, good or bad, what ought that Masonic juryman do under such circumstances, live up to his Masonic oath, free the prisoner or possibly save his life and thus or else convict the prisoner and thus break his Masonic oath?

My dear brother Mason, I submit this question to your judgment. What would you do under circumstances such as I have presented? I firmly believe you'd bring in an honest verdict based upon the law and the evidence in the case, notwithstanding your Masonic oath. And why would you do this? Simply because living up to your Masonic oath in this particular would make you a perjurer before the law, and hence if found out, liable to be sent to penitentiary. And yet Masons are silly enough to assert that living up to one's Masonic oath makes him a good man.

And now, my dear brother Mason, I again submit my case to your honest jungment. What do you think of the Masonic oath? Do you really think that living up to it will make a man good and honest and law-abiding? The death penalty being a very important part of the oath, do you think that upon some poor seceding Mason like myself would be a laudable act; and would you consider the assassin who would inflict such a penalty either a good man or a good citizen? And now it is needless to say more on this point. On another occasion I intend to refer to the "good enough religion" part of the question, and in the meantime appeal to every honest Mason who reads this for his honest, unbiased verdict.

KNIGHTS TEMPLAR.

(Concluded.)

TRIED AND FOUND WANTING.

Where is the war horse of chivalry? What have the Templar done with their armor? The ancient knight wore in the tournament or on the battle field his lady's "favor." Modern knights wear in street parades feathers and aprons.

EXTERNAL TESTS OF CHARACTER.

The twelfth century knight was in advance of his times. He combined the virtues of the anchorite with those of the soldier. But wherever these new hosts, who call themselves knights, swarm in unsoldierly pilgrimage, society steps backward. Intelligent social intercourse gives way to make room for the hardly social and wholly intellectual dance. An order is issued that when the pilgrims go into liquor-saloons, for the time being they must take off their badges. Rum holes put up their sign to bid for their patronage. Brothels reap harvests of golden infamy.

From the days of the old knights society took a new departure. They were pioneers of modern civilization. What if society were again to receive a fresh impulse from these soldiers, who fight against nothing and fight for nothing. What if it were to be moulded anew by this drinking mob, one of whose leaders makes the rum that is a chief hindrance of the new civilization in Africa. What if nations of chastity and honor were to be caught and carried forward the next half thousand years from these pilgrims to brothels.

PURPOSE DETERMINES CHARACTER.

Clannishness is blight to noble purpose. But it is the very essence of this modern herding. What purpose has it, worthy of respect and able to bear the light of the newer civilization? Ancient knighthood sought the tomb of one who cannot lawfully be named in the blue lodge, to which these self-styled knights must first and always belong. What does modern so-called knighthood seek to do? Where does it make its pilgrimage? For what or against what is its crusade?

FALSE AND SPURIOUS KNIGHTHOOD.

This new counterfeit is false to the order whose tomb it has robbed for a name. It is false to that history which it degrades. It is false to the spirit of chivalry. It is false to the name, form, character and purpose of knighthood. It is also false to Christianity, and thus again untrue to the memory of the Christian knights. For every member of the commandery must first and constantly be a member of the Masonic blue lodge. Here nothing can be "sectarian," which in lodge usage means merely Christian. It is not an unheard of Masonic objection to commandery degrees, that they make a show of recognizing Christianity, which, even in pretence, is un-Masonic. It is a Masonic pen that has dubbed the knights the "Clowns of Masonry." They are false knights, too, in their relations to the United States government. If the protective idea comes forward from the earlier age, it is still distorted and spurious. For it protects vice and neglects innocence. Every Knight Templar has already been Masonically sworn to vows that seal his lips when chivalry or loyalty would speak; that make him confederate with the vicious, hostile to the virtuous and disloyal to society and government. Each of them is virtually pledged to suffer an innocent friend to perish, if need be, to rescue an unknown criminal. Meanness systematized is, by their standards, knightly virtue; and disloyalty to law and government is knightly loyalty.

In short, they are false to all that is good and noble; false to all that wins the loyalty of virtuous men; false to what is best in history, to the hopes of the future and to the actual advance of civilization; false to God and man. And professing adherence to Masonic government and religion and to the American government and the Christian religion at the same time in impossible combination, they are false even to themselves and their own claims.

No wonder that even a Masonic writer, seeing these pretended members of twelfth century cavalry parading themselves in safe streets without manly armor, but in feathers and aprons, purposeless, aimless, and having little of distinctive knighthood but the name, dubbed them the "Clowns of Masonry."

CHIVALRY ITSELF SURVIVES ELSEWHERE.

Let us thank Him to whom this modern abomination is chiefly insulting, that chivalry and knighthood are essential things not at the mercy of a name. Else the words of Edmund Burke would have a sadder and complete meaning: "Never, never shall we behold that what generous loyalty to rank and sex, that proud submission, that dignified obedience, that subordination of the heart which kept alive even in servitude itself the spirit of an exalted freedom, that sensibility of purpose, that chastity of honor which felt a stain like a wound, which inspired courage whilst it mitigated ferocity, which ennobled whatever it touched, and under which vice itself lost half its evil by losing all its grossness.

A STRIKING INCIDENT WITH MISSIONARY APPLICATION.

In the first year of my ministry I resided in the city of Jackson, Miss. It was my custom at times to drop in at the homes of the poor and sick whenever I was not engaged on my own circuit work, which lay out in the country.

One evening I was sitting on the steps of an humble home, talking to an aged lady who was a member of the Methodist church. She was telling me of the time that the yellow fever raged in Jackson, some time I think in the fifties. Being much frightened she stayed closely in her house, listening to the tolling of bells and rumble of funeral trains on the street. Just opposite her house and across the streat was a large empty house. One day while standing at her window occupied with her sad reflections she saw a wagon driven up in front of this house and two men jump out and take from the wagon a man who was evidently stricken with yellow fever. They carried him into the house and laid him on a small bed which they had brought with them, and then drove away.

Whether they forgot the sick man, or were stricken with the disease themselves, is not known, but they never came back, and for over two days the sick man was left in this empty house. The old lady narrating the circumstance, said that she could not get the sick man out of her thoughts, and repeatedly went to the window hoping that relief would come to him, and yet afraid to go herself. One morning she was standing again at her window looking across the street at the house with the sick occupant, when suddenly the sick man arose from his bed and tottering to the window looked steadfastly toward her, then up and down the street, and then turning away she saw him fall down upon his bed. She said that when her eyes met his dying gaze, that she came near sinking upon the floor in horror. Two hours later a party of men drove up to the empty house as if suddenly mindful of the sick occupant, and found the man dead.

The impression produced by the story upon my mind will never be forgotten. I have thought of that forsaken man and his appealing glance for help which never came many times. The whole scene seems to be reproduced on a vast scale to-day in the far-away lands of the East. Men are dying of sin in China, India, Japan and other distant lands. Feeling themselves to be dying, and looking for relief they have staggered from beds of depair and spiritual death and stand looking through the window of civilization toward Christian countries for help. The question is, will we let them go back disappointed and lie down in darkness and despair, or shall we go to them or send to them the blessed tidings of salvation, holiness and heaven? What we do must be done quickly. Men are dying by thousands while we stand deliberating.

Brethren and sisters, remember what Christ has done for you, and is to you, and at once let your thoughts, prayers, money and bodies fly toward these perishing souls of the East. Holiness people, whom I have met and labored with from California to Ohio, and from Iowa to Frorida, let us make a thankoffering to Christ on Dec. 24, and send it to the office of The Methodist. Let it be an offering worthy of us and the experience we profess; and let it be crystallized or transformed into sanctified missionaries who shall tell to the darkened, sorrowing lives across the sea the blessed truth and experience that has brought Christ down into our souls, made us free indeed, and transformed this world into an ante-chamber of heaven.—Rev. B. Carradine, D. D., in The Methodist.

A HEINOUS OFFENSE.

Officers of the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts implicated! An indictable offense under Masonic law!! The ancient landmarks in danger!!! Every Mason in the two hemispheres should be on the alert. Masonic wickedness in high places calls for prompt action. It is certainly known that the esoteric and sacred work of the craft is actually written in cipher, and kept at Grand Lodge headquarters in Boston, where it is studied by high Masonic officials. Have these functionaries no regard for their sacred obligations wherein they swore not to "cut, carve, paint, stain or inscribe," etc., any "character or design by which these secrets should become intelligible to themselves," or to others? How dare they commit such a flagrant act of perjury, and presume upon the clemency or ignorance of their associates? The dignity of their station renders them shining marks for retribution. Let them be made examples. Let at least the penalties of the oaths they swore in the first three degrees, and which they have wantonly violated, be executed. "Cut their throats," "pluck out their hearts," and "sever their bodies in twain," according to the humane laws made and provided in the case of vile and perjured villains. "So mote it be!"—Home Light.

"LODGE OR CHRIST!"

We met last week an Evangelical Lutheran clergyman in his confirmation room, where he was instructing a beautiful flock of 150 or 200 children in the catechism and Bible. He said he had been pastor there eighteen years; and that they had expelled only three in all that time for joining the Masons. "But," said I, "do you expel all that join them?" "Yes, sir," said he; "with us it is Christ or lodge. One or the other must be given up." Would to God this were the case with all churches. Mere testimony against lodges in words will never remove them or purify the churches. The Lutheran church above spoken of is in Chicago, yet its congregation include six hundred families. Yet it is surrounded by Congregationalist, Presbyterian, Methodist and Baptist churches, which receive Masons without question. This is all the devil asks. Take his worshipers to fellowship in Christ's churches, and you endorse him as on a level with Christ. "If thou take forth the precious from the vile, thou shalt be as my mouth."—Selected.

REFORM NEWS.

SUPPRESSION OF FREE SPEECH IN THE SOUTH.

MASONS VIOLATE THEIR CONTRACT AND REFUSE THE TABERNACLE FOR THE TENNESSEE CONVENTION.

JACKSON, Tenn., July 18, 1895.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Our attempt to hold a Christian convention at Jackson, Tenn., to consider the nature and influence of secret societies, was met with decided, if not unmanly, opposition. The Tabernacle which we had engaged for the occasion was closed against us. Mr. Ramsey, of the M. E. church, had agreed that we could have the building. He is chairman of the committee who have the control of the building. Mr. McMillan, one of the committee, had previously told me that whatever Mr. Ramsey agreed to would be all right. Previous to this, two prominent educators in the city, Rev. Dr. Sanders and Dr. Key, had signed a paper signifying that the call having been respectably signed they were in favor of granting us the building. We then saw Mr. Ramsey, who said we could have it. Accordingly, notice of the convention was published in four prominent city papers, including the purpose of the meeting stated in the exact words of the call that had been circulated.

But when we came to Jackson we found boards nailed across the doors of the Tabernacle, and a man near by told us that McMillan did it two days before. On going to his office he said that Mr. Ramsey was out of town and they had concluded not to let us have the Tabernacle. When I referred him to our engagement with the chairman of the committee, he claimed that Mr. Ramsey did not apprehend the nature of the meeting. He said: "You can see the other members of the commitee." We next went to another member, Mr. Danaway, of the Cumberland Presbyterian church, who said: "You want it to expose secret societies, and we have concluded not to let you have it." I suggested that the object of the meeting was plainly stated in the call, and in the published notices. He replied: "But you want it to expose Freemasonry and other secret societies and you can't have it." I said: "In your view of the case, to tell the truth about Freemasonry, and hold it up to the light of God's Word, would expose it."

Rev. M. S. Phinney, a colored pastor, gave his consent to hold our convention in his church, where at three o'clock we had a small audience. There was only one white man, and he left before the others came in. In giving the notice of this meeting to a colored man on the sidewalk he looked serious and replied: "Bro. Phinney had better look out or his church will be burned." There are quite a number, including some ministers, among their colored people who are in favor of the anti-secrecy reform, and yet they are terrorized more or less because of the popularity of the lodge system. I have good reason to believe that strong influence and some threats were used to keep people from this meeting.

The hour came and we talked to an audience, including five Freemasons, who asked several questions in a gentlemanly way, which we endeavored to answer in the same spirit. They demurred to my saying that Masonry is a religion which claims to save people. This, one of them denied, but I proved it from Dr. Albert G. Mackey and other great Masonic authorities. I showed them that Freemasonry as a system will have nothing to do with Christ except to expunge his name from the Scripture quotations used in their rituals. They have no use for Jesus in a Masonic lodge; and yet, it is claimed that it purifies the heart and fits its members for heaven. The Gospel points to Christ, who said: "Without me ye can do nothing." But this false religion, which pretends to do so much for it votaries, does it all by ceremonies and by well-kept oaths or Masonic obligations.

They asked me another question: "Do not Masons take the Bible for a foundation, for they always have it for instructions?" I again showed them from Dr. Mackey that it is not necessary everywhere that the Bible be used. The book of the law to a Mason is the volume which by the religion of the country is believed to contain the will of the Grand Architect of the Universe. Several other questions were asked and answered. Rev. Smothers, pastor of the colored M. E. church, came in and listened awhile, but left before the close. It is said that he belongs to the lodge. There was a colored minister present, feeble with consumption, with whom I conversed after the meeting. He confessed that he "once joined the Masons, but had no desire for it now." He has not been able to pay his dues for a long time, so it is doubtful if he gets any help from them or will be buried Masonically.

I must say I am acquainted with a goodly number of liberal-minded Masons in this city. A gentleman met me on the sidewalk and said: "Are you not going to hold that meeting?" I said: "They have gone back on their promise, and now refuse the Tabernacle." He said: "I am sorry for that. I am a Freemason, but I wanted to hear what can be said about it. I believe in free speech; can you not get the court house?" "No, sir." "Can you not get the opera house?" "I have not money enough; but we are going to have one meeting at the colored church yonder. Will you not come over?" "I do not care to go there, but if you will have the meeting up this way anywhere I will be glad to go. Won't they let you have a meeting under those trees by the court house?" "No, sir; the sheriff said it would hurt the grass." It was refreshing to hear a Mason say that he believed "in free speech." But in the nature of things the lodges and some of the churches must be ruled by those who are determined that Masonry shall not be investigated if they can prevent it by any means. The words of the Lord Jesus apply forcibly here: "He that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light lest his deeds should be reproved."

Rather than endanger the interests of colored people we did not urge for a meeting the next day at their church, but took another plan to get some light to shine on the work of the "secret empire." Well supplied with copies of the Christian Cynosure, Lodge Lamps and a good variety of anti secrecy tracts, we canvassed the city, distributing literature and pleading for the reform. We were in many cases answered with cheering words, and with thanks, but in other cases adversely. From four to six o'clock P. M. we gave three lectures on different streets in the business part of the city, and reached quite an audience in all.

C. POWERS.

FROM OUR PACIFIC COAST AGENT.

CASTLE ROCK, Wash., July, 22, 1895.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—On the 18th of April I visited the little city of Castle Rock, Wash., and spoke in the city hall to a large congregation, on "the evils of secret societies." I was met at the train next day by a number of citizens asking me to return soon as possible and speak again on the same subject. I opened correspondence at once with a leading man of the place, and had a time set to return, but word came, "It will not do; it will cause trouble here." I replied to him, that is what I want, and what you need is trouble in a town of seven hundred people, and where you say you have twenty-two lodges. This state of affairs needs disturbing.

I opened correspondence immediately with another leading citizen of the place, explaining to him the situation. He answered me: "When you find time to come here, let me know; I will get the hall and bill the town at my own expense." Later he wrote: "It is an open question yet as to whether I can get the hall for you. Will write again Saturday or Monday." He succeeded and wrote me twice. I went on Wednesday the 17th and found the town well billed. The lodge men were uneasy. They were determined to counteract my efforts as much as possible. They set in to "boycott me. The Knights of Pythias met in their hall above the city hall, where I spoke; and of all the rackets on record they were in the lead. Fortunately I have a heavy voice, and they were opposing the wrong man. I made my audience hear all that I said.

Among other things I told them, if I had not brought an argument against the lodges, I could find enough there to condemn them. I sought to exalt Christ and the church, and denounce that which stood opposed to him. The congregation was not so large as before, but they gave good attention, and I am certain that the cause of anti-secrecy is growing here. Rev. H. Elwell and wife, of the Presbyterian church, were out to hear me. They heartily approved my lecture, invited me to dinner the next day, and promised to be at the convention in Portland, Sept. 25 and 26, to take up their part of the program if at all possible.

I am informed that Castle Rock now has but fifteen lodges; some having disbanded. I do not wish to take any credit, for I think they disbanded from force of circumstances. Too hard up to run longer. Yet, if they could have made plenty of dupes they might have continued in business. They may have disbanded before they ever heard me. I talked with a number of lodge men who are inwardly disgusted with the thing. One man said: "I am in two lodges, but am sick of them;" and in fifteen minutes after making that remark to me he went and joined in a lodge funeral. He subscribed for the Cynosure, and I hope it will save him. Another man said: "I do not care a straw for my lodge; its the life insurance I am after." He will read the paper, and I hope that his eyes may be opened. I left Castle Rock feeling that the cause of truth and right had gained another victory.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE A. P. A. AND LODGERY.

CHICAGO, July 22, 1895.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Of course, we are agreed against the fundamental principles of lodgery as binding men to secrets and actions before they know them. We hold that our Bible plainly condemns such oaths and obligations. Some people think a very correct picture of lodgery is given in Ezekial 8: 6th to the end. The house of Judah then is charged with great abominations, and with saying: "The Lord seeth us not;" and so they stand with their backs toward the temple, and their faces toward the East, and worship the sun! Is not Freemasonry charged with things very similar to-day? And are there not many professing church members who are just doing what the house of Judah did, and evoked the divine condemnation?

Hence, we cannot approve the A. P. A. principle of lodgery, whilst I do approve their opposition to the political features of the Roman Catholic church, and I add, of any other church, be it Episcopal, Presbyterian, or Lutheran. I am opposed to churches in our yet free United States of America accepting state support or grants of property and exemption from their honest share of the public taxes. Professing Christians seem to me bound to obey their Lord first of all in this matter. His command was: "Render to Cæsar" (civil government) "the things which are Cæsar's." And as the civil government protects all legitimate property, so it incurs expenses to be paid by equitable taxation. The position of the A. P. A. as American citizens is thus in harmony with the teaching of Christ on this point.

What did the church and state union do for Christ? It made false charges, and crucified him, between two thieves, as a rebel and blasphemer. What does history tell of church and state union since then? That persecutions were often carried on against peaceful and good citizens because of conscience demanding their protest against errors of established churches. Yes; and sometimes national and civil wars were fostered more truly by the church than by the state. Our country has happily been free from religious wars. But look at the political sky and read "the signs of the times" not only in the United States but in Canada, especially Manitoba, where there is such bitterness manifested by the Roman Catholics, because the people, by legitimate majority, changed in 1890 from the separate Romish school system to the public school system of the United States and Canada. Surely American freemen can heartily approve the noble stand of the province of Manitoba.

As slavery was allowed to continue until our civil war, so the Catholics are, so far, apparently fulfilling the prophecy of our own President Grant, in 1850, when he warned the nation that the exemption of church property from taxes, then valued at $83,000,000, might be $3,000,000,000 before 1900! Dissatisfaction would thus be caused to be settled perhaps with blood. And he knew what blood meant!

In the province of Quebec the Catholics are having it all their own way, as did the South in regard to slavery. In Manitoba the French hoped to retain control as in Quebec, but immigration changed the population; and as said in 1890, the separate school system was changed by the will of the people. The change of the British ministry may give stronger hope to the Manitoba Catholics in case of an ultimate appeal, but in reality the rights of the established churches of England and Scotland to the clergy reserves—appropriated to the public schools after the rebellion—are quite as worthy of advocacy as are the claims of Catholics in Manitoba to the restoration of their then legalized state snpport.

LETTER FROM NEBRASKA.

Wahoo, Neb. July 24, 1895.

Editor Cynosure:—I have only been a short time at Wahoo, Neb., yet long enough to see that I am on disputed territory. Christ and the devil are urging their claims here upon the hearts and lives of men as they are doing everywhere else. And if possession means nine points in law, the devil only lacks one point of establishing a legal claim to the town of Wahoo. There are ten churches in the town, including a large Catholic church; and all but the latter are struggling for existence, and poorly equipped for work. A disinterested membership is wringing a wail of anguish from the poor, suffering cause of religion.

In marked contrast with this is the condition of the lodge. Wahoo is well stocked with these. They are more in number than the churches, and their power compared with the church is like the power of a giant against that of a sickly child. They run everything. They control the moral sentiment of the town, the churches, elections, courts and everything else. We might ask the question, how do the church and lodge harmonize? Well, they harmonize here just as they do everywhere else. The lodge claims to be the handmaid of religion. Now when you see the handmaid decked out with the richest jewelry, and finest of her mistress' wardrobe, bearing rule in the house with haughty, imperious air, while her mistress clothed in rags has to live out in the woodshed, you see the present attitude of the lodge and the church. If ever the mistress gets into her own house again, and gets control of things, she will do her own work and will not bother with any more handmaids.

The history of the lodge always and everywhere proves that it has nothing in common with the church of Christ. "What fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness? and what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? and what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? Wherefore come out from among them and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing and I will receive you." 2. Cor. 6: 14 16. Thus you see the conditions upon which the Lord receives men and those on which the lodge receives them are in direct opposition to each other.

LETTER FROM WASHINGTON.

Washingtgn, D. C., July 24, 1895.

Editor Cynosure:—Warm weather, even of the superlative sort that Washington is this week having, may dampen the persons and clothes of Baptists, as well as other poople, but it has been fully demonstrated that it cannot dampen Baptist enthusiasm, which was such a striking feature of the Echo meeting and reception to the delegates to the late convention of the Baptist Young People's Union, which was held at Calvary Baptist church. Nearly one-half of the delegates attending the meeting and among the speakers were Rev. Dr. Cameron, of Mass.; Rev. Dr. Wallace, of Toronto, Canada; Rev. Dr. Lovett, of Davenport, Iowa; Rev. Dr. Thomas, of Washington, who was given much applause when he expressed the wish to live to see a Baptist President of the United States; Rev. Dr. Stiffler, of South Dakota; Miss McLauren, of Boston, who gave some interesting facts about the remarkable progress of missionary work during the present century, and Dr. Chapman, of Chicago, president of the Union, who talked about the rapid growth of that young organization and of the good feeling existing between it and other organizations of young Christians.

Quite a number of the visiting Baptists will remain in Washington nearly all the week enjoying themselves sight-seeing. One of the most noticeable of them, if not the most notable, is Chief "Big Tree, a full-blooded Kiowa Indian, from Indian Territory. "Big Tree" talks very little English, but he made several speeches at the Baltimore convention in his native language, which was repeated to the convention by an interpreter. He is said to be very devout in his daily life.

Among the Baptist ministers who filled Washington pulpits last Sabbath was Dr. B. L. Whitman, the new president of Columbian University, who preached to the congregation of the First Baptist church from the words of St. John: "Jesus needed not that any should testify of man, for he knew what was in man." While his hearers all expected the sermon to be able, as it unquestionably was, not a few of them was surprised at Dr. Whitman's oratorical power. As his reputation is greatest as an educator they had known nothing of his power as a preacher. At a reception held after services Dr. Whitman was personally introduced to the members of the congregation, and he must have been proud of the compliments paid him on the sermon and the wishes expressed to hear him again.

Secretary Carlisle has received a letter from Mr. Ballou, of New York, one of the vice-presidents of the American Humane Association, protesting against the proposed bull fights at the Atlanta Exposition, and requesting the Secretary to prevent the importation of bulls and to refuse admission to the United States to the toreadors. Mr. Ballou concludes his letter by saying that the Humane Association will, if these exhibitions of bull fighting are given, have everybody connected therewith arrested and prosecuted to the extent of the law. Secretary Carlisle has taken no action on the letter, and the opinion around the Treasury department is that nothing will be done further than to acknowledge receipt of the letter, owing to the complications which would be likely to follow any interference on the part of the national government in such a matter.

WHO WILL HELP?

Fairbanks, Fla., July 22, 1895.

Editor Cynosure:—"The American Handbook and Citizen's Manual," by Bro. M. N. Butler, will do a world of good in the South. I find there is but one way to reach men, South as well as North. That is this: reach them. I want to place one thousand of these books in the hands of one thousand ministers. I will be one in ten to purchase the books and have them at the Cynosure office by October next, ready to ship South. I want all to understand if they do not purchase one book that I expect to supply a hundred. So you can supply as many as you please, but send your name and number you will furnish, to the Cynosure office.

I will tell you how I reach ministers with this book for I have distributed many of them. I say to a minister, I want to make you a present. He does not mistrust that I know he belongs to the secret powers. I say, I know the author of this book well. He is a true man; and surely he has gone to the bottom of the secret society question. I want you to read it carefully; then keep it in circulation from house to house until worn out. I know much about the secret powers. I have never joined any of them, but I have seen for fifty years the influence these various lodges are exerting in the world. I honestly think, what the whole world wants, is light on this subject. And I can boldly say, you can not find a book on earth, for forty cents, that will give you the amount of information and the many facts this work gives. I want to spend and be spent for God, this being one of the ways I am doing it. Will you take this book and read it, and use it for God? They, as a rule, answer: "Yes, gladly." Thus we want to put one thousand of these books to work this fall in the South. Will you help?

ALL-ROUND REFORMERS.

Dear Cynosure:—The article of Dr. D. M. Gillespie in your issue of July 11th has my qualified approval. Surely there ought to be a union of all true reformers and a recast of political platforms. It is unreasonable and unjust that questions of mere expediency and the claim of one political party rather than another to hold office and administer the government, should have precedence over the claims of justice and humanity. It is not so important to determine how much tariff shall be levied on imports, or how much revenue shall come from domestic manufactures, as to decide whether any thing shall be imported or manufactured that is injurious to public morals and to the general welfare.

In discussing the question as to what is the true basis of civil government, two errors are to be avoided. The one is that the people are the source of all authority and all law, and that whatever a majority of the people shall decree is law and ought to be enforced as such. This theory is simply atheistic. It ignores the principle of natural justice, which is no other than the law of God; and though this law is written in the hearts of men, it is not always regarded either by individuals or legislatures. If this doctrine were true, then a majority might decide that the minority should be slaves, and have no right, even to life, if their owners chose to take it. Such a theory is intrinsically absurd. The element of truth is, that the people have a right to determine their form of government and decide all questions that may arise, but only in harmony with the law of God.

The other error is equally specific, and even more misleading and practically injurious. It assumes that since God is the rightful and supreme law-giver, and the author of civil government, therefore, it is the duty of the state to define and enforce the duties the people owe God as well as those they owe their fellowmen. The error in this theory is in failing to consider that the commandments contained in the first table of the law—the first four of the Decalogue—are in their nature such that no human authority can enforce them. They are all included in the supreme duty of all men to worship God. Every attempt to enforce this obligation or any of the specific duties that are included in it has served only to dishonor religion, and make men liars and hypocrites. God has reserved to himself the enforcement of all spiritual obligations. Not so with the second table of the law. The duties we owe to our fellowmen, though a part of the law of God, come within the province of civil authority. It is the duty of the state to define their practical applications and secure their enforcement. The sole duty of the state towards religion is to protect men in its exercise and enjoyment so far as is consistent with the rights of others and the general well-being of society.

I therefore respectfully suggest that the following substitute be adopted in place of the platform as given by Dr. Gillespie. Whereas, the doctrine that the people are the source of all authority and all law, and that the decisions of majorities are supreme, ignores the authority of God, and that sense of justice, which he has implanted in the hearts of men and is inconsistent with the rights of minorities; and whereas, the exclusion of the Bible from our public schools and the attempt to use them for sectarian purposes; the actual domination of the liquor interest and the power of the secret lodge system, and the prevalence of gambling and lotteries are dangerous and growing evils in our age and nation, it becomes the duty of loyal citizens to unite for their overthrow. Therefore, resolved, that we adopt the following constitution:

Art. 1. (As given in the Cynosure)

Art. 2 The object of this Association shall be to bring about the acknowledgment of Almighty God as the author of human government, and that his law is the only true basis of civil authority with which all human enactments should harmonize; to secure a better protection of our religious liberties, including the right of all to a peaceful eujoyment of a weekly Sabbath; to prevent our free schools from being used for sectarian purposes; for the overthrow of the rum power, the secret lodge system, gambling and lotteries; for the establishment and protection of equal suffrage, and an equal and just system of taxation; to enlighten the public mind in reference to these evils and to elect public officers favorable to their removal. The remaining articles I would accept without change. There are, doubtless, other reforms that might be suggested, but the above is a platform on which all loyal citizens could stand without compromise.

WAYSIDE NOTES.

ELMIRA, N. Y., July 18, 1895.

"If the light within you be darkness, how great is that darkness." On Sabbath morning I attended a Methodist "class meeting." I asked the principal member present, in our private talk, as to his lodge membership. "I am a member of three lodges," he said, "but they have the best of principles. Especially is this true of Freemasonry."

"It had never occurred to me," I answered, "that it was a good principle to cut a man's throat from ear to ear, or agree to have your own cut, for 'cheating, wronging or defrauding' a brother Master Mason out of one cent!" He supposed at once that I was a Freemason, and asserted that it was true that the penalty seemed too great for the crime. But after all it did not seem at all abhorrent to his moral sense. To my assertion that a child of God ought not to agree to anything that his Lord would not agree to, nor practice anything that Jesus would not practice, nor go where Jesus would not go if he were in our place —to these assertions he expressed himself as in hearty accord: "Yes, sir; that is my doctrine." "Do you suppose," I asked, "that Jesus Christ, God manifest in the flesh, would go into a Masonic lodge, and voluntarily allow a set of worldly men, or any set of men, for that matter, to strip him of his shirt and put him through the initiation of the third degree?"

To my surprise, he defended this treatment of his Lord on the ground that the object was good. It was to teach an important lesson. "Naked we come into this world, and naked we must leave it." Bosh! I got up and left the church, refusing to hear a pastor whose preaching produced such moral obliquity in the hearers. Within a few blocks I happened upon a liberal United Brethren church, and listened to a good, plain, and practical sermon, on separation from the world. It was a sermon to clear up the moral vision, so that hearers could discern the difference between light and darkness. In the class meeting which followed, my testimony for holy living and separation from any complicity with the secret empire seemed to be well received.

My seat mate on one train this week was from southwestern Kansas, where he says there will be a phenominally large yield of corn this year. This gentleman took the precaution to ask if I was a Freemason, and then proceeded to inform me that many ministers of the Gospel were Masons; that its principles were all good, and that a man could not be a good Mason without being a good man. I handed him "Ecce Orienti" and called his attention to his oath to keep all crimes of a Master Mason, with the exception of murder and treason, and asked him if he thought such principles good. He was dumb for a little while, but he seemed to have been born for an honest man and had not been wholly spoiled, for he did not lie, and declare that that was not Masonry. But he showed the moral obtuseness that most Freemasons do, even though ministers, for, when I called his attention to another of his oaths that swore him to protect the virtue of a Master Mason's daughter, he knowing her to be such, he told me of an instance, that he was personally acquainted with, to prove that the oath was a good thing. He said that a brother Mason had ruined one young woman, and told him that he did not attempt the ruin of a certain other, because she was the daughter of a Mason.

I questioned him: "Did this Mason violate any Masonic obligation when he ruined the first?" "No." "Was he then a good Mason?" "Yes." "Did he violate any Christian obligation?" "Yes." "Was he then a good man?" "No." I was now ready to ask my seat-mate what had become of his assertion that all Masonic principles were good, and that a good Mason must be a good man.

THE WORK IN INDIA.

INDIA WATCHMAN MISSION, BOMBAY, India, June 21, 1895.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—I have felt that it might be of interest to your readers, a number of whom are friends and acquaintances of the past, to hear from this distant field, where in the providence of God I am now laboring. A great desire has been kindled in my heart to write words back to the Lord's children in America which will, with his blessing, be used to arouse them to greater interest and zeal for the heathen, and stir up some lovers of the Lord Jesus to give themselves to the work of helping to bring India to Christ. If the attention is drawn to this land and the great evils with which it is cursed, its needs will be taken to heart, and there will be a more ready response when the call is heard: "Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?" Isa. 6: 8. Isaiah's ears were "opened" to God's voice and call, when he was purged from his iniquity. May there be many who read these lines in the same attentive, ready condition who will quickly answer, "Here am I; send me"

MISSIONARIES NEEDED.

Since coming to this field we have seen India's needs in a clearer light than we possibly could before coming. We used to hear a great deal about missionary work when at home, and I was led to believe from the amount of hard begging that was done, that money was the greatest need; but now I am convinced that there are far greater needs than this. What India and other heathen lands most need is missionaries, who are consecrated men "unto death"—men and women, holy, humble, Christlike souls, who can go through the same lowly path their Saviour trod —who can work with the hands as well as preach, and suffer as well as pray; and who will exemplify in their lives the Christianity of the primitive church, the apostles and martyrs of early days.

FAITHFUL UNTO DEATH.

Doing for Christ has many advocates, but to suffer for and with him—to forego ease and comfort, if need be; to give up luxuries and come down to a life of plainness of apparel, and simplicity in living, and really bear a cross that crucifies self,—this is not set forth by teachers and preachers as the Word of God teaches it. Hence, there are few who understand the "fellowship of his sufferings," and the joy it brings.

Witnesses are needed in India who can be read at a glance. The natives are quick to read the lives of those who come here to labor for their salvation, and they judge of the sincerity of their motives by the life they live, and the spirit they manifest. The following words, by W. J. Gladwin, editor of the India Watchman and manager of this mission, under the head of "India needs object lessons," makes this truth more plain than I can, so I quote them: "But few of our people can read your books, but we can read you," said an educated Bengali to me when I first came to India. Whether we wish it or not, we are object lessons. If selfish, proud, bad tempered, scolding, worldly, lazy or carnal, then people will read the character in our lives. If we, who profess to be truly converted and workers for Christ, show that we love showy styles of living, jolly jesting, gaudy ornaments, and costly furniture in our rooms, stylish clothing and jewelry upon our persons, then we teach a carnal and worldly Christianity to the people.

FOLLOWING CHRIST.

When missionaires go out to preach in non-Christian lands, and live in the style of government officials, the mass of the people will see an object lesson of worldly power, high position, fine show, brains and money. As a great many non-Christians read our Bible, they can easily see that Jesus Christ and his disciples did not go out in that style to win souls. Hence, the marked difference is noticed between our marching orders and our line of march; but if we obey God's Word, follow the Spirit of Christ inwardly, and live humbly outwardly, do his work and show "much fruit," then the people can read as they run. The object lesson which the New Testament so strongly teaches will then be plainly set forth before the masses of the heathen. The lesson will have just the effect which Jesus promised: "And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me."

THE WATCHMAN MISSION.

To be object lessons of this kind to the heathen, and to Christian as well, is the aim of Mr. Gladwin in his work in this Training Home and Mission, which is conducted in the most plain and simple manner. There is no fine clothing or costly furniture and ornaments, neither servants, to use up the money God sends. All is plain and simple and consistent with God's Word. The manual labor plan is adopted in the work of the household. All are on an equal footing, from the manager down to the youngest child able to work. The work being equally divided among the members of the household, there are no heavy burdens, and there is little time consumed on the part of each in doing it. This plan works admirably, and I can cheerfully recommend it. Appeals for the support of this work are made to God alone; and day by day, and year by year he supplies all our needs. In accordance with the command of Christ we pray for more laborers for his great and wasting harvest fields. Some remarkable answers to prayer might be given, and may be in a future letter, to show God's faithfulness to those who trust him fully. We are greatly encouraged in God and his Word. There will be abundant fruit from the labors, which are after God's plan. There are several lines of work carried on in this mission. First, the publishing of the India Watchman. Second, the book department in which is kept a large supply of books on holiness, Romanism, secretism, temperance and purity work, and many other good and wholesome books. Third, the printing department. Fourth, the training of workers for the field. This is a special and important branch of the work. Fifth, the children's training department. Sixth, colporteur evangelism, by a brother, who goes from station to station selling books and personally laboring to win souls. Local mission work is carried on in part and will be developed as the workers increase. The Lord is giving many tokens of his approval and is blessing our labors. We trust we shall have your prayers for this land and its people, and especially for all who are laborers in these fields. Sample copies of the India Watchman will be sent free to all who will send their names. Send also names of your friends. Postage to India is 5 cents for letters, and 2 cents for postal cards.

Yours in Christ's love for God and India,

HENRIETTA E. MUZZY.

ENQUIRING FOR THE OLD PATHS.

DEKALB, Ia., July 24, 1895.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Those who were once leaders in the old United Brethren church and are now liberals, taught us before the apostasy that lodge principles were those of anti-Christ. They knew it well from such undeniable sources as the Word of God and the rituals of the lodges. The Bible says: "It is a shame even to speak of those things which are done of them in secret." Liberals examined lodge principles and found it was a shame that it had become necessary to "speak of those things which are done of them in secret."

The liberals found that the lodges were religious institutions which in their ritualistic worship rejected Christ. They found it a poison as deadly to Christianity as the religion practiced by Ahab and his followers, whose priests were those of Baal. They exhorted us to be loyal to Christ, and to stand firm against the lodges, and urged upon us the necessity of imitating the character of Elijah and his God. Their preaching inspired us with a strong desire to be like Daniel, in standing for the religion of our God. Bishop Weaver said in a lecture on secret orders: "Their religion, in the main, is a Christless religion." They have since then compromised with the anti-Christ, and no longer lecture or teach in regard to the orders as they once did. But because we would not change and run with them to the same excess of folly in becoming in principle the same as Ahab, they denounce us as "seceders." But these things do not move us, and we may yet prove to be what they taught us to become—"faithful Christians unto death."

HOW TO MAKE SALADS.

A Spendthrift, a Miser, a Lawyer and a Madman.

A spendthrift for oil, a miser for vinegar, a barrister for salt and a madman to stir it up. Let all ingredients be of the best. A salad served at dinner as a separate course, or with the game, should be of the crispest, tenderest lettuce (the Romaine variety being the most palatable), celery, bleached chicory, tomatoes, cucumbers sliced, corn salad, oscarole and water cress. These must be cold and dressed with oil and vinegar.

These salads are greatly improved by the addition of a few fine herbs fresh and green and should never be garnished.

All epicures insist that you mix the salt and pepper with vinegar and not with oil, pouring the oil on afterward in generous spoonfuls.

Salads of cooked vegetables are not perhaps so delicate and alluring as those composed of the fresh and succulent treasures of the kitchen garden, which are gathered "innocent and green," but they are nevertheless piquant and delightful and make a very decorative addition to a luncheon or a supper.

These may be served either with a French dressing or mayonnaise.

To make a perfect mayonnaise the dishes and utensils should be thoroughly chilled. It is safer for an amateur to use the yolks of two eggs than one. These should be rapidly whisked with a wire spoon for a moment or two, and then the oil should be poured in steadily, drop by drop. When the sauce thickens, add a little vinegar or lemon juice, and then more oil until the desired quantity is secured.

A French cook can combine some bits of cold meat, a vegetable or two, a chopped chevril, one or two chives, dress it with mayonnaise, and, lo! the "dying anchorite" would, indeed, be tempted. Mayonnaise is, by the way, the basis for a number of sauces.

The juice of boiled parsley colors it green, and pounded lobster shell reddens it coral.

Tartar sauce is mayonnaise made with taragon vinegar and with the addition of capers, a little chopped pickle and a slight flavor of chives.

Another excellent sauce is mayonnaise mixed with chopped cucumber or grated horse radish.

When cold fowl or meat is used in a salad, it should always be dressed with oil and vinegar before the mayonnaise is added. These salads may be garnished beautifully with hard boiled eggs, crimson radishes, curled parsley, nasturtium leaves and flowers.

There is a certain charming description of a blue violet salad where the stemmed violets gleamed like sapphires on the bosom of the snowy endive.

How to Remove the Smell of Paint.

The simplest remedy is air obtained by leaving all doors and windows opening on fresh air open until the paint has hardened. If this is too slow, burn a few handfuls of juniper berries on a charcoal fire in the middle of the room, in the same way and with the same precautions as in disinfecting with burning sulphur. The windows, chimney and door must be stopped as closely as possible, and if the room be opened after four and twenty hours the smell of paint will have disappeared, and nothing that has been left in the room will have been injured by the fumes. Hay sprinkled with a little chloride of lime and left for one hour in the room is also an efficacious remedy, and if some open vessels containing water be stored in the room, after a time the water will be covered with a film and the smell diminished.

HOW TO PROTECT APPLES.

The Greatest Enemy to Export Apples Is the Coddling Moth.

The entire crop can be made wormless if the orchards of the United States will use the following recipe: Use paris green at the rate of a pound to 150 gallons of water. Weigh out sufficient portion for the capacity of the tank used and make it into a thin paint with a small quantity of water and add powdered or quicklime equal to the weight of the poison used, mixing thoroughly. The lime takes up the free arsenic and removes the danger of scalding. Strain the mixture into the spray tank, taking care to pulverize and wash all the poison through the strainer. During the operation of spraying see that the liquid is agitated with sufficient frequency to prevent the settling of the poison.

Let the first spraying follow within a week after the falling of the blossoms of either apple or pear, and follow this with a second treatment just before the fruit turns down on the stem, or when it is from a quarter to half an inch in diameter. The first spraying reaches the eggs laid by the moth in the flower end of the fruit, shortly after the falling of the blossoms, and the second the later eggs laid by belated moths. Don't spray trees when in bloom, and if a washing rain immediately follows treatment repeat the application.

FITS CURED
(From U. S. Journal of Medicine.)
Prof. W. H. Peeke, who makes a specialty of Epilepsy, has without doubt treated and cured more cases than any living Physician; his success is astonishing. We have heard of cases of 20 years' standing cured by him. He publishes a valuable work on this disease which he sends with a large bottle of his absolute cure, free to any sufferer who may send their P.O. and Express address. We advise anyone wishing a cure to address, Prof. W. H. PEEKE, F. D., 4 Cedar St., New York.

The Christian Cynosure.

REV. M. A. GAULT, - - - Editor.
WM. I. PHILLIPS, - - - Publisher.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, AUGUST 1, 1895.

SUBSCRIBE FOR THE CYNOSURE. WHY?

It is the only weekly paper devoted exclusively to the question of secret societies.

No other paper has such facilities for turning the light upon this important subject.

Your renewal or subscription for the Cynosure not only helps the paper but it strengthens the cause by encouraging all connected with it.

In addition to the interesting talks to young people by Prof. Straw, we hope to add other features especially intended to interest our youthful readers.

You should take the paper because the number of Cynosures taken in any community is the best index of the aggressive reliable interest in the cause in that community.

The Cynosure does not fail to declare itself on all questions of moral reform. Its columns are especially open for the discussion of all questions which relate to the subject of secret societies.

It has an earnest, able, fearless, self-sacrificing class of writers, representing various churches. They are men and women who are loyal to Christ and their convictions of truth.

The reform it advocate bears a vital relation to every other, because no reform legislation can be effective while its enforcement is in the hands of secret lodge members sworn to favor one another.

It has enlisted in the various churches faithful, radical, life-long friends who have stood by the paper from its first issue. It is an honor to be enrolled with such a devoted class of witnesses for Christ.

The one idea of the Cynosure is broad. It is to stand for the authority of Christ and his law. It opposes secret organizations because they rend and destroy Christ's three divine institutions, the family, the church and the state.

None of our church papers, however in sympath with the cause, give as much space to the discussion of this question as its importance demands, and not sufficient to warn the people of the danger from secret organizations.

Our interest in any reform will be in proportion to our knowledge of it. And the best means of informing ourselves and others on this question and thereby deepening our interest in the subject is by reading the Cynosure.

The paper will not only visit your home each week, keeping yourself and family in touch with the work and literature of the movement, but it will afford you an opportunity of circulating it among your neighbors and interesting them in the cause.

The power and influence of the anti-secret movement is largely estimated by the number of those who support its organ, the Cynosure. Thus by taking the paper you help to swell the influence which enables the movement to command the respect of the world.

It has during twenty-seven years been faithfully declaring its testimony on this great question. The fact that it has been enabled to pursue its work for so many years without interruption, is evidence that God is hearing the prayers of these witnesses and blessing their testimony.

The Cynosure is the right arm of the anti-secret movement. The agent or lecturer comes and goes, but the paper comes and comes, and it goes where the lecturer cannot. No other reform is so dependent upon its literature, because so few platforms and pulpits are open for the discussion of this question.

You should at least contribute the price of the paper to this canse for the reason that its supporters are so few and far between. Other reforms, such as Prohibition and the Sabbath, do not encounter such opposition and have enlisted hosts of followers. Remember it costs much to speak out on this question. The great publication boards of the popular churches dare not carry in their stock, books or literature on this subject. The great church papers scarcely ever touch on the subject. Even the press of most of the anti-secret churches publish on the subject about once or twice a year.

ARE WE A CHRISTIAN GOVERNMENT?

This is certainly a debatable question. Judge Brewer in his alien labor opinion, decided that we are a Christian nation. Then on the other hand we have a national treaty with Tripoli declaring that we are in no sense a Christian government. The Supreme Courts of Ohio and Wisconsin have rendered decisions on the Bible in the school question in the same line. So was Judge Stine's decision against the Sabbath closing of the World's Fair.

But it is better to decide the question by our government's practice, than by its profession. Ask this question of the 200,000 saloons authorized to violate God's law which says, "Woe unto him that giveth his neighbor drink," etc. The answer comes in the dying groans of 100,000 victims of intemperance every year. Hear the answer likewise in the thunder of 100,000 railroad trains on the Sabbath; hear it from thousands of our public schools from which the Bible has been excluded; and loudest of all hear the answer from the tens of thousands of secret lodge rooms with their Christless altars and rituals and prayers, secularizing our politics, side-tracking our churches by substituting a false religion which is only a mocking parody of the religion of Jesus Christ. Go to our National and State Constitutions and to our political platforms and they are silent as the grave in reference to Christ.

TAXING CHURCH PROPERTY.

There are at least two reasons why church property should be taxed. First, to check the tendency to invest so extravagantly in costly buildings, and also to deprive lodges of the excuse that they should, like the churches, be exempt on the ground of being benevolent institutions. In this connection we quote from President Grant's annual message to Congress in 1875:

"In 1850, I believe, the church property of the United States, which paid no tax, municipal or state, amounted to $83,000,000. In 1860 the amount had doubled. In 1875 it is about $1,-000,000,000. In 1900, without check, it is safe to say this property will reach a sum exceeding $3,000,000,000. So vast a sum, receiving all the protection and benefits of government, without bearing its proportion of the burdens and expenses of the same, will not be looked upon acquiescently by those who have to pay the taxes. In a growing country, where real estate enhances so rapidly with time as in the United States, there is scarcely a limit to the wealth that may be acquired by corporations, religious or otherwise, if allowed to retain real estate without taxation. The contemplation of so vast a property as here alluded to without taxation may lead to sequestration without constitutional authority, and through blood. I would suggest the taxation of all property equally. I would suggest.... whether churches or corporations, exempting only the last resting place of the dead, and possibly, with proper restrictions, church edifices.

"As this will be my last message to Congress, I will repeat the questions which I deem of vital importance, which may be legislated upon and settled at this session:

"1. That the States shall be required to give the opportunity of obtaining a good education to every child within their limits.

"2. No sectarian tenets shall ever be taught in any school supported in whole, or in part, by the State, nation, or by the proceeds of any tax levied upon any community. Make education compulsory so far as to deprive all persons who cannot read and write from becoming voters after the year 1890, disfranchising none, however, on grounds of illiteracy who may be voters at the time this amendment takes effect.

"3 Declare church and state forever separate and distinct, but each free within their proper sphere; and that all church property shall bear its own proportion of taxation.

"4 Drive out licensed immorality, such as polygamy and importation of women for illegitimate purposes. To recur again to the Centennial year it would seem as though now, as we are about to begin the second century of our national existence, would be a fitting time for these reforms.

"5. Enact such laws as will insure a speedy return to a sound currency, such as to command the respect of the world. Believing these views will commend themselves to the great majority of the right thinking and patriotic citizens of the United States, I submit the rest to Congress.

"U. S. Grant.

TALKS TO YOUNG PEOPLE.

BY PROF. D. A STRAW.

"WANT TO" OR "MUST."

I never saw so much delicious fruit, especially peaches, pears and plums, at this early season of the year as there is displayed along the streets of Chicago now. It is enough to make a boy hungry to walk along the street. And what a tantalizing hunger it is, too.

When I think of the old home orchard where the early sweet-apple tree spread the ground with large, luscious, golden apples, so rich and mellow that they burst their sides with sugary salutations—a whole row of such trees—and then a little farther on the bigger trees with large red-stripped "pie apples,"—why did they call them pie apples?—each one was a pie to me;—when I think of those and the row of plum trees that fringed the orchard on the south, I feel sorry for the hungry boy that passes the fruit stands here. For the peaches that blush as you look at them, and the pears that grow bigger with watching, and the great watermelon that tempts the boy to eat the heart out of it and then crawl inside the shell to rest, all these are spread out on tables and labeled with price tags, and a boy dares not touch one unless he has a coin in his pocket that burns to get out. That is vastly different from filling one's hat with the plums, his pockets with the apples, hugging a melon to his heart, and then sitting down under a tree and eating; eating till he has enough, without a fear or a question, with a feeling that it is all one's own; for a boy surely owns his father's orchard.

But the boy here in the city has in this a good illustration of the lesson on Nadab and Abihu, Lev. 10: 1–11. He very soon learns the meaning of "Thou shalt not." Without any discount, though his mouth fairly opens to eat of the fruit, he knows that commandment "means it." And to every one of us at some time or other, desires as intense as a boy's fruit appetite are met with the commandment, "thou shalt not." Well for us, then, if we have learned to restrain ourselves. Happy are we, after all, if we have learned that a commandment—and every commandment of God—is given without discount.

Wheaton College.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Prof. H. A. Fischer preached an excellent sermon in the M. E. church at Wheaton last Sabbath morning.

—Bro. J. E. Wolfe, the missionary evangelist, has been holding successful meetings in Toronto, Canada. In a recent letter he reported five conversions in one evening.

—Rev. W. H. Chandler, pastor of the College church, Wheaton, has been given a vacation by his people, and will be absent the next two Sabbaths. He expects to attend a Christian Alliance convention near Cleveland, O.

—Rev. G. M. Robb visited the Cynosure office lately on his way to preach several months at Youngstown, Ohio. His family now reside at Washington, Iowa. He is a staunch friend of the Cynosure and the cause it represents.

—Rev. Eugene I. Grinnel, recently from Michigan, is spending his vacation with his family at Wheaton. He has accepted an invitation to take charge of a church for the next year at Steamboat Springs, Colo., and expects in a few weeks to enter upon his work there.

—The Patriot-Phalanx of Indianapolis, the Prohibition paper of Indiana, says: "The Christian Cynosure is the organ of the National Christian Association which opposes secret societies. It is always able and original; and the movement it advocates has advanced in the last five years."

—Rev. C. H. Hunt and family are spending their vacation with relatives at Richmond, Ind.

Bro. Hunt was pastor, until recently, of the Presbyterian church at Union City, Pa., but expects, on account of health, to change to a western field. He made the Cynosure office a pleasant visit while in Chicago.

—The editor and his wife enjoyed an excursion last Thursday on the steamer Virginia, to Milwaukee and return. Going up they had the company of Rev. J. B. Galloway, President of the Wisconsin N. C. A., who had spent a night with them at Wheaton. He was on his return from his summer vacation in Colorado.

—An account of the remarkable growth and influence of the Chautauqua Assembly and its allied institutions, and an intimate personal study of the principal founder, Bishop John H. Vincent, by Ida M. Tarbell, will appear in McClure's Magazine for August. The article will be illustrated with numerous portraits and other pictures.

—We have requests for the following back numbers of the Cynosure. None of them remain in the office, and we earnestly request subscribers who do not keep them on file to mail them to the Cynosure office, and we will credit them with double their value on our list. The following numbers are wanted: Dec. 8, 1892; March 2, July 20, Sept. 7, and Dec. 28, 1893; April 9, 1894; Feb. 21, March 7, 21 and 28, and April 25, 1895.

—President Blanchard is delivering a course of lectures this week. at Jamestown, N. Y. The press announce him to speak Tuesday afternoon and evening on "The Secret Society Question," and "Lodge Ceremonies, or the Masonic Initiation." On Wednesday morning, afternoon and evening his lectures are on "Can Secret Societies be Destroyed?" "Lodge Obligations, or the Masonic Oath," and "Lodge Religion, or Modern Idolatry."

—James S. Hickman, of Goodwine, Ill., visited the Cynosure office last week and procured upwards of $10 worth of anti-secret literature to use in his neighborhood. He has taken the Cynosure from its first issue, and keeps his neighbors informed on the lodge question by occasional discussions in the local press. He is an active and leading member in the M. E. church, being superintendent of two Sabbath-schools. He says his rule is to contribute nothing for a minister's salary if he knows him to be a Mason.

—The abrupt closing of the excellent article on our second page, from the pen of Sec. W. I. Phillips, was owing to the misplacement of the last leaf of the manuscript which has since been found. It makes the article close with these words: "It (the dreary mass found in secret society rituals) unfits the mind for receiving the Word of God, and salvation through faith in Jesus Christ. The ground is preoccupied. The former is Satan's method of leading souls devilward; the latter is the Holy Spirit's method of effecting character God-ward."

—Rev. H. L Hastings, the great Boston lecturer and publisher, whose life and portrait appeared in our last issue, has written two of our best anti-secret tracts. The one, "Selling Dead Horses," has had a large circulation. One of his latest publications we have just received; a booklet entitled "The Credibility of the Christian Religion, or Thoughts on Modern Rationalism," by Samuel Smith, a member of the British Parliament. It is a strong argument written in a style peculiarly adapted to interest youth. It is in its twelfth thousand edition.

—"God and the Ant" is the singular title of a little book that the mail dropped upon our table last week. It is favorably noticed by Miss Willard and Miss Somerset, and seems to be written with the design of solving some of the deep problems relating to the existence of sin and pain in the world. The author says, page 28: "Can the ant creep up into the brain of man to see man's world as man sees it? Yet has man, whose whole world is in the eyes of God but as one ant in a universe, thought to creep into God's brain, to see as he sees, to think as he thinks, and to judge the Omnipotent One by man's little laws?"

—Rev. H. W. Johnston at Clarinda, Iowa, writes to say that "Rev Majola Agbebi, whose appeal for literature on the secret society question appeared in the Cynosure recently, is a native born African, of the Yoruba tribe; converted in the missions of that land, educated in mission schools, pastor of a self-supporting Baptist church in Lagos, and is a fair specimen of the coming African. We were fellow-passengers from Freetown to Liverpool, he being on his way to the Congo Institute, Colwyn Bay, Wales, by the kindness of that institute. From what I saw of him I can recommend him as worthy of assistance."

—In the Review of Reviews for July, Prince Bismarck, of Germany, expresses himself on the question of women in politics. He said, May 13, to a deputation of Silesian ladies: "I always regret that so little influence in politics is allowed to the better half of the human race. I do not expect ladies to deliver speeches in Parliament, but I believe that the results of our elections would be more national and more satisfactory if they were more under female influence than now. Honest German women, wives and mothers, do not appear in public as socialists, and I therefore believe that female sympathy with our political institutions is a much stronger bulwark against Social Democracy than our Revolution bill would have been if it had been passed."

—The National Reform Institute is a new and magnificent system or plan of work under the direction of the National Reform Association, inaugurated March 10, 1895, in the town of Indiana, Pennsylvania. Prof. J. R. Dill, an evangelist of national reputation, until recently of Topeka, Kansas, but now of Philadelphia, Penn., is the author of the plan. He has been some ten years in the field of reform, and has been called by the more prominent of our State and National Committees to labor in about one-half the States in the Union. In Indiana, Butler, Grove City and Oxford, Pennsylvania, the Institute Plan has proved a succees beyond the highest expectation of the committee under whose auspices he now labors. The Christian Statesman says of Prof. Dill's first National Reform Institute at Indiana, Pennsylvania: "The Institute has proved a success beyond all anticipation. Let what has now been tried in one place with such fruitful and gratifying results be tried in a hundred other places. Young men who are thoroughly versed in National Reform, and young women, too, have an open door before them here for the most effective kind of reform and patriotic work."

THE BIBLE IN OUR PUBLIC EDUCATION.

It has been the general sentiment, from the earliest organization of our public school system, that the Bible should be recognized and hold an honorable place in it. This principle has taken practical shape in the compilation of a book of Scripture selections. These selections carefully made and arranged will be welcomed by educators generally. The children certainly will be pleased with them.

If the Cynosure readers have omissions, additions, or improved arrangements to suggest, or words of commendation, all such helps will be gratefully received by Mrs. Elizabeth B. Cook, president of the Chicago Women's Educational Union, No. 316 Washington Boul., Chicago.

The table of contents of the unrevised book, which is now in course of preparation, we publish below. We suggest that pastors would find such a list of Bible topics useful for prayer meetings.

The two great commandments. Mark 12: 28-31.
The Lord's prayer. Matt. 6: 9-13.
The greatest thing in the world. 1. Cor. 13.
Love for young children. Mark 10: 13 16.
A wise fear. Ps. 103: 8-18; Eccles. 12: 13: Ps. 119: 10.
A lawyer instructed. Luke 10: 15 37.
Creation of darkness, light, earth and sky. Gen. 1: 1-18.
Value of faith. Heb. 11: 1-10.
Creation of land, sea, vegetation, sun, moon and stars. Gen. 1: 9-19.
Value of hope. Ps. 33: 24; Lam. 3: 26; Rom. 8: 24,25; Heb. 6: 19.
Creation of animal life, including man. Gen. 1: 20 31.
The Creator. Acts 17: 24-28.
The rest day. Gen. 2: 1 3.
High life. Isaiah 58: 13,14.
Incident in the administration of a governor. Neh. 13: 15 21.
A great victory. Matt. 6: 1-11.

SUMMER IN NEW YORK

REV. MADISON C. PETERS SPENDS A DAY IN WATER STREET.

Blessings of the Free Ice Stations—Chunk of Heaven on Hell's Brink—Homeless Children In a Great City—Work For Missionaries at Home—The Rum Curse.

Mr. Peters did not preach Aug. 11, but sends the following:

In company with a trusty friend, one of earth's greatest blessings, I visited Water street, New York, when the thermometer registered 90 degrees in the shade. I started early that I might gain some knowledge of the free ice stations.

What blessings this charity brings to these dark places of abject poverty! To stand for an hour at any one of these stations and watch the creatures who creep there to receive the blessing of 15 pounds of ice, to behold the eagerness with which they make approach, the anxiety with which they push forward, the glistening gladness in their eyes as they bear off the trophy, is only to comprehend in a small measure the good done by this practical philanthropy.

Here they come and crowd, men, women and children of all kindreds and tongues—the dwarf, scurvy and scrub of humanity. Sometimes the crowd is so dense that angry competition follows. Boys and girls with emaciated bodies, feverish lips, hollow eyes, dirty all over, are on the outside and watching for the chips of ice that fall to the ground. One little girl to secure her prize sat on her ice until her competitors had withdrawn.

This free ice station on Water street is a chunk of heaven on the brink of a hell. As I stood near the unwashed wretchedness my high hope and fervent prayer was that the generosity of New Yorkers might open such stations in every needy part of our city.

You need not walk far down Water street to find outlandish sights. Between a barrel and a box there was stretched on a stone, with head on a doorsill, a woman, a mother, it seemed,

A drinking dame,
A sight of shame.

Yet how sadly common is this spectacle in Water street. I write of this misery because my memory refuses to forget this picture of pity—this blasphemy on womankind, eyes filled with water, asleep, pimpled cheeks and red nose, telling the sad story of her sin and shame.

Bacchus well his sheep he knows,
For he marks them on the nose.

But the poor little babe would draw tears to the eyes of our gayest butterflies of society and the masculine grasshoppers which dance attendance upon them. It was ragged, dirty. Want of food was manifested in its sunken little eyes, its withered cheeks, its bony little fingers and its frail little ankles. There was the restless little fellow moaning and groaning to get his dinner from a breast whose maternity the demon drink had clutched by the throat and choked to death. A diamond in a gutter. If drunkenness follows hard on the heels of moderation, so a harlot may carry a rose on her bosom.

A few doors from the drunken mother and unfortunate babe was seen a little boy about 7 years old, clean, comely and bright, a little cherub that you would like to have play with your children. His shoes were delicate, his stockings matched his velvet suit, and his head was covered with a new white hat. There was an artistic knot in his ribbon necktie. He was sweet. I instinctively said: "That boy has a Christian mother, or there is a mystery about his life, a romance of some kind. The parentage of that child is not found in the slums." That boy came in the ruin of a beautiful young woman. In her face can still be traced the lines of beauty. Shame has driven her and her neat little care to this street, there to wither and melt like snow in the spring, shedding burning tears of sadness over man's villainy and woman's inhumanity to woman, "which has made countless thousands mourn."

There are 75,000 children in New York city worse than homeless, friendless and godless. It is this population that furnishes 70 per cent of our criminals. If we do not Christianize them, they will heathenize us.

We send good missionaries to save the babies of China, but let the devil take the babies at home. A minister lately told a pathetic story of the miseries of infant life in China, of the babies who were left in the streets at night to die of exposure. Four thousand were saved by the missionary women. Now that preacher did not know that the same thing is going on at home—not a willful exposure to the cold and heat, but a compulsory neglect. Could that preacher go with me through some of the benighted streets of New York and Brooklyn he could see hundred of babes in the agonies of death, dying by the inch of heat, of cold, of want of food and care. Let him see their puny and skinny little hands, the limbs withering with starvation, eyes sunken or bulging out of their sockets. They are eaten up with fever and with filth. Have we home missionaries to go out and look after these? Do our churches take up contributions to minister to these little ones of our own cities? I doubt if any pulpit in this city ever thought that this question was important enough for discussion. These homeless and godless poor little ones that we are neglecting into vice and starving into crime should through Christian charity be pressing the narrow path of life. Those cursing little lips should be singing the praises of God. The Spartans who threw their sickly children to the wild beasts were merciful compared with that indifference which in our city gives up the destitute children to be eaten up by their own depravities.

A DENIM HAMMOCK.

Directions For Making a Swing Hammock For the Baby's Use.

Denim is constantly invading new fields and taking fresh uses. Its last, as described by a writer in The Domestic Monthly, is as the constructing fabric of a child's hammock. Two yards of denim of a brownish tone were purchased and a pattern 1¼ yards long by 27 inches wide was cut out of a newspaper as a preliminary step toward making the hammock Then the denim was folded lengthwise and crosswise, so as to quarter it and find its center, and this was marked with a pin thrust through it, after which the paper pattern was folded in the same way, the center found and laid over the spread out denim so that the two materials would be exactly centered together lengthwise with each other. This left a strip of denim uncovered on each side of the paper pattern 4½ inches wide, while the ends were completely uncovered. A pencil line was then drawn so as to continue the sides of the denim in two long strips from end to end, making the strips 2 yards long by 4½ inches wide. Inside of these strips was left at each end an untouched piece of denim a little more than 13 inches long by 27 inches wide as the cloth runs. These long side strips must not be cut, as they make the swing pieces for the hammock, but the end blocks are cut out along the pencil line as far as the paper and across the end of the paper, so as to make a huge capital H of the denim. You must next cut one little slit an inch deep into the extreme corners of the bar of the H along the pencil line, so as to enable you to run up a hem on the top and bottom of the bar. After finishing this fold the long side strips lengthwise and run them up smooth, so as to make of them two long straps attached to the crossbar of the H.

Now you must take a pillow, lay it down on the denim, as you would if the hammock were in use as a bed, and lay a V plait in each side of the crossbar to bunch it into a pocket or vessel shape. Plait until you get the arrangement you wish. Stick in a few pins and double stitch through the V plait along its edges. You will now have the hammock shaped, and the next step is to run a piece of the waste denim across each end all of the width as a stay to prevent the side strips from pulling off.

After placing the stays on the ends the side straps may be firmly sewed together to make hanging loops, to which light line may be added at pleasure when needed. If the pillow and bedding will not keep far enough apart, light round sticks may be inserted anywhere across the loops by working a large eyelet in the strips to hold the stick ends.

No More Crinolines.

We had hoped better things of fashion, but nothing seems able to stop her on the road of extravagance down which she is slipping. Skirts and sleeves are becoming more and more ample. Skirts are pyramidal, and a large sized pillow would hold within the folds of a balloon sleeve. One thing, however, saves modern fashions from being utterly ungrateful—stiffness is banished, skirts hang in soft folds, and sleeves are loosely draped without a soupcon of crinoline or buckram. In fact, in this consists the novelty of the season's toilets. They repudiate all stiff linings, and the triumph of a good modiste is to accumulate hollow plaits and drooping folds without the aid of any artificial support. Of course there must be underskirts, and we shall certainly see a return to flounced starched petticoats, but the dress itself stands on the strength of its own material. The only linings used are thin silk or satinette.—Young Ladies' Journal.

Lady Jeune's Lectures.

Every now and then we hear from Lady Jeune a loud cry upon some social subject. She tells us how wicked society can be and is, and then, after she has brought a curious crowd about her, attracted by the promising hope of more scandalous disclosures, she lectures very simply and to the point. Her last work, "Lesser Questions," which is attracting a good deal of attention, is a series of characteristic studies upon the evolution of women.

Lady Jeune is well known to all of us as the Mrs. Ponsonby de Tompkyns of George Du Maurier's clever skits in Punch. She is the drawing room diplomat, somebody has said, who can engineer all Mayfair successfully enough through her rooms. She has led her husband in his profession of the law to heights he would most certainly never have attained without her, and she has kept all her claims to distinction well in evidence at the proper moment.—Munsey's.

The Summer Girl's Complexion.

A delightful and simple and soothing lotion for the skin is witch hazel and cold cream, and as the summer girl's complexion must be as soft and clear as her skill at athletic sports she should carry some of the cream in a dainty china box when she goes away.

An ounce each of white wax and spermaceti and one-quarter pint oil of almonds. Melt, pour the mixture into a marble mortar, which has been heated by being immersed for some time in boiling water, add very gradually 3 ounces of rosewater and an ounce of witch hazel and assiduously stir the mixture until an emulsion is formed, and afterward until the mixture is nearly cold.—Chicago Tribune.

Rev. Jeannette Olmstead Married.

Rev. Jeannette Olmstead of Gustavus, O., and Rev. Arthur Ferris of Scranton, Pa., were married on June 12 at the residence of Drs. W. L. and Etta L. Gilchrist, Ashtabula, O. Both bride and groom are pastors of Congregational churches. They were married by Rev. S. B. Hershey, pastor of the local Congregational church. Miss Olmstead has preached acceptably for three years at Gustavus and has been active in suffrage and temperance work.

Some Pin Money.

Pin money to the tune of $60,000 a year—$5,000 a month, or $1,200 a week—barely supplies the needs of some of the fashionable women of New York. There are twoscore women in the metropolis who have that much, and a great deal more, to spend upon purely feminine wants.

Mrs. Theodore Havemeyer, wife of one of the Sugar trust kings, possibly spends more money than any other woman in New York, says an intimate friend of the lady. She disposes of $55,000, and perhaps $65,000, a year on purely personal matters. She purchased a $1,500 fur opera cloak without knowing or asking the price and footed the bill without a question. Mrs. Havemeyer is fond of flowers. She buys lavishly and has spent as much as $600 for a great basket of orchids.

It is believed that Mrs. Willie K. spends fully $100,000 a year on trifles. It was her extravagance that widened the breach between herself and her husband. Mrs. John Jacob Astor spends about $40,000 a year in pin money. Mrs. Astor has a great fondness for diamond jewelry, and she probably possesses the greatest number of diamond trinkets of any woman in New York. Mrs. George Gould has an allowance of $50,000 a year for her personal expenses and she spends every cent of it. Mrs. Paran Stevens' weakness lay in the direction of gayly colored gowns, and she spent about $20,000 a year on her wardrobe and trifles.—New York Letter.

Woman's Influence.

Men are not apt to indulge in rowdyism in the presence of women whom they respect, and there was some force in the argument for woman suffrage made by a member of one of the Canadian legislatures a few years ago. An opponent suggested the horrible possibility that if women had the parliamentary vote some women might be elected to the provincial legislature. Another member retorted that this might prove an advantage, since if there were ladies present the honorable gentlemen would probably cease to amuse themselves by throwing rubber overshoes at one another's heads.

The recent pulling of beards in the Nebraska senate is another illustration in point. No doubt there is plenty of human nature in women, but it looks as if there were a good deal in men too.—Woman's Journal.

Decided Against the Woman.

In Florence, Or., at the municipal election in March, an entire woman's ticket was elected. As soon as the result was known a question of the constitutionality of the election came up, and it was decided that the women could not hold office except by courtesy. The matter was left to the old city council, which has decided against the women. The council will appoint men in their places. The terms of the old officers have expired, and those elected having failed to qualify, the town is without a government. This is an interference not only with the right of women to serve, but primarily with the right of men to elect whom they choose to serve them. A South Carolina judge long ago decided that if there was no law expressedly forbidding a woman to hold an office she could do so.—Woman.

Your Example May Be Followed.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic For the Week Beginning Aug. 4. Comment by Rev. S. H. Doyle.

Topic.—Our promised land and how to reach it.—Rev. xxi, 1-7, 22-27.

Whether the twenty-first chapter of Revelation refers to the condition of things when the gospel shall triumph throughout the world or is a description of the future heaven is a matter of dispute. But in either case it may refer to heaven, the promised land of the Christian (1) as representing the reality or (2) as a type of the real glory of the future existence of God's people. From necessity the Bible does not tell us much definitely about heaven, because we could not probably understand it. What is told is in figures and types, which, if we cannot fully understand, is yet sufficient to encourage us in our efforts to enter heaven, and this is undoubtedly the purpose of what is said, particularly in the passage before us.

Our promised land is here represented as "the holy city of new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride, adorned for her husband." Jerusalem was the Jews' ideal of everything that was beautiful and desirable, and such an image would fulfill their ideal of what heaven should be as it should also ours. God dwelt in this city, for it is called the "tabernacle of God." Where heaven is we do not know, but that it is where God and Christ manifest themselves in an especial manner we do know. Where God is, where Christ is, that is heaven, and there can be no heaven without them. The presence of God was to be rich with blessing, for He was to wipe all tears from the eyes of His people, and there was to be "no more death, neither sorrow nor crying; neither any more pain." What a comforting description of our promised land! But God is to be everywhere present in heaven, for the city had no temple, no special place of abode for God. Heaven is also a place of security. The gates of the city are not to be shut by day, not to be shut at all, "for there shall be no night there." No night of sorrow, of watching, of weariness, of sickness, of gloom and despair. Neither is there to be sun nor moon, for the glory of God and the Lamb are the light thereof.

How may we enter this promised land? "There shall in no wise enter into it anything that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination or maketh a lie, but they which are written in the Lamb's book of life." There is but one way to fulfill these conditions, and that is to be in Christ. His blood alone can cleanse us from sin. By His merits alone can our names be written in His book of life. Think not to enter heaven but through Christ, the door.

The Peace of God.

"The mind is like a hostelry, where crowds pass in and out, and the pavement is worn by many feet; or an exchange, where the products of every land are handled, or a palace made for a king, but invaded by a mob. Is there anywhere a power that can marshal these thoughts? Resisting the entrance of those that have no right to intrude and promoting the regulation of those that justly claim admission! The apostle says the peace of God can do it. He quoted from his own experience when he said, "The peace of God shall garrison your hearts and thoughts." When that peace is within, ruling there, it reduces chaos to cosmos, confusion to order, as a gentle mother in a family of boisterous children.—Rev. F. B. Meyer.

What the Cross Symbolizes.

Christ's cross is a standard of service. The altar of sacrifice, with its offering of submission, becomes the standard of divine service. Sacrifice for others and submission to God's will are the elements of Christian service which are symbolized in the cross. To live selfish, thoughtless lives, disregardful of the needs of the world, caring for our own things and not for the good of others, is to live far from Calvary's cross. Selfishness has no place in Christian service, for selfishness disowns the cross. Submission to God's will in doing or in bearing is highest Christian service. The cross is the symbol of the highest service that we can render to God.—Christian Intelligencer.

Acting Toward God.

Christianity, as life, begins with acting toward God as a child acts toward father and mother. Tho heathen thought of God as their enemy. Christianity has been fighting this idea for 18 centuries and has not yet overcome it. The first idea a child should have of God is that of a great Father, to whom he can tell his joys as well as troubles. This being stayed by God deprives failure of anxiety and disappointment. We generally say we do the best we can and leave the rest to God. We should rather leave all to God and then do the best we can.—Rev. Dr. Parkhurst.

Christian Endeavor Jottings.

In Scotland they have established Christian Endeavor among the blind.

At an Endeavor service held last December in one of the towns of Victoria, Australia, one young lady walked more than three miles through a severe rainstorm.

Most of the young men of the Central Congregational society of New Orleans have given up the use of tobacco. A good Christian endeavor.

Some time ago the ship Linlithgowshire stopped at San Diego for a few days, and one evening, although the rain fell in torrents, a party of four Floating society workers went out in a small boat to the ship and held a service in the cabin. They were rewarded for their efforts by having ten of the sailors acknowledge Christ, and pledge themselves to the better life.

INEBRIATES ARE INCOMPETENT.

Not Fitted to Fill Positions Requiring Skill and Coolness.

Recently a great railroad corporation gathered all the facts concerning the men and the conditions of every accident which had occurred on its lines for five years. When tabulated, it appeared that 40 per cent of all accidents were due altogether or in part to the failures of men who were drinking; that in 18 per cent there was strong suspicion of similar causes, yet no clear proof. In one year over $1,000,000 worth of property was destroyed by the failures of beer drinking engineers and switchmen. The company's rules requiring temperate men for all positions are more and more rigorously enforced. Engineers find that practically they are unable to do good work while using spirits even in small doses. The coolness and presence of mind so essential in their work are broken up by alcohol in any form.

Trainmen, men exposed to the weather, reach the same conclusion, if they are practical men. The startling mortality of brakemen is referable in many cases to the use of alcohol to drive out the cold or keep awake in long hours of service. Each year the duties and responsibilities of railroad men increase, and men more temperate, accurate, prompt and careful in their work are required. Only absolutely temperate men can do this work for any length of time; all others fail and are dangerous in their weakness.

A western road permitted an inebriate, who was really an able man, to continue as a claim agent adjusting accounts against the company. His drinking was supposed to be an aid in the settlement of claims with other drinking men. After his death a temperate man who filled his place saved several thousand dollars a year by doing the same work, repeating the common experience that inebriates are always more or less incompetent.—Journal of Inebriety.

EFFECTS OF INEBRIETY.

When Figured Up They Make a Sad Condition of Human Affairs.

The man and woman of intemperate habits cannot realize their pitiable condition as it really exists. The evil habit begins by an indifferent effort to protect their natures from the evil which at first the victim falsely imagines to possess charms, for we even know that his satanic majesty is said to have possessed his own peculiar charms, but the evil habit grows from day to day beyond the first temporary exhilaration. Physiology truly teaches us that an organ or set of organs overexcited by any stimulant becomes weak and deranged. Therefore if the brain be overstimulated by alcoholic spirits it becomes weak, and the possessor of such brain is devoid of the vital courage to resist the temptation or habit of indulging in what at first was thought only to be a seductive pleasure, but which now has its fiendish fetters thoroughly riveted about him.

Not only does the brain suffer, but all the other organs of the body, both the voluntary and the involuntary, but the brain is the origin and center both of the mental and physical powers of the body. We can understand what the effect will be if we constantly keep the brain matter or nerve centers continually bathed in alcohol, for it is carried to the brain through the poisonous fiery blood. It is true that a great per cent of the alcohol drank is eliminated from the system by the lungs and other excretive organs before it reaches the brain, but enough is left to disarrange the equilibrium of its functions. In habitual drunkards we find organic derangement. The constant stimulation starts an unnatural growth of a fibrous nature, crowding and pressing upon the anatomical structure of the brain tissue cells, thereby displacing them. We see the effects upon the cerebellum by the unreliable exertions of the muscular system in the trembling and unsteady gait. We see the effects upon the cerebrum by the loss of memory and a distaste for mental energy. We have figured up a few of the effects of inebriety and find them to make a lamentable condition of human affairs.—Dr. W. C. McNeal in Denver Golden Age.

Good Seed In Great Britain.

Of the 2,304 newspapers in Great Britain 570 are distinctly temperance journals, a fact which shows the rapid rate at which the total abstinence sentiment is being sown.

Drink Habit In Belgium.

Belgium's revenue from the drink habit has grown in 40 years from 4,000,000 to 33,000,000 francs, crime increasing 200 per cent at the same time and insanity 128 per cent.

To a Glass of Beer.

I have kissed your lips when I thought they were sweet;
I have drunk when I thought it was nectar I sipped;
A bright eye's bright sparkle mine eyes used to meet,
I have thought, when you upward were tipped.
But those lips were as false as a siren's song,
The nectar as bitter as gall,
The sparkle a will-the-wisp luring along
A victim to thy deadly thrall.

I have laughed with the merry, our glasses on high;
I have joined in the song and the jest;
I have dreamed that in this did all happiness lie;
I have thought them the bravest and best.
But such laughter's the seed of an awful despair;
Such songs have for echoes a moan;
Such happiness ends but in sorrow and care;
With the "bravest and best" it has flown.

Once hope you inspired—youth's best, brightest treasure;
In each drop seemed a smile fortune fair on me cast.
All this I have dreamed while I sought endless pleasure
'Neath the froth that a moment did last.
But, Hope, you will fade like a poor withered flower.
In each drop sleeps a fountain of tears,
And down 'neath the froth that foams for an hour
Are the dregs that are tasted for years.

SABBATH SCHOOL.

LESSON VI, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, AUG. 11.

Text of the Lesson, Num. xxi, 4-9—Memory Verses, 8, 9—Golden Text, John iii, 14—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

4. "And they journeyed from Mount Hor by the way of the Red sea, to compass the land of Edom, and the soul of the people was much discouraged because of the way." Edom was Esau, Jacob's brother So the Edomites were near kinsmen of Israel, according to the flesh. Yet they refused to allow Israel to pass through their land, although Israel offered to pay for the water they might use while passing through (xx, 18-21). In the previous chapter we have also an account of the death of Miriam in the first month, and the death of Aaron in the fifth month of the fortieth year. See chapter xxxiii, 38. We find Israel in this lesson about where we saw them in the last lesson, but it is 38 years later in the story. Hundreds of thousands have died in the wilderness, and a new generation has grown up, yet of those 38 years of wanderings because of their unbelief we know scarcely anything. They were out of fellowship, and it was lost time. We are reminded of the 13 years of Abram's life of which we know nothing (Gen. xvi, 16; xvii, 1), and of the lost time of the Nazarite (Num. vi, 12). When we are out of fellowship with God through unbelief or worldliness, the time is lost. We are reminded that the journey of life is often a weary one to the flesh, but if we are in Christ, who is "the way" (John xiv, 6), and will continually "consider Him" and "look unto Him" (Heb. xii, 2, 3), we will be greatly helped and strengthened and will not be discouraged, even though our own relations turn against us. Think of the brother of Abel, the brethren of Joseph and of David, and even the brethren of Jesus did not at one time believe in Him (John vii, 5).

5. "And the people spake against God and against Moses, Wherefore have ye brought us up out of Egypt to die in the wilderness? for there is no bread, neither is there any water, and our soul loatheth this light bread." Ps. lxxviii tells the story of their sin from beginning to end. In Deut. ix, 24, Moses says, "Ye have been rebellious against the Lord from the day that I knew you." In Num. xi, 1, it is written that "when the people complained, it displeased the Lord." And in Ps. xcv, 10, the Lord Himself says "Forty years long was I grieved with this generation." What a relief to turn to Him of whom it is said by the Father, "This is My Beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased," and to hear the Son Himself say, "I do always those things that please Him (Math. xvii, 5; John viii, 29). The Word for us is, "Do all things without murmurings or disputings." "Be content with such things as ye have" (Phil. ii, 1-4; Heb. xiii, 5; see also I Cor. x, 6-13).

6. "And the Lord sent fiery serpents among the people, and they bit the people and much people of Israel died." In James iii, 8, it is said that the tongue is an unruly evil full of deadly poison, and of sinners it is said in Rom. iii, 13, "The poison of asps is under their lips." The people had been slandering God with the poison of their tongues and now they are reaping as they sowed. They sowed the wind and they are reaping the whirlwind (Gal. vi, 7; Hos. viii, 7). Sometimes a swift reckoning overtakes the sinner, as in the case of Korah and his company, Achan also, and Ananias and Sapphira, but it is always preceded by much long suffering and patient forbearance, as in the days of Noah. "He that being often reproved, hardeneth his neck, shall suddenly be destroyed and that without remedy" (Prov. xxix, 1). "Because there is wrath, beware lest He take thee away with His stroke; then a great ransom cannot deliver thee" (Job. xxxvi, 18).

7. "Therefore the people came to Moses and said, We have sinned, for we have spoken against the Lord and against thee. Pray unto the Lord that He take away the serpents from us. And Moses prayed for the people." In Ps. cvii we read again and again that they cried unto the Lord in their trouble, and He heard and delivered them. He is full of compassion and forgiveness, and for us it is written that "if we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness" (I John i, 9). There is a better way to live, however, than that of constant sinning and repenting. We may walk in the light as He is in the light, have fellowship with Him and rejoice in the blood that cleanseth from all sin (I John i, 7). We shall never on this side of the glory cease to need that cleansing blood, but we may have wonderful victory over sin and fellowship with God.

8. "And the Lord said unto Moses, Make thee a fiery serpent and set it upon a pole, and it shall come to pass that every one that is bitten when he looketh upon it shall live." How strange the remedy, a likeness of that which slew them! How suggestive of the Lord Jesus, who took upon Him our likeness, the likeness of sinful flesh, and was made sin for us (Rom. viii, 3; II Cor. v, 21). The serpent brought death, and the likeness of the serpent brought life. By Adam came sin and death and the curse. By the Son of God, in the likeness of Adam made a curse for us, come life and health and peace (Rom. v, 12, 17; Gal. iii, 13). How simple the way of life! Though all but dead from the serpent's bite, if but the glazing eye could see the brazen serpent there was life.

9. "And Moses made a serpent of brass and put it upon a pole, and it came to pass that if a serpent had bitten any man, when he beheld the serpent of brass, he lived." In John iii, 14, 15, see the Saviour's application of this to Himself. Write your own name in full in John iii, 16, instead of the words "the world" and "whosoever," and believe that God means you, and the believing look upon Him who died for you, in the light of John i, 12, will surely bring you life. If C. H. Spurgeon, now resting from his labors, passed from death to life by a look, in obedience to Isa. xlv, 22, you can do the same if you will. The atonement has been made; the work of providing redemption has been finished. Christ died for our sins, according to the Scriptures; He was delivered for our offenses and raised again for our justification, and now the penitent sinner who honestly receives Him is instantly justified from all things and made accepted in the Beloved (I Cor. xv, 3; Rom. iv, 25; Eph. i, 6, 7; Acts xiii, 38, 39).

ILLINOIS PICKINGS.

NEWS NOTES OF INTEREST FROM HERE AND THERE.

Reports by Telegraph of Important Happenings in Our Own State During the Past Few Days—News of Interest to the People of Illinois.

SPRINGFIELD, July 24.—The house was the business end of the legislature. Hogan's labor arbitration bill was passed with only one man—Murray—voting no. Merriam offered his resolutions calling for an investigation of newspaper charges of boodlery in the legislature. He said that if the charges were not proven the papers should be prosecuted for libel. Others said the resolutions should specify, in which case they would vote for them. A motion to suspend the rules was lost—89 to 30.

In the senate a bill was introduced permitting men on juries in criminal cases who admit they have read the newspaper trials of the same and have formed opinions, but who swear they can impartially try such cases; the state is also given the right to appeal. A bill to increase the state tax levy $500,000 a year for the next two years was reported favorably.

In the joint Republican caucus a resolution that all subjects named by the governor be answered either by legislation or resolution was adopted. Several resolutions calling for early adjournment were defeated.

SPRINGFIELD, Ills., July 25.—The senate refused to suspend the rules and pass the Hogan arbitration bill. Bills were introduced to tax gas and electric light plants 3 per cent. on their gross earnings, 2 per cent. to be used to create a fund to build municipal plants; to tax telephones $2 each instrument; to tax life insurance companies 2 per cent. on their premiums. In the house a bill was introduced making it embezzlement punishable with not longer than ten years in the penitentiary for a public officer to take for his own use the interest on public funds in his care. The revenue bills were then discussed for a time, and no action taken.

SPRINGFIELD, July 26.—An attempt in the senate to pass a resolution to consider all the subjects in the governor's call was defeated and the resolution went over. The labor arbitration bill was sent to third reading after amendment. The bill to provide $500,000 additional revenue a year was advanced to third reading, as was the bill to tax express companies. In the house a bill to tax owners of race tracks and permitting and regulating pool selling and racing was introduced, and a petition from Chicago citizens asking its passage was read. The revenue bill was considered and amended, and a bill taxing base ball games and prohibiting Sunday playing introduced.

SPRINGFIELD, July 27.—The senate was in session just ten minutes and a bare quorum of senators was present. Hogan's house arbitration bill, with committee amendments, was read, amendments adopted, and the bill advanced to third reading. The house in committee of the whole considered the revenue bill, which was amended, reported to the house and ordered printed. Both houses adjourned to Monday.

State Committees of Illinois.

SPRINGFIELD, July 27.—The Republican state central committee has been called to meet in Springfield July 30, and it is announced authoritatively that the Democratic committee will be called for Tuesday or Wednesday of next week. The Republican call says the meeting is to take action on the death of Representative Remann, and to take appropriate action on other matters of moment which will be brought to its attention. It is rumored that among the "other matters of moment" to be brought to the attention of the committee is the rumored boodling in the legislature.

Rowing Races at Clear Lake.

CLEAR LAKE, Ia., July 25.—There was a big crowd at the last day of the Iowa Amateur Rowing association. Ottumwa won the senior doubles, half mile; Sioux City the senior singles, half mile; Sioux City the senior fours, half mile.

Game Storage House Raided.

KEWANEE, Ills., July 25.—Game Warden Blow, of Chicago, has made another raid on the storage house of H. Clay Merritt, and secured forty large sealed zinc barrels full of unseasonable birds. The penalty is $5 a bird, and it is said Merritt has 4,000 on hand, which, in case of fines, would cost him $20,000. M. R. Bortree, of Chicago, president of the National Game Board and Fish Protective association, is in the city ready to prosecute. Merritt will try to prove that game bought in season may be stored and sold at will.

Fifty Persons Were Injured.

PARIS, July 29.—Further details have been received here from St. Briouc in regard to the wreck of the train crowded with pilgrims returning from the shrine of St. Dauray. The accident, it appears, was due to the derailment of the engine. Twenty-four carriages were thrown on top of each other and six of them were completely wrecked. There was a terrible scene after the disaster. Twelve mutilated corpses have been extracted from the ruins and fifty persons were injured. Of this number twenty people were seriously injured.

Four Children Burned to Death.

BIG STONE GAP, Va., July 29.—John Hick's house burned, four of his children were burned to death and his wife and one child were badly burned. The fire took place at night and was not discovered until it was too late to do more than save the parents and one child on the lower floor.

The Silver Debate.

CHICAGO, July 25.—A statement has gone out from this city that the Harvey-Horr debate is attracting little attention here; that the sessions are attended by but few people, etc. The fact is that the sessions can be attended by but few, as there is room for not more than 150 in the hall where the sessions are held. It is also a fact that the interest is great, not only in the city but all over the country. The attendance is limited to these invited, and invitations are rarely neglected. All the papers here print the debates in some shape, and several print them in full. There is a great demand all over the country for good synopses of what the two debaters say of the subject.

Y. M. C. A. Building Damaged.

WASHINGTON, July 25.—The Y. M. C. A. building on New York avenue, near the treasury department was almost destroyed by fire. C. C. Bryan's fine grocery store adjoins the association's building on the west and was badly burned, while the hardware store of James B. Lamie was also damaged. The Y. M. C. A. building was valued at about $35,000, and was fully insured. Mr. Bryan's loss may reach $20,000, and is fully covered by insurance.

"Soo" Road Raises Wages.

MINNEAPOLIS, July 25.—The Soo road has raised the pay of its engineers and brakemen to the schedule in force prior to August, 1893. Other classes of employes will be given similar restorations.

Death of Rev. Edward Beecher.

BROOKLYN, July 29.—Rev. Dr. Edward Beecher, brother of the famous divine, Henry Ward Beecher, died at his home, 182 Macon street, yesterday. He was 93 years of age, and spent the greater part of his life in the ministry.

Illinois Firemen's Tournament.

DECATUR, July 25.—The State Firemen's tournament is the largest in the history of the event. Edwardsville won the band contest, first class, and Clinton second class. Lincoln won the free-for-all hub-and-hub hose race, and Mt. Carroll the consolation. Monmouth won the free-for-all hub-and-hub hook and ladder race, and Havana the consolation. Mt. Carroll won the novelty hose race, Monmouth the novelty hook and ladder, and Lincoln the novelty coupling.

"The Crack Train of the World."

A prominent New York merchant and importer of leather goods said in our hearing the other day, "I have traveled all over Europe and America, and I consider the train which leaves Chicago every day at 6:30 P. M. for St. Paul and Minneapolis, via the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway, 'The Crack Train of the World.'"

In which statement thousands of others heartily concur.

MISS FLAGG'S
LATEST NEW BOOK!
"A Prisoner of Hope."
COMPLETE IN ONE LARGE HANDSOME VOLUME.
Price, $1.25.
We heartily commend this new work, by Elizabeth E. Flagg, to all our friends. The narrative originated in her personal experience, two or three years ago, when she sought relief and restoration from the results of a painful accident. In that search she availed herself of a unique healer in New Jersey, whom she graphically described, at that time, in her weekly letters to this paper. The ideas created in her mind by that experience form the basis of this well-told story, and thoughtful readers will peruse it with interest. While all may not agree with its deductions, ministers of the Gospel, students in seminaries and intelligent home circles will find it pleasant food for thought. We sell it for $1.25 per copy postage prepaid.

HOLMES HOLDS THE RECORD AS A PRODIGY IN CRIME.

The Quinlans Now Believed To Be Particeps Criminis, and Even Pitzel's Hands Not Unstained with Blood—Murder of Another Man Suspected and Two More Women on the Roll.

CHICAGO, July 25.—As the result of finding part of a human skeleton, believed that of little Pearl Conner, in the subcellar at the Holmes "Castle" on Sixty-third street, Chief Badenoch has decided to hold Joseph C. Owens and Patrick Quinlan, the two janitors of the building, fer further investigation. The chief of police came to the conclusion to held the men after an examination which was conducted in his office, and which lasted nearly five hours. From their answers to questions Chief Badenoch believes both men have guilty knowledge of the criminal operations of the man Holmes, and the finding of the bones now leaves no doubt that in addition to his known swindling operations Holmes is also guilty of murder in Chicago.

Found Another Quicklime Bed.

The workmen at the "Castle" continuing their search in another portion of the basement, found a second bed of quicklime. In this, just before their labors ended for the day, they discovered one of the metacarpel bones of a human body. They expect today to uncover other bodies buried in this charnel house of Englewood. The body found early in the day is supposedly that of Pearl Conner, daughter of Julia L. Conner, the former wife of C. L. Conner, once of Muscatine, Ia. Both mother and child have been missing since the summer of 1892. The woman was betrayed by Holmes, her husband secured a divorce, and she lived with Holmes, and some time in July or August, 1892, she and the child disappeared.

Holmes Says the Police Are "Off."

PHILADELPHIA, July 25.—H. H. Holmes was visited in his cell by his counsel, William A. Shoemaker. For two hours or more Holmes spoke freely of the bones and other fragments of human anatomy found in his "Castle" in Chicago. After the interview Shoemaker told an Associated Press reporter the substance of his client's statements. He said the benes were not those of any of the persons he has been accused of killing. He had been engaged in many insurance swindles, he said, and one of these the insurance companies "got onto." The police were "away eff."

Explains About the Bodies.

His plan was to procure bedies from graveyards which were to be passed off as the bodies of the insured persons. One of these schemes required the bedies of a man, a woman, and a boy. He got them and had them embalmed, put them in trunks, and stored them in a wareheuse. Before he could use them the warehouseman notified him that the trunks must be taken away or he would sell them. Holmes took them away and buried them in separate places. Said he: "Where they are the police must find out."

CHICAGO, July 26.—More proof has been found that Mrs. Julia L. Conner is dead and that she was made way with by H. H. Holmes. As late as November, 1892, Holmes, as shown by letters which have been found, was writing her parents as to her whereabouts and stating that she had gone to St. Louis. But on June 5, 1892, he wrote to her brother-in-law, Ira Yantis, at Waukesha, Wis., giving him a fictitious address as to her whereabouts. In digging at the "castle" the shoulder blade of an adult human being has been found, and a socket bone, supposed to be that of a child.

Two well dressed women have called on the chief of police and told him that a 16-year-old girl, daughter of wealthy and respectable parents, became acquainted with Holmes during the fall of 1893 and afterwards disappeared. This makes the seventh woman, as follows: Kitty Kelley, a stenographer who worked for Holmes; Minnie and Annie Williams, Alice Pitzel, Julia Conner and daughter and the girl just heard of. Conner, the divorced husband of Julia Conner, is here.

CHICAGO, July 27.—Mrs. Patrick Quinlan has lost her defiant spirit in the police inquisition. Two days of "sweatbox" experience proved more than she could bear with equanimity, and she told the police things which before had not been acknowledged. It resulted in making the police more than ever suspicious of her husband and the part he took in Holmes' mysterious business. Chief of Police Badenoch last night said: "The evidence secured from Mrs. Quinlan is highly important. She confessed to abetting Holmes in insurance swindles, and that is a step in the right direction. Patrick Quinlan up to this hour firmly protests that he was mere a hirling and did not know of Holmes' affairs at all.

"Mrs. Quinlan's evidence was that after Mrs. Conner disappeared it became necessary for Holmes to produce her to collect some insurance. Mrs. Quinlan consented to act in her place. She went to the insurance office and swere she was Mrs. Conner and signed that name. I think she was wanted in the collection of fire insurance that was secured by fraud. This opens the way to other deals, which it is necessary to know to fasten the guilt of many of the supposed murders." Mrs. Quinlan is locked up in a cell at the Harrison street station.

According to the statements of Jonathan L. Belknap it was Christmas night four years and six months ago that Mrs. Julia L. Conner was killed. He believes she was asphyxiated in her room while she slept. Her room was a small one adjoining the dark bath room in the "Castle." When all was still in the house Holmes switched on the gas. When the deed was accomplished Holmes stealthily admitted himself through the secret door of the bathreom. He lifted the inanimate form of Mrs. Conner from the bed and carried it to the bath room.

Then placing the body in the bathtub he proceeded to cut it to pieces and fed them to a hot fire in the stove. When all was dene he took the ashes and parts that had not been entirely burned and buried them in a mass of quicklime in the cellar. Colonel Belknap is the uncle of the father of the Wilmette wife of Holmes. He says he and his wife spent Christmas with Holmes, and he helped Holmes to carry the new famous stove through a secret trapdoor into the bathroom adjoining Mrs. Conner's room. That night, he claims, Mrs. Conner disappeared.

According to the reperts up to date there are ten nersens on Holmes' death list now, six of whom are women, two girls, one man and a boy, as follows: B. F. Pitzel, Howard Pitzel (boy), Ida and Alice Pitzel (girls), Minnie and Annie Williams, Emily Cigrande, Mrs. Conner and her daughter Gertrude.

CHICAGO, July 29.—Yesterday's develepments in the Holmes investigation closed the nets till tighter around Pat Quinlan, and added mere proof to that already obtained that he was an accomplice and fully cognizant of most if not all his deeds. The police gave out the name of Edward Chappell as a man who not only had articulated skeletons fer Holmes, but also did much of the work of constructing the mysterious tanks for acid and lime in the basement of the "Castle." The further the police get into the matter the more striking the fact seems that all the elaborate plans were part of a skillfully concocted scheme for murder. It is thought that the proof now in hand is such that the Quinlans can be arraigned fer murder. More developments are coming to the front every few hours.

Inspector Fitzpatrick was put into possession of facts which weave a closer web of proof around Holmes, and add another victim to the already long list. This information was furnished by Attorney George B. Chamberlain, general manager of the Lafayette Mercantile Agency. This murder is shown to have been prior to or during 1891. B. F. Pitzel, who later fell a victim, was a participant in the murder of this man, and Chamberlain says he was equally guilty with Holmes. The crime was committed in Chicago either in 1891 or early in 1892. Again the victim was traced to the Holmes building in Englewood.

The police do not think this body has been found. The skeletons that were articulated were furnished a year and two years later. It is the belief that the body was dissected and cremated, or buried deep in quicklime in the basement. The name of this victim is kept from the public to allow the police to work up further evidence. It is believed that this was the first victim of Holmes. The police have found a woman's footprint in a "blind" vault in the "Castle" and conclude from this that a woman was killed there. Another alleged victim of Holmes is a Mrs. Lee, who disappeared during the World's fair.

Still another alleged victim is Emily Van Tassel, who is another missing girl. She was about 16 years old. At Toronto it is said that the evidence that Holmes murdered Alice and Nellie Pitzel is conclusive.

On the other hand a local newspaper is in receipt of an anonymous letter which says Minnie Williams, Mrs. Conner, an unknown man and a little boy are living on Wabash avenue, somewhere between Forty-first and Forty-second streets, in this city. The writer says he is a friend of Holmes and he knew Minnie Williams and Mrs. Conner well. He claims that he met them last week. He also says Holmes will be able to produce Annie Williams at the proper time.

Another local paper says the physicians have examined the bones found in the "Castle" basement and pronounce them "soup bones." Some hair about a foot long was found matted together with what appears to be blood, but it may be mud. Another friend of Holmes' named Mischoff has written to Philadelphia say he has just returned from Europe and is sure Holmes wasn't in Toronto at the time of the alleged murder of the Pitzel children.

A telegram from Anderson, Ind., the home of Emeline Cigrande, says that in an interview her father, referring to a letter from Holmes to him stating that his daughter had gone to Michigan and been married to a man named Phelps, that the fact that they were to have gone to Michigan to be married and no point given by them is conclusive that Holmes made sure of erasing every clue. Even though she was married it would be impossible to find her marriage record.

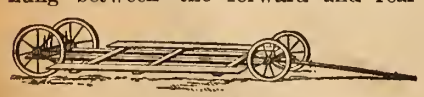
HOW AND WHEN TO IRRIGATE.

As Told by Lute Wilcox of Colorado In The American Agriculturist.



So much depends upon the proper application of water that irrigation is often a failure because of a lack of attention to this part of the work. Evenness of distribution at the proper time is very important. Generally speaking, all ditches in the temperate zone should be ready to receive water by May 30. The first water is turned upon the pasture, meadow or orchard. Let the water remain until the ground is thoroughly wet and soft as deep as it was plowed, then let the water out of the ditch a little farther on, continuing until the field is all irrigated.

Every crop tells when it wants water. The grasses, clovers and small grains have a language which cannot be mistaken. Whenever their green color becomes very dark and sickly turn on the water. When corn needs moisture its leaves become curled in the morning. Salsify needs but little if any water after it is well under way. Carrots cannot bear an irrigation by flooding after they are half grown; if covered with water the crowns decay. All species of the cabbage family require a great deal of water. All plants in a dry climate should be pushed in their early stages by a judicious application of the proper amount of water. In general too much water is applied, which is a sad mistake. When to irrigate and the proper amount of water to apply the farmer himself must decide. The humidity or dryness of the atmosphere, the condition and position of the soil, must be considered in a common sense light. Any one can soon learn about the degree of moisture in the soil necessary for the healthy growth of a plant, and the nearer uniform the condition of the moisture the more vigorous and healthy will be the crop.

The best time to irrigate is early in the morning before the sun becomes hot or in the evening when it is about to go below the horizon. A good time is when a cloud comes up and a shower is expected. The work should not be done when the sun is shining hot, as the plants are liable to be scalded. I prefer beginning at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, often keeping it up until midnight, especially on moonlight nights. At the Utah station the total yield of straw and grain was 15 per cent greater on plats irrigated at night.

Corn Fodder Wagon.

It is low, being scarcely a foot above the ground. It possesses the advantage of a low sled without the hard draft for the horses. A long and light frame is hung between the forward and rear wheels of a common two horse wagon. A reach 20 feet long places the axles of the wheels 18 feet apart. The reach is a round pole selected from the borders of the woods and having a downward ourve, so as to bring the platform near the ground. The frame is hung by chains beneath the axles. The frame has 14 feet space in length between the wheels and is 7 feet in width. Small shocks of corn are placed rapidly on this platform and drawn where they are to remain, set in double rows, like the double row shocks of wheat. It is found a great labor saver.—Country Gentleman.

A LABOR SAVING WAGON.

Irrigation Methods.

A Nebraska correspondent of American Agriculturist writes: I have observed irrigation methods in California, Arizona, Utah, Wyoming, Nebraska and many other states, and my conclusions as to methods and results are as follows: 1. The best method is the old and well known one of gravitation, taking the water from streams and conveying in ditches to the land where it is to be used. Subirrigation, where it is practicable, gives good results. Where water is raised by pumping with a lift of 10 to 40 feet, a water wheel or turbine wheel connected with a centrifugal pump is cheapest and most satisfactory. Windmills for lifting water for the ordinary farmer's garden or small truck farming are desirable, provided wooden tanks are used or the soil is such that a watertight reservoir can be built. Centrifugal pumps, water elevators or other pumps when driven by steam or gasoline engines, horse power or other expensive methods, are impracticable. I do not regard any method practicable for general grain farming except where water flows direct from streams in ditches at nominal cost.

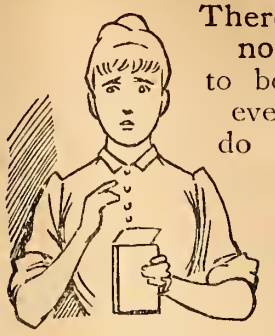
A Three Years' Rotation.

At a meeting of Wisconsin farmers a speaker described a three years rotation he practiced on a farm in Kalamazoo county, Mich. This is corn, planted on a clover sod, the crop cut in the fall, the land sown to wheat and to clover in the spring. This is cut one year; the land manured and plowed for corn again. Usually the manure is drawn to the fields as made and spread thinly. When the snow is deep or other reasons make it unadvisable to draw the manure at once, it is kept in a yard, the horse and cow manure being mixed together. It is preferred to apply the manure thinly over a considerable acreage rather than more thickly at longer intervals.

Making Dovetailed Hives.

A new kink in putting together dovetailed hives is reported in Gleanings In Bee Culture. A piece of tin bent at right angles long enough and wide enough to cover the ends of the dovetails is securely nailed to the corners of the hive. There was no chance for sun and rain to get in their warping effects.

Western Peppermint.



The Seattle (Wash.) Post-Intelligencer tells that peppermint has been found to do well in that state, and a company has been formed to grow this and other roots near Kennewick, east of the mountains, and an importation made of about 500,000 roots, said to be the first of the kind ever brought over the Northern Pacific road. The company has already about 19 acres planted in peppermint and spearmint. The roots do well there, and there is a large demand for the oils. The roots are worth about $150 per acre.

Neither calomel nor any other injurious drug is contained in Ayer's Pills. They are composed of the active principles of the best vegetable cathartics, and their use is always attended with marked benefit. For a sluggish liver or for constipation, nothing surpasses Ayer's Pills.

There's no Danger to be feared, even if you do use too much Pearline in the washing. If there's any danger of damage at all, it's when you use too little. In that case, you'll have to begin that dreadful rubbing—and carloads of Pearline couldn't do as much damage to your clothes as that will. Follow the directions on the package—that's the best way of all. But remember, too much won't hurt anything. It's only a waste of good Pearline.

MASONIC CHART.

ILLUSTRATING THE RELATION OF SOME OF THE DEGREES AND RITES IN FREEMASONRY TO EACH OTHER.

The accompanying chart represents one hundred and forty two degrees.

1. The American Rite of 13 degrees;
2. The Scotch Rite of 33 degrees;
3. The Egyptian Rite of 96 degrees.
4. The Mystic Shrine of one degree.
5. The Eastern Star of 5 degrees for Master Masons and for women. These are side degrees, and not genuine masonry.

The Symbolic degrees, or Blue Lodge of three degrees, are common to every Masonic rite, whether American, Scotch, or Egyptian, or whichever of the Masonic rites, named in Mackey's Masonic Encyclopedia one may choose to investigate.

This chart shows in the Blue Lodge the position of the Worshipful Master and some of the other officers of the lodge. Several positions of the candidate who is being initiated are also shown. In the Master Mason's degree is recognized the murder, burial and resurrection scene so full of religious significance to Freemasons.

Knight Templarism Illustrated. 341 pages, cloth, $1.00; paper, 50c.
A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery.

Scotch Rite Masonry Illustrated. 2 vols. Per vol., cloth, $1.00; paper, 65c.
The complete illustrated ritual of the entire Scottish Rite, comprising all the Masonic degrees from 3rd to 33rd inclusive. The first three degrees are common to all the Masonic Rites, and are fully and accurately given in "Freemasonry Illustrated." Vol. I comprises the degrees from 3rd to 18th inclusive.
Vol. II comprises the degrees from 19th to 33rd inclusive, with the signs, grips, tokens and passwords from 1st to 33rd degree inclusive.

Hand-Book of Freemasonry. 274 pages, flexible cloth, 50c.
By E. Ronayne, Past Master of Keystone Lodge No. 639, Chicago. Gives the complete standard ritual of the first three degrees of Freemasonry.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. 110 pages, paper, 25c.
The genuine old Morgan book republished.

Allyn's Ritual of Freemasonry. By Avery Allyn. Cloth, $5.00.
Contains the fully Illustrated Ritual of the Blue Lodge, Chapter Council and Commandery, 11 of the Scotch Rite Degrees, several Masonic side degrees and what is termed a Key to the Phi Beta Kappa, and the Orange Societies.

Duncan's Masonic Ritual and Monitor. Cloth, $2.50.
Profusely illustrated with explanatory engravings, and containing the ritual and work of the order for the seven degrees, including the Royal Arch. Though extensively used as an Instruction Book and one of the best in the market, it is not as accurate as "Freemasonry Illustrated."

Richardson's Monitor of Freemasonry. Cloth, $1.25; paper, 75c.
Contains the ceremonies of Lodges, Chapters, Encampments, etc. Illustrated. Although extensively used in conferring the higher degrees, it is not only very incomplete but inaccurate especially as regards the first seven degrees, and as to the higher degrees it gives but a description and general idea of the degrees rather than the full ritual.

Look to the East. A ritual of the first three Masonic Degrees by Ralph Lester. Cloth, $2.00.
Notwithstanding the high price this book is very inferior in every way to Freemasonry Illustrated or the Handbook of Freemasonry at a quarter the price.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void: or Freemasonry Self-Convicted. This is a book for the times. The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. 207 pages. Postpaid, 40 cents each.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the Grand Lodge of Illinois. Judge Daniel H. Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. H. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge, but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each.

General Washington Opposed to Secret Societies. This is a re-publication of Governor Joseph Ritner's "Vindication of General Washington from the Stigma of Adherence to Secret Societies," communicated to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, March 8, 1837, at their special request. To this is added the fact that three high Masons were the only persons who opposed a vote of thanks to Washington on his retirement to private life—undoubtedly because they considered him a seceding Freemason. 10cts each.

Morgan's Exposition, Abduction and Murder, and Oaths of 33 Degrees. Composed of "Freemasonry Exposed," by Capt. Wm. Morgan;" "History of the Abduction and Murder of Morgan;" "Valance's Confession of the Murder of Capt. Wm. AT JACKSON'S HOLE.

Latest News Indicates That the Settlers Are All Right.

Market Lake, Ida., July 29.—The latest and most authentic reports indicate that the settlers in Jackson's Hole are unharmed, and that no massacre has taken place. Federal troops have gone into the Jackson's Hole country, but the probability is that when they reach the scene of the reported massacre they will find, instead of the smoking ruins of cabins and the mutilated corpses of settlers and their families, the same old camp of Jackson's Hole and a lot of healthy, husky settlers, who will perhaps be greatly surprised to learn of their reported death. In fact, there is now almost positive evidence that there has been no massacre.

The following tales have been afloat in the last couple of days: That fifty or more people were slaughtered by Indians three night ago; that sixteen families in the Jackson's Hole country were massacred; that the Lemhi Indians, 200 strong—that is, the young bucks—have already crossed the track at Beaver Canyon to join the Bannocks; that thirty-five Fort Hall Bannocks, with war paint and feathers flying, marched through the town of Idaho Falls, a few miles to the south of Market Lake, Thursday afternoon on their way to the Teton country; that all the passes into the "hostile" country are guarded by Indians and that that is the reason why no whites come out to give reliable news.

The story of the fifty whites killed in the Jackson's Hole country comes to Market Lake third or fourth handed without names or any other information than is borne in the bare statement given. The same is true of the "sixteen families" story. All told, there are not 500 Indians on the Lemhi reservation when all are at home, so it is impossible for the number of bucks quoted to have left the agency for the excited country. The thirty-five Fort Hall Bannocks, who in war array marched through Idaho Falls, were five Bannocks traveling on passes given by Agent Teter.

Indian Agent Teter in his report to the Indian commission of his investigations of the Jackson Hole trouble says: "From reliable information I have no hesitation in saying that for every elk killed unlawfully by the Indians two are killed unlawfully by the settlers. The majority of the citizens of Jackson's Hole are men who have left their country for their country's good. The Indians killed by these settlers were practically massacred. The men who committed the crime should be prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law. A certain element among the settlers in the Jackson Hole country seems determined to drive the Indians from that country at whatever cost, not recognizing any law themselves but that which serves their interest."

TRAIN HELD UP IN OHIO.

The Brigands Estimated to Have Carried Away About $150.

Toledo, O., July 24.—The Lake Shore and Michigan Southern train, No. 27, due here at 11:10, in charge of Conductor Darling and Engineer Tiernan, was held up and robbed at Reese, a small station thirty-eight miles west of here, at 12:40 this morning. They had pulled into a blind siding to allow a special to pass when the train was boarded by six masked men, who at the point of revolvers compelled the express company messenger to unlock the safe and deliver the money.

The amount taken from the car is not known, but it is estimated by the express officials here at $8,000. The officials are of the opinion that the robbery was committed by persons in close touch with the employes of the road, as they had positive information as to the trains meeting on the siding and also of the unusually heavy express run. The passengers in the coaches were not molested and immediately after completiug their work the robbers took to the woods and disappeared.

Toledo, O., July 25.—It is generally understood that the robbers who held up the Lake Shore train at Reece's switch got no more than $150 from the way safe. They tried several times to blow open the through safe with dynamite, but failed. Four or five men have been arrested as suspects, but nothing certain is known as to the identity of the robbers. They are believed to be the same gang that robbed the train near Kendallville, Ind., a year ago.

PLAYING IT PRETTY SHARPLY.

The Way the Rowe Brothers Expect to Keep Their Iowa Boodle.

City of Mexico, July 27.—It is discovered that one of the Rowe brothers, who are wanted for embezzlement in Iowa, rented a box in the safe deposit vault of the Banco International. The employes of the vault saw him visit his box frequently and take or deposit money. When the brothers were arrested the bank received an order not to allow this box to be opened on any account until definite instructions were given by the government. The brother who hired the box is Richard Rowe, who is not naturalized. He claims that the money is his own, and that his brother Chester who is charged with being a defaulter from the state of Iowa, has nothing to do with it.

LATEST OF CHEROKEE BILL.

While in Jail He Gets Hold of a Revolver and Murders a Turnkey.

Fort Smith, Ark., July 27.—Cherokee Bill got his hands on another revolver yesterday and used it in an attempt to liberate the prisoners confined in murderers' row of the United States jail. His attempt resulted in the death of Larry Keating, the oldest guard of the force. On account of the hot weather the prisoners are allowed to remain in the corridors until nearly 7 p. m. After the prisoners had retired to their cells Turnkey Eoff went in to lock the cells, while Turnkey McConnell remained at the door.

When Eoff reached the cell next to Cherokee Bill's he found the keyhole plugged, and while he was trying to clean it out Cherokee Bill came to the door and fired, shooting Keating fatally through the stomach. McConnell, Parker and several deputy marshals ran in and opened fire on Cherokee Bill whenever he tried to leave his cell. His ammunition was nearly exhausted and he agreed to surrender his pistol to Henry Starr, which was done.

The pistol with which he did the deed was a new pearl-handled, 44-calibre. How he got it is a mystery, but Josie Brown, his sister, who has been here several days and visited him twice, has been arrested for it, and is now in the county jail.

NEW YORK TAILORS ON STRIKE.

Will Result in the Idleness of About 17,000 of Both Sexes.

New York, July 29.—The Hebrew clothing makers of this city, yesterday, for the first time, observed the American Sunday. They were on a strike. Trouble has been brewing between the tailors and the contractors for some time and it has culminated in a general strike of the workers. It is claimed by the strikers that 16,000 workers have responded to the call of the United Brotherhood of tailors and that not only this city, but Brooklyn, Newark and Brownsville, are affected. The number out in this city is estimated at 9,000.

Meyer Schoenfield, the official organizer of the United Garment Workers of America, in a statement declares that the strike is purely a defensive one. The present agreement, he says, which gives them sixty hours' work in six days and a fair scale of wages, will expire Sept. 15, and it has been learned that the contractors will refuse to renew the agreement. The total number of men involved is 12,000, and a strike of those makes 5,000 girls and women also idle.

SENSATION IN THE DURRANT CASE.

Wm. F. Barrett Says He Killed the Two Girls in Emanuel Church.

Santa Cruse, Cala., July 25.—In the county jail of Santa Cruse is confined William F. Barrett, who says he murdered Blanche Lamont and Minnie Williams in Emanuel church last April. He gave himself up to the chief of police, but was discharged as a harmless lunatic. Then he went to the sheriff, to whom he confessed his guilt as perpetrator of the Emanuel church murders. To the district attorney he told a story that at first seemed plausible, but when Barrett went into the details of the crime the inconsistencies of his statements convinced his auditors of his perfect innoceuce and complete insanity.

Prohibitionists Discuss Money.

Decatur, Ills., July 29. — Currency was the question discussed in national Prohibition camp meeting. "Is bimetallism practicable" was a debate by A. Tuttle, of Decatur, and M. L. Daggy, of Greencastle, Ind. "Free Silver" was spoken for by Robert Hunt, of Decatur, and against by Claud Hall, of Eureaka. Helen M. Gougar spoke on bimetallism.

Terrible Steamboat Disaster Rumored.

Memphis, July 29.—A report is current in this city that the large steamship Belle of Memphis, of the Anchor line, bound from St. Louis to this city with about eighty-five excursionists on board, has sunk about sixty miles north of here and that forty lives were lost. The rumor is barely credited.

A Strike If They Don't Agree.

Massillon, O., July 29.—M. D. Ratchford, president of the Ohio miners' organization, has arrived home from Sunday Creek. He says that if the western Pennsylvania operators fail to accede to the miners' demands for 69 cents with company stores or 65 cents without, the Ohio miners will be called out.

THE DEATH RECORD.

Hon. Alexander H. Rice, ex-governor of Massachusetts, at Melrose, Mass.

Professor F. D. Robinson, of the Kansas university, at Lawrence, Kan.

Patrick Madden, pioneer citizen of Creston, Ia.

John R. Coffroth, one of Indiana's best-known attorneys, at La Fayette, Ind.

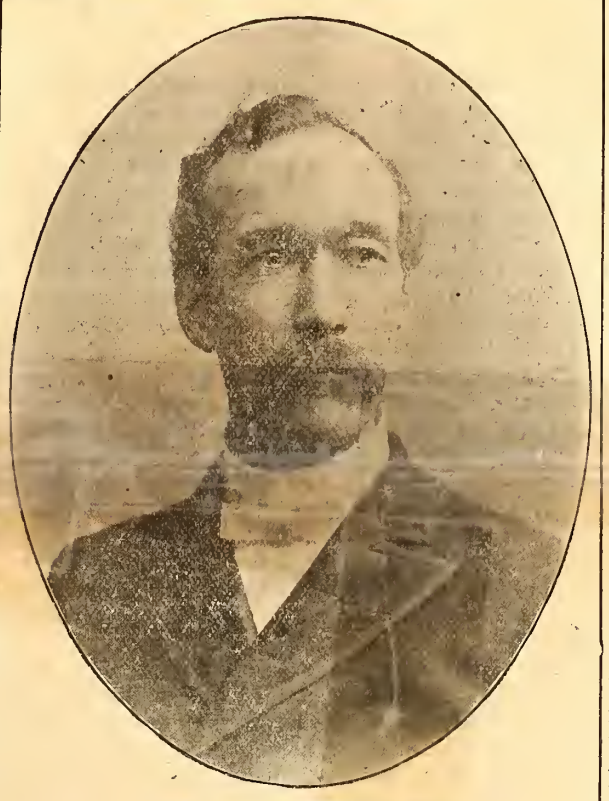
Helen M. Gougar will speak at the noon meeting in Willard Hall, Tuesday the 13th, on Anarchy.

Rev. P. B. Williams sends us an excellent program of the anti-secret convention to be held in Portland, Ore., Sept. 25, 26, which we will publish next week.

As we go to press quite encouraging reports come to us in the Jamestown, N. Y., daily papers of President Blanchard's lectures in that town against secret societies.



H. S. Bonsib, an Indiana prohibition worker, says, in the Patriot Phalanx, that they naturally expect him to open his meeting with prayer, while the old party politicians open theirs with a cork-screw.

D. L. Moody, at Northfield, Mass., learned late Saturday evening that the noted London preacher, Rev. H. M. Webb-Peploe, who was to preach at his Conference on Sabbath, had missed his train at Springfield. Rather than permit him to use a Sunday train Mr. Moody telegraphed for an extra, which cost him $66.

The excellent articles contributed to those columns by Edmond Ronayne have elicted from some of our readers a desire that they be published in pamphlet form for wider circulation. We hope that sufficient funds will be secured for this purpose, as the author has consented to allow them to be republished.

Dr. F. W. Gunsaulus says: "It is more wise to stop and inquire if honorable defeat under a manner that shall wave over the blood-washed in heaven is not a richer and a nobler possession than a dishonorable success won under a banner that waves over the smoking ruins of manhood here, and shall mark the confines of death hereafter."

Some of our readers have expressed their high appreciation of the exposition of the Sabbath-school lesson in the Cynosure by Rev. D. M Stearns. It is pointed and practical, and gives the very information the teacher most needs. The discussion of the Christian Endeavor topic by Rev. S. H. Doyle every week has also been highly commended by our readers.

REV. J. C. McFEETERS.

We introduce to our readers this week, by the above portrait, a new contributor to the Cynosure, Rev. J. C. McFeeters. He is pastor of a Covenanter church in Philadelphia, in which the last State Anti-secret convention was held. He is quite a popular writer and thoroughly in sympathy with the anti-secret movement. In his well-written article on another page on the growing power of the Christian Endeavor movement, he warns all concerned of the vital importance of keeping in harmony with the law of Christ. This admonition is timely and important, if, as some of our correspondents tell us, many of the active leaders of the movement are secret lodge members; and if, as the Boston press reported, some delegations to its convention traveled on Sabbath.

The young preacher had graduated with high honors and much was expected of him. He had written out with great care a scholarly up-to-date sermon. It was full of advanced thought, and the latest about "semitic environment" and "the errancy of the human" in the Bible. But two days before the eventful Sabbath his pious aunt carried him back years before to the bedside of his dying mother who had put her thin hand upon her boy's head and said, "It is growing dark and I can't see you, John, but I know it is you, and I want you to promise me that if ever you become a minister you will always speak a good word for Jesus Christ." The young minister listened to the narration, sighed, went away, walked in the garden, prayed over it, re-read his sermon, and finally put it in the fire; and on Sabbath went into the pulpit with a sermon born of his mother's faith, filled with his mother's love for Jesus Christ, and blessed by his mother's God.

In England they sometimes resort to strange methods of attracting people to church. The pastor of Spitalfield church announces: "If you want a smoke free, then come to our church next Sabbath afternoon at three o'clock; tobacco gratis or a free cup of tea if you like." Boston is scarcely behind this, for one of its churches announces an eight o'clock Sabbath morning service for the accommodation of bicyclists who wish to spend the day on their wheels.

The interesting letter in this issue from Bro. Sheally, of Hiawatha, Kan., is strong testimony to the fact that the power of the lodge must first be broken before prohibition can be made a success. From many towns have we heard the same testimony, that the greatest obstacle to the enforcement of prohibition is the influence of secret societies. It is impossible to enforce law when the judge, witnesses, prosecuting attorney, and criminal are all bound by the same oath or pledge to obey each others signs and grips.

A brother who has traveled much over the West, says: "Do you know what is the matter with that country? There is a blight on those magnificent prairie States. Last year they said it was the drought; before that it was the grasshoppers, chinch bugs, etc. This year it is the Russian thistle, smut, scab and what not. But I tell you it is dishonesty. We have not been keeping the commandments. Towns were boomed, and when the bubble burst millions of good money were gone." Yes, and that is not all; we have been substituting the lodge for the church, and making the Sabbath of the Lord like other days, and oppressing the hireling in his wages.

A devoted W. C. T. U. woman said shortly before her death: "If I only had the assurance that our daughters would take up the work where we have laid it down, I could die contented." This is a question that should weigh heavy upon the heart of every reform worker. Should it not be a special concern to every anti-secret reformer? How are the young men and women being enlisted in our reform? Have you good reason to hope that they will take up the banner and carry it forward when those who are now at the front in the battle have fallen? Is there not some reason to fear that the spirit of reform is dying out in these times? How few young people are among our active workers. On the other hand the lodges are exerting every effort to enlist the young. The G. A. R aims to perpetuate the order by organizing the Sons of Veterans. Secret college fraternities are reaching into the high schools for candidates. The new secret order for young people to which Prof. Simpson Ely refers in this issue is an illustration of how the secret empire is trying to capture the youth of our land.

THE PRESENT CRISIS.

BY BISHOP COXE.

We are living, we are dwelling in a grand and awful time,
In an age on ages telling, to be living is sublime.
Hark! the waking up of nations, Gog and Magog to the fray.
Hark! what soundeth? 'Tis creation groaning for its latter day.

Will ye play, then, will ye dally, with your music and your wine?
Up, it is Jehovah's rally, God's own arm hath need of thine.
Hark! the onset, will ye fold your faith-clad arms in lazy lock?
Up, oh, up, thou drowsy soldier! Worlds are charging to the shock.

Worlds are charging—heaven beholding; thou hast but an hour to fight;
Now the blazoned cross unfolding, on--right onward for the right.
On! let all the soul within you for the truth's sake go abroad!
Strike! let every nerve and sinew tell on ages, tell for God!

MINOR SECRET ORGANIZATIONS.

BY REV. T. H. ACHESON.

Are they evil? A young man who attended, some time since, a lecture in reply to one in favor of Freemasonary seems to have acquired quite an aversion to this secret society. Yet in conversation recently with a friend he appeared to think favorably of the Good Templar organization, and thought that there could not be much proper objection to it. Are all secret oath-bound societies or secret societies wrong? or are only some of the major ones, such as Masonry and Odd-fellowship, to be condemned? The following considerations are offered as favoring the position that the minor secret societies are also evil, and should in no way receive the approval of the church or follower of Christ:

1. They are secret. This is as true of them as of the older and more strict organizations. They may not be so secret; may not be so sternly and strictly secret; may not have so many secret features as the major societies, but still they are secret. The very presumption rests against them. They are not necessary in good work. They may very easily, on account of this secrecy, be used for evil work. There may be necessary secrets in the home, but the home is not a secret society. God gives no one the right to give his adherence to any truth or work before its nature is understood by him, unless it be a matter of divine revelation. Every one is under obligation to believe God's Word, whether he knows it all or not, but he must give no such submission to human authority. He, therefore, who gives his promise or oath to what he yet knows not, sins against God. The Bible long ago presented to men the foolishness and wickedness of such a course, in the account of Darius and his prohibition of petitions for thirty days; and in the record of Herod, whose indefinite and criminal oath led to the murder of John the Baptist. Even if those who stand as ushers into the hidden mysteries assure us that our coming fraternity duties shall in no wise conflict with righteousness, it alters not the case. No one can give his conscience into the keeping of another man. Each one must give an account of himself to God.

2. To belong to the minor organizations stops our testimony against the major societies. Consistency will close your mouth. You may be convinced of the evil character of Freemasonry or of Odd-fellowship or of the Knights of Pythias, but if you are a Workman or a Woodman or a Good Templar you cannot well say much. To be tarred by the same stick, even in less degree, neutralizes your testimony, and removes your desire to testify. The pot's assertion "that the kettle is black" will not receive much consideration from thoughtful and impartial hearers.

3. To belong to the minor society is a step to membership in the more objectionable fraternities. There is gradation in evil as well as in good. Men are bad before they are worse; and they become worse before they are worst. When a man joins any secret society his conscience has begun to sleep on the secret society issue. Since he has started down the ladder he may go to the bottom. It does not look so far from the first or second round down to the bottom, as it did from the top. Neither does it look so dark and forbidding as it once did; he is getting used to the murkiness. Men are led into Freemasonry all the more easily because they become Woodmen, or members of the G. A. R., or Knights of Pythias. The lower societies are feeders for the upper ones.

4. It is our duty to testify against the whole institution of oath-bound secrecy, and you cannot do it if you are a member of a part of it, even though the part be a most subordinate one. To testify fully, consistently and forcefully against any evil system you must stand outside of it, if it be a voluntary organization. This is the proper course and let us follow it. To witness against the saloon, stay out of it altogether. To testify against the pool-room, absent yourself wholly from it. To make effective your objections to the dance, stay away from the best, or the least evil of them, in the parlor of the church deacon. To witness against the evil institution of the theater, do not attend the best plays of the best actors. Treat the whole thing as an institution. So to proclaim a true testimony for your Lord against the monstrous evils of organized secrecy, stand aloof from every part of the whole system. "Keep thyself pure."

LIGHT VS. DARKNESS.

BY REV. ALBERT G. JOHNSON.

There are two elements in the world which are at variance with each other. These always have existed, and always will. The struggle between the two has been for supremacy; those elements are light and darkness; the one a positive, the other a negative. The positive tends to the elevation of life and the happiness of humanity; the other to death, misery and destruction. From the time that the morning stars sang together, and from the moment that God said "let there be light and there was light," down to the present time, this struggle has been going on. Light against darkness; truth against error; righteousness against unrighteousness; Christianity against all false religion, and, in a word, the Bible against all that tends to darkness and superstition. And from the time that the devil through subtlety caused darkness to enshroud the souls of our firstparents, men have been hiding away in the dark to cover their meanness. "Men love darkness rather than light because their deeds are evil."

The devil came to our firstparents with the promise of revealing to them a secret that would be beneficial; had they known the deception that was lying back of the statement "that they would not surely die," he could not have deceived them. But, as one has said, he presented the rose, but secreted the thorn, in that he promised that they should become as God. This statement touched the mainspring of Eve's soul, for in her purity and innocence she longed to become more and more like God. Thus she allowed herself to be hoodwinked with the awful consequences of plunging the whole human family into darkness and misery.

The lodge comes to men with the same cunningly devised falsehood, and presents what they call the beauties of the lodge, and after they have their subjects under control; they soon rob them of their manhood, and they are ready to do whatever is commanded of them by the grand lodge, without asking a reason why. Poor dupes! Masonry promises its subjects salvation and heaven without Christ. Salvation without a Saviour, Christianity without Christ, are incomprehensible terms to me; it would be just as consistent to talk about an honest thief or a sober drunkard. How a man can be strictly an adhering Mason and be a Christian is also beyond my comprehension. Jesus brands all as thieves and robbers who try to get to heaven by any other way than through his name, "for there is no other name given under heaven or among men whereby we must be saved." Surely the world would be infinitely better off without the lodge to mislead souls to perdition.

It is a place to breed and foster crime. Men who are guilty of crime and flee from justice find a shelter in the lodge. Honest, truthful Christian men do not hide under the darkness of it. But, "he that doeth truth cometh to the light that his deeds may be made manifest that they are wrought in God." Everything in nature that is pure loves the light. It is essential to life and wellbeing. Every man that is in line with heaven should love to have the world know his true character. Everything that is vile seeks the cover of darkness; and every man that is corrupt wants his true character kept in the dark. Such men seek their own kind for associates, and men that are pure and righteous seek to associate with their kind as well, and consequently there is no fellowship between those that love light and those who love darkness.

No wonder that the Cynosure and its friends find a powerful opponent in the lodge system. It is the mission of the Cynosure to send light and truth abroad. It is the business of the lodge to try and suppress light and foster darkness and crime. The devil is the father of darkness and is mighty; God is the father of light and he is Almighty. Therefore the time will come when the dark and benighted lodge system will flee from before the light of the Gospel, as the night flees before the morning sun. God has promised that there is nothing hid but what shall be revealed. It will not be long until the rottenness of the lodge will be apparent to every mind. We who love the light are on the winning side of this conflict. Let us buckle on the whole armor, go into the field and press the battle to the very gates.

Huntington, Ind., July 27, 1895.

A GROWING POWER.

BY REV. J. C. M'FEETERS.

The recent convention of young people in Boston is without a parallel in history. Never before in all the ages was such an assembly of young people seen, collected from the four quarters of the world, beaming with intelligence, conscious of power; everyone pledged to attain to the greatest possible heights; all in covenant with God and one another to grapple with the great moral problems of the age with the might that God will give. Such an exhibition of Christian life and ardor is an indication that we are approaching the better times, when godliness shall have power and shall reign.

The convention having adjourned, the living streams that converged upon Boston, almost giving it an immersion, have flowed back again to their respective districts, all the purer, stronger and more influential. Is it too much to expect that the Christian work this year by the young people will be several fold greater than during any previous year? And what will hinder? They are, according to their pledge, given to the Lord without reserve, to do whatsoever he will have them do; and the Holy Spirit, working through such instruments, is invincible and immeasurable in his doings. With nearly two and a half million, all dedicated without reservation to the Lord, what a marvelous outlet for heaven to flow in upon the earth, for the Holy Spirit to rush forth in rivers of water.

We may be disappointed but we will look for results. If results fail, the cause must be insincerity and inconsistency on the part of some who have taken upon themselves a solemn covenant to be wholly the Lord's. To promise to do whatsoever the Lord will have them do, then to turn about and do what they know he would not have them do, is to break the spiritual current between God and the soul and leave them weaker than other persons. A few days ago a young man with a Christian Endeavor badge on his coat and a cigar in his mouth was asked whether the badge between his lips or on his lapel was the true sign of his life. If the pledge be a power over the soul, it will keep the person, by divine grace, from all conscious evil; make a break between all known sin and the soul; will cut every rope that binds to wrong habits and evil associations. The Christian Endeavorer must at every step ask, Will my Lord have me do this? Such a question will produce a speedy separation from evil. Such a separation will prepare for true consecration. Such consecration will make way for the Holy Spirit in the soul and through the life to do his greater works.

Next year we expect a remarkable convention of young people in Washington. Should each of the two and a half million keep themselves clean during the year from everything which the Holy Spirit points out to them as sin, with what tremendous strength shall their fifty thousand delegates come forth into the capital of the republic to demonstrate in the presence of judges and legislators that the power is well nigh matured which will shake from off this government the political rings coiling around the nation's body like vipers, and the secret fraternities worse than the rings, and the murderous traffic in intoxicants worse than all. The power is rapidly arising into prominence which will inscribe on the gates of Washington "Christ is king," and write the same in the nation's laws. But to have this power the young people must keep themselves separate from all these evils.

Philadelphia, Pa., July 25, 1895.

A PREACHER OF THE GOSPEL TRIES TO PREACH ODD-FELLOWSHIP.

If it did not require "all sorts of people to make the world," "blind leaders of the blind" might be left out. Physical blindness appeals to gentleness and charity. How far a similar claim can be allowed on behalf of some modern scribes, is a matter that admits difference of opinion. The outcome, however, is, that the "blind guides" lead the blindfold dupes and both fall into the ditch called a lodge.

In such a light the Republican Register of Galesburg, Ia., represents Dr. Blodgett, a minister, who, it says, preached to hundreds of Odd-fellows and Rebekahs Sabbath evening, the sixteenth of June. On the one hand, it would be improper to accuse the newspaper of putting folly into the mouth of the preacher by an erroneous report. On the other, it would be still worse to accuse the preacher of what the report attributes to him, without conceding the possibility of his spoken words having become slightly modified on their way into type. Such errors can creep in when no just blame can be charged to either the speaker or the reporter. A concession of this kind is offered as a grain of salt in this criticism.

He was almost above criticism when he exalted the church to a place not attainable by the lodge. He distinguished the church as "divine," and so it is in origin. He was unanswerable when he declared that Odd-fellowship could not bring men into the kingdom of heaven. But was he not for the moment blind to the claim of the Odd-fellow burial service, that it brings men not merely into the kingdom of heaven but into heaven itself? Was he not blind to Masonic history also when he conceded to Masonry more than two thousand years of duration in place of its less than two hundred? He need only turn to an ordinary cyclopedia to learn that Grand Lodge Masonry dates from the year 1717, less than half a decade before the Plymouth landing. If he meant that sun worship, the essence of Masonry, had existed more than two thousand years, he kept within something more than safe limitations.

It is a question how well his eyes served him when he said that Odd-fellowship is not a religious organization. If he meant that it was not Christian, he was right. Even in prayer, Dr. Blodgett cannot mention Christ's name in the lodge without violating lodge law. The very text he took that evening was a parable introduced into the lodge work as an "interesting narrative." It is carefully separated from all reference to Christ, and is not even called a parable. He was right if he mesnt that Odd-fellowship carefully ignores the true religion. In that sense, it is, as he says, not a religious organization. Suppose, however, that he were in Asia, where he expected to encounter false religions, and he found there an altar. Suppose that round this altar solemn rites were performed; that in connection with such rites he heard the voice of prayer; that he also saw the assembly go from the place of worship to the place of graves, and, with elaborate ritual and in apparent assurance of reunion above, bury the dead; what would Dr. Blodgett think he had found? Probably he would call it a sewing society or a business college. Common people would know that they had found something which its devotees regarded as a "good enough religion." No doubt, like Odd-fellows, these would extol its virtues above those of Christian churches.

Does Odd fellowship lack either of the signs here named? Yet Dr. Blodgett sees no religious character in his fellow lodgemen's "good enough religion." If he means that he sees it is not Christian, but, like Masonry, is pagan, then he is no longer blind. But yet he sees only part of the truth when he sets forth "misappropriation of time and funds" in lodges as "the cause of ministerial opposition." One of the causes or a pair of them this certainly is, but not the gravest one. This statement is mischievous because it minifies the real grounds of opposition. "Ministerial opposition," so far as I am concerned, would be disarmed, at least in great degree, if it found no more dreadful cause. His eyes seem open, when, in the face of "hundreds of Odd-fellows and Rebekahs" who pretend that friendship can be built on ceremony, he declares that "friendship must be built on Jesus Christ."

But the film returns when he begins to attend to his Biblical text. This is the parable of the good Samaritan. What he means by saying, "yet a man should be careful that these parables do not take the place of Christ," he himself may know. The reporter, who may have misunderstood him, follows up the sentence by saying, "the pastor then proceded to draw out the lessons of the parable." That was surely a more legitimate business for a pastor than telling people that Masonry was more than two thousand instead of less than two hundred years old, and so on.

But if he did really "draw out the lessons of the parable," he must have sent cold shivers over the banded and exclusive clan he was addressing. What are the "lessons" of that parable? It was itself a lesson. The great Teacher taught this lesson. What was it? It was given to an inquiring pupil whose question was, "Who is my neighbor?" The animus of the question was selfish. The pupil wished limiting bounds to be set about his neighborhood. "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself" seemed a high demand. If both high and broad, it confronted selfishness as a crushing law. The pupil asks for limitations. His whole selfish soul cries out in the word, "who?"

Christ pictures a man who just now needs a neighbor if he has one. Here one comes; but there he goes. Here is another. No, neither acts the part of a neighbor. Again steps approach, but this is no neighbor. He is peculiarly a stranger, both in Jerusalem where priests sojourn when in service and in Jericho where they make their home. "The Jews have no dealings with the Samaritans," and this man waiting for a neighbor is a Jew. The Samaritan lives in another province, belongs to another race, and is almost unwelcome. But, "necessity knows no law," and his help is accepted.

Ah, blind lawyer! The healer has touched your eyes. Now you see that friendship knows no law; neighborhood no bounds. The Teacher's lesson has taught you the unlimited freedom of mercy that "dropped like the gentle dew from heaven." Down crashes the "middle wall of partition." "There is neither Jew nor Gentile." Now, set clannishness to recite that lesson. Try to enclose the principle within national boundaries; mark its domain off with outermost continental coast lines; can these contain it? How much less, then, the exclusive walls of the narrow lodge.

Yet here comes a professed interpreter, in cap and bells, to amuse a crowd of Odd-fellows with the assurance that sworn exclusiveness and clannishness are founded on the teachings of the Bible, particularly the parable of the good Samaritan. Probably in the lodge room he teaches them the Samaritan grip and hailing sign.

EXEGETE.

WHY NO CHRISTIAN SHOULD BE CONNECTED WITH SECRET ORDERS.

1. Because to disregard the difference between the various religions in the world and to place Christianity on a common level with other religions, as secret societies do, is virtually to reject Jesus Christ and his religion; for Christianity will not tolerate any other religion, and Jesus Christ is the only Saviour of the world. See Matt. 12: 30; Mark 8: 34–38; Acts 10: 43; 4: 12; 1 Cor. 16: 22; Gal. 1: 8, 9; 1 John 2: 22, 23; 4: 2, 3; and 2 John vs. 9–11.

2. Because to be indifferent to God's Word and truth, and to bind one's self by oath or promise to submit to the arbitrary rulings of other men, as secret orders demand of their members, is not conformable with the Christian faith and a good conscience. See John 8: 31, 32; Rom. 14: 23; 1 Cor. 8: 12, 13; 10: 31; 2 Cor. 10: 5; Col. 3: 17; 1 Tim. 1: 18, 19; Titus 1: 15, 16; Heb. 13: 9; and 1 Peter 3: 15.

3. Because no one can be a consistent member of the Christian church and belong to societies that are founded on secretism and on such false religious principles that will tolerate and tend to equalize other religions with that of a Christian. See Matt. 6: 24; 7: 15; 10: 27, 28, 32–34; Rom. 16: 17, 18; Gal. 1: 6–9; and 2 John vs. 9–11.

4. Because such a brotherhood or fellowship with unbelievers is also expressly forbidden in the Word of God. See 2 Cor. 6: 14–18.

A PASTOR.

INDEPENDENCE DAY RIOT.

A little red schoolhouse went down to East Boston and fell among thieves. Then the pot called the kettle black and both slopped over; whereupon the potsherds of the earth strove with the potsherds of the earth. Then the little schoolhouse was reddened with ill-shed blood. Little red schoolhouses used to be shrines of wisdom, but this one turned aside to folly, and learned too late that lodges betray. It enacted again the ancient fable of the doves that took the hawk into their enclosure to protect them from another bird of prey. The schoolhouse allowed its enemy, the secret lodge, to pretend to protect it from another enemy, the secret conclave of Romanism.

Not much good the A. P. A. did it on Independence day, and not much good will the lodge, whose first quality is darkness, ever do the schoolhouse, whose primary function is to diffuse light. Out of schoolhouses lodges do not come, and into schoolhouses lodges cannot go but to destroy them. Two things more unlike in method and purpose, and less in harmony every way, can hardly be found. Let us not think that the friends and foes of the old schoolhouse clashed in East Boston. Two darkness-loving enemies, one carrying it away to Babylon, and the other reviling the theft, brought the honored source of American light and openness and freedom to shame. Let all the indignant graduates of this Alma Mater protest against the indignity. Let the first force of this protest fall on the first offender. The attempted capture of the shrine of light by that shrine of darkness, the A. P. A., was the first outrage. It has no right to its first initial for it is not American. It is unAmerican in such a fashion that it has no right to come near the American school. No relation but hostility is possible between a schoolhouse and a lodge. In the unchangeable nature of things conflict is constant and unavoidable. In this conflict one or the other must give way.

It is time that this little red schoolhouse was rescued from these Philistines. If the East Boston hubbub attracts attention enough, and leads to enough of serious, sensible reflection to contribute to the rescue, the blood will not have been shed in vain. But from this time let no real friend patiently hear the name of his Alma Mater profaned by the clap trap of a necessarily incongruous and antagonistic lodge.

A GRADUATE.

AN EX-CONGRESSMAN ON SECRECY.

Hon. Martin A. Foran represented Cleveland in the National Congress a few years ago. He is a Romanist, and was interviewed by the Cleveland Leader on the renewed and new attitude of his church on secrecy. Point is added by the fact that he is a member of several prominent secret orders. Among other things he said:

"For the matter of that, the pope is half right. Those secret orders are bad for the church. The Protestant churches recognize the fact as well as the Catholic church, but have not the courage to make a stand. The societies set up a religion of their own in a way....Inherent in the human heart is a religious sentiment; and men who do not find its expression in the churches, with their outward forms and observances, sometimes find comfort in the religious thought and observance of a more quiet kind, which they find in the secret societies.

"There is another phase presented by the subject, which has no doubt something to do with the edict of the pope. Strange as it may sound for me to say it, a man is better off who does not belong to any secret order. The lodge, like the club, breeds family dissension. When the married man goes to his lodge, leaving his wife at home, and does not return till 12 or 1 o'clock at night, the wife does not like it. If he belongs to three or four lodges, the trouble is intensified, and a coldness is apt to spring up between husband and wife.

"Again, the secret orders lead to drink. Men thrown together at night are liable to go together to have a convivial drink, especially if one of the lodge happens to be the proprietor of a saloon."—Christian Harvester.

A correspondent writes the Boston Herald: "I recall the story of the change of name of Frederick Douglass made from Lloyd to Douglass, as he told it to us. He had escaped from slavery and was in New Bedford among newly-made friends. As efforts to capture him would surely be made by his master, these friends decided that it would be wise to give him a new name. What should it be? 'You may give me any name you choose,' said he, 'so that you leave me the name of Frederick; for my mother gave me that name because she liked it.' At this moment the grandfather of the household entered into the discussion. He chanced to be reading 'Scott's Poems,' so popular at that period. He opened the volume where his finger still held the place, where he had just read: 'His name shall be Douglass—Frederick Douglass; for listen, 'The hand of Douglass is his own.'"—Wesleyan Methodist.

SOWING BESIDE ALL WATERS.

North Uxbridge, Mass., July 25, 1895.

Editor Cynosure:—Three large gatherings of religious and educational leaders, this week, furnish opportunity for sowing the seed by many waters. Leaving home this A. M., I stopped first at Franklin, where I was cheered by a hearty welcome from our good friends, E. L. Metcalf and Chas. W. Stewart, both staunch friends of our cause and recent accessions to your list of readers. Mr. Metcalf expressed great interest in the Cynosure, and classed it with the New York Voice. He pronounced them the best publications that come to his home. There are so many points upon which we agree in politics and religion that it seems hardly worth while for us to dispute about technicalities and theological differences; but I cannot resist the conviction that his daily living is far better than his creed, and as between the two every sensible man would rather approve an upright, clean life without an orthodox creed than the theory without the practice. The two united constitute the model citizen and Christian.

Failing to connect for the Douglass holiness camp meeting, I turned aside to spend the night with Bro. John B. White in this quiet New England village. While Bro. White is harvesting, I have been sowing the seed from house to house, in faith that some at least will bear fruit in God's good time. To-morrow (D. V.) I shall spend at Camp Douglass with the holiness people, hoping both to receive from their fullness of the Spirit and to add something to their store of information regarding the secret lodges. Bro. Geo. M. Morse and Dr. B. Carradine are leaders in this progressive work. I have a supply of Lodge Lamps with Dr. Carradine's portrait on the first page, and some two hundred of his sermon "Are Secret Societies a Blessing or a Curse?" which seem especially appropriate, with "Danger Signals" and a variety of leaflets, I hope to reach and help some who are "weak in the faith" or sadly in the dark on the devious and tricky ways of one who, though "the father of lies," is "transformed into an angel of light" to "deceive, if it were possible, the very elect."

July 27th.—At Camp Hebron to-day I met Major Brewer and his command. After a brief interview he gave me the freedom of the grounds. While this standard-bearer in the Salvation Army is no friend to secret societies, it is quite evident to a veteran campaigner that there is much for him to learn in this field of moral conflict. He apprehends something of the enemy's strength and spirit but showed very little knowledge of his mode of warfare. He suggested the feasibility of flank movements rather than a pitch battle, and thought it possible that Masonry might prove a helpful ally in holding the papacy in check. He was fully in accord with the opinion that "walking in the light as He is in the light" is the only road to reform; and he was by no means disposed to distrust God's ability to "destroy the works of the devil," or to sustain his people in the hottest of the fight, but seemed to think it extremely hazardous to drive the gospel sword straight into the heart of this mailed and knighted monster, with his splendid record and commanding position. I could but feel that the Major had need of a little more of the faith of the ancient worthies mentioned in the eleventh of Hebrews. But since "faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the Word of God," now that the Major's attention has been called to this subject, let us expect that, like Caleb and Joshua, he will conclude that God's people are well able to go over and possess themselves of this land of the Anakims.

FROM THE PACIFIC COAST.

IMPOSSIBLE TO DEFEND SECRET SOCIETIES.

Wilbur, Wash., July 26, 1895.

Editor Cynosure:—It is amusing, sometimes, to see how self-contradictory are the arguments in favor of secret societies. We see them utterly nonplussed and discomfited in trying to defend the orders. They cannot be successfully defended. Masonry knew that when she selected her jewel, "the still tongue."

After attending to some business in Portland, last week, with one of our prominent business men, he turned to me and asked: "Mr. Williams, why have you not planted your church in the cities? and why have you not at least one large church here on the west side in Portland?" My answer was intended to draw him out on the subject I desired to discuss. I said: "Because there are so many lodges here, and we as a church are opposed to all secret societies." He then said: "I am a Mason; and if a man is a good Freemason he will be as perfect as a man can become in this life." By that time I began to "warm up" on the subject. I settled down to a regular digest of Masonry, which was anything but pleasant to him. After an hour or more of very friendly conversation on this line, he at last said: "I am a member of the Episcopal church, but I take no stock in the church." I answered him thus: "Mr. S., if what you claim is true, you have no need whatever of any church. You say, 'If I am a good Mason I will be as perfect as a man can be in this life.' This is why you have no use for the church, and it is why I am opposed to Masonry. It has divorced you and thousands of others from the church, and teaches salvation without Jesus Christ." He did not know what to do with himself. He was mortified by his own logic.

At Salem, before I took the stand to speak, a prominent gentleman said to me: "A man cannot be a good Mason without being a good Christian." I rubbed it in on him by repeating his expression, and then added: "Ladies and gentlemen, that man makes no pretensions to Christianity. He is rather an unbeliever. What must we judge of his Masonry!" A prominent argument with Christian (?) Masons is that no man can become a Mason unless he believes in God. I answer them, Every professed infidel here on the coast is a Freemason. If Masonry does not admit infidels, it must make infidels very rapidly. No wonder, when we look at the conglomeration in the lodge of Christian, Jew, Mohammedan and infidel.

In trying to defend the lodge last week at an appointment where I lectured, a Christian (?) lady said: "I know he lied about one thing, for my father is a Mason, and I know he never was stripped of his clothing, hoodwinked and cable-towed, as indicated by the lecturer." Poor deluded soul! This is a sample of the defense of organized secrecy. Even Dr. Talmage, when he undertook to defend the lodge, could only say: "I do not see how there can be wrong in it, for so many of my friends are members of the orders." Dr. T. might ask his most intimate lodge friend the most casual question about the so-called secrecy of the lodge, and he will deny it. Let him ask him whether Boaz, Jachin, Tubal Cain, Shibboleth and Mah-hah-bone are Masonic passwords, and he will say "No," when he knows they are. Ask him if Ronayne's "Handbook" and Duncan's "Ritual" are correct revelations of the order, and he will deny it, when he knows they are. The lodges cannot be defended only by lying, fraud and deception.

MISS HINMAN IN CHINA.

Kalgan, China, June 12, 1895.

Dear Cynosure:—My father thought that perhaps some readers of the Cynosure might be interested to learn how I am situated here, and how I find things on the other side of the globe from yourselves. You observe that my letter is headed Kalgan. I am here, however, only for the summer. Peking, as you know, is to be my abiding place. Kalgan is a hundred and twenty miles north and west of Peking, more than four days' journey by mule-litter. The Great Wall forms a part of the north wall of Kalgan. Beyond lies Mongolia. Kalgan is two thousand five hundred feet above the sea, and girt with mountains. These mountains are treeless and covered with only the scantiest of herbage; but to me they have an unspeakable charm after my virtual imprisonment in Peking.

I must make haste to explain that word "imprisonment," lest you form a false impression of the facts of the case. No governmental restrictions keep us within the high walls of our compound, or mission premises. We stay inside, unless called forth by some necessity, in order to avoid the unmentionable sights and still more unmentionable odors that confront one at every step in the streets of Peking. Heaven is kind, else the whole city would long ago have been swept away by the pestilence. I said heaven is kind—perhaps I should have said the Chinese are destitute of sensibility. They certainly seem so in many particulars.

I excited some amusement in a company of Chinese friends, some months ago, by answering a good brother who inquired what points of interest I had visited in Peking, "I think Peking has no sights worth seeing." "You foreigners are so straightforward," said my teacher to me once. But when I made this remark I had not been on the city wall. That certainly makes a delightful promenade. I hope sometime to make the entire circuit of it, some fifteen miles, but I have not yet done so. The wall is some forty or fifty feet high and over thirty feet wide, with a parapet on either side. One looks down from it on a far different scene from what one would behold in looking down from one of Chicago's sky-scrapers. The houses of Peking are far from imposing. They are low, one-story buildings of gray brick, with tiled roofs. In the Forbidden City the yellow roofs of the palace buildings rise above the level of the dwellings of the common herd. To the south of the Tartar City (in which we live) rises the lofty staging of the unfinished Temple of Heaven, not so high, I presume, as the most insignificant of Chicago's grain elevators, but quite conspicuous above surrounding objects. In the Tartar, or main city itself, we observed one building which looked like the grand stands at the county fairs at home. They seemed very imposing indeed to me in my childhood. This building, I learned, is really a sort of grand stand, for there the degrees are awarded to the scholars who successfully pass the rigorous examinations, of which one reads in all the books on China. About this higher building are grouped the rows of cells where the candidates for scholastic honors are virtually imprisoned during the two or three days of their examinations.

One is struck as one looks from the wall by the number of trees to be seen in the city. I fancy at this season it must be fairly embowered in green. Peking does not impress one as a crowded city. It prides itself on its wide streets, though it would seem that width only gave more room for filth. The houses and shops, as I said, are all low. Each man's premises—I mean dwelling houses now, of course not shops or public buildings—are enclosed by walls, with a courtyard, larger or smaller. The population of Peking I doubt if any one knows exactly, but it must be much smaller than I had supposed. I very much doubt if the city contains a million people. But how strange it is to look down upon a city in which there are not only no factory chimneys, and no twenty-story edifices devoted to business, —temples of mammon, should I call them?—but no church spires. One, indeed, we can see. It is quite near the compound of our American Board Mission. It is the imposing clock tower of the Roman Catholic church. I suppose the fact that these Roman fathers were once high in the favor of the ruling powers is the cause of their boldness. Our Protestant chapels are more humble. We are not allowed to build very high lest we spoil the feng shui. This terms refers to the universal belief of the Chinese in geomancy.

Our American Board Mission has it compound near the center of the city. The extent of these premises I couldn't venture to say, since they are so irregular in form. We have a chapel, a dispensary, dwellings for three or four missionary families; the buildings of the girls' boarding school, in which I am to teach, the printing office and buildings occupied by servants, employes and tenants. The houses occupied by the foreigners are of Chinese construction with foreign additions and improvements. Most of these houses, I believe, once belonged to some great and rich family. They are one-story buildings of the prevailing gray brick, with tiled roofs. They are set in the midst of brick-paved courts, in which are a few ornamental shrubs and trees, and in which now, doubtless, beds of flowers are blooming.

We have an extensive missionary community in Peking, fifty or more in number. Besides our own people, the Presbyterians, Methodists, London Missionary Society and Christian Alliance, have established themselves there. There are, besides, the foreigners connected with the Legations and the Customs Service. The number is so great as to justify a union service in English every Sabbath night, which is held in our chapel as the most central.

Our work as a mission consists in daily preaching in the street chapels in the city, evangelistic touring in the country, the carrying on of the girls' boarding school, and of day schools for boys and for girls both within and without the city, with the work of the mission press. This last agency is not to be dispised, for it has sent forth some millions of pages in the past six months. We know that it is not enough to convert a heathen. To "build him up in the most holy faith" is by no means the least difficult part of the work. To that end the preparation and dissemination of a body of Christian literature is essential.

Of my own work at present I can say nothing. It is the unromantic work of learning the language. I was so fortunate during my first six months as to have an exceptionally fine teacher. He is not only a man of estimable Christian character, being, in fact, one of our native helpers, but a most interesting and companionable person, as well, able to furnish the stimulus and inspiration that not one Chinese teacher in a thousand possesses.

As for the Chinese people, I find them much more interesting and agreeable than I had expected. They are intelligent, amiable and possessing a good degree of civilization. But they are a nation of pharisees. Their religion varies in different parts of the empire, but their one supreme god, universally worshiped, is Custom. Their reverence for parents and elders, of which we hear so much, is only a part of this worship of Custom, and at heart means very little. We hoped at first that this war would do much toward breaking the barrier of pride, prejudice and custom; but it seems now to have altered the situation very little. We beg all the friends at home to pray for us.

THE SOLDIERS' OPEN ENROLLMENT ASSOCIATION.

Dayton, Ohio, July 25, 1895.

Editor Cynosure:—Under the above caption I desire to tell your readers of a movement in the interest of good citizenship among old soldiers. The association took its origin at Hudson, Ind., May, 1893. Many of the survivors of the war are not inclined to join the Grand Army of the Republic because of its secrecy and many other disagreeable affairs connected with its organization, but desire to be enrolled in some kind of association where they can exchange thought on questions which touch the weal and woe of the country. The residence of the writer being at Dayton, Ohio, near the Soldiers' Home, gives opportunity to see the real condition of many of the boys whom the Home attracts. There are a great many of the men here who regard their characters too highly to debauch their lives in the slums of the city, but this is by no means true of a large number of them. They reel on our streets, sleep in our gutters, prostrate themselves before the vilest characters of the city and are robbed of their money as well as the loss of character. The G. A. R. offers no help. The saloons within a mile and a half are banished, but the saloon in the Home is there by the authority of the nation, and those who desire can drink to their appetites, content.

What is here said of the boys in the Home, is also true of many throughout the country who visit the saloons of the towns and cities and there spend the money their families ought to have. Most of them are pensioners and are expending their pensions to support the saloons and to increase the tax list to honest industries and increase the burdens of honest and hard-toiling men and women. The drunkenness and its associate vices and crimes are so numerous, so terrible, so cruel, so frequent, as ought to arouse the fears of patriotic men everywhere, and call for a line of action to suppress the revolting corruption of the brave men who offered their lives upon the altars of their country to redeem it from the impending danger of disunion and disruption. The tendency of war is towards hardness of heart and immorality. The exceptions are not ignored, and were it not that there is a conserving force among the survivors of the war, there would be still more vice and crime than we now deplore.

The association we have organized has undertaken to do something immediately towards a better state of society. Whatever influence one of the boys may have over another will be brought to bear upon him, and also upon lawmakers in order to have a better state of affairs touching the soldier's moral condition. I have in my possession about five hundred letters of boys who are not in favor of secret societies. They are desirous of uniting with us in a movement which is as open as the religious services of the Christian church. This they will find in the association which completed its organization on the Fourth of July, 1895. I herewith send articles one and two, together with the seven resolutions which set forth its object as follows:

RULES AND RESOLUTIONS OF THE GENERAL SOCIETY OF THE SOLDIERS' ENROLLMENT ASSOCIATION.

NAME.

Art. 1. The name of the association shall be The Soldiers' Open Enrollment Association.

OBJECT.

Art. 2. The object of the association shall be the elevation of good citizenship and society, and also to afford opportunity to its members to interchange thought and more practically unite their services to ameliorate the unfortunate condition of many comrades, whose sad lot both physically and morally calls for sympathy and assistance. Also to give expressions to all patriotic questions which touch the weal or the woe of our common country and countrymen. The more definite object of the association is further set forth in a series of resolutions which are here appended and made part of article 2, of the rules of the association.

Resolved. 1. That our first duty is to God as creatures fashioned after his image and destined to an endless life, and as being responsible at the bar of God for our conduct. Following this comes our duty to our homes and native land.

2. That virtue and every ennobling sentiment which forms the basic principle of loyal citizenship is incumbent upon all who desire the confidence and esteem of the good people of our country. Profanity, vice, immorality in every respect, under whatever specious pretext, provocation, or social inclination, is by us deplored and denounced.

3. That it is unpatriotic to consent to take any obligations to obey the mandates of any sovereign or of any of the authorized officers or priests of his dominion, when such authority asserts itself to be more binding than the patriotic pledges of fealty to maintain the laws of our land, whether magisterial or municipal.

4. That it is unpatriotic to subscribe to the belief of doctrines either civil or religious which are in conflict with the divine teachings of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, to whose authority both civil and ecclesiastical governments owe their right to exist.

5. That it is not in harmony with true patriotism to stand identified with any institution that abridges the rights of citizens, either by limiting the freedom of speech in matters of local or general concern, or by placing restrictions upon the immunities guaranteed by the constitution to all law abiding citizens of the republic.

6. That it is not in harmony with the design of a free government where the equality of the citizen is one of the vouchsafed rights of all who obey its laws, to become allied with organizations which segregate from the community only such citizens as are in their judgment eligible to membership, and thereby become the especial favorites of privileges which others as worthy as they, are, under no circumstances, permitted to enjoy.

7. That it is unbecoming the character and dignity of any of the survivors of the late war to engage in the manufacture, sale, exportation, importation, or consumption of intoxicating liquors to be used as a beverage, or to rent, lease, or own any property upon which such beverages are made and sold, or to go as bondsman upon any document that gives license to the traffic in ardent spirits of whatever kind.

LETTER FROM WASHINGTON.

Washington, D. C., July 31, 1895.

Editor Cynosure:—Nearly everybody can cite instances showing that what were at first considered great misfortunes have afterwards turned out to be great blessings. Present indications are that the destruction by fire, last week, of the Y. M. C. A. building and contents was one of these blessings in disguise. The walls of the burned building were not cold before half a dozen churches located in the central part of the city had tendered the burned-out association a temporary home. After mature consideration, and with hearts full of gratitude for the offers made, the officers concluded that, owing to the non-denominational nature of the Y. M. C. A., it would be best not to locate in any church building. They secured a year's lease on a floor in an office building on the same square with the burned building, for headquarters, and accepted the tender of the lecture-room of the Foundry M. E. church, just around the corner, for the large Sabbath afternoon meetings.

The management of the Washington Grove grounds having tendered the use thereof, the Salvation Army will to morrow begin a five days' camp meeting there. This will be the first camp meeting held by the Salvation Army in the vicinity of Washington, although it has successfully conducted them in the neighborhood of New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and other cities.

Rev. Dr. J. J. Muir, of the E Street Baptist church, preached an interesting and logical sermon on "Happy Mediocrity," last Sabbath. His text was Prov. 30: 8: "Give me neither poverty nor riches....lest I be full and deny Thee, saying, where is the Lord? or lest I be poor and steal and take the name of my God in vain." Most careful observers will, I think, agree with Dr. Muir, who said: "The middle class of society, those people who have enough for their daily wants and are undisturbed by the pangs of hunger or by the annoyance of great riches, are the happiest." In conclusion he said: "In the state of happy mediocrity we are privileged as in no other to best enjoy the grace of God."

"Go ye into the highways and byways" has been literally followed by a band of good men and women who have, under the auspices of the Central Union Mission, opened a branch mission in the most disreputable section of the city, to be specially devoted to the rescue of fallen women. The name of the new mission, "The Open Door," was very aptly chosen. May it be the open door to respectability and a better life to many who enter it.

THE LODGE AND THE CHURCH.

Kirksville, Mo., July 24, 1895.

Dear Cynosure:—I send you this article on "The Church and the Lodge" from the pen of "A. W. C." Who the writer is I do not know, but that he is a sophist of the first water, I am fully convinced. It would be difficult to crowd more sophistry into the same space. Worse than all, the editor of the Christian Standard (Cincinnati) approves the article. How are the mighty fallen! Shades of Isaac Errett, the illustrious founder of the Standard! He was opposed to all secret societies. It seems that the discussion of the lodge is to be crowded out of the Standard. That is the iniquity of the whole business. Lodges and lodge members dare not enter the arena of discussion. They dare not let us turn on the light. The light would dissipate the unfruitful works of darkness, but like the liquor traffic, the lodge is a nocturnal plant and flourishes in the night.

The following is the article above referred to in the Standard:

"Much that has been said of lodge people in the way of criticism of the church, by comparing the work of the lodge and the church, is caused by total misapprehension of the chief work of the church or of the chief purpose of the lodge, or both.

"The purpose for which the church exists is not to give temporal benefits—to care for the sick, minister to the needy or bury the dead—and all it does of this is but incident to or the result of its chief work. The sparks fly from under the hammer of the smith. They are incident to or the result of his work, but he does not strike that the sparks may fly. He strikes to shape the iron, but he would be in a measure surprised if no sparks were thrown off. The care of the sick and of the needy and burying the dead are but the flashes of the flying fragments of activity as the church is shaping sinners into saints.

"The great reason the church exists, or should exist, is that it is the only institution in the world the especial mission of which is to save sinners, that is, reform the lives of sinners. The lodge may, at times does, do something in reformatory work, but that is only incidental to its chief business, which is to give temporal benefits. All the lodge proposes to do or can do, is to give social, temporal or financial aid. Of course, that is benevolent, but all the benevolence—that is desire or intention to do good—is expended in giving temporal help to those who need, and that help is mostly confined to the members of the lodge.

"On the other hand, the church proposes to give, and can give, moral, spiritual and eternal benefits. It would be manifest folly to compare the work of an insurance company with the work of the church, for the design of each is totally different from the other. Primarily, the lodge is an insurance company, as it makes its faithful members secure from neglect. Each member takes such form of obligation that all members feel sure that help of a temporal kind will be at hand when needed. For the purpose of saving and reforming the sinful, the church stands without a peer; even without a competitor. It does save and reform, and with such effectiveness that lodges became possible. As a means of bestowing temporal benefits, the lodge is a success, and the church makes a mistake when it attempts to be its competitor, as all the temporal benefits the church bestows must be voluntarily given. The benefits the lodge bestows are compulsory—must be given."

The following editorial note is from the same issue of the Standard.

"We have received more than one communication on the "Lodge and the Church." We have not room for all. Because of the temperate tone and the just discrimination, we print the one signed A. W. C. The writer is an active preacher of the Gospel and a practical lodge man. The distinction he makes seems a very wise one, and agrees with what was said in our note last week."

SOWING THE SEED IN NEW ENGLAND.

BOSTON, July 26, 1895.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The hour is late, but since you have no New England letter this week, I feel inclined to give you a sketch of my work to-day. Bro. John B. White, of North Uxbridge, at whose home I spent the night, has been seriously afflicted with rheumatism, but is partially recovered. His light is not under a bushel, but he speaks freely for prohibition, anti-secrecy and in behalf of every good cause, and is heartily seconded by his entire household in his efforts to make the world better.

Calling on the resident pastor, Rev. A. J. Hopkins, I was glad to learn that he is not under the lodge yoke, and that he is not an indifferent spectator of the disintegrating effect of secret lodges upon the church of Christ. From others I learned that three deacons in the church are caged with the unclean night birds of the lodge, and that one at least is a Knight Templar. A free pastor under such circumstances would indeed be a marvel of "grit and grace."

Waiting an hour at Blackstone for the train, I improved the time in presenting the face and testimony of Wendell Phillips to as many of the citizens as I could reach. A gentleman from Worcester, stopping at the Lincoln House, after reading the tract called me back for an explanation. I gave the desired information in as few words as possible, when he in turn gave me some account of lodge supremacy and the way it used its power in politics and religion in his city. If his was a true indictment it is certainly not complimentary to the municipal authorities, the ministry, or to the people who tamely submit and liberally support cringing sycophants in the pulpits and lodge menials in office. For the honor of a depraved race it is to be hoped that his estimate is not sustained by the facts, but he had the appearance of a substantial, prosperous business man and credible witness. He gave me the card of his firm and promised to call when in Boston.

At Douglass Camp I found the tabernacle well filled and the meeting in progress. After the song and testimony service conducted by Bro. Geo. M. Morse, Rev. B. Carradine was introduced and preached a lengthy and searching Gospel sermon in which he dealt faithfully with his brethren. This was followed by a service at the altar in which many took an active part. At dinner I had an opportunity of asking permission from the leader to distribute tracts, which was granted without a moment's hesitation. I presented Bro. Carradine with a copy of his St. Louis sermon on secret societies and asked if he objected to its distribution on the grounds. He gave his assent freely, called the attention of the brethren to it, and was in every way cordial. The two hundred and more copies I had were soon in the hands of the ministers and leaders at the meeting, and the Lodge Lamp containing an account of the murder of Rev. Johntson in West Virginia, embellished with the face of Bro. Carradine, was in demand, so that my supply of two hundred was soon exhausted. About five hundred each of Dr. Gordon's and Wendell Phillips' tracts were put in circulation, and only one man whom I met attempted any defence of the lodge, while scores bid me God-speed in my work. Bro. F. W. Weed was a very efficient helper, and Bro. Messinger with others did their full share to forward the work. Since my first visit to Douglass a very perceptible change has come over the people upon the subject of secrecy, and every friend ought to feel encouraged to push on the work with vigor

The afternoon service was in the open air, and Bro W. H. Turkington, of New Hampshire, preached one of the most powerful and logical Gospel sermons to which I ever listened. I would gladly have remained longer, but having a desire to spend to-morrow with the Salvation Army at Camp Hebron, I deemed it my duty to return for a fresh supply of literature that I might be early on the ground prepared for whatever the Lord has prepared for me.

A MONUMENT TO LOVEJOY.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., July 26, 1895.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—On reading your interesting article in this week's issue concerning the plan for a Lovejoy memorial stone, the question arises in my mind, To what extent is this call for $12,500 likely to meet with a favorable response? This brave man prophesied, and then was offered on the altar of freedom so long before the cause could promise any triumph,—so long before that shining galaxy of noble men, those "black Abolitionists," Garrison, Gerrit Smith, Wendell Phillips, Douglas, Greeley, and many others, came up full orbed to throw light upon the scene and inspire men's hearts with hope,—that I fear this name at the very head of freedom's honor roll is after all comparatively obscured. Will there not be some effective revival of the story of his life and deeds? The magazines are "looking backward" now for heroes

"In whose ashes live their wonted fires."

Why not take the story of Lovejoy?

Then as to a monument, of course the usual thing is a pile of marble. How I wish a school—a Christian mission, with school and church, at some point in the South not now thus occupied—might be established, and named "The Lovejoy Memorial." Then a proper marble shaft in the Alton cemetery, of moderate cost, would still do honor as marking his burial place.

The subject has peculiar interest to the writer, when, but a child, in Pennsylvania, and before the war, I heard from my father the story of Lovejoy. By and by I read it. I used to read the burning words of his brother, Hon. Owen Lovejoy, delivered in the House of Representatives at Washington, at a time when under the fugitive slave law it was attempted to silence all discussion and put a gag on the mouth of every freeman, North or South, if he did not bow the knee to the Baal of slavery. I reproduce from memory a sentence: "My name is Owen Lovejoy. My home is fifteen miles southeast of Galena, Illinois. I harbor and protect every fugitive from slavery who comes to my door; and let it be written on every leaf of the forest; let every bird of the air carry it; let it ring among the arches of heaven where it will find welcome, and let it reverberate and bellow all along the deep gorges of hell, where slaveholders and slavecatchers are most likely to hear it." I cannot recall exactly the occasion nor the year. It must have been 1855 or 1856. I wish some one who has a copy of that address would have it published.

About ten years ago I had occasion to attend a missionary conference at Alton. With Rev. Mr. Chaddock, Congregational pastor at Alton, as guide, I made a pilgrimage to the grave of Lovejoy in the Alton cemetery. I recall the event as one of the most interesting and impressive in my life. We found above the martyr's head a small and low limestone (I think) block, surmounted by a marble scroll, as if partly unrolled, and bearing these words: "Hic jacet Lovejoy. Jam parce, sepulto." ("Here lies Lovejoy. Spare him now, in the grave.") How different was the Alton of 1885 from that of 1837! How different the America of to-day!

More and more must good and true men—Christians and patriots—revere the memory of Elijah P. Lovejoy, who went to his death, not alone because he would speak for the defenseless Negro slave, but because he would not be in mind or voice a slave himself to the intolerant spirit of the times. His noble Christian manhood revolted utterly at the idea of being bound in conscience, or fettered in the God-given duty of pleading the cause of truth against error, of light against darkness. Like Sumner, he loved men and "hated only wrong to man." It was wrong to enslave men. It was wrong to be silent and consenting to American slavery. Slavery could not endure discussion. The light was not welcome. It demanded to be let alone, just as men to-day, enslaved and bound by oath to perpetual secrecy and silence, regard as enemies those who insist that "he that doeth truth cometh to the light that his deeds may be manifest that they are wrought in God."

It is painful to think that the great mass of men who thus part with their liberty of conscience and take an oath in ignorance are honest in their intention, and while not seeing the hidden evils, are yet debarred from that open and thorough examination and discussion which are so welcome when men and systems are consciously right. All honor to the principle for which the martyr perished, and all honor to his memory. I wish to put a mite in the memorial fund. B. A. IMES.

TYRANNY OF THE LODGE.

CAMERON, W. Va., July 15, 1895.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I notice the following item in the daily press: "The governor of Pennsylvania has approved an act forbidding unauthorized persons or suspended members of the G. A. R. from wearing the button or badge, and providing for summary conviction before any justice for such offense."

So these Masonic and Odd-fellow legislators who recently wound up their session at Harrisburg in a drunken orgie, disgracing the fair fame of our commonwealth, after so much of their time and opportunity could find time to legislate in favor of the lodge. Yes, and they presume to dictate the kind of buttons the people shall be allowed to wear. Who but secret conspirators for office and pensions would descend to such selfish tyranny. If any one should take a fancy to these buttons why should the magistrate waste his time over it? But if a button cannot be worn except with the consent of a secret clan, what is the "bill of rights" which the American citizen can lay claim to?

Why not prohibit the Mason's pin, the square and compass, the Odd-fellow's three links? Yea, why not publish a fashion plate to keep us posted as to what we shall, or shall not, wear? Is there no way to get rid of such law makers or to enlighten the citizens who by their votes put them in power?

HOW TO TELL PURE FABRICS.

Wool or Silk Containing Mixtures May Be Readily Discovered.

A simple but effective practice is in vogue in Germany for determining, without the aid of a chemist, whether a fabric of silk or wool is free from admixture of cotton fibers, of flax, china grass or other vegetable constituents. A piece of the stuff to be examined, say about three inches square, is, after careful cleaning, plunged into strong sulphuric acid, water being afterward added, and the whole boiled. In about five minutes the fluid is poured into a clean vessel and made strongly alkaline by a saturation with caustic soda; then are added a few drops of dissolved orchil, and the mixture is warmed for several minutes up to a temperature of 180 degrees F. Now, if only 1 per cent of vegetable fiber exists in the fabric, the reddish violet color of the orchil is precipitated, or if this takes place only after heating for five minutes the quantity amounts to less than 1 per cent. It is absolutely necessary, however, that starch should be removed carefully from the stuff to be examined, as the presence of that substance vitiates the result. In testing goods alleged to be silk the result is attained more easily by plunging the sample into hydrochloric acid, the fiber of silk being very soluble in such acid, and if the material contains wool or cotton it remains behind.

How to Clean Mattresses.

Empty the mattresses to be cleaned. See that every particle of the hair filling is picked apart and shaken free of dust. Then, after washing in strong soapsuds and rinsing in lukewarm water, the filling is squeezed as dry as possible and hung up to dry in the sun and air in large bags made of mosquito netting. In the meanwhile the ticking has been washed or a new one substituted, and then with a long, strong needle and twine sew together again.

How to Make Rolly Poly Pudding.

Prepare a light cream paste, roll a quarter of an inch thick; cover with sweet currants, or dried cherries, or sliced figs. Roll and pinch the ends to secure the fruit. Put on pie pan, set in steamer with bits of wood underneath to allow the passage of the steam. Steam constantly for two hours. Sauce of cream or fruit juice.

How to Soften Wet Shoes.

As soon as you can remove the wet shoes do so and rub them well with a soft rag to get some of the dampness out and to take off all the mud. Then rub them with a cloth saturated with kerosene. Get as much of the oil into them as possible and then fill them as full of dry oats as you can and set them aside for a few hours, when apply another coating of kerosene. The stiffness will have disappeared.

How to Make a "Flaky" Paste.

Take half a pound of good fresh butter and the same of flour. Into the flour rub 2 ounces of the butter throroughly. Mix it with a little water to make it moist, but not wet; then roll it out into a square to the thickness of half an inch. Dip the 8 ounces of butter into some flour and knead it with the hand until it is a little soft and the shape of a ball. Put this in the center of the square of paste; fold the four sides of the square toward the center, well covering the ball of butter. Flour well, roll out again into a square half an inch thick, but be careful not to let the butter break through the paste. Again fold the four sides toward the center, flour well, roll flour again; repeat this six times. The paste is then ready for use.

How to Make Cheese Straws.

Grate 3 tablespoons of cheese; add 3 tablespoons of flour, a little red pepper and salt; add to the dry ingredients a tablespoon of melted butter, a tablespoon of water and the yolk of an egg. Roll thin as for cookies, cut in strips five inches long and a half inch wide. Bake 15 minutes. Serve on a plate with fringed doily. Build straws up like a log cabin.

How the Russet on Apples Is Caused.

Russet on apples is caused by the alternating temperature—light, shade, dryness and moisture, which follow one another in varying succession on showery days in July and August. The same result is not observable when there has been a constant or continual rain, succeeding to and followed by a cloudy sky, but the sudden intense light which generally follows a shower injures the wet skin of the fruit and occasions small cracks like the network upon a melon. The apple obtained its name from the russet color of the shepherd's holiday clothing, a species of dingy brown.

How to Brighten Brass Ornaments.

Brass ornaments should be first washed with a strong lye, made of rock alum, in the proportion of an ounce of alum to a pint of water. When dry, rub with leather and fine tripoli. This will give the brass the brilliancy of gold.

by total misapprehension of the chief work of the church or of the chief purpose of the lodge, or both.

"The purpose for which the church exists is not to give temporal benefits—to care for the sick, minister to the needy or bury the dead—and all it does of this is but incident to or the result of its chief work. The sparks fly from under the hammer of the smith. They are incident to or the result of his work, but he does not strike that the sparks may fly. He strikes to shape the iron, but he would be in a measure surprised if no sparks were thrown off. The care of the sick and of the needy and burying the dead are but the flashes of the flying fragments of activity as the church is shaping sinners into saints.

"The great reason the church exists, or should exist, is that it is the only institution in the world the especial mission of which is to save sinners, that is, reform the lives of sinners. The lodge may, at times does, do something in reformatory work, but that is only incidental to its chief business, which is to give temporal benefits. All the lodge proposes to do or can do, is to give social, temporal or financial aid. Of course, that is benevolent, but all the benevolence—that is desire or intention to do good—is expended in giving temporal help to those who need, and that help is mostly confined to the members of the lodge.

Owen Lovejoy, delivered in the House of Representatives at Washington, at a time when under the fugitive slave law it was attempted to silence all discussion and put a gag on the mouth of every freeman, North or South, if he did not bow the knee to the Baal of slavery. I reproduce from memory a sentence: "My name is Owen Lovejoy. My home is fifteen miles southeast of Galena, Illinois. I harbor and protect every fugitive from slavery who comes to my door; and let it be written on every leaf of the forest; let every bird of the air carry it; let it ring among the arches of heaven where it will find welcome, and let it reverberate and bellow all along the deep gorges of hell, where slaveholders and slavecatchers are most likely to hear it." I cannot recall exactly the occasion nor the year. It must have been 1855 or 1856. I wish some one who has a copy of that address would have it published.

About ten years ago I had occasion to attend a missionary conference at Alton. With Rev. Mr. Chaddock, Congregational pastor at Alton, as guide, I made a pilgrimage to the grave of Lovejoy in the Alton cemetery. I recall the event as one of the most interesting and impressive in my life. We found above the martyr's head a small and low limestone (I think) block, surmounted by a marble scroll, as if partly unrolled, and bearing these words: "Hic jacet Lovejoy. Jam parce, sepulto." ("Here lies Lovejoy. Spare him now, in the grave.") How different was the Alton of 1885 from that of 1837! How different the America of to-day!

More and more must good and true men—Christians and patriots—revere the memory of Elijah P. Lovejoy, who went to his death, not alone because he would speak for the defenseless Negro slave, but because he would not be in mind or voice a slave himself to the intolerant spirit of the times. His noble Christian manhood revolted utterly at the idea of being bound in conscience, or fettered in the God-given duty of pleading the cause of truth against error, of light against darkness. Like Sumner, he loved men and "hated only wrong to man." It was wrong to enslave men. It was wrong to be silent and consenting to American slavery. Slavery could not endure discussion. The light was not welcome. It demanded to be let alone, just as men to-day, enslaved and bound by oath to perpetual secrecy and silence, regard as enemies those who insist that "he that doeth truth cometh to the light that his deeds may be manifest that they are wrought in God."

It is painful to think that the great mass of men who thus part with their liberty of conscience and take an oath in ignorance are honest in their intention, and while not seeing the hidden evils, are yet debarred from that open and thorough examination and discussion which are so welcome when men and systems are consciously right. All honor to the principle for which the martyr perished, and all honor to his memory. I wish to put a mite in the memorial fund. B. A. Imes.

TYRANNY OF THE LODGE.

Cameron, W. Va., July 15, 1895.

Editor Cynosure:—I notice the following item in the daily press: "The governor of Pennsylvania has approved an act forbidding unauthorized persons or suspended members of the G. A. R. from wearing the button or badge, and providing for summary conviction before any justice for such offense."

So these Masonic and Odd-fellow legislators who recently wound up their session at Harrisburg in a drunken orgie, disgracing the fair fame of our commonwealth, after so much of their time and opportunity could find time to legislate in favor of the lodge. Yes, and they presume to dictate the kind of buttons the people shall be allowed to wear. Who but secret conspirators for office and pensions would descend to such selfish tyranny. If any one should take a fancy to these buttons why should the magistrate waste his time over it? But if a button cannot be worn except with the consent of a secret clan, what is the "bill of rights" which the American citizen can lay claim to?

Why not prohibit the Mason's pin, the square and compass, the Odd-fellow's three links? Yea, why not publish a fashion plate to keep us posted as to what we shall, or shall not, wear? Is there no way to get rid of such law makers or to enlighten the citizens who by their votes put them in power? J. W. Moss.

HOW TO TELL PURE FABRICS.

Wool or Silk Containing Mixtures May Be Readily Discovered.

A simple but effective practice is in vogue in Germany for determining, without the aid of a chemist, whether a fabric of silk or wool is free from admixture of cotton fibers, of flax, china grass or other vegetable constituents. A piece of the stuff to be examined, say about three inches square, is, after careful cleaning, plunged into strong sulphuric acid, water being afterward added, and the whole boiled. In about five minutes the fluid is poured into a clean vessel and made strongly alkaline by a saturation with caustic soda; then are added a few drops of dissolved orchil, and the mixture is warmed for several minutes up to a temperature of 180 degrees F. Now, if only 1 per cent of vegetable fiber exists in the fabric, the reddish violet color of the orchil is precipitated, or if this takes place only after heating for five minutes the quantity amounts to less than 1 per cent. It is absolutely necessary, however, that starch should be removed carefully from the stuff to be examined, as the presence of that substance vitiates the result. In testing goods alleged to be silk the result is attained more easily by plunging the sample into hydrochloric acid, the fiber of silk being very soluble in such acid, and if the material contains wool or cotton it remains behind.

How to Clean Mattresses.

Empty the mattresses to be cleaned. See that every particle of the hair filling is picked apart and shaken free of dust. Then, after washing in strong soapsuds and rinsing in lukewarm water, the filling is squeezed as dry as possible and hung up to dry in the sun and air in large bags made of mosquito netting. In the meanwhile the ticking has been washed or a new one substituted, and then with a long, strong needle and twine sew together again.

How to Make Rolly Poly Pudding.

Prepare a light cream paste, roll a quarter of an inch thick; cover with sweet currants, or dried cherries, or sliced figs. Roll and pinch the ends to secure the fruit. Put on pie pan, set in steamer with bits of wood underneath to allow the passage of the steam. Steam constantly for two hours. Sauce of cream or fruit juice.

How to Soften Wet Shoes.

As soon as you can remove the wet shoes do so and rub them well with a soft rag to get some of the dampness out and to take off all the mud. Then rub them with a cloth saturated with kerosene. Get as much of the oil into them as possible and then fill them as full of dry oats as you can and set them aside for a few hours, when apply another coating of kerosene. The stiffness will have disappeared.

How to Make a "Flaky" Paste.

Take half a pound of good fresh butter and the same of flour. Into the flour rub 2 ounces of the butter throroughly. Mix it with a little water to make it moist, but not wet; then roll it out into a square to the thickness of half an inch. Dip the 8 ounces of butter into some flour and knead it with the hand until it is a little soft and the shape of a ball. Put this in the center of the square of paste; fold the four sides of the square toward the center, well covering the ball of butter. Flour well, roll out again into a square half an inch thick, but be careful not to let the butter break through the paste. Again fold the four sides toward the center, flour well, roll flour again; repeat this six times. The paste is then ready for use.

How to Make Cheese Straws.

Grate 3 tablespoons of cheese; add 3 tablespoons of flour, a little red pepper and salt; add to the dry ingredients a tablespoon of melted butter, a tablespoon of water and the yolk of an egg. Roll thin as for cookies, cut in strips five inches long and a half inch wide. Bake 15 minutes. Serve on a plate with fringed doily. Build straws up like a log cabin.

How the Russet on Apples Is Caused.

Russet on apples is caused by the alternating temperature—light, shade, dryness and moisture, which follow one another in varying succession on showery days in July and August. The same result is not observable when there has been a constant or continual rain, succeeding to and followed by a cloudy sky, but the sudden intense light which generally follows a shower injures the wet skin of the fruit and occasions small cracks like the network upon a melon. The apple obtained its name from the russet color of the shepherd's holiday clothing, a species of dingy brown.

How to Brighten Brass Ornaments.

Brass ornaments should be first washed with a strong lye, made of rock alum, in the proportion of an ounce of alum to a pint of water. When dry, rub with leather and fine tripoli. This will give the brass the brilliancy of gold.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, AUGUST 8, 1895.

HELP THE CYNOSURE.

We have been sending out for several weeks past a large number of sample copies of this paper. At no time in the history of this reform has there been such a crying necessity for the friends of the cause to awake to renewed effort in the circulation of anti-secret literature. In closing a letter last week, Sec. J. P. Stoddard enumerates the following reasons why the friends of anti-secrecy should help to give wider circulation to the organ of the movement. None of our workers have had as much experience in the field as Bro. Stoddard, and his words come with the greatest emphasis. He says:

"As I had an engagement to preach in Boston on Sabbath, I returned to the city, and taking up the last Cynosure read from the beginning of the first to the end of the ninth page with great satisfaction. It isbrim full of just the information and the inspiration that Major Brewer and tens of thousands who like him 'see only men as trees walking,' need upon this perplexing question, and I take my pen to give some reasons why friends should do their utmost to extend its circulation.

"1. Because it has been tried, and for more than a quarter of a century has been as true to its mission of exposing the secret lodge iniquity and pointing its readers to the more excellent way of salvation through Christ, as the Polar Star to its mission in guiding the mariner in his pathless voyage. It is no longer an experiment.

"2. It is the most comprehensive and reliable source for obtaining information upon the history, character and doings of the secret empire that is accessible to the people.

"3. It is a clean paper, free from fiction and abounding in facts germane to every living issue and needed reform in church and state.

"4. It is independent and neither courts the favor of the great or condones the sins of the wealthy; nor does it 'call good evil and evil good' at the behest of party, church or lodge; and while making no pretence to infallibility, it does not shun within its sphere to declare the whole counsel of God.

"5. It is not a party or denominational journal but an educator, teaching pure morals, Christian patriotism and the fundamental doctrine of salvation through the atonement.

"6. It is the organ of communication and bond of union between widely distributed forces contending for the destruction of the anti-Christ of these last days.

"7. It is a 'character builder' in the home, instilling correct ideas and sound principles into the minds of the children, and faithfully pointing out the snares that are hidden along their pathway.

"8. The Cynosure is the most feared and thoroughly hated by the lodge leaders of any opponent to their deep-laid schemes.

"9. That our free institutions are assailed by secret and subtle foes the most incredulous cannot doubt, and it is the mission of the Cynosure to sound the alarm and uncover the hidden things of dishonesty.

"Lastly it holds and teaches that the best type of humanity is not an oath-bound serf in some secret clan, or decorate knight with sword and helmet for carnal combat, but that the best citizen and the most useful member of state is the most faithful, devoted and conscientious member of the true church of Christ, 'the pillar and ground of the truth.' 'Be not faithless, but believing.' You can obtain at least one more reader since 'all things are possible to them that believe.' Make the effort in Christ's name and for the sake of Him whom the lodge rejects, and you cannot fail."

THE POWER BEHIND THE THRONE.

Bro. Shealley of Hiawatha, Kan., writes us a strong article illustrating how the enforcement of prohibitory legislation can never be made a success until the lodge power is broken. He says:

"Fourteen years ago we met the liquor power on the field of constitutional prohibition, and 'they were ours.' A tidal wave of prohibition rolled over the land. When it receded it left only three States with prohibitory legislation. Nebraska struggled bravely against the rum power, but the battle was lost. To-day we have not a single Prohibitionist in Congress or in our State legislatures. Christians are praying all over the land for the overthrow of the rum power. Church assemblies and Christian Endeavor conventions pass resolutions, but in spite of all, we seem to be losing ground.

"What is the matter? Will you let me answer this question by an illustration? In Hiawatha more than two years ago a double rum-murder was committed. In the center of the city, at midnight, in the jail yard the murderer was lynched. Guilty consciences were awakened. Mass meetings were held. Speeches were made by Major Morrill, now governor, and others, urging the enforcement of the law. A law and order league was organized. Overwhelming testimony was taken convicting all the druggists but one, of violating the law in many counts. They were fined each $300 and costs, and what was worse, the State secretary of the Pharmacy Association threatened to revoke their permits. There was a great show of law enforcement.

"But soon there was a secret power seen to be operating. It was the power whose symbol was the square and compass. Hailing signs of distress were given, and soon all these druggists were turned scot free, with no penalty but the costs, and now they are doing business at the old stand. Numerous other offenders who where convicted, were pardoned on petition of Major Morrill, a high Mason. So the last state of prohibition in Kansas is worse than the first. Yes, we have met the enemy, 'and we are theirs.' We have constitutional prohibition, but there is a power behind the throne that makes it a dead letter. We are powerless in the grip of the secret empire. My soul burns with indignation at the condition of things. If there is not enough of courageous manhood in the Prohibition party to grapple with this insidious and dangerous enemy of good government, then I have no use for that party; neither has the Great Captain in whose name we are making war upon the rum power."

EDWARD BEECHER.

The death of Rev. Edward Beecher, July 28, at Brooklyn, N. Y., revives the memory of some notable events in the progress of reform. He was president of Illinois College at Jacksonville at the time Lovejoy was shot at Alton, in 1838. The excitement caused by this event ran high at Jacksonville. Dr. Beecher, after preaching a powerful sermon condemning the outrage upon free speech, saw signs of mob violence. As he started to leave the church there was a move toward him by men who said, "Where is he? Where is he?" He walked calmly forward, saying, "Here I am." The men slunk away and he went on unharmed.

In 1855 he became pastor of the Congregational church at Galesburg, Ill., where he resided till 1870, when he went to Brooklyn, where he remained till his death. He was the oldest brother of Henry Ward Beecher, a graduate of Yale, and his first pastorate was that of Park Street church, Boston. He died at the age of nearly ninety-two, and leaves a widow, two sons and an adopted daughter.

He was much associated with Dr. Jonathan Blanchard while the latter was president of Knox College at Galesburg, and he strongly sympathized with him in his opposition to secret societies. Dr. Beecher was the author of a report on the question of secret societies which was adopted by the general association of Congregational churches at their meeting in Ottawa, 1866. In it we find this strong testimony:

"But the most serious view of the case lies in the fact that it [Freemasonry] professes to rest on a religious basis, and to have religious temples, yet is avowedly based on a platform that ignores Christ and Christianity as supreme and essential to true allegiance to the real God of the universe. Its worship, therefore, taken as a system, is in rivalry to and in derogation of Christ and Christianity.....

"There is access to the true God only through Christ: 'I am the way, and the truth, and the life. No man cometh unto the Father but through me.' 'Whosoever denieth the Son, the same hath not the Father; but he that acknowledgeth the Son, hath the Father also.' All Christian churches are based on these truths, and the center and culmination of their worship is this recognition of Christ in the sacrament as 'the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sins of the world.' Christ, too, is the center of the worship of heaven. Hence, if Christians associate with others in worship, it can rightly be only on the ground that the worship centers in Christ, and acknowledges him as Lord, to the glory of the Father.

"Hence, if, for the sake of extending an organization, men are admitted of all religions—pagans, Mohammedans, deists, Jews—and if, for the sake of accommodating them with a common ground of union, Christ is ignored, and the God of nature or of creation is professedly worshiped, and morrality inculcated solely on natural grounds, then such worship is not accepted by the real God and Father of the universe, for he looks on it as involving the rejection and dishonor, nay, the renewed crucifixion of his Son. As to Christ, he tolerates no neutrality. He who is not for him is against him. These principles do not involve the question of secrecy. They hold true of all societies, open or secret.

If, on such anti-Christion grounds, prayers are framed, rites established, and chaplains appointed, ignoring Christ and his intercession, God regards it as a mockery and an insult to himself and his church. In it is revealed the hatred of Satan to Christ. By it Christ is dethroned and Satan exalted."

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Dr. H. H. George, of Pittsburg, will give his whole time to the National Reform work after Aug. 1.

—A Connecticut pastor writes: "Allow me to congratulate you on the quality of the Cynosure in these days."

—Mrs. W. B. Stoddard, we are sorry to hear, has been detained at Wellesley, Mass., by a spell of malarial fever. Her husband is with her and writes that the outlook is favorable for breaking it up soon.

—Rev. O. H. Powers, Sr., an M. E. minister of this city and brother of Rev. C. Powers, our devoted Tennessee agent, visited us last week, providing himself with anti-secret literature. He is deeply in sympathy with our work.

—O. N. Carnahan and J. W. McEowen, of Viola, were welcome callers at our office last week. They placed us under obligation for much interesting information respecting the cause and old friends and workers at Viola and Aledo.

—Bro. H. H. Hinman, our veteran reform worker, met with quite a severe fall last week at his home in Oberlin, which will lay him up for a few days. His son, Geo. W. Hinman, writes that the injuries were quite painful but not serious.

—Bro. A. J. Millard, of Little Rock, Ark., was the first to respond to our request for back numbers of the Cynosure, and Mrs. H. W. Bourne, of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, was the second. We thank them for their promptness. We now only want August 9, 1894, and September 7, 1893.

—Bro. M. L. Worcester, of Kingston, Ill., writes us: "Thank the Lord for putting it into the hearts of the people to erect a monument to the memory of the martyr Elijah P. Lovejoy. Please put me down for $10 if the movement is carried out as proposed in the last Cynosure."

—Mrs. Mary C. Baker, Recording Secretary of the N. C. A., and office editor of the Free Methodist, says she heard Dr. Edward Beecher thirty-eight years ago preach in his church at Galesburg. She remembers that all had hymn and tune books, and the whole congregation sang.

—Bro. John S. White, of Steelton, Pa., writes us of his appreciation of the letter of Sister Henrietta E. Muzzy, Bombay, India, and asks how remittances can be made to the work there. By obtaining a postal money order for Manager India Watchman, Bombay, India, or by obtaining British exchange from a reliable bank.

—Bro. Malcolm McNeil, a seceding Mason, is at the head of the Chicago Sailors' Mission, and is doing a very important work among the poor and homeless sailors. During the past six months upwards of 9,000 free meals have been given away and more than 950 lodgings. It is a worthy cause, and Bro. McNeil will be thankful to receive any donations in money or clothing for the needy.

—Prof Simpson Ely, of Kirksville, Mo., is announced to hold meetings at Carrollton, Mo., in a few weeks. He is also announced to hold a protracted meeting at Wapello, Iowa, in September. The professor is a popular platform speaker and handles the lodge question in true logical style. We advise the friends of the anti-secret reform in these localities to try to secure him to lecture wherever possible.

—Rev. J. S. Turnbull, of the Peostone, Kan., United Presbyterian church, writes: "It is a great and important work in which the National Christian Association is engaged. I will be glad indeed to render any possible aid. The flood of secret societies is alarming. Everything almost that is proposed these days gives birth to an additional secret organization. How can they be checked is a question of vital importance."

—Rev. Charles Powers writes from McNairy, Tenn.: "The Lord helping me, I intend to surround Jackson with an army of men and women opposed to the lodge. I propose to hold meetings and lecture in every school district where it is possible to get a hearing. If I could afford it I would have a large tent set up in Jackson. In the meantime I shall prepare in the best possible manner to present the anti-secrecy reform. I feel its importance more and more as I proceed in the work."

—The annual conference of Christian workers under the personal direction of D. L. Moody at Northfield, Mass., from Aug 3-15, promises to attract a large attendance. Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe, of London, and Rev. Andrew Murry, of South Africa, both very popular teachers and Bible expositors, will be present during the conference. Among the speakers from this country will be Pres. C. A. Blanchard, Dr. A. C. Dixon, Dr. A. T. Pierson, Rev. J. Wilber Chapman, Dr. W. J. Erdman and others.

—Sec. A. Ritchie, of the Western Tract Society, writes us denying that they sold the plates and copyright of "Finney on Masonry" to Ezra A. Cook under compulsion. The society only thought it would be a good thing for itself and also for the N. C. A. to have these books on its list. Bro. Ritchie admits what he told us several years ago that when they first published them they received some threatening letters from Masons. He also told as at that time that they found they could not carry these books without loss to their business.

—Rev. J. A. Lord has resigned the pastorate of the Central Christian church, Cincinnati, O., to take the editorship of the Christian Standard. We sincerely hope he will not close the columns of his church paper against testimony on the secret society question. The founder of his church, Alexander Campbell, once said, "Nor can I well understand how any Christian man will answer Jesus Christ the question why he preferred to have his charities entered in the name and to the honor of a mystic Mason, rather than in the name and to the honor of Jesus Christ." We suggest to Bro. Lord that those words would make a good motto for the Standard.

—Rev. G. M. Elliott, principal of the Harbison Institute, at Beaufort, South Carolina, says in a letter: "I wish you God speed in the good work of the Cynosure. I trust your efforts will be greatly blessed. I regret my want of time to write more for the reform papers. I will endeavor to send you an article now and then. There is much need of your work in this section. Secret societies in many of our Southern cities are sapping the life of the churches. The money that should go for the support of the church is given to the societies. In Beaufort we are not so much troubled with secret societies as with the many little minor societies that do a work which belongs to the church, and a work which the church could do much better. We however have a few oath-bound societies, but they do not dominate our best people. I shall be pleased to do all I can for your cause in this section. I am deeply interested in it, and you can always count on my support in every way possible."

—In Scribner's August number is this interesting definition of a "scab" by a brakeman: "Would you mind tellin' me, jest to oblige, what a scab reely is?" "A scab?" said the brakeman, "why, a scab's a feller that takes another feller's job!" "Well, but," insisted the country-woman, "I don't understand. My daughter that I been visitin' in Iowa, she was havin' a cellar made—and the mason that was doin' it had a man workin' for him that bin workin' for him thirteen year and was the best man he had, but he wasn't a union man, and the boss of the union told him he'd got to send that man off 'cause he didn't belong to the union, or else all the others would strike on him, and they'd boycott him with his customers, so he done it, and another man took his place, now I s'pose he was a scab?" "Didn't they give the feller the choice of joinin' the union?" "I don't know. I know he went off, and he felt awful bad, 'cause he said 'twasn't no fun huntin' a job this year. Was that man who took his place a scab?" "Oh, no, ma'am, he was all right, he belonged to the union——" "Ain't nobody got a right to work without he belongs to the union?"

—A new secret order called "Character Castle" has recently been started in Indiana, that hotbed of secret societies. It is chiefly designed to capture the young and train them for the lodge. In their circular they say: "The idea which gave rise to this order is that we might use the love of secrecy as a means of winning boys and young men to, and holding them under, good influences, and in the companionship of good men of mature years, in society in which religion is not the distinguishing characteristic, but in which moral culture is never forgotten." It appeals to the boy's desire to learn secrets and his love of banners and regalia, and his desire for entertainment, and by these means wins and holds him. The secretary of this secret society, S. M. Connor, of Indianapolis, wrote to Prof. Simpson Ely for his approval of the order. He writes us: "I sent the 'scribe' my unqualified disapproval of the scheme. It now seems that the multiplication of lodges threatens to bleed the church to death. It makes my heart sick. What better 'character castle' can be found than the home and the church? It seems that this movement is largely in the hands of the preachers of my own communion. 'Tis true; 'tis pity; 'tis pity 'tis true.'"

TALKS TO YOUNG PEOPLE.

BY PROF. D. A STRAW.

BREAD.

What is one creature's bread is another's bane. The food of an angleworm is, to my view, dirt, yet he lives well on it and appears to enjoy his fare. There is a sort of insect whose proper food is parsnip tops, which are poison to most higher animals. Worms for a fish, bugs for a toad, and frogs for a snake, all are bread. A cow with good green pasture has ample supply; and a rabbit, after sleeping in a nest in the snow, seems content and frolicsome with a brier bush for breakfast. I know he likes a more luscious diet; green peas, or sweet cake either, tickles his palate, but he seems not any more frisky or happy after eating them than plain blackberry bushes. I am glad for myself that I cannot live on that, for it does seem as if it would get monotonous. If I had to choose from the wild-wood fare I think the fox's bread would suit me best, though I am afraid it is a long, long time between meals, if Mr. Fox does live on chicken or goose.

It seems in general that the higher the rank of the animal, the higher grade of food he eats. However, a dog will eat almost everything that a man does, and he likes to have it cooked, too. Are the dog and the man on the same bread level? I don't know but that they may be, but—without any reflection on the dog,—such a man must live a dog's life. Oh, there's the point. There is a soul in man, and meat and potatoes will not feed that. If he has no higher food than that of the other animals, he starves his soul and lives as a beast. But a man cannot live by bread alone, as Jesus said in that wonderful bread chapter, the sixth of John, "I am the bread of life." "This is the bread which cometh down from heaven, that a man may eat thereof and not die."

And so we should ask for our daily bread, yes, three meals a day. Not like a snake, go three months without eating; or, like a fox, have a good dinner occasionally when we are lucky enough to catch it, but regular fare, heaven-sent, soul-refreshing; the strong man's meal. And in order to have a good appetite we need to take exercise. That is true of the soul as well as the body. Oh, there are too many brutish men, living dog-lives. This world needs more spiritual giants, heaven-fed athletes. Boys, to be men, let's get into training.

Wheaton College.

SUBSCRIBE FOR THE CYNOSURE.—WHY?

It is the only weekly paper devoted exclusively to the question of secret societies.

No other paper has such facilities for turning the light upon this important subject.

Your renewal or subscription for the Cynosure not only helps the paper but it strengthens the cause by encouraging all connected with it.

In addition to the interesting talks to young people by Prof. Straw, we hope to add other features especially intended to interest our youthful readers.

You should take the paper because the number of Cynosures taken in any community is the best index of the aggressive reliable interest in the cause in that community.

The Cynosure does not fail to declare itself on all questions of moral reform. Its columns are especially open for the discussion of all questions which relate to the subject of secret societies.

It has an earnest, able, fearless, self-sacrificing class of writers, representing various churches. They are men and women who are loyal to Christ and their convictions of truth.

The reform it advocate bears a vital relation to every other, because no reform legislation can be effective while its enforcement is in the hands of lodge members sworn to favor one another.

It has enlisted in the various churches faithful, radical, life-long friends who have stood by the paper from its first issue. It is an honor to be enrolled with such a devoted class of witnesses for Christ.

The one idea of the Cynosure is broad. It is to stand for the authority of Christ and his law. It opposes secret organizations because they rend and destroy Christ's three divine institutions, the family, the church and the state.

None of our church papers, however in sympath with the cause, give as much space to the discussion of this question as its importance demands, and not sufficient to warn the people of the danger from secret organizations.

Our interest in any reform will be in proportion to our knowledge of it. And the best means of informing ourselves and others on this question and thereby deepening our interest in the subject is by reading the Cynosure.

The paper will not only visit your home each week, keeping yourself and family in touch with the work and literature of the movement, but it will afford you an opportunity of circulating it among your neighbors and interesting them in the cause.

The power and influence of the anti-secret movement is largely estimated by the number of those who support its organ, the Cynosure. Thus by taking the paper you help to swell the influence which enables the movement to command the respect of the world.

It has during twenty-seven years been faithfully declaring its testimony on this great question. The fact that it has been enabled to pursue its work for so many years without interruption, is evidence that God is hearing the prayers of these witnesses and blessing their testimony.

The Cynosure is the right arm of the anti-secret movement. The agent or lecturer comes and goes, but the paper comes and comes, and it goes where the lecturer cannot. No other reform is so dependent upon its literature, because so few platforms and pulpits are open for the discussion of this question.

You should at least contribute the price of the paper to this cause for the reason that its supporters are so few and far between. Other reforms, such as Prohibition and the Sabbath, do not encounter such opposition and have enlisted hosts of followers. Remember it costs much to speak out on this question. The great publication boards of the popular churches dare not carry in their stock, books or literature on this subject. The great church papers scarcely ever touch on the subject. Even the press of most of the anti-secret churches publish on the subject about once or twice a year.

THE LABOR QUESTION

REV. MADISON C. PETERS TALKS ON "PRESSING PROBLEMS."

Restriction of Immigration Would Help the American Workman—Native Industry Forced to Compete With Pauper Labor—Remarks on the Foreign Vote.

On Sunday, July 21, Madison C. Peters did not preach. Instead of a sermon we give this week an abstract of his lecture on "Pressing Problems," which he delivered before the Lexington (Ky.) Chautauqua on July 10.

It is within the mark to say that three-fourths of our immigration since the civil war has been drawn from the lowest strata of European society. Compared with the heroic, manly men and women who found this country a wilderness and bequeathed it to us a national heritage, envied of the world, the majority of these late comers possess no claim upon our respect. They are the lean kine who came here to devour what our prosperous predecessors achieved for us. It is an undeniable fact that the changed character of our immigration is deteriorating and corrupting our native stock.

Restrict immigration, and you solve the labor problem.

Have not European communities long enough relieved themselves of their undesirable classes in the form of assistance to reach America? I am not taking a pessimistic view of the situation when I say that if immigration continues for 25 years as it has for the last 15 we will see many of our best citizens going from the United States, and the scum of Europe will take their places.

Restrict immigration, and you solve the labor problem.

Our immigrants can work for half the price paid the American laborer and save money. Is it not to be regretted in times like these, when hundreds of thousands are out of employ in our own land, that this wholesale immigration is allowed to go on? So long as our gates remain as open as they are now it is the employer who is protected and not the laborer. What can our laboring men gain by striking for higher wages when every steamship brings hundreds of starving immigrants who are glad to get work at any price? Everywhere the pauper laborer swarms in the path of the American workman and competes with native industry by offering to do the work for half the price paid the American laborer.

European labor admitted into the American labor market duty free means to degrade the American workman to a level with the pauper laborers of Europe. Scarcity of hands makes higher wages. If two employers sought for one laborer the laborer would be the dictator as to what his compensation should be, but for every job ten men apply to one employer; hence the employer is the dictator. I have a sure cure for our hard times—suspend all immigration until the men already in this country have found something to do. There was a time when we gladly welcomed all workers, but that time is now fully passed. Even the great west has trouble to find a market for her produce. I believe in protecting the American capitalist by putting a tariff on the products of European labor, but I want fair play for the American workman. The only way to protect the American laborer in his wages, his living and his dignity is by putting a heavy per capita tax on the European laborer. The European laborer is raw material which even free traders should be willing to tax.

The solution of the liquor problem is involved in this immigration question.

The wholesale liquor dealers are estimated at 65 per cent foreign born, the brewers 75 per cent and the saloon keepers 93 per cent. I am glad to be able to say one good thing about the saloon business, and that is the Americans "are not in it."

The question of naturalization needs our immediate attention.

One of our New York judges during last October naturalized 3,417. Now I would like to know what pains he took to inquire of those men whether they had resided for five years in the United States and one year within the state wherein the application was made, and whether during that term he was able to give satisfactory assurance that he was a man of good moral character, attached to the principles of the constitution and well disposed to the good order and happiness of the same. There are horses and birds more intelligent than these manufactured citizens. The number of applicants for citizenship every year being so enormous, it would be impossible for the court to test the character of each very thoroughly, but it seems to have become the custom not to attempt any such examination, the court contenting itself without the former procedure already noticed. In some cases the clerk conducts the examination, while the court is busy with other matters. Any court, state or federal, can naturalize aliens, so that the states have authority over this matter, which is of national importance. I would confine naturalization to the federal courts.

Seventy per cent of our immigrants today can neither speak nor write the English language. What do they know about the constitution of the United States? The young American who graduated at the head of his class at 18 must wait three years longer before he can stand with the Hungarian, Italian, Pole, Bohemian, Russian, German and Irishman and vote for the rulers of his native land. Along with an educational qualification I go for a ten years' residence in this country before naturalization. I had to be here 21 years before I could vote.

We should have no hyphenated Americans, such as Irish-Americans or German-Americans. There should be no such thing as the Irish vote or the German vote, but only the American vote. Americans should go to the polls not as Jews, Catholics or Protestants, but as Americans.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic For the Week Beginning Aug. 11. Comment by Rev. S. H. Doyle.

Topic.—Christ, the great physician.—Mark ii, 1-17. (A missionary topic.)

Christ's compassion upon and sympathy for mankind were manifested in the fact that in using His miraculous powers He almost universally did it in such a way as to relieve some suffering of humanity. He could have proved His divinity by working miracles in other ways, but He chose to do it in this way, with one or two exceptions. Christ's healing of the body was not, however, His special life mission. This was to heal the soul. Mankind was stricken down with the terrible incurable disease of sin, and Christ came into the world particularly to be the physician of the soul "to call sinners to repentance." The topical reference presents Christ as the physician of both soul and body, but it is the former alone that we are to consider.

1. Christ is an infallible physician. The friends of one sick with palsy bring him to Christ. He first pronounces his sins forgiven, and when the scribes in their hearts charged Him with blasphemy He cured him of his palsy to prove His ability to forgive sins. Christ is able to cure all cases of sin. He never lost a case. He is able to save to the uttermost all who come unto Him. No one need despair. The most sinful may be cleansed. "Though your sins be as scarlet, they may be white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they may be as wool." Christ is God, and therefore has the power to forgive sin, and can forgive in all cases.

2. Christ heals the soul through faith. It is by our faith in Him that we are forgiven and saved. When Jesus saw the faith of the friends of the man stricken with palsy, He said, "Son, thy sins be forgiven thee." They believed in Christ to such an extent that they went to great trouble in order to bring their friend to Him. The success of any physician depends largely upon the faith of the patient in him. We must trust implicitly our physicians if they are able to benefit us. In curing the soul faith is an absolute necessity. "We are saved by grace through faith." Faith is the only remedy for a sin sick soul. Have we faith in Christ?

3. Christ came to heal the sick. Christ came to save not the righteous, but sinners. This includes all men. All are spiritually and morally sick. All have sinned—Jew and Gentiles, Greek and barbarian, Christian and heathen. Christ is the only physician of the soul, and therefore we should do all in our power to make Him known to all who know Him not.

Bible Readings.—Ex. xv, 26; Ps. xxxii, 1, 2; xli, 4; ciii, 1-5; Isa. i, 4-6, 18; liii, 1-5; Jer. xvii, 14; Hos. xiv, 4-7; Math. ix, 10-12; xviii, 8-11; John i, 29; iii, 17, 18; xii, 47, 48; Acts xxii, 16; II Cor. v, 21; I Pet. ii, 24, 25; I John i, 9.

The Study of the Bible.

I find one of the best ways to study the Scriptures is to study topically. Merely reading the Bible is no use at all without we study it thoroughly and hunt it through for some great truth. I have carried this Bible with me a good many years. It is worth more to me than all the Bibles in this place, and I will tell you why—because I have so many passages marked in it, and, if I am called upon to speak at any time, I am ready. I have these little words in the margin, and they are a sermon to me. Whether I speak about faith, hope, charity, assurance or any subject whatever, it all comes back to me. Every child of God ought to be like a soldier and always hold himself in readiness, but we can't be ready if we don't study the Bible.—D. L. Moody in "How to Study the Bible."

Better Than the Old World.

General Booth, who recently made a tour in this country, expresses his views of America and Americans as follows:

"There is not the same vulgarity here one finds in Europe. The people are better educated. They are a nation of professors of religion, a nation of members of churches. There is an astonishing number of people who publicly profess religion, but whether there is more religion here than in Europe I very much question. When one considers the vast importation of the foreign element, the moral condition of the country is very remarkable. I do not think America is quite as godless as the old world is."

The Lutheran Church.

According to the latest reports, the Lutheran church in this country has 26 theological seminaries, with 1,033 students and 90 professors; 35 colleges, with 5,162 students and 297 professors; 27 academies and 13 female seminaries, with 5,427 students and 301 teachers; 35 orphans' homes, with 1,742 orphan children; 44 English church papers, 49 German and 40 in several other languages.

Christian Endeavor Notes.

The information committee brings the convention spirit into every prayer meeting.

Two thousand four hundred and eighty-two societies are now enrolled in the British section.

There are 12,500 Endeavorers in Oregon.

A South Australian Junior society supplies its pastor's study table with a bunch of flowers every week.

The young people of the Christian churches of Indiana are building a Christian Endeavor cottage at Bethany park, which is the annual meeting place of their denomination. Nearly $800 have already been raised.

As Nevada is called the Silver State, and as the sage bush is her best known product, the Endeavorers have adopted silver and sage green as state colors.

The Changing Type of Womanhood.

Dr. Nollie V. Mark read before the alumnæ reunion of Lutherville seminary a witty and able paper upon "The Changing Type of Womanhood." She said:

"When we look back and think of the wonderful progress women have made in science, literature and art, in all the professions and in all avenues of work; when we see the large numbers of women's clubs and associations that are springing up all over the country, and with woman suffrage coming on apace, we are fain to stop and ask, 'Where are we at?' and are reminded of the story of a gentleman who, entering a depot, met an expressman coming out with a dog under his arm. The gentleman asked, 'Where is that dog going?' The expressman savagely replied, 'You don't know where he's going, he don't know where he's going, I don't know where he's going, nobody knows—he's ate his tag.' And so it is with women. They seem to have eaten their tags and found it a very comfortable bite. And while we may not know where they are drifting we have faith that whatever they do in their womanly way will be for the good of humanity and the perfecting of their sex."

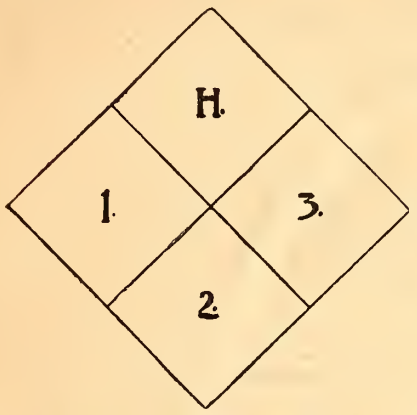
The Tip of the Hat.

And now it may not come amiss to discuss the new tip to the hat. The English taught last winter that the correct position was to wear one's hat on the back of one's head. So far did the advocates of this reform go that the English bath bun was called into play to support the chapeau. Whether we will be English or French is now the question. Our Gallic sisters have decided to run counter to their friends across the channel and insist upon the new tip, which is decidedly over the eyes. True, the British girls wear very small headgear—the Dutch bonnet, as an instance—while the French cling with wise pertinacity to those picture hats that become the majority of faces. This hat to the Parisian mondaine is not properly placed unless it goes far over the eyes, hiding every trace of "bang;" but, then, the Frenchwoman is no longer wearing a forehead curl—she is pompadouring her hair. Probably with a bit of wisdom she chose this style for the summer because she has recognized the impossibility of keeping one's hair in good order during the heated season.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

A Woman's Benefactions by Will.

The will of Mrs. Mary B. Turner, late of Randolph, widow of Royal W. Turner, filed in the Norfolk registry at Dedham, contains the following public bequests: Home For Aged Couples, Boston, $3,000; Seamen's Friend society, Boston, $3,000; Home For Little Wanderers, Boston, $3,000; Kindergarten For the Blind, Boston, $5,000; Central Cemetery association, Randolph, $1,000; parsonage fund of the first parish, Randolph, $3,000; Home For Aged Men, Boston, $2,000; Home For Aged Women, Boston, $2,000; New England Hospital For Women and Children, Boston, $5,000; Massachusetts Charitable Eye and Ear infirmary, Boston, $2,000; Massachusetts General hospital, Boston, to be used in providing free beds, $5,000; the Bethesda society, 32 Rutland street, Boston, $2,000. All the residue of her estate, after paying the above and certain private bequests, goes in equal shares to the Massachusetts hospital, Home For Aged Couples, Home For Aged Men, Home For Aged Women and Kindergarten For the Blind.—Boston Transcript.

Comfortable Summer Underwear.



Summer underwear should be at once healthful and comfortable, writes Isabel A. Mallon in The Ladies' Home Journal. It needs to have a certain quality of lightness in weight, and yet it must be sufficiently warm to keep one from getting that very undesirable illness—a summer cold. The fact that even the lightest of cotton gowns is lined has made the elaborately trimmed underbodice of little use, and when such bodices are worn they are made quite plainly, being in reality nothing more than well fitted corset covers. A lightweight cambric without dressing, and which is known in England as "long cloth," is greatly liked for summer underwear, as it is quite as cool as linen and does not tend to give one even the momentary chill which is the peculiarity of linen. This cloth is used for nightdresses, drawers, wash petticoats, and, if they are worn, chemises. These last are seldom seen, the knitted cotton or silk vest being better liked and cooler.

CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

BASEBALL BOILED DOWN.

A Simple but Interesting Game Invented by a Brooklyn Boy.

The youthful genius who presides over the entrance to The Eagle editorial room has invented a brand new game that will be of interest to all young lovers of the national game. He calls it "baseball" and has already played some redhot games with other boys in and out of office hours, and exciting struggles they were. His admiration for the home team will allow him to represent no other nine than Brooklyn, while his opponent may select any club he chooses. It is invariably the team which plays that day.

Every boy has at some time or other pitched for buttons or cigarette pictures and will recognize at once the simplicity of the new game. In the first place, a diamond is marked off with chalk, if played on the floor, or with a stick if on the ground, as follows:

This, it will be quickly seen, represents a baseball diamond. The corner marked No. 1 is first base, No. 2 second base, No. 3 third and H the plate or home. Only hits are recognized. Nine disks of the weight of a nickel are used to throw from a mark anywhere from five to ten feet away. A throw in No. 1 counts as a single, No. 2 a double, No. 3 a triple and H a home run. Two into No. 1 advance the first to third as in the regular game. Two doubles count as a run, the second remaining at the base. A single and a triple count a run. A home run clears the bases. Threo throws outside of the diamond or on the lines retire the side. Nine turns or innings constitute a game, the side scoring the greater number of runs winning. In case of a tie extra innings are played.

No end of amusement can be had in a game, and whcre the players are expert the greatest excitement may result. Try it.—Brooklyn Eagle.

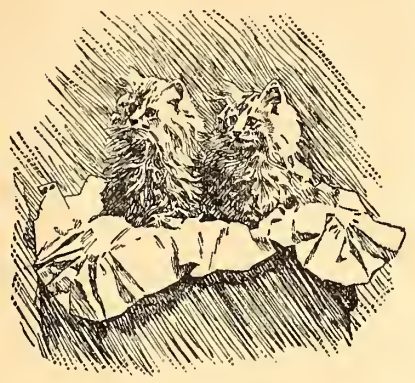
Bicycle Wagons.

It is difficult to foretell what curious wagons and vehicles may be built from the bicycle model. In a few years there may be bicycle carriages or cabs on hire in the streets, with a man to do the wheeling instead of a driver now to drive the horse. It seems odd to think of it now, but it would not be any more odd than the safety and trolley and telephone and phonograph, that the children of today know all about and consider very common things, would have seemed to their fathers and mothers when they were children. There have already been invented two or three kinds of carriages that are intended to run without horses. There is one that is run by a small gas engine, not as big as a music box, and the carriage is built in such a way that it will not need to run on tracks, but can go about the streets, up and down hills, turn corners, and all, just as the carriages now that are drawn by horses. We have cable cars and trolley cars now, thus doing without horses, and you may be sure the clever inventors of these days will soon find a way to have delivery wagons and other conveyances used without horses too.—New York Times.

He Will Succeed.

Like his brother of the north, the southern small boy is capable of much. A writer in the New York Home Journal says that upon her arrival in a southern town her cabman was a small boy, aged about 9. The cab had two seats, and the boy told her that if during her stay she wanted a carriago she could get him any time by inquiring for Jackson's express—price 6 bits an hour.

"Are you Jackson?" I asked.



"Yes, ma'am," said the expressman politely and with great dignity. Then, lapsing into boyishness, he added: "You see, this used to be our carriage. But papa died, and mamma isn't strong, and there isn't much money, and"—

Something certainly filled the boy's throat, for his voice broke, and hastily becoming a cabman again he tightened the reins and indulged in a flourish of the whip. But after a little he turned about and added:

"It's a real comfort, I think, to earn your living."

A Pair of Pretty Kittens.

These beautiful and valuable kittens, the property of Mrs. C. H. Gough, Jersey, were 4 months old when this picture was taken. Purest silver gray is their color. They are descended from pure bred parents on both sides. Their father, the Silver Lambkin, is a son of the noted smoke blue Perso and a celebrated Chinchilla named Beauty, who is the mother of the first prize and cup kittens at the Crystal Palace. Their mother won the first prize at the Crystal Palace.

My Friendly Neighbor.

I have a little neighbor
Whom I can never see,
Though he's as cheery a little neighbor
As any bird can be.
He calls from out the orchard
And the meadow filled with hay.
Sometimes his voice sounds very near,
Sometimes quite far away.
And this is what he says to me,
If I understand aright,
"How do you do, this summer day?"
Though he seems to say, "Bob White."

THE MAORI KING'S PLEDGE.

Sir George Grey's Good Work Among the New Zealand Chiefs.

The extent of the influence of a man in a commanding position in life, who appreciates what the effect of his example may be and is willing to make use of it, is well illustrated by a true story told in connection with the death of the New Zealand Maori king, Tawhiao. At the time when Sir George Grey was governor of New Zealand, King Tawhiao came to him with several chiefs and reported that he had been invited to go to England and that he wished to do so. Sir George was unable to encourage him, for Tawhiao had been an intemperate man, and in England would be likely to bring disgrace upon himself and his people.

It was necessary to speak to the good hearted but barbaric monarch in parables, so Sir George said:

"What do you think of a man who in some way causes the death of others?"

"I think he is a bad man," answered Tawhiao.

"If a man causes the death of several men, what would you think of him?"

"I cannot think that any man would be so wicked."

"Well, would even that be as bad as causing the disgrace and destroying the happiness of a whole people, and that one's own nation?"

Tawhiao saw that the questioning was coming around to him and remained silent. By a few more questions Sir George led him to the point.

"Yes, yes, I know what you mean," said the king, and he began to weep. "But what can be done?"

Sir George drew up a paper pledging Tawhiao and himself to total abstinence from all liquors containing alcohol for a term of years. Then he himself signed it and gave it to the king, who followed his example and made all his chiefs follow it as well.

Tawhiao visited England and behaved with credit. When Sir George saw him last, he was still keeping the pledge, although the period of it had expired.

Sir George did not stop here. Whenever he heard of any Maori chief who was intemperate, he went to him and entered into a personal bond to abstain from liquor for a certain period. By the time the bond with one chief had expired and the chief had become a sober man, Sir George made a similar bond with another. It was indeed deemed an honor among the chiefs to sign the pledge with him, and Sir George's influence as a temperance reformer became thus widespread and effective.—Youth's Companion.

BARE FEET ARE SHOD.

When the Saloons Closed, the Drunkard's Daughter Got Shoes.

Among many interesting incidents connected with the closing of the saloons in Kittanning, Pa., a leading merchant tells the following:

A woman came into his store very timidly. She was evidently unaccustomed to trading.

"What can I do for you?" inquired the merchant.

"I want a pair of shoes for a little girl."

"What number?"

"She is 12 years old."

"But what number does she wear?"

"I do not know."

"But what number did you buy when you bought the last pair for her?"

"She never had a pair in her life. You see, sir, her father used to drink when we had saloons, but now they are closed he doesn't drink any more, and this morning he said to me, 'Mother, I want you to go up town today and get Sissy a pair of shoes, for she never had a pair in her life.' I thought, sir, if I told you how old she was you would know just what size to give me."—Exchange.

Would the Verdict Be the Same?

A few weeks ago a man drank, on a wager, three pints of rum within half an hour and died after swallowing the last pint. The coroner's jury charged with manslaughter the one who ordered the drink and the one who supplied it. How would it have been if the man had died from delirium tremens after two years of the same process, only a little more gradual?—Pacific Ensign.

SABBATH SCHOOL.

LESSON VII, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, AUG. 18.

Text of the Lesson, Deut. vi, 3-15—Memory Verses, 3-5—Golden Text, Deut. viii 10—Commentary by the Rev. D. M Stearns.

3. "Hear, therefore, O Israel, and observe to do it, that it may be well with thee * * * in the land that floweth with milk and honey." Compare verse 18 and chapter v, 29, 33, on obedience in order to blessing. Then see vi, 25, "It shall be our righteousness if we observe to do all these commandments before the Lord our God." We must remember that God gave them no commandments to keep until He had redeemed them from Egypt by the blood of the passover lamb and by His mighty power. The sinner must accept Christ as the end of the law for righteousness (Rom. x, 4) before the righteousness of the law can be fulfilled in Him (Rom. viii, 3, 4). On hearing and doing compare also Math. vii, 24-27; Jas. i, 22; I John iii, 7; Rev. xix, 8, R. V.

4. "Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God is one Lord." The Lord Jesus quoted these very words, as recorded in Mark xii, 29, in connection with a summary of the Ten Commandments. We might read it thus: "Jehovah, our Elohim, is one Jehovah." The word "elohim" is a plural word like seraphim and cherubim and is at least suggestive of a plurality of persons, Father, Son and Holy Spirit (Math. xxviii, 19). The oneness of the three is seen in John x, 30, and xiv, 16; also by comparing verses 3 and 4 of Acts v. This Jehovah shall yet be king over all the earth (Zech. xiv, 9).

5. "And thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thine heart." We feel perfectly safe in saying that only one man ever lived who did this thoroughly and always. Even the man Christ Jesus, the God man, God manifest in the flesh. None but He could ever say, "I do always those things that please the Father" (John viii, 29). But He verily did love God with all His heart and soul and might. If we have received Him as our Saviour and Lord. He in us will fulfill the righteousness of the law, and love is the fulfilling of the law. such love as is described in Rom. xiii, 10; I Cor. xiii, 4-7.

6. "And these words which I command thee this day shall be in thine heart." Not merely in our heads that we may be able to repeat them, like the lawyer of Luke x, 27, 28, who answered right, but in the center of our being, affecting our whole life. One has said, "Thy word have I hid in mine heart, that I might not sin against Thee" (Ps. cix, 11). Ezekiel was commanded to receive the words in his heart and then go and speak them to the children of Israel (Ezek. iii, 10, 11).

7. "And thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children." See a repetition of this verse in chapter xi, 19. What God desired of Israel He still desires, for He changes not. But what a peculiar household that would be where the word of God and the works of God were the one and continual topic of conversation! What a peculiar person he or she would be who would be always talking of the word of God! Would you like to be so very peculiar for Jesus' sake, at any cost?

8, 9. As prominent as if on hand and forehead and door or gateposts. A heart full of Him and His word and His service, a heart wholly and only for Him, of whom it is said: "When thou goest, He shall lead thee. When thou sleepest, He shall keep thee, and when thou awakest He shall talk with thee" (Prov. vi, 22). A heart that delights in the word of God and meditates there in day and night (Ps. i, 2). A heart out of the abundance of which the Spirit can freely talk of Him whom He delights to glorify (Math. xii, 34; John xvi, 14). Paul was a chosen vessel to bear His name (Acts ix, 15), and we must be as manifestly His at all times as if we had His name written on our foreheads (Rev. xiv, 1; xxii, 4). Where we would not like to bear that name we may not go.

10. "And it shall be when the Lord thy God shall have brought thee unto the land." As in verse 23 He brought them out of Egypt, that He might bring them into the land, and what He purposes is sure to be accomplished (Isa. xiv, 24). These purposes may seem to be delayed by man's unbelief, and a new generation may have to be raised up, but "every purpose of the Lord shall be performed" (Jer. vi, 29).

11. Cities and houses and wells and vineyards and olivo trees, which they neither built, nor dug, nor planted; all a free gift from God to them. He gave, they received. It is even so with us who now believe in the Lord Jesus. Salvation full and free is ours through Him who loved us, apart from any works of ours.

12. "Beware lest thou forget the Lord, which brought thee forth out of the land of Egypt, from the house of bondage" (so also chapter viii, 11). And yet that was the very thing they did. They forgot His works and His wonders, and remembered not His hand (Ps. lxxviii, 11, 42). When we have a fear lest we may lack some good thing, or lean upon an arm of flesh rather than upon God, we are guilty of forgetting Him of whom it is written, "He that spared not His own Son, but delivered Him up for us all, how shall He not with Him also freely give us all things?" (Rom. viii, 32.)

13. "Thou shalt fear the Lord thy God and serve Him, and shalt swear by His Name." See this more fully stated in chapter x, 12, 20. The fear of the Lord is a fountain of life; therefore be thou in the fear of the Lord all the day long (Prov. xiv, 27; xxiii, 17). He who lives in the fear of the Lord will not do aught that is not right and good in His sight (verse 18). He who serves the Lord in sincerity and truth (Joshua xxiv, 14) will never think of man's frown or favor, but will seek only to please Him in all things. His motto will be, "Study to shew thyself approved unto God."

14. "Ye shall not go after other gods." Jehovah is the true God, the living God, and king of eternity (Jer. x, 10, margin); all other so called gods are but vanity. He brought them out of Egypt (Deut. v, 6). He alone is worthy to be praised. They were chosen to be a special people unto Him above all people (Deut. vii, 6), a people for His own possession, that they might make Him a Name. Yet after all His loving kindness, they had to confess, "O Lord our God, other lords beside thee have had dominion over us" (Isa. xxvi, 13).

15. "For the Lord thy God is a jealous God among you." Just seven times is God said to be jealous (Ex. xx, 5; xxxiv, 14; Deut. iv, 24; v, 9; vi, 15; Joshua xxiv, 19; Nah. i, 2). The same word is translated "zealous," and also "bought," or "purchased." It is surely a reasonable thing that one should use as he pleases and possess for his own use that which he has purchased. See Ex. xv, 16; Ps. lxxiv, 2, and compare Titus ii, 14, R. V., and Jas. iv, 5, R. V., margin. Let us acknowledge that we are all His for His pleasure.

PAT QUINLAN TALKS.

CHICAGO POLICE GET SOMETHING TANGIBLE AT LAST.

Obtained from the Man and Wife Who Were Holmes' Right Hand Men, as It Were—Disappearance of Mrs. Conner and Her Child Also Explained.

CHICAGO, Aug. 3.—The police have at last obtained a partial confession from Pat Quinlan, the janitor of Holmes' "Castle," and have, they believe, positive evidence that Benjamin F. Pitzel was murdered in this city by Holmes and the corpse sent to Philadelphia. The confession was wormed out of the Quinlans by means of a tip given the local officers by Detective Geyer, of Philadelphia, who has arrived in this city. Tha exact nature of the story told by the Quinlans the police will not reveal. It is learned, however, that a confession was made covering all the details of the murder of Pitzel with the exception of the actual place in which the crime was committed. This, the police declare, they will have today, and they declare that by sunset on Aug. 5 they will have indisputable evidence that Pitzel came to his end through the direct agency of H. H. Holmes.

Murder of Mrs. Conner and Child.

It is also stated that Chief Badenoch and his detectives are nearer a solution of the Holmes mystery than ever before. Mrs. Quinlan has given information which brings the charge of murder nearer to Holmes than at any time since the case was opened. Quinlan and his wife have made admissions by which the chief of police can use them on the witness stand against Holmes in proving that Mrs. Conner and her child were made away with by Holmes for the purpose of securing the insurance which Mrs. Conner carried on her life in favor of her daughter, or in which Cora Quinlan's life cut an important figure.

Knew Too Much of Holmes' Affairs.

Further, Quinlan and his wife proved to the police that Mrs. Conner was so well aware of the schemes which Holmes was operating that it became necessary for Holmes to put the woman out of the way. Mrs. Quinlan further admitted that she saw the body of Mrs. Conner after she was dead, and that Pearl Conner disappeared mysteriously in the "Castle" after her return from a trip to Lakota, Mich. Mrs. Conner's body was buried somewhere close to the spot where Pearl's supposed body was found. The police will make a further search in that corner.

Carried on a Business in "Stiffs."

Quinlan and his wife also admitted that a business of receiving and disposing of dead bodies stolen from country graveyards was carried on in the "Castle" under the direction of Holmes. The bodies were brought to the "Castle" and chemically treated and then disposed of to medical colleges. The coffins were remade by Quinlan, Pitzel and Holmes, and disposed of to undertakers at a fair profit.

DETECTIVE GEYER DISCOURAGED.

He Can Find No Clue to the Body of Howard Pitzel.

INDIANAPOLIS, Aug. 1.—"I think we'll have to wait until Holmes tells where to find Howard Pitzel. He knows, and we cannot find out." So said Detective Geyer, who has been in town over a week hunting a house supposed to have been rented by Holmes while he was here. So far the search has resulted in nothing. Clews have been plenty, for every day from one to a dozen people call upon the detective, and in mysterious whispers tell him they have found the house that Holmes rented.

No matter how impossible these stories may seem, every one of them is investigated, and now the detective says he has not the slightest clew to work on. He says he expects to be recalled to Philadelphia soon, and that if the body of Howard Pitzel is found it will be because Holmes weakens enough to inform the officers what disposition was made of him.

BELIEVES MINNIE WILLIAMS ALIVE.

Allen, the Little Rock Convict, Says Little About the Matter.

LITTLE ROCK, Aug. 1.—Convict Allen persists in the assertion that Minnie Williams was alive six months ago and in the belief that she is alive now. He did not meet Holmes in Arkansas, and his connection with him was confined to Fort Worth, Tex. He never wrote any letters to Holmes. Allen declares that the detectives from Chicago will get nothing for their trouble unless they are able to secure his release from the penitentiary. The only place at which Allen met Holmes, he says, was at Fort Worth, and he knows a great deal about his crookedness in that city.

"When the authorities come to my terms I'll talk, and not before." This is all that Allen will say in regard to the case. Allen undoubtedly knows all about Holmes' operations in Texas, but that he knows the whereabouts of Minnie Williams, or that he had anything to do with her disappearance, is considered extremely doubtful here. When asked if he would parole Convict Allen and under certain coditions pardon him Governor Clark said the conditions would have to be presented and taken up in legal form before he could return an answer to that question.

GREAT VICTORY FOR THE MINERS.

Obtain the Concession of Almost Every Demand and Avert a Strike.

PITTSBURG, Aug. 3.—The coal miners and the operators have finally reached an agreement and there will be no strike.

The agreement is claimed as the biggest victory ever made by organized labor. Almost every demand was granted, and the operators gave a written guarantee for their fulfillment of the contract. The papers were signed last night which increase the wages of 100,000 miners in Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois. The terms of the agreement are that the present rate of wages shall continue in force until Oct. 1, when every operator in the Pittsburg district will pay the 69-cent rate with a differential of 5 cents in favor of operators who do not have company stores.

The agreement further provides for another advance on Jan. 1. It is understood that the rate will then be made 79 cents. Above all W. P. Dearmitt, who has whipped the miners at every turn heretofore, has been brought over and will pay the 64-cent rate as he does not have the company stores. The effect of this settlement is to advance the mining rate in Ohio and Indiana from 51 cents to 60 cents. It also helps the rate in Illinois, and brings the strike there to an end. It also changes the end of the scale year from April 30 to Jan. 1. This is the first time a differential has ever been granted against company stores, and it is expected that it will result in having all of them abolished.

Another feature of the miners' victory is that a convention of miners and operators is to be held on the second Thursday of October in each year to fix the mining rate for the next year, so that the rate for each year can be settled before the scale year expires. The first joint convention under this agreement is to be held next October.

Illinois Board of Arbitration.

SPRINGFIELD, Aug. 3.—Governor Altgeld has appointed the following as the first state board of arbitration to serve for one, two and three years: William P. Rend of Chicago, an employer of labor; Charles J. Riffler of Springfield state president United Labor organization and Judge Anthony Thornton of Shelbyville. The appointments were at once confirmed by the senate.

Illinois Republican Committee

SPRINGFIELD, July 31.—The Republican state central committee held an open meeting last night in the hall of the representatives at which Chairman Tanner denounced the governor for calling the legislature in extra session, which he said was needless. Speeches were made in the same line by Senator Cullom and others.

Fithian Given a State Office.

SPRINGFIELD, July 30.—Governor Altgeld has appointed ex-Congressman George A. Fithian, of Newton, member of the state railroad and warehouse commission, vice Colonel Charles F. Lape, removed on account of political reasons. The change is effective Aug. 1.

MISS FLAGG'S LATEST NEW BOOK!
"A Prisoner of Hope."
COMPLETE IN ONE LARGE HANDSOME VOLUME.
Price, $1.25.
We heartily commend this new work, by Elizabeth E. Flagg, to all our friends. The narrative originated in her personal experience, two or three years ago, when she sought relief and restoration from the results of a painful accident, In that search she availed herself of a unique healer in New Jersey, whom she graphically described, at that time, in her weekly letters to this paper. The ideas created in her mind by that experience form the basis of this well-told story, and thoughtful readers will peruse it with interest. While all may not agree with its deductions, ministers of the Gospel, students in seminaries and intelligent home circles will find it pleasant food for thought. We sell it for $1.25 per copy postage prepaid.

ILLINOIS PICKINGS.

NEWS NOTES OF INTEREST FROM HERE AND THERE.

Reports by Telegraph of Important Happenings in Our Own State During the Past Few Days—News of Interest to the People of Illinois.

SPRINGFIELD, Aug. 1.—The senate tabled the resolutions that the legislature remain in session until all business under the governor's call shall have been transacted—25 to 16. The house labor arbitration bill was passed. Several bills were advanced, and the bill to tax express companies debated and made special order for today. A bill was introduced to tax department stores. The house repealed the libel law passed at the regular session—93 to 34. A resolution citing the governor and editors of Chicago and Peoria papers before the house to tell what they know about alleged corruption in the legislature failed to secure a suspension of the rules in its favor. A bill to tax newspapers on their good will was defeated.

SPRINGFIELD, Aug. 2.—The Republicans of the legislature have agreed to wind up the extra session, and the house has adopted by a viva voce vote a resolution to adjourn sine die today. The senate Republicans in caucus agreed to do the same tomorrow. Merriam's resolution calling on the persons and newspapers who charge corruption on this legislature to go before the grand juries in their respective counties and tell what they know was again defeated in the house—73 to 41 The senate bill to increase the tax levy $1,000,000 for the next two years was sent to third reading, the revenue bill discussed and the labor arbitration bill passed with amendments.

The senate appointed a conference committee on the arbitration bill, made the house libel bill special order for today, and then took recess.

The senate concurred in house resolution for adjournment sine die and adjourned until today.

Governor Altgeld declined to say whether or not he would call the legislature back again for the passage of the bills mentioned in his call. He said he had not given the matter consideration.

SPRINGFIELD, Ills., Aug. 2.—The house passed a resolution declaring that much of the legislation desired by Governor Altgeld in calling the special session was unnecessary and useless to remain in session longer. The tax levy bill was passed and the house adjourned sine die. The senate defeated the house bill to repeal the libel law and after some other business adjourned sine die.

STATE SHORT OF CASH.

Springfield Paper Says There Will Be Trouble Making Both Ends Meet.

SPRINGFIELD, Ills., Aug. 5.—A local paper says: "The state is already out of money to all practical purposes. According to statements of the auditor's office it is on the verge of bankruptcy. The auditor has issued warrants for about $100,000, and there is not over $500,000 in the treasury. The statement is made that if all outstanding obligations of the state were paid there would not be a dollar in the treasury.

"Wherever it is possible to save expenditures until next year it will be done. The state is hard up for cash and will have to economize and put off its creditors just as long as possible. There will be but little money coming into the state treasury for some time. State taxes, on which the most reliance is to be placed, will not come in before next April."

Idiocy That Was Criminal.

MASCOUTAH, Ills., Aug. 1.—Blazer Ely, aged 62, a well-known character of Venedy Station, had been on a three weeks' spree and his associates packed his trousers with shavings and live coals of fire, intending, it is supposed, to tantalize the old man with the smoke caused thereby. The coals set the shavings ablaze and in a few minutes the would-be jokers found their victim burning to death. The fire was extinguished, but the old man died a few hours later.

NO INDIANS IN SIGHT.

Cavalry Reaches Jackson's Hole and Agent Teter Is in Evidence.

MARKET LAKE, Ida., Aug. 3.—The cavalry has reached Jackson's Hole. The indications are that the infantry will be stopped en route and not go into the Hole, as there are no Indians in sight. The scare exists along the route the Indians are taking in returning to the reservations. Notwithstanding the threats made against the life of Agent Teter and his chief clerk, Ravanel McBeth, they have gone ahead of the troops into Jackson's Hole to warn the settlers not to attack the Indians, and to obtain the names of all the parties concerned in what Agent Teter insists on calling the massacre of the Indians.

Taylor Brothers Guilty of Murder.

CARROLLTON, Mo., Aug. 3.—"We, the jury, find the defendants, William P. and George Taylor, guilty of murder in the first degree." Such was the verdict rendered in the notorious Meeks murder trial. The Taylors were charged with the murder of several members of the Meeks family, who were enticed from home in a wagon and killed on the road the night of May 10, 1894. They killed Meeks, his wife and two children and nearly killed a third child.

Boles Will Not Be a Candidate.

CEDAR RAPIDS, Ia., Aug. 5.—Horace Boles has written a letter to H. O. Bishop, chairman of the Linn county Democratic convention, in which he says his attention has been called to resolutions adopted favoring his nomination for governor, and stating that he cannot consent to the use of his name in connection with the nomination, for reasons which are wholly personal.

Ohio Populist Ticket.

COLUMBUS, O., Aug. 3.—The Populist state ticket complete is: Jacob S. Coxey, of Stark, for governor; John H. Crofton, of Hamilton, lieutenant governor; Geo. Harper, of Greene, treasurer; William Baker, of Licking, attorney general; S. D. Stark, of Cuyahoga, supreme judge; William A. Gloyd, of Tuscarawas, public whrks; Thomas M. Hickman, of Morrow, clerk supreme court.

Aside from the indorsement of the Omaha platform the indorsement of Coxey's non-interest bond scheme and good roads bills and the denouncing of the trial of Debs were the principal points in the platform.

Another Strike in Michigan Mines.

IRON MOUNTAIN, Aug. 3.—Miners employed at the Dunn mine in the Crystal Falls district have struck for an advance in wages to the same scale as is paid here, and all work is at a standstill.

Miss Flagler Kills a Boy.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 3.—Miss Flagler, daughter of General Flagler, chief of ordnance, U. S. A., shot and killed Ernest Green, a boy who was stealing fruit in her father's garden. At the coroner's inquest she said she had fired to scare the boys, who had been stealing the fruit for some weeks; had not taken aim at anybody, but just fired at random. The coroner's verdict was that, although the shot was fired carelessly and indifferently, it was probably not with murderous intent, and upon the evidence Miss Flagler could not be held. She was thereupon released.

Maryland Town Burned.

BERLIN, Aug. 5.—This beautiful town was entirely destroyed by fire last night. The loss is $200,000, with but $25,000 insurance. Seventy-five houses were burned, twenty of them residences, and scores of people are homeless.

Prohibition Campmeeting Closed.

DECATUR, Ill., Aug. 5.—The National Prohibition campmeeting closed here last evening after being in session eleven days. Nine excursion trains brought 10,000 people to the last meeting.

All Is Quiet at Omaha.

OMAHA, Aug. 5.—Things have been quiet in the city. The fire and police board decided it was not necessary to maintain an army of policemen at the police station to defend them from an attack of a mob. Accordingly the seventy-five special policemen who had been on duty for the preceding thirty hours were ordered to remove their stars and go home prepared to answer a call at any time. The squabble is now in the courts, and has been postponed by mutual consent until tomorrow.

Corpse Mysteriously Disappears.

ARKANSAS CITY, Kas., Aug. 1.—On the 25th inst. E. M. Selman, a traveling salesman for a Sioux City seed house, died in this city. The following day the remains accompanied by his wife were shipped to his home, Lyon, Mich. A dispatch has now been received here from the Detroit Evening News which says: "Coffin box mysteriously empty when received at Lyons."

Life Sentence for Mary Thrush.

FARM AND GARDEN

WHEN SOILING PAYS.

During the Hot Summer Months, When Pastures Are Burned and Bare.

Western conditions are such that soiling as a constant reliance in the feeding of animals is not much in vogue, and it is only in very exceptional cases that it is at all worth while to think about it, according to as high authority as the Iowa Homestead, which says: Where a dairyman is so situated as to have at his command only a limited supply of high priced land, but has as compensation a superior market close at hand, soiling may well occupy a much larger place than would be either necessary or advisable under general western conditions, but the feed situation of last year specially impressed a necessity that has long been felt—namely, that of providing some means of getting through the hot summer months when pastures are burned and bare. For this purpose partial soiling may well afford a remedy.

No elaborate plans are needed, and, indeed, they are rather a hindrance than a help, as they are calculated to deter a farmer who has never soiled much if any from attempting them. He instinctively feels that they are not suited to his situation or his system of farming, and naturally enough he says to himself that if soiling involves all this trouble it will not do for him. But very good results can be attained without going much outside of the crops habitually raised on most farms. Circumstances are so diverse that no plan of universal application can be laid down, but while there are corn, oats, rye, sorghum and clover, relief can be given to the pastures, and commencing with these already grown on the farm, the farmer can easily extend the list later on if his situation should, in the light of his further experience, seem to render it advisable. The need for early spring forage, as well as the time for providing it, is, of course, past.

The midsummer necessity comes in July and often later, depending upon the season, and preparations should be made to then get some of the farm crops to help the grasses. Where the feeding is for dairy purposes this is especially true.

The ideal condition for the dairy cow is a pasture which furnishes her in the early morning and late evening hours—the cool of the day—an abundance of food, so that during the heat of the day she can lie by, rest and ruminate, thoughtfully manufacturing an abundance of rich milk. When this ideal condition is much departed from, soiling or partial soiling in cool, shaded, well ventilated but darkened places will be found far preferable to permitting the animal to wander over burned pastures, exposed to flies, sun and all the annoyances which decrease production. Soiling even when partial involves labor, but so does everything else worth having, and in this instance the labor is repaid.

Practical Hay Caps.

Professor H. H. Wing made hay caps out of unbleached, twilled factory cloth six feet square. These were supplied with a loop at each corner and were fastened down by small stakes driven through the loops. Although the factory was not treated in any way, it protected the hay very well when put on smoothly. The same kind of hay caps treated with one coat of paint and furnished at the corners with stones weighing about two pounds each have also been used successfully. Wherever hay caps are used the shocks should be made large and the caps should be removed, except when they are actually needed to turn rain, as the hay will not cure rapidly in the shock when covered with them.

In almost all large cities hay caps can be procured from dealers in sailcloth. Partly worn sails are frequently used for this purpose. Paper hay caps, patented affairs, have been used at the Cornell station, and proved durable and satisfactory.

Shade the Well.

One will have to travel far through the country to find wells shaded from the fierce heat of summer, though there are few who will not admit that shade over the pump would make the water much cooler—a condition that would be appreciated on most farms where ice is not to be had. This shade may be furnished through the medium of an artistic little house built over the well. When such a house is built and surrounded and covered with shrubs and trailing vines it becomes an ornament to the grounds, in addition to proving a protection to the well. It keeps the water cooler in summer, and, where there is a pump, prevents freezing in winter. The accompanying design from American Gardening is not difficult to embody in wood, shrubs and vines. A bit of lumber, a few nails, a hammer and saw and a bit of ingenuity, and the thing is done.

ORNAMENTAL WELLHOUSE.

A Kansas potato grower writes that he finds subsoiling very helpful. "It produces the same effect as heavy manuring, and by close planting—using from 16 to 40 bushels of seed per acre—an enormous yield can be had."

French farmers are said to be using more fertilizers than ever—with a gain chiefly in nitrate of soda, kainit and basic slag.

It speaks well for an article when the longer it is used the better it is liked. Such is the case with Ayer's Hair Vigor. People who have been using it for years could not be induced to try any other dressing for their hair, because it gives such perfect satisfaction.

MASONIC CHART.

ILLUSTRATING THE RELATION OF SOME OF THE DEGREES AND RITES IN FREEMASONRY TO EACH OTHER.

The accompanying chart represents one hundred and forty two degrees.

1. The American Rite of 13 degrees;
2. The Scotch Rite of 33 degrees;
3. The Egyptian Rite of 96 degrees.
4. The Mystic Shrine of one degree.
5. The Eastern Star of 5 degrees for Master Masons and for women. These are side degrees, and not genuine masonry.

The Symbolic degrees, or Blue Lodge of three degrees, are common to every Masonic rite, whether American, Scotch, or Egyptian, or whichever of the Masonic rites, named in Mackey's Masonic Encyclopedia one may choose to investigate.

This chart shows in the Blue Lodge the position of the Worshipful Master and some of the other officers of the lodge. Several positions of the candidate who is being initiated are also shown. In the Master Mason's degree is recognized the murder, burial and resurrection scene so full of religious significance to Freemasons.

Freemasonry Illustrated. 640 pages, cloth, $1.00; paper, 75c.
A complete expositon of the Blue Lodge and Chapter consisting of seven degrees. Profusely illustrated.

Knight Templarism Illustrated. 341 pages, cloth, $1.00; paper, 50c.
A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery.

Scotch Rite Masonry Illustrated. 2 vols. Per vol., cloth, $1.00; paper, 65c.
The complete illustrated ritual of the entire Scottish Rite, comprising all the Masonic degrees from 3rd to 33rd inclusive. The first three degrees are common to all the Masonic Rites, and are fully and accurately given in "Freemasonry Illustrated." Vol. I comprises the degrees from 3rd to 18th inclusive.
Vol. II comprises the degrees from 19th to 33rd inclusive, with the signs, grips, tokens and passwords from 1st to 33rd degree inclusive.

Hand-Book of Freemasonry. 274 pages, flexible cloth, 50c.
By E. Ronayne, Past Master of Keystone Lodge No. 639, Chicago. Gives the complete standard ritual of the first three degrees of Freemasonry.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. 110 pages, paper, 25c.
The genuine old Morgan book republished.

Allyn's Ritual of Freemasonry. By Avery Allyn. Cloth, $5.00.
Contains the fully Illustrated Ritual of the Blue Lodge, Chapter Council and Commandery, 11 of the Scotch Rite Degrees, several Masonic side degrees and what is termed a Key to the Phi Beta Kappa, and the Orange Societies.

Duncan's Masonic Ritual and Monitor. Cloth, $2.50.
Profusely illustrated with explanatory engravings, and containing the ritual and work of the order for the seven degrees, including the Royal Arch. Though extensively used as an Instruction Book and one of the best in the market, it is not as accurate as "Freemasonry Illustrated."

Richardson's Monitor of Freemasonry. Cloth, $1.25; paper, 75c.
Contains the ceremonies of Lodges, Chapters, Encampments, etc. Illustrated. Although extensively used in conferring the higher degrees, it is not only very incomplete but inaccurate especially as regards the first seven degrees, and as to the higher degrees it gives but a description and general idea of the degrees rather than the full ritual.

Look to the East. A ritual of the first three Masonic Degrees by Ralph Lester. Cloth, $2.00.
Notwithstanding the high price this book is very inferior in every way to Freemasonry Illustrated or the Handbook of Freemasonry at a quarter the price.

Denver, Aug. 1.—A News special from Socorro, N. M., says: A tremendous roaring startled the people of Socorro about 4 o'clock in the afternoon. Shortly after huge waves of water came rushing down an arroyo which drains the eastern slope of the Magdalena mountains and almost encircles the town. At first it was hoped the floods would be confined to the lower portion of the city, but soon the water came over above the town and three feet of water began to rush through the principal street. The shrieks of women and children mingled with crashing of falling houses and dying wails of souls swept into eternity made a tumult that was enough to appal the stoutest heart.

The destructive waters spread over the entire city, and carried death everywhere. Many are missing. For twelve miles south the destruction of property was terrible. Farm houses and crops were entirely swept away. The Santa Fe track was washed out between here and San Antonio in several places. The branch road from this city to Magdalena is practically destroyed for ten miles out, five bridges and several miles of track being gone.

The names of the recovered dead thus far are: Leander Duran, Celia Duran, Thomas Durau, J. B. Duran, —— Duran, —— Duran, child of E. Baca. Only two members of the Duran family are alive. No estimate of the loss can be made, but it is more than $1,000,000. It is now raining in the mountains, and great feare are entertained as to the safety of the city. It is said that three small towns south of here were totally destroyed.

Casper, Wyo., Aug. 1.—A disastrous cloudburst occurred at the head of Garden creek, a small mining stream seven miles south of here. The water came down the valley in a solid wall ten feet high, carrying everything before it. A freighter and family named Newby camped on the creek four miles from here were in bed when the flood came upon them. They were hurled into the mass of water and debris, Newby only getting out. His wife and child were carried off.

Sam Parson's camp, near Newby's was caught by the waters in the same manner and his two children were carried away in the torrent. Five other freight outfits were camped on the creek who lost everything except human life. Garden creek is about seven miles long from mouth to source, and was lined with camps. It is not saying too much to assert that at least fifty persons escaped with nothing on but their sleeping garments.

Cripple Creek, Aug. 1.—A cloudburst occurred in the mountain near the town of Adelaide, and a wall of water twenty feet high rusbed down the narrow canon. Three lives were lost and four employes of the railroad company are missing. The dead are: Mrs. Carr, Mr. Tracey, a cook (name unknown). The missing: R. M. Gove, engineer; Dick Dolan, brakeman; Frank Caldweil, brakeman; C. G. Hitchcock, night operator at Florence.

The hotel, which was owned by Mrs. Carr and Mr. Tracey, was completely demolished, but the waiters escaped. There were two landslides, one at Adelaide, the other at South Four Mile. The latter landslide covered the railroad track for about 100 feet. The depot and section house at Adelaide were filled with about four feet of water.

DEMOCRATS OF MARYLAND.

Nominate John E. Hurst for Governor and Indorse Cleveland.

Baltimore, Aug. 1.—John E. Hurst, supported by Senator Gorman, was nominated for governor by the state Democratic convention. At the opening of the convention Senator Talbott made a lively address. During it oue enthusiast proposed a cheer for John E. Hurst. The cheers and the hisses, however, were almost equal in volume. A cheer for Gorman met with better success. Talbott predicted a big Democratio success this year. He closed by introducing Bernard Carter as temporary chairman, who made an enthusiastic speech on the Democratic outlook.

The committee on resolutions made a unanimous report. The resolutions approve the Democratic platform of 1892 and the "able and patriotio adminlstration of President Cleveland." They declare against free silver and approve the Wilson tariff bill, which is characterized as the best the country has known for thirty-five years. The platform contains no reference to Senators Gorman and Gibson. The nominee, John E. Hurst, although a Gorman adherent, has also been a consistent follower of the Cleveland administration.

NEW IRISH MOVEMENT.

Advocacy of Revolutionary Measures About To Be Organized.

New York, Aug. 1.—The new Irish movement, the object of which is to form an open organization opposed to all parliamentary attempts to redress Ireland's grievances and advocating revolutionary measures, is about to take definite shape. A convention of delegates from Irish organizations in the United States and Canada will be held within a few weeks when a programme for the working of the new movement will be formulated.

A committee is now in session considering a time and place for the convention. In a few days the decision will be made public. Washington, Chicago, St. Louis, New York, Boston and Philadelphia are the cities most favored and the probability is that in one of these cities the meeting will take place.

DRIVEN OUT BY A MOB.

Negro Settlement in Illinois Attacked by White Miners.

Spring Valley, Aug. 5.—It is estimated that forty men, women and children were wounded by the mob at the settlement, many of whom it is thought will die.

Spring Valley, Ills., Aug. 5.—A patch of some 100 odd company houses near No. 8 shaft, inhabited almost exclusively by negroes, was visited by a vengeful mob of 500 white miners from this city and given a taste of mob violence. Near midnight five colored men had held up a white man named Barney Role, between this city and the negro settlement, and after robbing him of nearly $100 in money fired three pistol shots into him and left him for dead. Role is the third man shot in that vicinity in the past few weeks, but he was the first white man. When the white miners of this city heard of the crime they assembled on the public square and decided to march in a body to General Manager Dalzell's house and demand of him the discharge of every colored man in the settlement.

A brass band was then secured and the mob repaired to the general manager's house. He refused to grant what the white miners wanted. They then told him that as he was not disposed to run them out of town they would take the matter up themselves, and with that they marched towards No. 3. By the time the mob arrived at the settlement most of the negroes, having been notified of the wrath of the whites, had fled to the woods. About a dozen were caught and treated to the most violent kicks; stones were hurled at them, aud shots were fired at their retreating figures. Two were shot, but not seriously hurt.

The colored boarding house at No. 3, run by Gus Ferguson, was attacked and all the inmates fled for their lives. The mob then ransacked the houses, breaking the furniture and committing other depredations.

By noon every negro had fled the city. All afternoon a gang of men with pistols and shotguns scoured the woods hunting for negroes to shoot at. Sheriff Clark, who was telegraphed for, arrived in the city late in the afternoon with about a dozen deputies. No more trouble is anticipated unless the negroes attempt to come back. There is a terrible prejudice against them here. There is much feeling against Manager Dalzell, at whose instance it is alleged they were imported in here last fall when there was not work enough for the old employes. Everything was quiet last night, but trouble is expected today if the negroes go to work.

BRITISH BUTCHERED IN CHINA.

Ten Killed by a Chinese Mob, Including Men, Women and Children.

London, Aug. 5.—A Shanghai dispatch to The Times says that the mission and sanitarium at Wha Sang, near Ku Cheng, province of Fokein, has been attacked and ten British subjects killed. The Rev. Mr. Stewart, wife and child were burned in their house. The Misses Yellow and Marshall, two sisters named Saunders, two sisters named Gordon, and Steetie Newcombe were murdered with spears and swords.

Miss Codrington was seriously wounded about the head and Stewart's eldest ohild had a knee-cap badly injured, while the youngest had an eye gouged out. Rev. Mr. Phillips, with two Americans—Dr. Gregory and Miss Hartford—were both wounded, but arrived safely at Fu Chau Fu.

Washington, Aug. 5.—A dispatch has been received at the state department from Consul General Jernigan, at Shanghai, stating that in the riots at Ku Cheng, China, no American missionaries were hurt, the victims being all British.

HALF A MILLION AN HOUR.

The Way Fire Licked Up Property at Sprague in the Far Northwest.

Spokane, Wash., Aug. 5.—Sprague, the county seat of Lincoln county and the division point and location of the Northern Pacific car shops, and having a population of 3,000, was almost destroyed by fire. The fire swept over the town with resistless fury, destroying over $1,000,000 worth of property in two hours' time.

The fire burned over 320 acres of territory, the Northern Pacific being the heaviest loser. Tho road loses twenty-four locomotives, fifty-four freight cars, $325,000; shops, machinery, etc., $50,000; headquarters, passenger station, freight warehouse, etc., $125,000. Half a mile of track was destroyed, together with 7,000 tons of coal and 5,000 cords of wood, bringing the Northern Pacific loss up to $750,000. Other losses range from a few hundreds to $30,000.

Failure in Hardware.

Chicago, Aug. 5.—The wholesale hardware firm of Woodrough & Hanchett, 38 and 40 Lake street, has failed. The collapse was caused by the hard times. The liabilities are $180,000 and the assets are estimated at $240,000, of which $140,000 consists of accounts receivable. The firm expects to pay all of its indebtedness in full, but as collections are hard it will be some time before it can do this.

Some one proposes that the lodges be run in the interest of the churches. We second the proposal with the understanding that the only way the lodges can be thus run is to run them out of town and out of existance.

The General Secretary has for sale two quarter sections of land in Kidder county, North Dakota, and one half section in Morton county, same State. The crop reports are on the whole very favorable this year. The above properties are improved. The proceeds of sale will be used in the interest of the N. C. A. work. It is hoped that friends will interest themselves in their sale. Full particulars sent to any one contemplating purchase.

An anti-secrecy library of sermons and addresses, and expositions of Freemasonry, Odd-fellowship, and other literature of the National Christian Association, has been placed in the Y. M. C. A. library of Jamestown, N.Y. The General Secretary writes that they will surely do good. He also writes of the lecture by Pres. Blanchard in his city recently: "I feel sure that they have paid well by opening the eyes of some people, who will always be ready hereafter to testify against secret societies."

There are but two religions in the world—the true religion of Christ and the other comprising all false religions. One deifies man, the other deifies God. One is the religion referred to in the constitution of Ohio, as interpreted by Judge Welch of the Supreme Court of that State, who decided in reference to the Bible in the School case, that the word religion in the constitution means "the religion of man," and not the religion of any class of men. This is the religion of Masonry, or the broad religion of mankind, the religion on which all men agree. Dr. Lange in his Commentary says that this is identical with Rationalism, the great false religion of Europe. It exalts human authority in place of the Divine, by attempting to put Christ's religion on a level with false religions. Based on these two religions are two theories of government—the Christian theory exalting the Divine will as its supreme law, and the Secular or infidel theory putting human authority in place of the Divine.

REV. H. H. HINMAN.

The Southern work of the National Christian Association was first opened up and developed by Rev. H. H. Hinman, whose portrait looks out upon our readers from this week's Cynosure. But he was a pioneer in this reform in more places than the Southern field. In nearly every State of the Union existing at the time his labors began, has he traveled and labored, and borne fruit to the glory of God. Surrounded and threatened by the Ku-klux of the South, or rebuffed and scorned by doughfaces in the Northern pulpits, Bro. Hinman has sown good seed in the morning and in the evening has not withheld his hand, and today both in the North and South there are many who bless his labors, and who will be a part of his "crown of rejoicing" at the coming of the Lord Jesus. Bro. H. H. Hinman has been a help to all good causes, and a brave, Christ-like opponent to every evil one. Every one will wish to read and read again the biographical sketch on page three of this paper, which shows in a very inadequate degree the vast amount of work done by this most able, honest, patient and self-sacrificing man.

President Blanchard was given one whole evening by Mr. Moody, at the Northfield (Mass.) Conference, to present the work of the National Christian Association. He was introduced by Mr. Moody in a most brotherly fashion, and God helped President Blanchard greatly. It was probably the most important single address that he has ever given. There were several hundred ministers present, perhaps not more than four hundred, though it seemed as if six hundred were nearer the number, and they were literally from every portion of the country.

Rev. Webb-Peploe is the principal speaker this year at this Northfield Conference. He is a prebend of St. Paul, London, England, and one of the most powerful preachers that has ever visited this country. He became deeply interested in the subject presented by President Blanchard, and secured Masonic rituals and other literature for a farther investigation. He impresses one as absolutely fearless. Prayer ought to be made for him that God would call him to warn men against the false doors to heaven set up by these secret lodges.

One immediate result of the address at Northfield was that one minister said that he would then and there abandon the lodge. And a number of others came forward and made themselves known as seceders, and thankful for the address. The substance of President Blanchard's remarks is being printed, and Bro. J. P. Stoddard will see to their distribution, not only among the ministers of the conference, but throughout Northfield. There will probably be no more important meeting this year than this when the representative character of the aucience is considered.

Surely it is time to awake to the danger of secret organizations when such a conservative church organ as the Northwestern Christian Advocate speaks out in an editorial like the following: "Rev. Edwin Locke of Kansas Conference is, or was, acquainted with a person who belonged to forty-eight lodges, several of which he founded, and with another who was enrolled in twenty-two. It would not be surprising to find that those men had no time for their families or for the church, and that the net result of their activity was a large display of badges at the funeral. The distractions of lodge and club life are becoming a grave social and domestic issue. They are fruitful sources of marital and parental indifference, and abundantly account for the lack of time which men allege as their excuse for declining church work and responsibility."

The Southern Forge, of Lynchburg, Va., publishes this advertisement from Chicago, stating that "ten dollars for each one dollar invested can be made by our systematic plan of speculation," which "covers both sides, so that whether the market rises or falls, it brings a steady profit that piles up enormously in a short time." We wish the publisher could find room for a pointer on this line from the Apostle Paul, and publish it by the side of this advertisement while it remains in his columns. "They that will be rich fall into temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts which drown men in destruction and perdition. For the love of money is the root of all evil, which while some coveted after, they have erred from the faith and pierced themselves through with many sorrows. But thou, O man of God, flee these things."

FORGIVENESS.

A flower was trampled down to-day,
The last one of the year;
It grew close by the wayside;
By all it was held dear.

But a careless one came by at last,
By him it met its doom;
Yet naught it said as on he passed,
But shed a sweet perfume;

As if to say "though you've done wrong,
I yield my richest flavor,
To let those know who pass along,
You are forgiven ever."

"And let all those who look on me,
This truth well learn and know,--
Which suffering as ye see me do,
I labor hard to show,—"

"That 'tis more sweet and better far,
Yea, more like God in heaven,
To pardon other's failings than
It is to be forgiven."

MASONRY A FALSE AND CHRISTLESS RELIGION.

BY E. RONAYNE, PAST MASTER KEYSTONE LODGE, NO. 639, CHICAGO.

In connection with what I said in a former paper about religion, and especially about the religion of Freemasonry, I may further remark that the Jewish people are very largely represented in all Masonic lodges, and so also are saloon-keepers. There is scarcely a Masonic lodge in this city of which a score or more of Jews are not members, and there is at least one lodge here in Chicago whose members are exclusively Jews. Now why is this? What is the reason why a Jew is so fond of Freemasonry? And what does a Jew, from the rag-merchant to the wealthy clothier, find in Freemasonry that is and to his habits of thought and manner of life? Surely it will not be difficult for us to find an answer to this question; it is found in the fact that according to an ancient landmark the name of Jesus is excluded from all lodges of Freemasons throughout the world.

Were there any recognition whatever of Jesus in a Masonic lodge or any mention of his name in connection with any of their religious ceremonies, no Jew would once set his foot within its portals; but because Jesus is rigidly excluded the Jew can enter, and this he does with eagerness and delight.

A JEW MAKES A GOOD MASON

and loves the institution—oaths, death penalties and all—and this surely he would not and could not do were it not for the fact that Jesus can by no possibility be recognized in any part of the Masonic system. And right here I want to state a fact, and in so doing to correct an error into which all Anti-masonic leaders and lecturers seem to have fallen. They are generally in the habit of talking about "the higher degrees," "the ancient and accepted Scottish Rite," "Knight Templarism," etc., as if those degrees and rites were Masonry or even any part thereof: but let me say right now that there is no Freemasonry higher or beyond the Master Mason's degree. The four chapter degrees even are not higher, because these degrees are merely expansions or elucidations of the degrees conferred in the Blue Lodge. So then the Master Mason's degree is the climax or summit of "Ancient Craft Masonry," and the Grand Lodge is the highest authority known to or acknowledged by the fraternity. Some Anti-masonic writers and lecturers will possibly differ with me in this, but I cannot help it; what I state is a fact well known to every intelligent Mason, and I know whereof I affirm. A Jew then can lawfully become a Mason and easily find Freemasonry a congenial institution, but he cannot enter the Commandary,

HE CANNOT BECOME A KNIGHT TEMPLAR

nor a member of any of the so-called "higher degrees"

If any of the readers of this paper will take the trouble to search through the book of Acts for the word "name," he'll be astonished at the number of times the name of Jesus is alluded to in that wonderful book. From Acts 3: 6, to Acts 26: 9 it is constantly "the name," "by what name," "the name of thy holy son Jesus," "this name," and so on; but although God our Father gave Jesus his name, "even a name that is above every name;" although angels rejoice in it, and saints love it; although "there is no salvation in any other, for there is no other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved," yet this precious, blessed and beloved name can never be used in a Masonic lodge. In the days of his flesh even the very demons bore testimony to and acknowledged him, but Freemasons and and yet in all their blindness and stupidity they continue to reiterate that foolish assertion and to solace themselves with that base falsehood that "Masonry is a good enough religion;" while alleged preachers of the Gospel and so-called Christians give their countenance and support to the propagation of this lie, and join hands with Jews, deists, infidels and rumsellers in rejecting and hating the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. "Good enough religion!" Good enough for what? Good enough when? Good enough for whom? All old men, all young men under age, all women, all poor men and all cripples are rigidly excluded forever from any of its "rights, lights and benefits," and yet, forsooth, "Freemasonry is a good enough religion."

But what is the Masonic religion good for? Will it make a drunkard sober? Will it make a liar truthful or a thief honest? Can it bring the dead to life and banish evil forever from the world? All this is what Jesus does, and will do; this, and this only, was his misson to earth, and he shall never cease until his work is finished, "until every enemy is subdued, and the last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." 1. Cor. 15: 26.

CAN MASONRY DO THIS?

Can Romanism or Protestantism or any other religion whatever do this? And yet people are all the time talking of their religion, Masons among the rest, and the great question among them all seems to be as to which religion is best. Jesus and Jesus only is best—not religion or services or cermonies, but Jesus Christ and him crucified. "He came into the world to save sinners." 1. Tim. 1: 15. Can religion do this, Masonic or any other? "He gave himself a ransom for all to be testified in due time." 1. Tim. 2: 6. "Christ died for the ungodly." Rom. 5: 6.

The great question is as to life or death. "If a man die shall he live again?" is the momentous question propounded by the prophet, and who can answer it? Can religion, whether Masonic or otherwise, give us any idea as to its solution? No; it can only be answered by Him who "was despised and rejected of men"—by Jesus only, as he says, "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly," John 10: 10, "for the bread of God is He which cometh down from heaven and giveth life into the world." John 6: 33. "So then as through one trespass (Adam's) the judgment came unto all men to condemnation, even so through one act of righteousness (Christ's) the free gift came unto all men to justification of life." Rom. 5: 18. No, dear brother, your Masonry is not good enough for you nor for anybody nor for any thing. The Masonic religion with all its empty ceremonies is good for nothing, and deep down in your heart

YOU KNOW THAT THIS IS SO.

When you are laid upon a bed of sickness; when the film of death is slowly gathering over your pale countenance; when the grave opens to receive you and you are at last laid away in the dark, damp prison-house of death, what can Freemasonry do for you? What consolation and comfort and hope can it reach out to your sorrowing friends, to your bereaved children or to your weeping widow? Can Hiram Abiff, or the fifteen fellow crafts, or the three ruffians, or the Worshipful Master be of any service to you then?

It is all well enough perhaps to talk of Masonry or religion of any other kind while you are in health and strength, but what will you do in that dread and awful day when "all that are in their graves shall hear His voice (Jesus') and shall come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of judgment?" That day is approaching fast and even now is at our very doors, and when it comes where will you be found or to which class will you belong? Ponder this question, my dear brother; think well on it, and don't any longer try to delude yourself with the vain hope that "Freemasonry is a good enough religion for you," for nothing is good for the human soul either in time or eternity but the Lord Jesus Christ, "the same yesterday, to-day and forever."

AN IDEAL BROTHERHOOD.

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

Of the great multitude of secret orders, each claims to be a brotherhood, and that its members have special claims on each other to the exclusion of the rest of mankind. Such fraternities not only come far short of the true conception of human brotherhood, but are manifestly obstacles to its realization. In a recent address by Rev. Geo. Dana Boardman, on the subject of international peace, he compares the human family to the physical body, having many members which, though differing in office, all serve the

which is the good of all. He quotes the twelfth chapter of Paul's first letter to the Corinthians, which he thinks may have been suggested by the old Latin fable of "The Belly and the Member." The description applies not merely to an ideal church, but to an ideal humanity. It is as follows:

"As the body is one, and hath many members, and all the members of the body, being many, are one body; so also is Christ. For in one Spirit were we all baptized into one body, whether Jews or Greeks, whether bond or free; and were all made to drink of one Spirit. For the body is not one member, but many. If the foot shall say, Because I am not the hand, I am not of the body; it is not therefore not of the body. And if the ear shall say, Because I am not the eye, I am not of the body; it is not therefore not of the body. If the whole body were an eye, where were the hearing? If the whole were hearing, where were the smelling? But now hath God set the members each one of them in the body, even as it pleased him. And if they were all one member, where were the body? But now they are many members, but one body. And the eye cannot say to the hand, I have no need of thee; or again the head to the feet, I have no need of thee. Nay, much rather, those members of the body which seem to be more feeble are necessary; and those parts of the body which we think to be less honorable, upon these we bestow more abundant honor; and our uncomely parts have more abundant comeliness; whereas our comely parts have no need; but God tempered the body together, giving more abundant honor to that part which lacked; that there should be no schism (rent, dismemberment) in the body, but that the members should have the same care for one another. And whether one member suffereth, all the members suffer with it; or one member is honored, all the members rejoice with it. Now ye are the body of Christ, and several members thereof (members each in his part). 1 Cor. 12: 12–27."

Such a conception of a

in which each member actually loves his neighbor as himself, is not only beautiful, but in the light of divine prophecies of the future, is eminently true. When God's kingdom shall come, and his will be done on earth even as in heaven, it will be perfectly realized. Of course, under such a condition of things "men will learn war no more." Men will be bound together not only by their highest interests, but their strongest affections. Then indeed will we "be members one of another."

But not only will war be impossible, but all secret combinations must cease to exist. The misappropriated motto of the trades unions, that "the rights of one are the concern of all," will then be applied to all mankind. There will be

since the entire human family will know all that belongs to the brotherhood, and it will be the duty of all men to always reveal and never conceal. Secrecy, being the outgrowth of sin, will cease when its occasion has disappeared. It is probable that even in an ideal society there may be privacies, but they will be far less frequent and differ widely from sworn concealments. Indeed, there can be no oaths; for when all men fear God every statement will have the sacredness of an oath. Prisons and almshouses will of course disappear, for holy men and women will not commit crime.

If the conditions of the natural world remain as they now are, there will be occasion for industry and frugality; but when intemperance and indolence shall have disappeared, poverty will have ceased and occasional needs will be met by the unsparing

HAND OF UNIVERSAL BENEVOLENCE.

Of course, such a state of society will be eminently favorable to health. Indeed, we are told that in the "new earth" "a child shall die a hundred years old." Isa. 65: 20. That is, a person a hundred years old shall be esteemed but a child. In such a state of things there will be no need of hospitals, asylums for the insane, or schools for deaf mutes and the blind. "The inhabitant of the land shall not say, I am sick." Isa. 33: 24. Then, too, there will be no restrictions on commerce, save only that no trade in injurious articles will be permitted. The wants of man remaining as they now are, there will of necessity be an interchange of productions and commodities. But the idea of a government standing between the buyer and the seller, and exacting a price for will never be thought of except as it is remembered as a relic of selfishness and semi-barbarism.

Perhaps there is nothing in which our earth so much resembles the physical man as in the interdependence of its different parts. Our vast commercial transactions bring tribute from every portion of the globe to every other portion. No country or climate is so poor or so desolate as to be left out of the account, and it is as absurd to tax the interchange of their products as to make laws that the hands and the feet shall not minister to each other's wants except at a price. But if this is an ideal condition of society, it is an ideal that we ought always keep before us; and the more so, since we who trust in God are quite sure of its realization. For "as I live, saith the Lord, every knee shall bow and every tongue shall confess." Isa. 45: 23.

Oberlin, O., Aug. 1, 1895.

WHY OPPOSE FREEMASONRY?

BY REV. O. H. POWERS.

Among the forces that oppose or that hinder the remedial agencies which God has ordained to help this ruined world, perhaps none are greater than secret oath-bound fraternities. Men will plot and do in secret what they would not do openly. It is asking too much of the church and even of the state to allow secret oath-bound fraternities to exist. They have a manifest and moral right to know what plans are being devised in the secret chamber under cover of oaths. It is a challenge upon the intelligence and manhood of a community that such secret oath-bound combinations are permitted to exist.

One of the unfortunate features of the situation is, that the church has given reputation and character to such fraternities by allowing her members and ministers to become members. Strange as it may seem, ministers of the Gospel, with the warning words, "have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness," ringing in their ears, yet from sinister motives give their good name, reputation and character to secret lodges, which Joseph Cook tells us are prohibited by law in some countries and ought to be prohibited in all.

Suspicion rests upon secret combinations. No wonder that some churches refuse fellowship in church relations with those who are members of some secret fraternities. The wonder is that all do not. With Mr. Moody and thousands of others I wonder that ministers of the Gospel can stoop from their high and holy calling and bow to this Moloch of the nineteenth century, forgetting that they are under moral obligation to shun even the very appearence of evil. But herein is not only the appearence of evil, but evil itself in the form secret combinations, wicked oaths and monstrous blasphemies. Even the title of "High Priest" belonging now to the Eternal Son in the presence of God for us is stolen and conferred upon a brother Mason candidate for the grand lodge above. Satan, in the grand lodge of which he is master, may now say, "I have a high priest in my kingdom. On the mount of temptation I failed; on the mount of transfiguration I dared not go, but I have a lodge system and a high priest. And though I cannot promise all the kingdoms of the world, I can promise enough to catch even ministers of the Gospel; they will give us reputation in the world, for many will venture where ministers lead the way." And, "There is a way which seemeth right to a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death."

There is then a real need for this convention, and it is a matter of interest to note the progress of the National Christian Association from the time it was organized until the present call. We have believed that God's plan to help and save the world through the instrumentality of his church and people is surely the best that could be devised, and this demands all our time and means. Anything that diverts our time or talents into other channels than those of the church must be disapproved of God and work adversely to the church. Men whose hearts are right with God, in this land of religious toleration, have no necessity for the secret lodge. I pity the bishop who finds a justification for a Masonic lodge in the fact that Jesus met with his disciples in secret on several occasions. The whole life of Jesus is a lesson to us that he that doeth right seeketh to be known openly. Men and women are not to be blamed for looking with suspicion upon any scheme that hide itself behind a screen, no matter what that screen may be. He who has not found out that darkness is used to cover up sin has lived to little purpose.

Those who are members of certain fraternities say there is good in them; and yet it must be admitted there is more good out of them. God has established a fraternity, and he calls upon all to work in it, and through it, for a lost world. He calls it his "bride." It is very dear to him. He calls it his vineyard and says to all men, "Son, go work to-day in my vineyard." Then shall ye be laborers together with God. But outside of the church, outside of the vineyard and under cover of darkness, made more dense by wicked oaths, I dare not say "laborers together with God." God sends us out into the highways and hedges to gather in the poor, unfortunate, lame and blind; that is charity, no doubt about it; that is Godlike. But some of the so-called charitable fraternities receive into their memberships able-bodied men only. Is that charity? Is that Godlike? Nay, verily, it is not even humane. Satan himself would take in the poorest and most unfortunate man in all Chicago if by so doing he could take in one dollar or one hour's time from the church and its legitimate work. But if we seek to do God's will, and thereby to secure his blessing, we had better seek the channels of his own choosing through which to work and use our means if we mean to work with God. That narrow mindedness which seeks advantages that must come through darkness should never, in this age, be tolerated in a Christian land.

With John Hancock, I am opposed to all secret fraternities. Let nothing be done but that which will bear the light. With Edward Everets, "I believe them a power that endangers the public good." I have seen too much of the unwarrantable partialities in court proceedings, too much of the money diverted that should have gone into other channels, to many men that run well for a season until they became members of the lodge, too much of all this, not to be concerned for the young men who in this age are drawn into the vortex of secret fraternities.

Says General Grant: "All secret oath-bound parties are dangerous to any nation, no matter how pure and patriotic the motives that brought them together." It would be difficult to impeach the head, the heart or judgment of General Grant.

HORACE HANNIBAL HINMAN.

Horace H. Hinman, of Oberlin, was born in New Haven county, Connecticut, May 2, 1822. At the age of nine his father moved to Medina county, Ohio, which was then almost unbroken wilderness. He had very limited school privileges, but spent some time in the High School in Elyria; also a short time at Oberlin, O. Owing to feeble health he was unable to complete a college course, but commenced the study of medicine, and after many difficulties and hindrances was graduated at Willoughby Medical College in the year 1846, receiving the degree of Doctor of Medicine.

His mother was a devoted Christian, and he had early religious convictions, but never gave his heart to Christ until the fall of 1845. For two years after graduation he practiced medicine in Ohio. In the summer of 1849 he went to Illinois, and practiced medicine for several years in LaSalle and Livingstone counties. In 1853 he was elected Superintendent of Schools for Livingstone county, to which office he was re-elected for four years. In 1855 he was licensed to preach by the Central Illinois Congregational Association. Dr. Edward Beecher and Rev. Jonathan Blanchard were members of that association at that time.

In 1858 he was commissioned as a home missionary of the American Missionary Association. In 1860 he received an appointment as a missionary to the Mendi Mission, West Africa, and was ordained to the ministry in August of that year, Rev. Lathrop Taylor preaching the ordination sermon. He was married to his present wife in November of 1860, and sailed immediately afterwards for Africa. Owing to failure of health they returned from Africa in the winter of 1865–66. He preached for the Congregational churches at Lockport, Ill., Baraboo, Wis., and Ironton, Wis., until the fall of 1873, when he engaged in the work of the National Christian Association.

He had been deeply impressed with the evil of secret associations, especially from reading President Finney's letters in the New York Independent, and some iniquitous developments of the system on his field of labor. He continued his work as a lecturer for more than eighteen years, traveling and laboring in thirty-two different States and the District of Columbia. In 1880 he visited the South as an anti-secrecy lecturer, and continued mainly to labor in that field until the spring of 1889. He aided in starting and conducting the American in Washington, and has for many years been a stated contributor to the columns of the Cynosure.

In the summer of 1888 he removed to Oberlin, O., where he has since resided. His daughter, now a missionary in China, and two sons are all graduates of Oberlin College. Mr. Hinman has been an all-round reformer. In his early life he was actively identified with the anti-slavery cause, co-operating with the Gerrit Smith and William Goodell wing of that movement. He has earnestly advocated the unity of all believers, and has devoted much time and labor to that subject. He has been an earnest supporter of the cause of peace, and has made many contributions to the literature of that movement. For the last few years his relations have been with the Seventh-Day Baptists, but he does not consider himself in any sense separated from the whole body of Christ.

TESTIMONY FROM ALEXANDER CAMPBELL.

"The friendship of the world is enmity against God. Whosoever will be a friend of the world is an enemy to God. Out of Christ's church 'the whole world lieth under the wicked one.'" "I know no Temperance, Odd-fellow or Freemason fraternity that does not recognize a brotherhood with the world. 'They are of the world, they speak of the world, and the world heareth them.' Christians though in the world are not of it. Any union, then, for moral purposes with the world that brings us to commune religiously with it, by the laws and usages of the institution itself is opposed to the law and kingdom of Jesus Christ, and cannot be either favorable to the church or to the world."—Harbinger, 1848, p. 511.

"And that a Christian man could enter into, or seek membership in an institution intentionally or avowedly composed of everything in this world of a fair exterior, Turk, Jew, infidel or skeptic, in the hope of helping the cause of Christianity, or of building up the church, is one of the most palpable evidences of the bewildering influence of the present apostasy that has fallen under my observation." "Meantime we consider that enough, on our part, has been said to satisfy every uncommitted Christian man that he has neither Christian authority nor right to give his time or money to any other moral or reforming institution than Christ's own church. Let him attempt to prove, if he thinks he can, that every hour and cent so appropriated is not derogatory to the Lord's own great reforming institution." —Harbinger, 1848, p. 689.

"I simply affirm that no Christian man is under any sort of obligation to join any of them; nay, that he cannot, as a Christian, become a member of any one of them without dishonoring the church of Jesus Christ, or himself and the Founder of it; and that his connection with them, as such, in any act of Christian worship, is a departure from both the doctrine and practice of the first Christians."—Harbinger, 1849, p. 36.

LETTER FROM NEW ENGLAND.

DANGER IN FOLLOWING A WRONG STANDARD.

The Standard, started recently in this city as a reform journal, has from the first patted the A. P. A. and secret societies generally with approval, but of late its laudations of the Knights Templar conclave has been perfectly ad nauseam. I have been a patron from the first, but since it has assumed the roll of championing this hypocritical, un-American and anti-Christian order, under the leadership of Samuel C. Lawrence, the rum distiller, it must look elsewhere for readers and support. To pose as a progressive, and especially as a reform journal, set for the defence of our free schools and American institutions against aggressive foreign foes, and then to take one of the most subtle and destructive of the whole brood into its bosom and coddle and caress it with all the fondness of an artful harlot, is a little too much. To gather, sift and give a correct record of what transpires is the legitimate business of non-partisan journalism, and commands the respect of intelligent patrons; but when under pretext of equal justice to all, and the avowed purpose of exposing the enemies of our commonwealth, it occupies the vantage ground thus obtained by deceit to foster and perpetuate a knighted aristocracy in society, a bogus army in the state and a pagan system of religion in the church, rivaling even Rome in superstition, ceremonies, titles and priestcraft, it is time for one subscriber at least to say good-by.

A PROMISING MOVEMENT.

The colored women's Congress, recently held in this city, was the first of its kind in America. Without any blare of trumpets or spread-eagle processions, it stepped modestly and gracefully to the front, completed its work to the admiration and even surprise of our literary critics, and the gratification of every lover of progress, then quietly departed, followed by the benedictions of our best and most intelligent citizens, leaving only pleasant memories and noble sentiments in connection with its brief session.

A COLLEGE DESERVING COMMENDATION.

"Thanks to whom thanks is due" for a copy of the Inter Ocean containing a sketch of Wheaton College and portraits of its president with members of its Board of Trust. New England as well as the West is coming to appreciate and feel the need of educated, consecrated Christian talent where the intellectual, the moral and the Christ-image hold assendency over athletics, in themselves of questionable propriety, and which provoke jealousy between students in rival institutions and furnish occasion for betting and gambling among the unscrupulous and shameless "sports" who hover like birds of ill omen around the fields of contest. I venture little in saying that a diploma from Wheaton College ranks with that of older and more liberally endowed institutions in churches or educational positions where sacrifice, integrity and devotion to Christ are prime requisites to a position of trust.

INSTITUTIONS THAT ARE UNAMERICAN.

In the absence of the stated reporter at "The People's Temple," I attended and took notes. The clack and clatter were more befitting the reception of a political favorite on a campaigning tour than a devout assembly of Sabbath worshipers. The services were inspiring and helpful. Major Ryan's address was able and convincing. He is clear and forcible in thought and manner, and his command of the situation from the moment he stepped upon the platform was ample corroboration of his statement that he fought on thirty-three battlefields during the late war. His arraignment of pagan Rome was unsparing, and when he came to speak of nunneries and convents he was especially severe. He called attention to their walled enclosures, grated windows and guarded portals. He averred that neither the governor of Massachusetts, the mayor of Boston or any official of this commonwealth is allowed to enter these dreary prisons without a passport from some priestly Roman official. This in un-American, inhuman, and true Americans are cowards if they longer tolerate it. "We," said the Major, "shall be cowards until we pronounce by law that there shall not be an institution in all our land that shall not be accesible to the the civil authorities at all times." [Prolonged cheers] Of course I thought of the lodge and its restrictive oaths with horrid death penalties, its tyled recesses and inflexible laws, and wondered how a governor or any official of our commonwealth who could not give the mystic Shibboleth at the door, would be received on a tour of inspection through the vaults and caverns of the Masonic Temple in Boston. What is sauce for the Romish goose ought to be sauce for the Masonic gander; and to be consistent, the Major must leave his secret lodges, and renounce his covenant with death and his agreement with hell or he can never be a true and loyal American citizen. The remedy suggested was, "Put the ballot in the hands of the women." Amen; and the Major will not object, of course, to the application by the fair sex of this same efficient medicine to the dram shops and the secret lodge system. God speed the day when by ballots and not by blood this trinity from the pit shall receive its death blow.

CONVENT LIFE UNCHRISTIAN.

Convent life breaks all natural relations, said the speaker. The will must be surrendered; father, mother and kindred renounced; imagination die and all natural friendships must cease. God and society have claims and they cannot be evaded by fleeing to the cloister. When the late war broke out, wives of the ablest officials in the army and navy decided the choice of their husbands between the Northern and the Southern contestants. Women have been suppressed, but they are rising to claim their rights, and we can't stop them. Women are helping on to better days. You say they are sentimental. So they are. What is a man or woman worth without sentiment? What are Mrs. Manchester, Mrs. E. Trask Hill, Mrs. Dunbar, Miss Flagg, Mrs. Livermore and Miss Willard doing? Shut these up in convents and what would the world lose? Every country that honors true womanhood rises, and every country that debases woman, like the Roman See, sinks lower and lower in the scale of civilization. All honor to the true and noble womanhood of our country.

I shall seek an interview with the Major, hoping to obtain "further light" from the East upon what my friend in Indiana called "the house of refuge for rascals and backslidden Christians."

REFORM NEWS.

LETTER FROM BRO. WILLIAMS.

Portland, Ore., Aug. 1, 1895.

Editor Cynosure:—Just before I left Portland the last time I was met in one of the prominent stores by a minister of the M. E. church, who said, "Are you still lecturing on the subject of secret societies? I want to tell you that I have left all my lodges: forsaken them forever. It is no place for a Christian, let alone a minister, who should be an example for his flock. In our ministerial association not long since I took the position that the lodge was more in the way of the church, and was hindering the salvation of souls more than the saloon. The president ordered me to sit down. I said, "That's just what I wanted you to say. It confirms my statement. The saloon men have never ordered me to sit down—they expect me to oppose them, but you order me down." It made the pastor a strong convert to our cause. So you see the leaven is working.

While east of the mountains on this trip I received a letter from a brother at Spokane who is a constant reader of the Cynosure. He regretted very much that he did not get to hear me when I spoke in the city before. I answered him that if he would secure either of the churches opposed to the lodges, and announce me for the 29th, I would come. He said, "I have seen the pastors of both churches, and while they claim to be opposed to the lodges, they do not wish to antagonize the orders."

Why do these brethren not act thus with all evils? Do they really consider this an evil? Can they, and then refuse to have them antagonized? I think a minister who reads the Cynosure regularly, and presents the fact as an evidence of his anti-secret principles, and then cannot have the subject discussed before his people, needs to have his moral backbone strengthened a little.

At Wilbur, Lincoln Co., Washington, we found the usual number of lodges and lodge people for so small a place. They were exceedingly shy of us at first, but finally they got around to hear us toward the last of the meeting. While none gave evidence of being saved, quite a number arose for prayers. Sentiment of the right kind was much strengthened. There are some true souls here. The Addingtons, who read regularly the Cynosure and Lodge Lamp, will do to "tie to" on moral

CORRESPONDENCE.

PRES. BLANCHARD AT JAMESTOWN, N. Y.

Jamestown, N. Y., Aug. 3. 1895.

Editor Cynosure:—President Blanchard, while here in Jamestown, did some of the grandest work, and struck some of the heaviest blows I ever heard. And best of all, God the Holy Spirit was with us from the first. I was deeply interested and was at all the services. I was drawn to Bro. Blanchard in spirit. I did not see anything in his spirit but pure love to God and man. I regard him as an excellent Christian man.

The city was stirred over the lodge question, and many remarks were made. I know God will take care of his own work. I engaged three reliable young men, who gave a full day to spreading the handbills and testimonies over the city as best they could. As soon as I feel able I will write up my experience in secret orders, as you desired, and send to you for publication.

STEALING A MARCH.

Little Rock, Ark., Aug. 8, 1895.

Editor Cynosure:—Conversing a few evenings ago with Rev. E. A. Baepler, of the German Lutheran Evangelical church of this city, he told me of an instance that outranks everything I ever heard in the way of lodge duplicity.

One of his members on his dying bed sent for him for spiritual consolation. He went immediately and found him conscious and expecting soon to meet the King of Terrors. He said to his pastor, "I belong to the G. A. R. and if I die they will expect to conduct the funeral and bury me." The pastor explained to him his situation and condition, telling him that the G. A. R. was anti-Christian and had no right to step in and take the place of the church and its ordained ministry. After the pastor had given him light on the subject he said: "When I die I want you to conduct the service. I believe in my Saviour Jesus Christ; I see my folly and that I have been led astray."

After his death the pastor made arrangements for the funeral in the afternoon. But the lodge hearing of it went and got the Main street M. E. preacher, both a Mason and a G. A. R., and stole a march on the pastor and conducted the funeral service in the morning without the pastor's knowledge.

LETTER TO THE TENNESSEE ANTI-SECRET CONVENTION.

The following letter is by a Tennessee farmer to the State Convention at Jackson:

Dear Brethren:—Circumstances with me are such that I cannot meet with you. I deem your meeting of great importance, and truly hope and pray that you may have a profitable meeting. Your cause is a good one. The objects are right in the light of God's Word. I am sure you cannot be wrong, for the orders you oppose, if they were not corrupt at first they certainly have become so now; and I am satisfied there is more mischief yet concealed in them than has ever been dreamed of by those who have never been identified with them. I once had a favorable opinion of Masonry. I thought it was a good institution, but after I became better acquainted with it I saw there was something in it that did not suit me, and for several years I have been watching it closely, and I have seen the devil in it so plainly that I cannot endorse it, and therefore I must oppose it to be true to my God and clear my conscience. I saw a man set at liberty after brutally murdering his wife, and another man guilty of murder only get one year in the penitentiary, and then he was petitioned out in a short time. Many other cases I could mention, of a sufficient number to satisfy any reasonable man that they are interfering with the administration of justice in the courts.

If I had a lawsuit of the greatest importance with a Freemason, and he could manage to get a majority of his brother Masons on the jury I would surrender the case at once. I have many good friends who are Masons; they treat me well; I do not mean that they are all corrupt, but I do mean that a majority of them are.

So dear brethren in Christ, stand up for God and the right. Both oppose wrong and expose rascality. Raise the banner of Christ higher and higher, till the last enemy is banished forever. So wishing you great success, and invoking God's choicest blessings upon you in your deliberations, I am, your friend and brother in Christ,

McNairy, Tenn., July 17. JOHN F. IVY.

THE MORGAN AFFAIR UP TO DATE.

SCHUYLER'S LAKE, N. Y., Aug. 8, 1895.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Notwithstanding the strongest possible evidence at the coroner's inquest to identify the body, washed up from Niagara river, with Morgan, the Masons and their sympathizers, or jack Masons, affected to question the conclusions. Morgan and the corpse both had double teeth all around; and a tooth drawn for Morgan, a single deficiency, corresponded with a similar deficiency in the body; and the dentist identified in both an adjacent splintered tooth. Morgan's wife described, and subsequently identified in the corpse, various marks and scars.

That the same classes exist at the present day is proved by the following extract from a leading paper. They affect impartiality by publishing approximately the facts, and then stab them in the back by feigned doubts. They cloak and hamper the truth in the same way that Hercules was cloaked and destroyed by his enemies—by a deadly poisonous garb. The following is the extract above alluded to from the Albany Argus:

THE END OF A HISTORIC JAIL.

The supervisors of Ontario county have just sold at auction the historic old jail of that county, the property bringing $100 and the bidder being obliged to remove it. This jail was widely celebrated in its day because of the so-called "Morgan cell" therein, in which, previous to his mysterious disappearance in 1826, Morgan, the author of a book purporting to reveal the secrets of Freemasonry, was placed for protection. After his disappearance Morgan was never heard of again, and it was charged that the Masons had made way with him, some holding that he was drowned in the Niagara river above the falls, and another story being that he was banished to Australia, never to return on pain of death. The only thing that was ever proved was that he disappeared as effectually as though the ground had opened to swallow him.

This incident was widely discussed, and it aroused fierce animosities and bitterness at the time. It entered into politics, and the late Thurlow Weed and others utilized it to their political advantage. The phrase, "good enough Morgan till after election," dates back to this Anti-mason agitation period of 70 years ago. Western New York especially, the home of Morgan, was a hotbed of Anti-masonry, and the records of Genesee Commandery, No. 14, K. T., one of the oldest in the State, now located at Lockport, but then at Batavia, relate how on St. John's day the parade of the Sir Knights was stoned by the people. Whole counties were carried to the Anti-mason issue in those days.

OBSERVER.

THE LIBERAL UNITED BRETHREN CHURCH.

CHARLOTTE, Mich., Aug. 6, 1895.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—In your issue of Aug. 1, I notice from the pen of Sec. W. I. Phillips some reference to a meeting of liberal United Brethren that he attended, concerning which he uses the following language: "In the class meeting that followed the sermon, my testimony for holy living and separation from any complicity with the secret empire seemed to be well received."

Bro. Phillips is evidently aware of the attitude of the liberal U. B. church toward secret orders, but I fear his words will be misleading as to that attitude. There are no doubt members of that church who are opposed to secret orders, but the general testimony of that church was effectually silenced on the 13th day of May, 1889, when by an act of their general conference they voted to pass from the old constitution to legislate under the new, which admitted members of secret orders into the church, and since that time no person has been debarred from membership on account of his connection with secret orders. On the contrary, their ministers and members have rushed into secret societies, so that since the revolution the church stands side by side with the most pro-secrecy churches of the country. In one respect this church is justly charged with being the most guilty of all the churches in their complicity with secret societies. Secrecy has quietly wormed itself into all pro-secrecy churches excepting this liberal U. B. church. This church by legislation opened her doors to the lodge, a thing that no other church has done. Secrecy is in the other churches by tolerance, but it is in this liberal United Brethren church by legislation. Persons belonging to secret orders are intruders in all other churches, but in this new church they feel at home. The church has given them an invitation to come in, and they are coming, and to reward the lodge the church is going into the lodge.

The lodge must be greatly under obligation to the liberal United Brethren church for their pioneer work in being the first church to invite in the lodge by an act of legislation. It may be that those liberals that Bro. Phillips found in New York have not heard of the new departure, and still think they are United Brethern after the old pattern, for we do hear of some occasionally who have been kept in blissful ignorance of the division in the church until the present time. But let it be known that the liberal United Brehren have outdone all the other churches in their concessions to the lodge power; they have acknowledged the superior power of the lodge and yielded to that power. The lodge is now master and the church is its servant.

Dear Cynosure, I hope you will give no uncertain sound as to the attitude of the churches on the lodge question, and especially this liberal U. B. church, which has prostrated herself in the dust to please the lodge. W. L. TITUS.

THE UNITED PRESBYTERIANS.

MARS, Pa., Aug. 7, 1895.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—In our United Presbyterian church at Mars are members of the Masonic and Odd-fellow secret societies. I am one of the members of this congregation and am opposed to this state of affairs. I presented a written offer to the session of the congregation that if the law of the U. P. church against secret orders was enforced, I would pay $300 for the new church building and also liberally support the congregation. This offer was not accepted, and the members of the lodge were allowed to remain in the church. I then arraigned some of the members of these secret societies before the session. This paper was laid on the table until the congregation would obtain a pastor. Against this action I complained to the Allegheny Presbytery. This Presbytery appointed Rev. S. Collins to moderate in the session to adjudicate the matter. The doctor was not notified of his appointment, and for three months nothing was done.

Then Rev. Calvert was appointed to attend to this matter. Mr. Calvert came on to moderate the session. I was not notified of the meeting, and consequently was not present, and so no trial was held. Mr. Calvert reported to the Presbytery that a meeting had been held and the matter was adjusted to the satisfaction of all parties; but he omitted to inform Presbytery how the matter had been settled. Presbytery accepted the report, not knowing that I had not been notified of the meeting.

It is now an open secret that the terms of settlement were that the members of these secret orders are allowed to remain in the U. P. church unmolested for one year, they taking the matter into prayerful consideration, and at the end of the year either to withdraw from the lodge or from the United Presbyterian church. And so we have the anomaly of members who in one year will not be fit to be members of the United Presbyterian church, now enjoying all the privileges.

But the spirit of the lodge has been shown. I was not willing to contribute to the support of a congregation, while that congregation was trampling on the constitutional law of the church. So, on May 31st, the session took action, that if by a certain date fixed by the session I did not pay something for the church building, and for the support of ordinances (and made the treasurer of the congregation and the clerk of session the judges of what I ought to pay), I would after that date be suspended from membership in the United Presbyterian church. Here a session, without a trial, suspends a member from privileges (while it retains members of secret orders in its membership) for not contributing to support the ordinances for a congregation, while the session knows that the reason why that member will not contribute is that the law on secret societies is flagrantly violated.

I have notified the session of my complaint to Presbytery, so the end is not yet. And the public are waiting the result with interest. Will our church stand by its constitutional law, or will it surrender to the lodge? I do not think it will.

SAMUEL PARK.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 7, 1895.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—That peaceful arbitration of international disputes will eventually become universal is as certain to thousands, aye, millions, of the world's best citizens as that the darkness of to-night will be succeeded by the light of to-morrow. This great army of war-abhorring Christians greet every step towards universal arbitration with prayerful joy, although they are not allowed to forget that the journey will require many steps before the goal is reached.

One of these reminders comes from officials connected with the State Department and relates to the resolution recently adopted by the French Chamber of Deputies in favor of the negotiation of an arbitration treaty between the United States and France. These officials say it will be difficult, if not impossible, to negotiate such a treaty because of the seeming impossibility of reconciling the claims of the United States under the Monroe Doctrine with the views which have been expressed by the French government. Surely—pardon the bull—if that is the only objection to entering into a treaty of arbitration with France, it is no objection at all. There is no occasion to reconcile any different opinion or views of the two governments. They have only to bind themselves to submit all disputes which arise either from existing difference in opinion or views or those hereafter acquired to peaceful arbitration; the arbitrators jointly chosen will do the rest. Inasmuch as President Cleveland is a strong advocate of international arbitration, as all of our presidents have been for some years past, it is not probable that the opportunity to negotiate an arbitration treaty with France will be lost through any fault of our government.

The white ribboners and their gentlemen friends gave an enjoyable informal reception in honor of Mrs. Frances E. Beauchamp, the popular assistant recording secretary of the National W. C. T. U., at the local headquarters of that organization, yesterday afternoon from 3:30 to 5 o'clock. C. A. S.

ALL-ROUND REFORMERS.

CLAY CENTER, Kan., Aug. 1, 1895

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—In your issue of July 18, Bro. Paden, of Effingham, Kan., thinks he has found a "fly in the ointment," in the model constitution proposed for All-round Reformers, in the following clause: "And to assist by voice and vote the nomination of candidates for office and the election to office of men who are in full sympathy with these principles and who are pledged to carry them into effect." This he claims would be to "help support the godless feature of our constitution.

It is true that no mention either of God or his law is to be found in it, and yet it may not necessarily be a godless document, for it may be neutral, notwithstanding the fact that the Scriptures saith, "He that is not for us is against us." Among its framers doubtless there were those whose object was to make it godless; but there were others, good Christian men who favored leaving out the name of God and his law with quite a different motive. They intensely feared the union of church and state. And are there not some, who for good Christian piety and example would put some of us to shame, who for the same reason hold the same doctrine to-day? But we will not discuss this feature of the subject now. We will admit, for the sake of argument, the fact that our constitution does need amendment.

But we are not to blame for this condition of things, for our national Constitution was adopted before we were born; therefore we are not responsible thus far. Now what is to be done? Our constitution needs amendment. May we not be held responsible if we sit with folded arms and do nothing? Certainly it is our duty to use such means as God has given us to accomplish his work; and the only means that he has given us by which the constitution may be amended is through the medium of the ballot box. The constitution itself makes provision for its amendment whenever it is thought necessary. A two-thirds majority vote of Congress, with a majority vote of two-thirds or three-fourths of the Legislatures, is what is necessary to amend it. It is not submitted to the popular vote of the people. Thus we see that in order to amend it we must have a two-thirds control of Congress, with a majority control of at least two-thirds of the Legislatures, of the different States; and this can only be accomplished by means of the ballot.

We must go to Legislatures and Congress in order to change the constitution. In case we cannot go ourselves, then we must send representatives who will do the work for us. In case that our religious scruples are such that we cannot do this, then there is but one course left and that is to educate our neighbor so that he will vote right and send the right kind of representatives to headquarters.

But there is still another view to be taken of this subject. There are many Christians, good conscientious men too, who believe that it is both a duty and a privilege to vote; but, alas, they do not teach the people, which they should do through the medium of their platform. Political platforms usually have no reference to the Deity, his laws, or any moral principle whatever. On the contrary they are too often written up in obscure language calculated to deceive and mislead. They are especially suited to the politician who is desirous of explaining his principles to suit the voters in that part of the county. Nor are voting Christians always careful to select for office, either at convention or at the ballot box, "able men, such as fear God, men of truth, hating coveteousness;" but on the other hand they too often stand shoulder to shoulder with, and often vote for, Romanists, liquor men, lodge men, skeptics and men of bad repute. Now, brother, do you not think that we voting Christians, who will presist in voting, need a little more education along this line, and is not this clause suitable for them if not for you?

STICK TO YOUR TEXT.

Hinsdale, N. Y., Aug. 5, 1895.

Editor Cynosure:—I am glad to see your editorial saying in effect that the Cynosure will leave other subjects to other papers and devote its pages to its own great subject, anti-secrecy. It stands alone, to a great extent, but it stands firm and upright, and its fire is not scattering. In this it differs much from many reform journals. I could name, leading temperance papers which evidently dare not state facts and truth, fearing if they do so, they will in some way hit the nail on head.

So also it is with the great daily papers. They see one side only. Pages are given up to praise, and pictures of orphan homes, hospitals and temples, to the grand conclaves, etc., of various secret societies; but even when absolute, unquestioned and admitted facts are given, when sworn testimony is offered, they refuse to print one line. All is praise and adulation; all is for, and not one line can be got before the people against, the Satanic doings of those who work in the dark. And the worst of it all is that not one in ten of the members of Masonic lodges have any idea of the real character of the curse they help to uphold No Christian, no honest man would ever enter a lodge again if they fully understood the use being made of them, for they are simply dupes of leaders of the most infamous character

After a quarter of a century's persecutions, the victim of secret conspiracies which have not alone ruined my business, deprived me of property and injured my health, I can appreciate the worth of a paper like the Cynosure, and certainly trust it will not scatter its fire, but devote all its ammunition to one subject, the great curse of the country, secret oath-bound societies and their illegal and infamous character.

AN INTERESTING WASHINGTON LETTER.

"HELP THOSE WOMEN WHICH LABOR WITH US IN THE GOSPEL."

Washington, D. C., July 31, 1895.

Editor Cynosure:—"My people perish for lack of knowledge." These words were forced upon my mind after talking with a gentleman who is an influential member of an Episcopal church here. A few evenings ago he dropped in to make a friendly call, and I took the liberty to call his attention to the evils of Masonry. He said, "I do not think there can be anything wrong about it; nearly all our ministers are Masons." Said he, "Our minister is a Mason, and our former rector, now deceased, was a good man." Then I remembered how many times I had sat under the preaching of the latter and listened to his intellectual sermons, but had wondered at their manifest want of spiritual power. He was a minister who "became a Mason in order to reach the young men." Think of it, a follower of the meek and lowly Jesus, holding himself up as a light for others to follow, entering the Masonic lodge, taking the blasphemous oaths required of him to do unlawful acts; vowing to protect saloon-keepers, murderers, thieves, and all this for the purpose of saving young men. It would be more consistent for such a minister to say, "I entered the lodge to draw young men within the coils of the serpent." God forbid that I should speak evil of my brother, but my Bible tells me, "speak every man truth with his neighbor." If I am to believe what good men tell me who have been Masons, and I believe it all, there is no greater detriment to the cause for which Christ shed his blood, than the lodge.

Is it not time for all those who love his cause, and are willing to suffer for it, to awake and use every means to enlighten those who are innocently ignorant of the evils of this institution which has such a paralyzing influence upon the home, the government and the church? Indeed, I know of no place in these United States where the trail of the serpent is not to be found. There is but one remedy; let the light be poured in. When I look back and see how Christians have been stunted in their growth, how the lodge has taken the place of the prayer meeting, how Christ's name is dishonored and despised, I cannot help being moved to tears. But it is not a time to weep but to work. There was a time when the Lord said unto Moses, "Wherefore criest thou unto me? Speak unto the children of Isreal that they go forward." But how are people to be reached, for such is the power of the lodge and so influential are its defenders that but few will listen to anything said against it.

I remember of a young mother once coming to me in distress of mind who wanted to become a Christian. She told me that her husband wanted to become a member of the lodge but she felt that it was wrong; and that her distress of mind was keeping her from the Lord. She had told her minister her distress, but he told her she was wrong; that he wanted to become a member himself. Pained and disgusted with his words, I can never forget her look of anxiety as she came to me. I then knew nothing about Masonry, but I pointed her to Jesus and she found rest in him. With such obstacles in the way the work of reform seems discouraging indeed. But God said to Ezekiel, "Thou shalt speak my words unto them, whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear." We are to "sow beside all waters." Paul tells us about having caught some "with guile."

When I was in missionary work in New York I had a friend, Jennie Dammast, in the Bible house, who was agent of a tract society. Besides furnishing tracts for distribution, she obtained the names of families that never attend church, and every month she enclosed a tract in an envelop and sent one by mail to the address of each family. She told me that in this way she had been able to reach families where a missionary was not allowed to enter, and as a result she had known of some remarkable conversions. She evidently thought well of Paul's plan. It has occurred to me that if Sister Powers would adopt my friend's plan, her usefulness would be increased. Her "chart talks" which she has been giving daily have been the means of opening the eyes of some who have never before realized the evils of the lodge, and they have gone out to hold up the light before others. I look upon Mrs. Daniel Powers as a chosen vessel of the Lord to bring this much-needed light to this dark city. God has already set his seal upon her labors which are increasing and unrewarded. I have felt constrained, without her knowledge or consent, to ask your readers, "whose heart the Lord has opened," to send her some stamps; if each send but a few, so that she may be enabled to send out more anti-secrecy literature through the mail. In this way she can reach very many in the departments here who cannot be reached in any other way. Men and women from all parts of the United States are to be found in the different departments. The free distribution of literature is prohibited by law. In making this appeal I am breaking a rule I have followed for nearly a quarter of a century, or ever since I began religious work in earnest; which has been, to never solicit aid from others. But I am asking from others no more than I am myself ready to do, which is to furnish envelopes for all stamps she may receive. This I will do for the sake of aiding in the work.

I must not forget to mention that there are 80,000 colored people in Washington. For number and variety of secret orders, the colored people of the United States bear the palm. Nearly all belong to some society; many are connected with several different ones, like the President's coachman who was buried yesterday. I would not attempt to give the number of different lodges represented at the funeral of this Christian Mason, which was held in one of the M. E. churches here. Oh, what a work is needed among both white and colored in this city. Public information, not theoretical, but in unadorned details, is indispensable to any reform. Let it be given unstinted, for, "He which soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully." Bro. Stoddard's work is too well known to need comments. Any aid such as anti-secrecy literature, stamps, etc., sent to Mrs. Daniel Powers, 355 Pennsylvania Ave., N. W., Washington, D. C., would be gratefully received by her.

LODGERY AND PROHIBITION ANTAGONISTIC.

De Kalb, Ia., Aug. 8, 1895.

Editor Cynosure:—Secret societies are evil, being the opposite in character of Him who said, "let your light shine." It is the character of secret societies to conceal that which should be revealed; consequently it is their nature to bear every evil fruit. It is most congenial for evil to come to maturity under cover of secrecy. Consequently secrecy organized is the strongest fortress of the evil of intemperance. The Prohibition platform needs a plank against this fortress of the saloon.

All true friends of temperance should be interested in helping to remove the protecting shade which covers the evil of the rum traffic; then the light in a nation like ours would kill it as sure as water runs down hill. Give the rum fiend no protecting advantage in the courts, or elsewhere in high places where it will have the protection of the secret lodge, so that every patriot will see clearly how and when to strike effective blows straight at the most vital part of the rum demon.

The prohibition movement has been following Him "who is the light of the world" at too great a distance. Jesus is the author of temperance, but the lodge rejects him and conceals the devil's deceptive work. Jesus is "the light of the world," and when all temperance workers "walk in the light as he is in the light," prohibition will be divorced from the lodge. Temperance is a part of the cause of God; it never can reach success in fellowshiping the unfruitful works of darkness, any more than can the pure religion of Jesus Christ. The hope of prohibition is in Christ, "and in him is no darkness at all." No genuine reform party can ignore the secrecy question.

HOW TO MEASURE HAY.

An Easy Method to Ascertain the Number of Tons In a Barn or In a Stack.

It is not safe for the buyer to figure on less than 500 cubic feet to the ton, but in a well filled mow about 450 is the average, whereas in a very large and particularly well packed mow it will sometimes run as low as 400 to 410 cubic feet to the ton. Then sell at that measurement. To find the number of tons in a barn, mow or hay shed, multiply the length, depth and breadth together and divide by the number of cubic feet you think, considering the quality of the hay and the condition in which it was put up, will make a ton.

To measure a cone shaped stack, find the area of the base by multiplying the square of the circumference in feet by the decimal .07958 and multiply the product thus obtained by one-third of the height in feet, and then divide as before, cutting off five right figures. The correctness of this will depend somewhat on the approximation of the stack to a regular cone, and if the stack bulges out it makes the product too small. The better way is to estimate the area of the stack up to a point of tapering in and apply above rules to cone shaped top.

Another approximate rule for measuring a round stack is this: Select a place which is, as near as possible, to what the average size would be if the stack was of uniform diameter from the ground to the top point. Measure around this to get the circumference, add four ciphers to the circumference at the right and divide the whole by 31.459 to get the diameter. Now multiply half of the diameter by half of the circumference and you have the feet of the circular area. Multiply by the number of feet the stack is high and you will have the solid or cubic feet in the whole; then divide by 500, which will give the number of tons in the stack.

How to Cure Ingrowing Nails.

When external pressure has been the cause of ingrowing toenails and ulceration exists, the soft parts should be carefully pressed away from the sharp edge of the nail by the careful introduction beneath the overhanging integument of a small strip of iodoform gauze, which should be well pressed down to the bottom of the sore and held in position by means of strips of adhesive plaster, applied so as to draw the soft parts away from the nail. This treatment, by removing the soft parts from the sharp edge of the nail, is almost always successful.

How to Cure Sunburn.

Apply to the burned parts a thick coating of white vaseline, which let remain for ten minutes or more; then rub it off by applying a soft dry cloth gently. Have a bowl of very hot water brought to you and a big linen towel.

Dip the towel in the water, which must be hot enough to steam, and almost bury your face in it, but do not touch the skin with it for some time. You should steam your face this way for 15 minutes, and by that time every drop of blood in your body will seem to be in your face. Then call for more hot water and apply it in soft, gentle fashion to the skin for 15 minutes.

Then put on a coating of vaseline and lie down for half an hour. When you get up, you will be as fresh as a daisy and your face will not trouble you in the least.

How Bony Girls May Become Plump.

Girls with spare ribs and other bare bones should drink cocoa, chocolate or milk, as they are rich in oils of a fattening and nourishing character. Vegetables served with melted butter, salads dressed with mayonnaise sauce, boiled hominy and rice, and baked potato with salt and fresh butter, custard puddings, sweetmeats and sugar on everything, with plenty of sleep, will help to put flesh on bony figures.

How to Make Rechauffe of Fish.

Take cold boiled fish of any kind, 2 tablespoonfuls of butter, a cup of bread crumbs, 2 eggs beaten slightly, 2 tablespoonfuls of milk, a teaspoonful of anchovy paste, pepper and cayenne. Put the fish, cut fine, into the chafing pan with butter, and when well melted add the bread crumbs, milk, eggs, anchovy paste, pepper and cayenne. Stir constantly and let simmer for five minutes.

How to Clean Matting.

In taking care of matting it is not well to wash it often. When it does need brightening up, boil together for an hour 2 quarts of bran and 4 of water. Strain this, pressing all moisture out of the bran. Add 2 quarts of cold water and 2 tablespoonfuls of salt to the strained mixture. Wash the matting thoroughly with this and rub dry with a clean cloth. The result is assured to be gratifying.

The Christian Cynosure.

REV. M. A. GAULT, - - - Editor.
WM. I. PHILLIPS, - - - Publisher.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, AUGUST 15, 1895.

SUBSCRIBE FOR THE CYNOSURE.

Rev. P. B. Williams, who has obtained as many as fifty subscribers in a single month for this paper, gives the following as his chief reasons to induce people to subscribe:

1. Because its the duty of every American citizen to post himself on the evils of secret societies.
2. It is impossible to be an intelligent, loyal Christian and remain silent on this subject.
3. The Cynosure advocates the purest principles of citizenship.
4. It opposes intelligently and firmly the institutions which hug the base of our temple of liberty, and are destined to tear it down unless overthrown.
5. The Cynosure opposes the lodges which hang as a nightmare over our Republican institutions.
6. The Cynosure exists for a purpose. That purpose is worthy the support of every intelligent Christian and American citizen.
7. This paper fills a place in the literary world filled by no other paper.
8. The Christian Cynosure is one of the very best religious papers in this or other countries.
9. The reform which it advocates so boldly, will and must be supported by its friends. If I am its friend, the Cynosure is my paper.
10. The paper can not exist without support on these lines.
11. Old subscribers should renew in order to not part company with such a precious friend. Those who have never taken it should subscribe in order to form its acquaintance.
12. All should support it because it is multum in parvo.

TYRANNY OF SECRET LABOR ORGANIZATIONS.

Justice Brown in a recent address on "The Dangers of the Twentieth Century" said one of them was the tyranny of labor. He said:

> It arises from the apparent inability of the laboringman to perceive that the rights he exacts he must also concede. A year never passes in which outrages are not perpetrated under tho name of "rights of labor" Men are worried, assaulted and stoned simply because they are willing to work for less than their assailants. This, too, in a nominally free country.

Saturday there was a striking illustration of the correctness of Justice Brown's statements. Two painters were at work peacefully on a public school building in this city. They were spotted by the walking delegate or some other union spy, and Friday they were called on by a delegation of union painters and asked if they had working cards. They said no. Thereupon the walking delegate who headed the deputation of intermeddlers asked these two men to stop work. They refused to do so.

On the following day while they were attending quietly to their business they were attacked by five champions of the "rights of labor" armed with clubs made out of lead and gas pipes. The assailants were so cowardly that they did not call on the two men to come out and have a fair fight, but fell upon them unawares, fracturing the skull and breaking the arm of one and bruising the other badly. It will be a long time before the worst injured one will be able to do any work. Fortunately the walking delegate and two of his assistant ruffians were caught and locked up.

In the eye of the law the two painters had been guilty of no offense. It is true that they had refused to join the Painters' Union, but that is not a crime. No man in this country can be forced to join any organization if he does not want to. It is true that these men, though not members, persisted in working at their trade when they could find any one to hire them. But that is no crime. The law nowhere says that no man shall work at a trade unless he has a working card. On the contrary, the law is that every man may earn his honest living in his own way and can put his services at the command of an employer without having to get the consent of any organization.

This walking delegate and his accomplices, being a law unto themselves, take the position that no man shall work as a painter in this city unless he belongs to their union, and that if any man defies their authority he shall be given so severe a dose of club law that he will be unable to work. It is assumed that all persons who work as painters are under the exclusive jurisdiction of the Painters' Union and that its laws are higher than those of the State, and that those who disobey them can with propriety be beaten or even killed.

It is time to read these defenders of the "rights of labor" a much-needed lesson. They should be punished as severely as the law will allow. If they can be sent to the penitentiary for assault to commit murder so much the better. If not they should be given a year in the county jail. The penitentiary is the best place for them.

SHUN THE APPEARANCE OF EVIL.

Ezra A. Cook, in leading the prayer meeting recently in the First Congregational church of this city, closed the meeting with the following practical remarks:

I hope we have all been as faithful in applying the searching Scriptures read in the early part of our meeting to ourselves as to our neighbors. It seems to me that if we will govern our daily actions by those rules, we shall not go far astray. Surely if we have the spirit of obedience to the command, "Whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God," not one of us will go to the theatre, play progressive euchre, or any other euchre; and none of us who vote will even be tempted to vote for the keeper of a saloon, brothel and gambling house for alderman. And ought not the brother who defiles himself with the vile weed to prayerfully consider what God's Word says about defiling the temple of God, and ask God to either take away the appetite, or give him strength to resist the temptation, especially if he has boys of his own? And ought he not to consider also the good of other people's boys? And how can a Christian retain connection with a secret society that denies Christ or breaks the Sabbath with the command ringing in his ears, "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness?" I do not think I am inclined to be pessimistic, but it does seem to me that the church of God has a fearful responsibility resting on her at the present time, and especially upon those of her members who are parents. The proverb "Like father, like son" used to be often quoted, but young America is progressive, and the proverb now runs "The son is like his father, only more so."

If the father stands by the grand old party, with its high licensed saloon, he may well expect his boys, and other boys that he and they can influence, to patronize the saloonist that stands by this father's grand old party. If he patronizes Sabbath-breaking transportation companies, passing a dozen evangelical churches on the way to reach the church of his choice, the more promiinent and useful he may be in that church, the more likely his boys will be to drop out of Sabbath-school and church at an early age and spend the day in some place of amusement. Parents who read the daily papers on Sabbath may reasonably expect their children to read the blood and thunder novel.

In many cases the Sabbath-school teacher has the responsibility of a parent; as to his or her example, and those parents and teachers who "remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy," and who "call the Sabbath a delight, the holy of the Lord, honorable," and who walk humbly before God, may expect their children to accomplish much more good than they have been able to, accomplish owing to greater ability and opportunity.

WORDS TO BE REMEMBERED.

In looking back over last year's file of the Cynosure we read with renewed interest the words of our dear departed brother, H. L. Kellogg, when he resumed charge of the paper only a little more than a year ago. They breathe so sincerely his devotion to the Cynosure, his appreciation of its vital importance to the cause, his faith in its future success, and his appreciation of his fellow-workers in the cause and the value of prayer, that for the inspiration of all we repeat his words here. May they stimulate us to renewed consecration to the work, that when like his it is done, it may be done as faithfully and well.

"To the Cynosure Readers:—Returning to your company and employ after a long vacation, you will expect the word of greeting which I am moved to give you.

"After more than twenty years of intimate acquaintance through the paper, ill health in my family commanded a change. A release of a year was given by the Board, and with wife and children I went to the west slope of the Sierras. Returning in time for a last word with the father of our reform (and to my household also), Jonathan Blanchard, a year and some months have been given to the work of bringing our cause directly before the churches and colleges.

"It was twenty-six years ago this month that the first number of the Cynosure was sent out. As I look over the twenty-five bound volumes, you will pardon the glow of thankfulness that my life has been put into so great and good a work.

"We are yet too near to measure the importance of this paper or the reform. It is not from its foot that you measure Bunker Hill monument, but from Boston bay. Years ago men who had traveled widest and spoken most, like James P. Stoddard, Horace H. Hinman and Edmond Romayne, assured us that in our movement no more important factor could be found than its paper. Of no other single agency could so much be expected. No other was so essential to ultimate success. Therefore our best endeavor should be given to make the paper a power for Christ and his church. What the Union Signal has been for the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, the Cynosure should become for our reform—not only an organ, publishing reports and exchange of views, but a source of profit from an enlarged circulation, and above all an agency for investigation, enlargement, leadership.

"Our best united effort will not therefore be too much to give our paper. It deserves, it needs the best. While the hand of the first editor was with us, the Cynosure seemed to be attaining its place. God has not, as I judge, yet given the reform a man for his place. The paper has the best of men among its readers—it deserves the best of editors. That God may call him out shall be my prayer. Until then, or so long at least as we can agree, I shall thankfully serve you to the utmost.

"Let me not feel that I am alone. Let us have a thousand correspondents and contributors. If you are on your feet, or on your knees, about this reform you will have something to say. Anti-masons, write for your paper!

"'Finally, brethren, pray for us, that the WORD OF THE LORD may have free course and be glorified.'—2 Thess. 3: 1.

"Henry L. Kellogg."

SUPPRESSING AGITATION.

The intolerant spirit of the lodge in closing the Tabernacle at Jackson, Tenn., in the face of a promise accepted in good faith to open it for the anti-secret convention, is the same spirit that before the civil war tried to shut off the agitation of the anti-slavery question.

The South should have learned ere this the lesson that cost them the blood and treasure of the war that, in a republic like ours, every great question, such as the secret society question, must be settled by a war either of words or bullets. If the pulpits of our land had not been closed against the agitation of the slavery question; if every citizen had done his full duty in carrying on that agitation, the war would not have been possible.

If our country is again plunged into war over the question of secret organizations the responsibility will rest upon those who refuse to contribute their quota to the agitation necessary to remove this the greatest obstruction in the way of Christ's kingdom.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Rev. R. J. Gault, formerly of Mansfield, O., is preaching for a few months at Wahoo, Neb.

—Bro. Joel H. Austin, an old time contributor to our columns, is now practicing law at Goshan, Ind.

—Rev. W. M. Howie has removed, with his family, to Seattle, Wash., where he takes charge of a congregation. He has had considerable experience as an editor, and we expect him to contribute occasionally to our columns.

—Sec. W. B. Stoddard is now assisting the New England Secretary in holding meetings in Vermont.

—Brother Edmond Ronayne would like a few copies of the Cynosure of June 13 and June 20, 1895, our supply of which is exhausted. Please send to him at this office, and greatly oblige.

—Rev. Eugene I. Grinnell preached two excellent sermons in the Wheaton College church on Sabbath, Aug. 4. He started last week for Steamboat Springs, Colo., where he will take pastoral charge of a congregation.

—Prof. Amzi Atwater, for many years Professor of Latin in the Indiana University at Bloomington, gave the Cynosure a friendly call last week. He was accompanied by his son Munson, who is taking an extended course in the Chicago University.

—J. W. Wood of Baraboo, Wis., was a welcome visitor at the Cynosure office last week. He has long been a true and tried friend of the anti-secret reform. He expects to remove in a few months to Sumner, Tacoma Co., Wash., where he will make his home with his children.

—Ezra A. Cook, whose interesting reminiscences of the early history of the anti-secret movement have interested our readers of late, will furnish soon, by request, a series of articles for the Morning Record, giving reminiscences of the early history of Chicago and of his boyhood days at Elmhurst.

—Rev. C. M. Damon, ex-president of Orleans College, Neb., made the Cynosure a pleasant visit last week. He is attending the camp meeting at St. Charles, and is now pastor of a congregation near Cresco, Ia. We were glad to enter his name again upon our list of subscribers, and receive a promise of some articles from his vigorous radical pen.

—Rev. M. A. Gault has recently supplied the pulpits of the Methodist church and College Church of Christ at Wheaton. His reference to the present reforms in which every Christian should engage, if loyal to King Jesus, met with general favor, and especially the exhortation to remember that not the instrument but the God that holds the instrument makes one mighty to the overthrow of Satan's strongholds.

—The analyses of the Masonic oaths by Edmond Ronayne, which have been running through several numbers of this paper, are to be published in the August Lodge Lamp. The usual edition of 10,000 only will be run, unless orders are received within the next ten days requiring a larger number. Those who have written requesting the re-production of these valuable articles can now obtain them if ordered soon. The price will be special, viz., $1 per hundred.

—Rev. J. A. Black of Wyman, Ia., in sending his renewal writes: "Allow me to extend you my congratulations in your new field of labor. You are engaged in the advocacy of an unpopular reform, perhaps the most unpopular of the present day; one certainly that evokes the most bitter opposition. But the battle is the Lord's, and victory is only a question of time. I will surely speak a good word for the Cynosure wherever I have an opportunity. The Cynosure and I are old friends. I have been an almost constant subscriber for it during the past twenty years, and I do not propose to drop it now. You have my best wishes for your success, and the success of the work in which you are engaged."

TALKS TO YOUNG PEOPLE.

BY PROF. D. A STRAW.

AN AFTERNOON WALK.

"Come along, Puella, let's have a talk."

"Where, papa?"

"Oh, anywhere; we'll walk and talk."

"You, too, little Opulus, we'll have a talk with papa."

"Oh, papa, you know fwhare my fweet peas blossom? Here 'ey are, papa; pink ones and fwite ones, and wed ones."

"They're beauties, Opulus. Which do you enjoy most, your garden, or mine?"

"I fink mine and 'Ella's are prettiest."

"Perhaps that's because you took such good care of yours. We're most likely to enjoy that which we've taken care of if we've done it well."

"Papa, which color did you say the peas run into? Mine are mostly purple."

"They run into the purple because that is the color, I suppose, from which the different colors were developed. The gardeners secured the bright and various colors by careful cultivation year after year, and by selecting the most beautiful flowers for seed."

"Which petunias had I better pick seed from, papa?"

"The largest and brightest ones. If you pick seed from the striped and fringed ones you will get plenty of pale and purple ones without saving seed from them. It's the same way with boys and girls. Thoughts are like seeds; and faces are like blossoms. It's best not to let the bad ones go to seed, but cultivate all the pure white ones and the bright ones and the large ones. If you let them all grow without any care, they will soon be a worthless, homely lot that nobody will want to see."

"And when we do our thoughts then we cultivate them, don't we, papa? See that apple tree that you grafted, how it has grown this summer. How long do you think it will be before it will bear apples?"

"Perhaps next year. Do you remember anything in the Bible about grafting?"

"I can't think of it; what is it?"

"It is in the eleventh of Romans where Paul is telling them that the Jews were the old branches of the tree and they were cut off because they would not bear fruit, and they the Gentiles were grafted in. Roman Christians and the American Christians were grafted in. That is, because the Jews would not except Christ and do right, God cut them off and took in the Gentiles who would accept him. Christ is the root and trunk of the tree, and all Christians are branches. There's a graft that didn't grow. Do you see how it was put in? but it got moved or in some way it didn't make close enough connection to get the sap from the tree and so it died. The bark of the graft has to just match the bark that has been split to receive it, and then we put wax all around it so the air or water or anything cannot get in to separate them, and then the sap from the tree flows right up through the graft and it grows. That's a hint for a Christian, isn't it? What's this, an old tooth-brush handle?"

"No, it's a bone. It's all bleached white."

"See if you can tell what kind of a bone it is. There is another one near by it."

"They look like chicken bones."

"I wonder fwat bodies had dinner here!"

"Maybe one of Mrs. Brennan's Bramah hens died here. She used to have her chicken house here where our garden is. Do you see that that bone fits right on to this one like a hinge. It needs another one—there it is. Now those two bones fit into this one just as the bones in your elbow do. You know I call you my little chicken sometimes. See that beautiful lily, do you know what Jesus said about the lilies?"

"Yes, I know. 'Consider the lilies of the field how they grow,'"

"Yes, and 'if God so clothe the grass, shall he not much more clothe you?' He loves you a good deal more than he does the grass, doesn't he? Now what is this? A grasshopper with ten legs?"

"Oh, fwat a funny fing 'at is!"

"It's a grasshopper coming out of his skin. He is leaving his old body on that horse-radish leaf just as perfect—legs, toes, eyes, even his feelers all complete, and he is coming—there he is out of them with a full new set, and with wings! Why he looks twice as big as his old skin. See him stretch himself. He seems to feel as if he had got into a new world. Guess we'll feel better'n that even when we get our new bodies."

"Let's show him to mamma." "Mamma, come see the grasshopper's resurrection."

—Bro. John S. White, of Steelton, Pa, writes us of his appreciation of the letter of Sister Henrietta E. Muzzy, Bombay, India, and asks how remittances can be made to the work there. By obtaining a postal money order for Manager India Watchman, Bombay, India, on Great Britain; or by obtaining British exchange from a reliable bank.

reform at any time. I cannot speak too highly of them for their great kindness to me.

As an evidence of how early training will cling to us, as soon as I mentioned the Christian Cynosure a Methodist Episcopal man came forward and said, "I want that paper. I was raised near Monmouth, Illinois, and have heard that subject discussed by Dr. Wallace and others." I secured three subscriptions here. The great frost that struck the Big Bend country in June has greatly demoralized the plans of the people. It is something new and quite unexpected to this country. Peaches and apricots are ripe, and being marketed. The Washington Fruit Association seems to give poor satisfaction to the purchaser and consumer in these parts. To illustrate—they will not sell a crate of berries at Wilbur for less than $2.50, but they will ship them more than one hundred miles to Spokane and sell at $1.50 per crate. The merchants and consumers can buy their fruit at Spokane, ship it home to Wilbur, and save 75 cents per crate. There is something radically wrong with such an association. It will take one of two things to rid this land and other countries of such associations, and thousands of others that militate against the people—either a wonderful revolution or the coming of the Son of God. In either event those who are true to God and the people will have the blessed consciousness that we have not wrought in vain. The greatest thing that can be truthfully said of a man when done with this world is, "He loved God and his fellow men."

We had at Wilbur father Kenoyer, the P. E., Rev. J. R. Hopkins, the pastor, Rev. J. M. Marlatt, pastor of Waterville mission, and Rev. W. P. Griffin, pastor of Davenport mission. They are all Cynosure men—true as "steel to the magnet."

On Monday, the 29th, I took a trip of fifty miles across the country, through the greatest clouds of dust I ever experienced. This is a great country in many respects. Any persons wishing to get cheap homes in a productive country, handy to church and school, will do well to correspond with Rev. W. P. Griffin, Mondovi, Lincoln Co., Wash.

I wish that those who owe me for Cynosures and books would forward the money to me immediately to Portland, Oregon, as I shall need it at the time of the convention. I hope my subscribers will all renew, as they cannot afford to do without the paper. P. B. Williams.

AMONG THE GREEN MOUNTAINS.

Montpelier, Vt., Aug. 9, 1895.

Editor Cynosure:—This will let you know that I am at work among the Green Mountains. While in Boston and vicinity my work was in conjunction with the New England agent. As he sent you reports, I felt that anything additional from myself would be unnecessary. Good was undoubtedly accomplished in the liberal distribution of Wendall Phillips' testimony regarding secret societies at the Christian Endeavor convention. The way has not opened for lecture work of late. I have attended meetings within reach and borne testimony by tract and personal conversation as the way has opened.

I find many churches in this section. If I know what it means to be a Christian, I am convinced that a majority of the church members do not. I spoke to a pastor about the lodge. He said he did not belong; admitted all the charges I brought against it, but concluded by saying that he should take no part in the opposition, for by so doing he "would knock all his work into a cocked hat." The Universalist and Unitarian ideas seem to prevail. It naturally makes one sick at heart to see the terrible condition of things. Persons all around that don't seem to know the first principles of Christianity, calling themselves Christian! Of course lodges are abundant. I find only here and there one who knows the truth and is willing to speak out.

Wednesday evening I attended a prayer meeting of the Evangelical church of this place. Bro. Shaw, the pastor, invited me to take part. I did so, and enjoyed a profitable season. I am to preach for him on Sabbath. To-night we have a parlor meeting in Barre, six miles from here. I have been in many different places to work, but none where more grace, grit and faith were needed than here. I desire the prayers of friends.

LIVES SQUANDERED.

REV. MADISON C. PETERS MAKES A PLEA FOR SERIOUSNESS.

Your Character on Earth Will Last For Eternity—The Sinner Is His Own Destroyer—Man Carries the Elements of Woe—The Christian Abroad.

On Sunday, Aug. 4, Mr. Peters did not preach, but he sends to the readers of his sermons the following appeal, which formed the peroration of one of his recent sermons in New York:

Once a man stood stunned at the first sight of the Niagara. When he got his breath back, he simply and coolly said, "I wonder how much machinery all this would turn?" We are told that there is enough power there when converted into electricity to lighten the world. And there is enough vigorous manhood and womanhood in this city, if rightly applied, to illumine our whole country. But behold the thousands wasting that power, throwing it to the four winds!

Dugald Stewart tells of a man who spent 15 years trying to balance a broom on his chin. Hundreds of men and women in New York are scarcely better employed. Their lives are summed up in rising, dressing, dining, wining, loafing, visiting, pleasure seeking and sleeping—busy men about trifles, pitiful butterfly species, flitting from flower to flower and dying like autumnal insects, despised and forgotten.

Charles Lamb once wrote a play for the stage, and he went to see it enacted. The play was condemned, and loudest hissing came from the gallery where Charles Lamb sat, and the audience looked and saw that it was the author of the play who was hissing his own production.

If at last we are compelled to look back upon a wasted life, we ourselves will be the severest critics. And remember this: When you go out of this world and your life has been wasted, no encore can ever bring you back to re-enact it. "As the tree falleth so it lieth." Your character at the last moment will be your character through all eternity.

Mr. Palmer, the London actor, dropped dead on the stage while quoting the words of the play, "O God, is there another and a better world?" I do not know what will be your exit, but in that hour there will come before you all you have been and all you might have been.

Amid all his levity and excess Burns had moments of deep seriousness, recognized man's spiritual and immortal part and the necessity of living for something higher than this present world. I was struck the other day with these lines—a grand sermon—which he sent to an intimate friend:

The voice of nature loudly cries
And many a message from the skies
That something in us never dies;
That on this frail, uncertain state
Hang matters of eternal weight;
That future life in worlds unknown
Must take its hue from this alone,
Whether as heavenly glory bright
Or dark as misery's woeful night.
Since, then, my honored first of friends,
On this poor being all depends,
Let us the important now employ
And live as those who never die.

What Is Hell?

That "there is no peace to the wicked" is a fact founded in the constitution of man. Sin destroys happiness. The sinner is his own destroyer. He punishes himself. Death makes no change in our moral character. It disengages the soul from the trammels of the body and gives expansion to its powers, but he that was "unjust will be unjust still," though removed from earth to the world of spirits. The passions and propensities of the soul follow it into eternity, so that even if there were no condemnation from God still the sinner would be in hell. In this world a man's happiness depends upon the state of his mind, and the passions of the soul will accompany it into the next world and form a part of its very being. They will have the same influence upon our happiness as here.

In order that the blind man may enjoy the beauties of the flower garden his eyes must be opened, in order that the deaf man may enjoy the sweet strains of music his ears must be unstopped, in order that the dyspeptic may enjoy a good meal his health must be restored, and so in order that a man may enjoy the blessings of heaven he must have his heart changed and be brought into sympathy with God, or else he would feel in heaven like a fish out of water. If there were no day of judgment and no hell, the sinner, continuing the enemy of God, must be lost and wretched. Man carries in his bosom the elements of woe, and the circumstances in which he will be placed will call them into action.

The Christian Abroad.

A good many people's religion cannot endure the slight change of climate involved in spending a short time at a summer resort. They seem to say as they go away in the summer. "Goodby, religion; I'll be back again in the fall."

Time.

Dr. Young truly said, "The man is yet unborn who truly weighs an hour." Some one records having seen the following notice: "Lost, somewhere between sunrise and sunset, two golden hours, each set with 60 diamond minutes. No reward is offered for their recovery, for they are lost forever." The day that ends with the setting sun will never come back. Franklin asks: "Dost thou love life? Then do not squander time, for that is the stuff life is made of." Fill each day and every hour with something to do.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic For the Week Beginning Aug. 18. Comment by Rev. S. H. Doyle.

Topic.—Christ's work for the world.—John i, 1-14. (A topical song service led by the music committee suggested.)

The prologue to the gospel of John deals principally with the divinity of Christ, His relation to the world at creation, His coming into the world as man, and His rejection by the world. In this passage then we have not only Christ's relation to God, but also to the world, and several of His works in relation to the world are suggested.

1. Christ's work as the revelation of God to the world. Christ is here called the "Word." Words reveal something and Christ was called the Word because he was to reveal God to the world. The world was not in entire ignorance of God. Nature revealed the fact that there must be a Supreme Being and some of His attributes, but this knowledge would not save, and therefore God sent Christ to reveal Him. Christ revealed the spirituality of God, His fatherhood, but most of all the way of access to and reconciliation with God.

2. Christ's work as creator of the world. "All things were made by Him, and without Him was not anything made that was made." But, although Christ was the creator of the world, yet when He came into the world, it did not receive Him. "He came unto His own, but His own received Him not." As creator of the world it belonged to Him, yet this relationship was not acknowledged when Christ came. But all did not reject Him, and "as many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God." It paid to accept Christ. It still pays to accept Him. It pays for time and for eternity, for "godliness is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life that now is and of that which is to come."

3. Christ's work as the light of the world. "In Him was life, and the life was the light of men." "That was the true light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world." The world was spiritually dead when Christ came into it, and He became its life by dispelling the darkness and thus becoming its light. As the light of the world Christ scattered the darkness of the world concerning God, sin, salvation and the future life. He was the true light, in that He was opposed to all false lights, that He was distinct from the imperfect lights and that He Himself was the only true light of the world.

Christian Endeavor In Spain.

The meetings of the Christian Endeavor society in Santander, Spain, held on Sunday evenings, are attended by an average of 30 persons. The exercises consist of Bible study, prayer, hymns, recitations of portions of the Scripture and exhortations. Although it is with us in a somewhat rudimentary and imperfect form, yet the society is of the greatest utility in our missionary work.

Through its influence we are able to retain under the influence of the gospel the young people who have ceased to attend our day school and Sunday school because they are learning a trade.

But the greatest benefit that I note as a result of the Christian Endeavor society is the attendance of young people upon the midweek meetings. The young people not only go themselves, but they endeavor to bring other members of their families with them, so we see at present, what before was unknown to us, the prayers of the young mingling with those of the old in our Tuesday night meetings.—Golden Rule.

To Banish Church Gossip.

If you would quickly and certainly drive out evil speaking and hatefulness of heart from church members, set them to thinking about Christ. Talk about Him in the prayer meeting, not as a far-off God, but as a real, living, human personality. Converse about His sorrows, His forbearance, His love. Study more about Him in the Bible, and then tell others of the treasures you have unearthed. When the pastor preaches helpfully, talk one with another about how he has shown forth the mind of Christ. Seek out the good deeds about you and speak of them as done in the name of the Redeemer. Find in the beautiful lives that you daily meet likenesses to the life of Christ.—William T. Ellis.

God's Goodness and Mercy.

There is dew in one flower and not in another because one opens its cup and takes it in, while the other closes itself and the drops run off. So God rains goodness and mercy as wide as the dew, and if we lack them it is because we will not open our hearts to receive them.—Reformed Church Messenger.

Ignoring Evil.

It is the tendency of men of pure lives, optimistic nature and kindly sentiment to ignore the reality of moral evil. We are inclined to think that all men are good or want to be good, or at most that sin is only a disease to be pitied and cured. It is not true.—Lyman Abbott.

The Better For It.

No man or woman of the humblest sort can really be strong, pure and good without the world being the better for it, without somebody being helped and comforted by the very existence of this goodness.—Phillips Brooks.

Abide With Me.

Abide with me; fast falls the eventide;
The darkness deepens; Lord, with me abide.
When other helpers fail and comforts flee,
Help of the helpless, oh, abide with me.

Not a brief glance I beg, a passing word,
But as Thou dwell'st with thy disciples, Lord,
Familiar, condescending, patient, free,
Come, not to sojourn, but abide with me.

I need Thy presence every passing hour;
What but Thy grace can foil the tempter's power?
Who like Thyself my guide and stay can be?
Through cloud and sunshine, oh, abide with me!

—Rev. Henry Francis Lyte.

A single sailor, converted early this year by the Floating Christian Endeavor work of the San Francisco societies, sailed for Tacoma on the British ship Glencona, and on the way, in spite of bitter opposition, won seven souls for his Master.

"Several of the Methodist societies are reorganizing as Epworth Leagues of Christian Endeavor. Down in these sea provinces (Nova Scotia) we have excellent fraternity, as is becoming, among the denominations. The Methodist pastors, as a rule, have no fear of their flocks losing their individuality." Thus speaks The Endeavor Herald.

THE FADS OF WOMEN.

WHAT THEY TELL OF THE STAGES OF ADVANCEMENT.

The Constructive Fad, Which Began With Primitive Times—Then Came the Era of the Collectors—What the Club Has Done and Will Do.

Webster defines a fad as a trifling pursuit. I don't think it is. The people whom I know to have fads are no triflers. In my observation they work harder than anybody. In contemplation of the fads of women I can reckon their advancement. The scope of women's fads extends over three standards, each one higher than the other, and broader. They may be classified as making, owning and doing.

The constructive fad began with primitive times, and the sentiment embodied decorative art. The aim was decorative, the result not always decorative. In early pioneer days, when life was very real and thoroughly earnest, when our ancestors endured all sorts of privation for the sake of principle; when their natures were stoical and uncompromising on account of it, there was very little attempt at home decorative art. Cleanliness was paramount, and the atmosphere of godliness pervaded everything. The weaknesses of human nature were held in subjection, and the soul of the housekeeper was not more spotless than the sand scoured floor, nor more shining than the polished andirons. "Waste not, want not," was in the religion of the time; that was before the day of fads, and thrift was blessed with prosperity. Spinning and weaving formed the recreation of that period and knitting and patchwork filled in odd moments and children worked the samples. Then women braided carpet and sewed carpet rags and attempts at home decoration were visible. This was the dawn of the constructive age, the age of making things.

Away back in my memory I recall the marvelous hanging baskets constructed from cones and acorns and varnish and glue, and filled with the artificial flowers gathered from the bandboxes of the family, and then suspended from the center of the ceiling of the best room. I recall the clove apple that hung from the corner of the triangular bazaar known as the whatnot. Then she made wire paper holders of discarded crinoline, and she made picture frames out of everything, from thread to birds' eggs, and later she made wax flowers and hair flowers, and she hung the walls with mournful reminders of the dear departed. She did the "Old Oaken Bucket," and "The Old Armchair" and "Welcome" and "Home, Sweet Home," in worsted and cardboard. After that she made tidies and pillowshams and later macreme and rickrack and darned, knit and did tatting and crochet edging and finally crazy patchwork set in. Crazy patchwork was the straw that broke the backbone of home decorative art.

We almost ceased from making things for a time.

Then we began to collect things. This craze for owning things set in with the advent of the china peddler, when we traded off old clothing for china dogs and then regretted it later. Since then we have collected a good many things. The memory of my button string even yet gives me a pleasurable thrill, and the china cup marked "Friendship's Token" and "Remember Me" in beautiful golden letters was the harbinger of the bric-a-brac craze. We have done up the fad of collecting and owning things pretty thoroughly. We hung the walls with curious and questionable utensils, with sentiments and bows of ribbon to decorate them, and we gathered up pitchers and pipes and butterflies and shells and bugs and fans, and later on we were snowed under by photgraphs, and the more ambitious of us aspired to autographs, and when I refer to postage stamps I am sure of sympathizers who have suffered, of sufferers who can sympathize. No one can have associated with a philatelist without having known intolerance and sorrow.

But the age of owning things was broader than the age of making things, and it formed an excellent introduction to this fin de siecle time for doing. The collecting age was a promoter of thought, and a great deal of sentiment was embodied in it. The old spinning wheel and the grandfather's clock were resurrected for the sake of sentiment and atmosphere, but even they proved to be rattles and straws. Our fads nowadays are characterized by activity and a broad minded vision, by ideas and executive ability. Everything tends toward the development of feminine individuality. Clubs and bicycles and physical culture and reform in everything from diet and dress to education and the franchise. The fin de siecle fads in which women interest themselves are all characterized by a wholesome desire to benefit humanity and a disposition to not only extend the horizon of the home, but also to infuse home sentiment into the atmosphere of the great world on the outside.

The tendency to outlive some of the home fads is one of the most hopeful signs of the times. We women grow to be very weary by reason of our little household fads—servants, for instance, and babies and bargains and white sewing. We get along just as well and the world enjoys us more since we rose above the trials that encompassed us, or at least assumed to, through ignoring them as a topic of conversation.

Club life helped to lift us out of the domestic slough, and I hold that the club fad has done more to develop women than anything that has ever come into our lives. We have carried our knowledge of organization and parliamentary ruling right into domestic life, and it has been a help in solving some of the problems. It has given us some idea of proportion and of relative values. It has holped to lift us out of the rut our grandmothers trod in to an eminence from which we could look over the heads of conservative notions and formulate a system of our own. It has encouraged us to modernize methods, and through philosophy and domestic economy we minimize effort and preserve nerve force. The club has helped us in all lines of work; in our charities, and in professions and in business life. It has done more to enlarge our sympathies than anything that has come our way, and it has opened our eyes to the world's need of the feminine element in municipal and national government. Already we have a finger in the educational pie, and the home broom has been wielded in the interest of city sanitation. Later on, when enfranchisement falls to woman, it will be the club that has prepared her for the exercise of her right as a citizen.—Haryot Holt Cahoon in New York Recorder.

Unoccupied rooms frequently have an unpleasantly close and musty smell. To remedy this, after washing the boards, brush into them with an old broom a hot strong solution of chloride of lime.

THE PERILS OF OPIUM

NO MIDDLE GROUND IN THE USE OF THIS INSIDIOUS DRUG.

Darker Races Less Affected Than People With White Skins—Growth of the Habit In the United States—Many Victims Acquire the Taste Through Medicine.

Men from time immemorial have always sought to defend their own transgressions, and this is a peculiar feature of the opium habit. Those who were deepest steeped in the drug would not be likely to appear as witnesses at all, and the statement of any opium habitue, whether Indian, Chinaman or American, should be accepted with many grains of salt. However, as first stated, opium does not affect the dark races nearly so disastrously as the white races. It is by no means anomalous because we find that, while natives of hot countries may drink coffee in large quantities without injury, those of the colder climates are frequently most hurtfully affected by the imbibition. Again, tea may be drank freely by northern people, while in the tropics it must be partaken of gingerly. The readiness with which North American Indians fall into alcoholic inebriety and the resistance which American negroes offer to the same potable are noteworthy facts. Cocoa, the stimulant of South American Indians, is not nearly so deleterious in the altitudes in which it is used as it has been found to be in this country. So with opium. The dark races —the Chinese, Hindoos, Africans, Malays, etc.—almost without exception, may resort to the drug with a freedom that a white man can never dare assume.

Within the past 20 years the importation of opium, exclusive of that which is prepared for smoking purposes, has increased upward of sevenfold in the United States, more than 800,000 pounds having been brought here during the last fiscal year. Two million Americans have the habit, and in all cases among people of the United States this habit is pernicious in its effects—soul and body destroying.

There is no condition more pitiable and pitiful than that of a white man in the gyves of opium. It dwarfs the moral nature, making a liar and a deceiver of the habitue. It injuriously affects the physical man in all his parts. It produces insanity and leads to death. The habit is deadening in its effects upon the white man, and it were better for one that he had never been born or that he should tie a stone about his neck and jump into the sea than that he should once come within the power of the opium tyrant.

It is not strange that opium should affect the semicivilized and barbarian less than the enlightened man for the reason that the demands made upon the nervous forces of the former are much less than with the latter. In this country the habit is rarely found among muscle workers or others whose lives call for moderate exercise or brain or nervous energy. Opium is an intellectual drug. It seeks its victims among the thinkers and intelligent actors of higher civilization. Where it takes lodgment in others, it is a physiological fact that its tenure is much less secure than in the former case.

The fact that medical science knows no other remedy for certain forms of pain and disease; the fact that opium does give rest, in single doses, to him who suffers from nervous exhaustion or waste of forces—in this lies the constant menace of the opiate. That the physicians of this country recognize the imminent danger of the drug is shown in the fact that it would be next to impossible to find one of the profession who will admit that he has ever fastened the habit upon a patient. In other words, the medical profession of the United States unitedly urges the greatest possible caution in its use and as far as possible the withholding of knowledge of the fact of its administration from the sick person.

Opium has its merits in the hands of the skillful and experienced practitioner, and because this is so it is likely to retain its place in the pharmacopœia, but it should never be taken except as the physician prescribes it. This safeguard even does not avail, since reliable statistics show that at least 75 per cent of the opium habitues of the United States had the habit fastened upon them by their family physician. Safety with the white man, so far as opium is concerned, lies in keeping away from it altogether.—William Rosser Cobbe in Banner of Gold.

Winebibbers of France.

Statistics disclose the fact that the actual consumption of alcohol in wine drinking France has more than tripled in the last 40 years. The use of "harmless" beverages containing but a small percentage of alcohol has created among the French an appetite for absinthe and other toxic drugs. Indeed, a leading physician ventures to say "without fear of being accused of exaggeration that this kind of intoxication is as common today among women as among men." And this seems to be one of the most marked results of the general use of native wines—it leads women as well as men to excess.—Union Signal.

Effect of the Gothenburg System.

J. Malins, grand chief templar of England, and others of authoritative standing find that the aggregate quantity of alcohol consumed in Gothenburg now is about the same as before the "system" came into operation, and the enormously increased consumption of beer, which has been popularly called "temperance drink" in Sweden and is not under the control of the "bolag" or company, accounts for this fact and for the other fact that drunkenness is constantly increasing.—New York Voice.

BEWARE OF TOXIC DRUGS.

Many an Inebriate Acquired the Taste In the Nursery.

Here is a rule that every man and woman should inflexibly adopt for guidance: Never under any circumstances take opium or any other toxic drug unless prescribed by an intelligent physician, says William Rosser Cobbe.

There are mothers present, and I wish to utter to them a special note of warning. The love they bear their children leads them to exaggeration of the ailments of the little ones, and they are too prone to resort to medicine for their benefit. It is this practice that is responsible for the receptivity of young men for drugs and alcohol. As I have said, these remedial agents reek with narcotics, and all of them contain alcohol. Soothing sirups, cordials, drops, etc., are the infinite curse of childhood. The mother would be much kinder to her child if she were to smother it with a pillow than to give it these noxious drugs. The cells of the human body readily adjust themselves to any condition, and when filled with opiates in childhood they are ready enough to take them or whisky, any sort of a toxic, because they all affect the cells measurably the same, when they reach young manhood. Knowledge of a fact remains. The bodily cells have a persistent memory. They have the faculty of acquiring a taste for anything. Once they have learned to like opium they never forget the fact. The child who has been given opium is far more likely to acquire this habit and certainly can acquire it infinitely more readily when he is grown up than will one who has no acquaintance with the drug.

Mothers, learn this fact, and bear it always in mind. Do not go to the sin of the father for the inebriety of your sons. Drunken fathers do not produce drunken sons. If a man is a drunkard or opium habitue, inquire what kind of medicines were given him as a child. It is in the nursery too frequently and not in the saloon that drunkards are made.

Woman's Work For Temperance.

There is abundant evidence of the effective service of women in the cause of temperance. It is hardly too much to say that in the last 20 years, the period of its greatest advancement, they have done more for it than has been done by men. In a sense, they have made it the cause of their sex, and thus have provided themselves with a public mission. They have fought the evils of the liquor traffic with remarkable vigor, perseverance and self reliance.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

SABBATH SCHOOL.

LESSON VIII, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, AUG. 25.

Text of the Lesson, Joshua iii, 5-17—Memory Verse, 17—Golden Text, Isa. xliii, 2—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

5. "And Joshua said unto the people, Sanctify yourselves, for tomorrow the Lord will do wonders among you." Moses died, and his body was buried. Joshua succeeded him, and having led the people to the river Jordan they are now about to pass over into the heart of the land of promise, but how? for it was harvest time, and Jordan overflowed his banks (verse 15). When the Lord leads His people into a difficulty, it is that He may show His power and be glorified in them. The one thing for the people is to sanctify themselves, or put away every semblance of evil, as on the night when they came out of Egypt they put away all leaven out of their houses.

6. "Take up the ark of the covenant and pass over before the people." The ark is mentioned ten times in this chapter. It was the symbol of His presence, and His presence was everything. Instead of journeying in the midst of them, as ordinarily, it now went ahead of them, and there was to be about half a mile between it and them, that they might know the way to go, for "they had not passed this way heretofore" (verse 4). We must take care to follow Jesus closely and fully, for it may truly be said of each day, "Ye have not passed this way heretofore."

7. "That all Israel may know that as I was with Moses so I will be with thee." Therefore He would magnify Joshua and He did (chapter iv, 14), and Joshua, was honored because of God with him. It was God that was magnified, but Joshua was the chosen earthen vessel. The same thing was seen in Gal. i, 16, 24, when in Paul Christ was revealed, and God was glorified. Paul's ambition was that Christ should be magnified in His body whether by life or by death (Phil. i, 20).

8. "Stand still in Jordan." The priests bearing the ark were to step into the water ere it would divide (verses 13, 15), not as at the Red sea when the waters divided ere the people came close to them. He guides us often one step at a time, and we must take one step ere we see the next one, and sometimes we must step right into the waters. "When thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee."

9. "Come hither, and hear the words of the Lord your God." This is the great and fundamental thing—to hear what God has spoken. Whatever mouth or hand the Lord may use, it is God Himself who speaks and works. It was so in Christ (John xiv, 10); it was so in the prophets (Heb. i, 1, 2; II Pet. i, 21); it will be so still in every vessel that is wholly His (Math. x, 20; Phil. ii, 13).

10. "The living God is among you, and He will without fail drive out from before you the Canaanites," etc. All other nations worshiped idols, the works of men's hands, but the peculiarity of Israel was that their Lord was the true God, the living God, the King of eternity (Jer. x, 10). The dividing of Jordan and every other mighty work of God in Israel was that Israel first and then all the people of the earth might know the hand of the Lord, that it is mighty, and fear the Lord God forever (chapter iv, 24).

11. "Behold the ark of the covenant of the Lord of all the earth passeth over before you into Jordan." I think this is the first time that in connection with the ark the Lord is called "the Lord of all the earth." But He is frequently called by this name as we go on in the book (Ps. lxxvii, 5; Isa. liv, 5; Mic. iv, 13; Zech. iv, 14; vi, 5). In Gen. xiv, 19, 22, He is the "Most High God, possessor of heaven and earth." His purposes of grace are worldwide, and they are worldwide in connection with Israel, for see Isa. xxvii, 6; Num. xiv, 20, 21.

12. "Now, therefore, take you 12 men out of the tribes of Israel, out of every tribe a man." The story of these 12 men is found in the first nine verses of the next chapter. Their commission was to take each man a stone out of the midst of Jordan and set them up in the first resting place in the land. This they did at Gilgal, and Joshua also set up 12 stones in the midst of Jordan, where the feet of the priests stood (chapter iv, 9, 20). The 12 under the waters of Jordan and the 12 at Gilgal are very suggestive of our union with Christ in death and resurrection. Old things passed away; all things become new (II Cor. v, 17).

13. "It shall come to pass." This verse gives the promise and assurance. The next three give the fulfillment. To make the promise as real as possible we must imagine ourselves on the margin of a rushing river in the time of a freshet, and as we gaze upon the mighty waters one among us says that as soon as the feet of certain men, duly appointed, shall touch the waters the river will divide, the upper waters piling up in a heap and the rest flowing away, leaving the bed of the river dry. Could you believe a word like that?

14-16. "And it came to pass." What God says is as good as done, for "the Lord of Hosts hath sworn, saying, Surely as I have thought, so shall it come to pass, and as I have purposed, so shall it stand" (Isa. xiv, 24). And see Jer. xxxii, 17, in reference to nothing being too hard or wonderful for the Lord. It came to pass exactly as the Lord said it would, and the people passed over right against Jericho. The people of Jericho had heard how the Lord had divided the Red sea for Israel (chapter ii, 10), but now they saw for themselves the mighty power of the God of Jacob. Yet Rahab and her house were the only ones who profited by the lesson. Some people talk about the laws of nature as if God bound Himself always to be subject to and work only under control of these laws. But by what law will a river cease to flow and pile its waters up in a heap and stay so for a time? Instead of laws let us consider Him who controls and is superior to all laws; who does as He pleases in heaven, earth and sea (Ps. cxxxv, 6), and has perfect control of fire, air, earth and sea. Say Lord control me, too, for Thy glory.

17. "The priests that bear the ark of the covenant of the Lord stood firm on dry ground in the midst of Jordan." They did this until all were clean passed over, and everything was finished that the Lord had said (iv, 10, 11). Even if they marched a hundred abreast there would be over five miles of them to pass over, and even though they hasted (iv, 10) it would take many hours. Observe the words, "Until everything was finished," and compare the double, "Not one thing hath failed," of chapter xxiii, 14. Our High Priest will finish all that concerns us, and not one thing can fail of all that He has spoken. Jordan was twice divided after this (II Kings ii, 8, 14), and the Lord did for two men, and for one man, what He had done for a nation. Be not afraid. Only believe.

DEATH OF A JURIST.

JUSTICE JACKSON OF THE NATIONAL SUPREME COURT.

He Succumbs to the Destroyer Consumption in His Sixty-Fourth Year—Last Official Service the Hearing of the Income Tax Cases.

NASHVILLE, Aug. 9.—Hon. Howell Edmunds Jackson, associate justice of the supreme court of the United States, died at his residence at West Meade, six miles west of this city at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon in the 64th year of his age, of consumption. Judge Jackson had been in failing health for the past four years, but it had been only in the past eight or nine months that the progress of the disease began to cause his family and friends uneasiness. Last year he went on a lengthy trip to the far west in search of health. Later he went to Thomasville, Ga., where it was hoped the mild and yet bracing climate would restore his one time vigorous constitution. The trip did him little good, and after a time he was brought home. At his old home Judge Jackson seemed to improve slightly until he went to Washington to sit in the second hearing of the income tax cases.

HOWELL E. JACKSON.

Returned to His Home to Die.

He stood that trying trip only fairly well, and after his return home appeared to lose strength rapidly. Nevertheless Judge Jackson never took to his bed until July 31. Since that time his family and friends realized that the end was near, and his death was not unexpected. Judge Jackson was twice married, the first time to Miss Sophia Malloy, daughter of David B. Malloy, a banker of Memphis, who died in 1873. To this union were born four children, as follows: Henry, Mary, William H. and Howell Jackson. Henry Jackson is at present soliciting freight agent of the Southern railway, with headquarters at Atlanta. W. H. Jackson is district attorney of the Chesapeake and Ohio railway at Cincinnati. Howell E. Jackson is manager of the Jackson Cotton mills, at Jackson, Tenn. In 1876 Judge Jackson married Miss Mary E. Harding, daughter of General William G. Harding.

Causes General Sorrow at Nashville.

Of this union three children survive—Misses Elizabeth and Louise Jackson, and Harding A. Jackson. With the exception of Miss Elizabeth Jackson and William H. Jackson, Jr., who are in Europe, the children were at the bedside when the distinguished sufferer passed away. The news of Judge Jackson's death caused general sorrow in this city, where he was so well known and admired. The arrangements for the funeral have not been fully completed, but it is known that it will take place next Sunday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock.

CAME DOWN WITH A CRASH.

Eight-Story Building at Gotham in Which Eighty-Two Men Were at Work.

NEW YORK, Aug. 9.—Eighty-two men were at work on an eight-story building near the corner of West Third street and South Fifth avenue when the whole building tumbled to ruins. It seems a miracle, but of all these men but two were killed. Six others were badly hurt and at this writing ten are missing.

NEW YORK, Aug. 10.—The list of the victims of the collapse of the building at West Broadway and Third streets is growing. Three more dead have been found—Michael Flynn, Michael O'Hare and Michael Savage. There are nine more men missing, but work in cleaning away the debris is very slow.

NEW YORK, Aug. 12.—Four more bodies have been recovered from the ruins of the collapsed building at Third street and West Broadway, swelling the list of known victims of Thursday's disaster to eleven. The latest victims discovered were: James Grosso, John McGuire, Edward Hauley, and an unknown. All were workmen. All day a large gang of workmen was overhauling the ruins, but they worked with the greatest difficulty.

Besides the narrow space between the walls in which was crowded the tons of plaster and twisted iron the lime dust that arose with each pickfall all but blinded them. There was a disagreeable odor, too, and officials of the board of health were kept busy sprinkling the ruins with carbolic acid. Several other men are yet missing and probably dead.

LATER.—Two more bodies—both unrecognizable—have been found in the ruins. This makes thirteen. Seven are on the list of missing and are doubtless dead, which makes the total death roll twenty.

Ocean Vessels in Collision.

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 9.—The British ship Prince Oscar, from Liverpool, Captain Henderson, collided in mid-ocean on July 13 with an unknown sailing vessel. Both ships sank in less than ten minutes. Six members of the crew of the Prince Oscar and all on board the unknown vessel were lost. The survivors, seventeen in number, were rescued by the ship Dharwar after being confined in an open boat with neither food nor water for three days. They were transferred to the British steamship Capac, from Pisaqua, and brought to this port last night.

Lexington Women Nominated.

LEXINGTON, Ky., Aug. 9.—The ladies of Lexington met in massmeeting and nominated four candidates, one from each ward of the city, for the board of education, to be elected at the November election. This is the first time women have been given a right to vote in Kentucky, but their suffrage is restricted to voting for members of the board of education. The meeting was harmonious. It was presided over by Miss Laura Clay, daughter of the ex-minister to Russia, Cassius M. Clay.

One Politician Kills Another.

JACKSON, Miss., 10.—Hon. T. Dabney Marshall of Vicksburg, a member of the state legislature and nominee for state senator, shot and killed Mr. Dinkins, a politician. The shooting occurred at Brandon, fifteen miles from here. Marshall claims that Dinkins had vilely slandered him.

MRS. GARDINER AT CHICAGO.

Her Husband Will Consult a Specialist Concerning Her Health.

CHICAGO, Aug. 10.—Mrs. Annie M. Gardiner, the young woman who disappeared so mysteriously while a delegate to the Boston Christian Endeavor convention, is at the Palmer House in a state of hysteria and is closely watched by a corps of attendants.

Mrs. Gardiner arrived in Chicago in the care of J. W. Landers, who was sent east by her husband to make search for her. She was found at Norwich Green, Conn., where a great deal of persuasion was necessary to induce her to return home. Mrs. Gardiner was met at the station here by her husband, who expects to remain in Chicago a short time to consult a specialist in regard to his wife's health before proceeding to their home in Arcadia, Neb.

Illinois Corn Crop To Be Great.

SPRINGFIELD, Aug. 10.—Reports received by the state department of agriculture confirm the reports heard the past few weeks as to the condition of the growing corn crop, and the prospect now is for one of the largest and finest crops ever raised in the state.

Horrible Method of Suicide.

ZANESVILLE, O., Aug. 10.—Jacob Gigax, a prominent and wealthy citizen of this city committed suicide in a horrible manner. He went to the Cincinnati and Muskinum railroad depot, where he got down on his hands and knees and placed his neck across the rail in front of a rapidly approaching train and was decapitated in the presence of many people. Mr. Gigax was a retired banker and had suffered from poor health for a long time.

Fatal Collision on an "L" Road.

CHICAGO, Aug. 10.—One man has died and another will probably die as the result of a collision on the Metropolitan "L" road at Laflin street. The victims are: Joseph Driscow of 278 North Troy street; died in the Presbyterian hospital; Charles Strausberg of 300 North Troy street, will probably die in Presbyterian hospital. Driscow's pelvic bone was fractured, and his head was cut in three places.

Jockey Killed While Exercising.

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 7.—Jockey Sabine was thrown and killed at the fair grounds while exercising Livingston, a horse belonging to J. D. Patton.

MISS FLAGG'S
LATEST NEW BOOK!
"A Prisoner of Hope."
COMPLETE IN ONE LARGE HANDSOME VOLUME.
Price, $1.25.
We heartily commend this new work, by Elizabeth E. Flagg, to all our friends. The narrative originated in her personal experience, two or three years ago, when she sought relief and restoration from the results of a painful accident, In that search she availed herself of a unique healer in New Jersey, whom she graphically described, at that time, in her weekly letters to this paper. The ideas created in her mind by that experience form the basis of this well-told story, and thoughtful readers will peruse it with interest. While all may not agree with its deductions, ministers of the Gospel, students in seminaries and intelligent home circles will find it pleasant food for thought. We sell it for $1.25 per copy postage prepaid.

ILLINOIS PICKINGS.

NEWS NOTES OF INTEREST FROM HERE AND THERE.

Reports by Telegraph of Important Happenings in Our Own State During the Past Few Days—News of Interest to the People of Illinois.

MASCOUTAH, Ills., Aug. 12.—The alleged confession of Mrs. Mattie England revives interest in one of the most noted murder cases in the history of southern Illinois. Mrs. England was one of the chief witnesses against ex Policeman Gustave Menkhausen, and largely on her testimony Menkhausen was sentenced to hang for the murder of his wife. The evidence against Menkhausen was very strong, but was purely circumstantial, and Governor Altgeld commuted his sento life imprisonment. The England woman now avers that she swore falsely at the bidding of a rival lover, who wanted Menkhausen out of the way, and upon the strength of her alleged confession a pardon will be asked for the ex-policeman.

In October, 1893, Menkhausen's wife died suddenly one night after drinking a bottle of beer at supper. The beer had been bought and opened by Menkhausen, who didn't drink any of it himself or give the children any of it. Menkhausen was found after the woman's death at a disreputable resort and was arrested charged with her murder. The feeling against Menkhausen was very bitter and he was sentenced to hang, but, as before stated, his sentence was commuted to a life term in the penitentiary.

CROP PROSPECTS IN ILLINOIS.

Threshing Shows a Light Yield of Wheat —Corn Is Booming.

CHICAGO, Aug. 7.—The state weather-crop bulletin has the following: Threshing has been general throughout the state, the yield in most cases being light and of inferior quality. Some wheat which stood in the shock during the rains was damaged by sprouting, and many oats were colored by the rains. The outlook is good for a yield of corn far beyond the ordinary, especially in the northern and central sections of the state. It has made rapid growth, and is now in the roasting ear stage, and only an early frost can prevent a large crop.

Cinch bugs are reported as doing some damage in central and southern sections, but it is slight. A light crop of early potatoes has been marketed, but late potatoes are in good condition and will yield well. The yield of fruit in the central and southern section will be large, and much is now being shipped or used by the evaporators.

NEW ELECTRIC RAILWAY.

Articles Filed with the Secretary of State of Illinois.

SPRINGFIELD, Ills., Aug. 8.—Articles have been filed with the secretary of state for the incorporation of the Danville and Northwestern Electric Railway company to construct a railroad from Danville, Vermillion county, through Potomac, Vermillion county, thence through Rankin, Vermillion county, to Gillman, Iroquois county, with a branch line from Potomao to Paxton, Ford county; also another branch from Danville to Fairmount, thence to Sidell, Vermillion county, thence to Georgetown, thence to Danville. The location of the principal office will be maintained at Danville. The capital stock is $100,000. The incorporators are: William T. Cunningham, John W. Dale, William P. Chandler, W. S. Mathies, and Robert Holmes, all of Danville; J. W. Layne and J. K. Butz of Potomao, Illinois; W. W. Hatch, New York.

Bills Approved by Governor Altgeld.

SPRINGFIELD, Ills., Aug. 6.—Governor Altgeld has signed the following bills passed by the special session: House bill creating state board arbitration, senate bill increasing tax levy of state $500,000 per annum for the ensuing two years, senate bill appropriating $5,000 for payment of employes of the special session, senate joint resolution requesting United States Senators Cullom and Palmer to urge congress to improvement of various harbors at Chicago.

Reduced Rates to Chattanooga.

CHATTANOOGA, Aug. 10.—Colonel. J. H. Shaler, chairman of the committee on transportation of the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park dedication, furnishes the following in regard to the reduced railway rates from all points: The rates from Chicago, St. Louis, St. Paul and all points in the northwest will be 1 cent a mile. The rates from all points south of the Ohio river will also be 1 cent per mile, and the rates on the eastern lines leading out of New York, Boston, Philadelphia and Baltimore will be one and one-third fare for the round trip to points where they connect with northwestern and southwestern lines.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 8.—The comptroller of the currency has authorized the First National bank of New London, Wis., to begin business with a capital of $50,000.

HORR AND HARVEY SUMMARIZE.

Few New Points Brought Out by the Two Eminent Debaters.

CHICAGO, Aug. 7.—In accordance with the agreement Horr and Harvey, the silver debaters, have prepared each a summary of his own points and what he claimed to have proved, as the closing act of the discussion. The summaries are in substance reiterations of what they said in the debate. Horr calls Harvey's attention to the fact that although gold and silver are free to the mints of Mexico, silver does not increase in value there.

If the restoration of silver to free coinage would bring it to parity with gold prices would not increase, Horr says. Harvey claimed that he had proved that the act of 1873 was a fraud and said that the supreme court would have declared it unconstitutional at that time. He gave a number of items of indebtedness to back up his assertion that the domestic debts of the United States aggregated $40,000,000,000, and closed by declaring that this is an era of selfishness and that a crisis would come sooner or later.

IOWA DEMOCRATS.

They Nominate Babb and Declare for "Sound Money."

MARSHALLTOWN, Ia., Aug. 8.—One of the most notable state conventions in the history of the Iowa Democracy closed in this city last evening.

There were 1,079 delegates present, every county in the state being fully represented. The opening prayer was by Rev. Father Linehan, a Roman Catholic priest of this city, and an address of welcome was made by Mayor Pirce, who is a Republican, but who obtained applause by saying that the Democratic party was greater than any one sentiment in the party. Judge French, of Davenport, was temporary chairman and made a long speech, in which he gave most prominence to the prohibition question and held that prohibition must go. On the financial question he favored bimetallism, but only at a ratio to be determined by an international agreement. After temporary organization a recess was taken and on reassembling ex-Senator Shields, of Dubuque, was made permanent chairman.

The nomination of a state ticket was the first matter to come up when the organization was completed, and it resulted as follows: For governor, Judge W. I. Babb, of Mt. Pleasant; lieutenant governor, ex-Lieut.-Gov. Bestow, of Chariton; superintendent of public instruction, Lyman B. Parshall, of Maquokta; railroad commissioner, Colonel George James, of Dubuque; supreme judge, Senator Thomas G. Harper, of Des Moines. Judge Babb made a brief speech of acceptance, in which he said that the differences existing in the party were in regard to details rather than to great principles. All present were honestly bimetallists at heart.

It is understood that Bestow will not accept the lieutenant governorship nomination. He is a strong free coinage man, and says he cannot consistently run on so strong a "sound money" platform.

The platform has this to say on the silver question: We reaffirm the following portion of the seventh plank of the nation Democratic convention: 'We hold to the use of both gold and silver as the standard money of the country, and to the coinage of both gold and silver, without discrimination against either metal or charge for mintage; but the dollar unit of coinage of both metals must be of equal intrinsic and exchangeable value, or be adjusted by international agreement, or by such safeguards of legislation as shall insure the maintenance of the parity of the two metals, and the equal power of every dollar at all times in the market and payment of debts; and we demand that the paper currency shall be kept at par with and redeemable in such coin.'

The minority report was an out-and-out free-coinage-at-16-to-1 plank, "without any frills." On other points the platform endorses the tariff legislation of the last congress; favors the popular election of United States senators; favors just and liberal pensions to veterans of the civil war; opposes trusts and monopolies; demands non-partisan control of state institutions, and denounces the mulct law, declaring it unfair, hard on property owners, and that it compromises the honor of the state in declaring the sale of liquors a crime and condoning the crime for a money consideration; demands a local option high license law and a law permitting the manufacture of liquors in the state.

The new state central committee was chosen as follows: First district, George S. Smith, Vanderburg; second, C. S. Ranck, Johnson; Third, Robert O'Day, Bremer; Fourth, John Foley, New Hampton; Fifth, M. R. Jackson, Cedar; Sixth, C. A. Walsh, Wapello; Seventh, Henry Reigelman, Polk; Eighth, Ed Curry, Leon; Ninth, John E. McGuire, Audubon; Tenth, J. McCarthy, Greene; Eleventh, T. D. Higgs, Buena Vista.

Shot at the Altar.

DALLAS, Tex., Aug. 12.—C. McNorton, a mullato coachman, shot Sadie Johnson at the altar. As the preacher was about to pronounce them man and wife she backed out. McNorton exclaimed: "Death or marriage." She turned to flee and he shot her in the back. She is dying. McNorton is in jail.

Safe Blowers Fire a Building.

ST. JOSEPH, Mo., Aug. 9.—Burglars at Amzonia blew open the safe in the post-office with dynamite and set fire to the building, which was badly damaged before the flames could be extinguished. The robbers got nothing, as the postmaster kept the money and stamps at his home.

FARM AND GARDEN

PESTS IN THE GARDEN.

That Intolerable Nuisance, the Mole—How to Circumvent Snails and Slugs.

While it is true that the mole lives mostly if not entirely on insect food, and that in theory he is the garden's friend by destroying great numbers of grubs and worms, gardeners commonly and justly regard this burrowing animal as a great pest and intolerable nuisance. On the lawn, in the hotbed, in the sandy or mucky soil of the garden, or wherever the mole makes its appearance, it is a most unwelcome and often a very destructive visitor. No matter how many insects it may devour, we want to get rid of it. Good mole traps have heretofore been held at a rather high figure, say $2 or so, but that practical horticulturist and writer, T. Greiner, does not think it is necessary to buy a trap. In fact, he tells in a letter to American Cultivator how to make a very good one on the "figure 4" principle. He says:

This "figure 4" trap may be varied in size and form and perhaps in some minor features. The illustration shows a good way how to set and arrange it. The board or plank may be 3 or 4 feet long and 10 or 12 inches wide. Sharpened spikes are driven through the board in a row, on each side of where the trigger will rest on the ground over the mole run. The lower end of the plank is held in place by a pin driven into the ground through a hole in the plank. The other end is weighted with a stone, and little stakes driven in the ground on each side prevent the plank from going off to one side when falling. In setting the trap select any level spot over the mole run. Press the foot down on the ground where raised by the mole, and then place the trap so that the trigger will rest on the depressed spot, and the spikes, when the plank falls, will be pushed down across the mole run on each side of the trigger. Here you have a trap that any one with the least bit of mechanical ingenuity can make, and you will be pretty sure to catch the mole if you set the trap properly and persistently.

In some sections snails and slugs give considerable trouble. The foliage of early peas and other plants will be eaten from the ground up. Salt is the sovereign remedy for them, but lime is just as effective, and so are wood ashes and kainit and muriate of potash, according to the authority quoted. Fill up your knapsack sprayer with salt water or with lime water, and then go to the patch where the slugs are at work, usually just at or after dusk, and give the plants a good spraying. That treatment will kill every slug touched by the spray. In the morning only grease spots are left of them.

Chinch Bug Infection.

In a paper read before the board of agriculture of Kansas Chancellor Snow of the University of Kansas reports his work during the season of 1894. It will be remembered that to him is ascribed the credit of first introducing fungous diseases for the destruction of the chinch bug. Eight thousand packages of the infection were sent out direct to individual farmers in Kansas, Missouri and Oklahoma. In addition 44 auxiliary distributing stations were established in as many different counties in Kansas and Missouri, from which it is estimated that upward of 13,000 farmers were supplied. From the reports received it would appear that in about 60 per cent of the cases where infection was used it proved successful. The season was very much against the successful use of the fungus, however, because of the extreme drought, moisture being one of the conditions necessary to the rapid propagation of fungous growth, either upon vegetation or upon insects.

It is worthy of note that in the south third of Kansas, where in 1893 the chinch bug was particularly destructive and where a vast number of packages of the infection were sent during that season, the pest scarcely appeared in 1894. In 1894, for the first time since the work began, the chinch bug appeared plentifully in the immediate vicinity of Lawrence, where the university is located, thus giving an opportunity to do extensive field work under precisely the same conditions as those found on the farm. The work is fully described in the report made and was gratifyingly successful.

Strength of the Bordeaux Mixture.

Professor Bailey of the Cornell station uses about 40 gallons of water to every six pounds of copper sulphate and four pounds of quicklime in treating the grape, apple, potato, etc. At the Connecticut station 45 gallons of water is used with copper sulphate, six pounds; lime (fresh), four pounds. Professor Bailey for nearly all purposes uses the McGowen nozzle, although for potatoes the Vermorel and some other of the small nozzles are very satisfactory.

News and Notes.

M. Girard communicates to the Academie des Sciences, Paris, his experiments with potatoes as forage for cattle. Results make it appear that the tubers are first rate food whether from a view of fattening or the yields of milk and butter.

The small local market may often be the best one for the producer.

Name your farm and print it on your letter heads if you grow things to sell.

The department of agriculture, after investigations into the probabilities of a market for horse meat in France, Germany and Austria, the only countries in which it seems to be used for food, reports that there is no prospect of such a market to any extent.

MASONIC CHART.

ILLUSTRATING THE RELATION OF SOME OF THE DEGREES AND RITES IN FREEMASONRY TO EACH OTHER.

The accompanying chart represents one hundred and forty two degrees.

1. The American Rite of 13 degrees;
2. The Scotch Rite of 33 degrees;
3. The Egyptian Rite of 96 degrees.
4. The Mystic Shrine of one degree.
5. The Eastern Star of 5 degrees for Master Masons and for women. These are side degrees, and not genuine masonry.

The Symbolic degrees, or Blue Lodge of three degrees, are common to every Masonic rite, whether American, Scotch, or Egyptian, or whichever of the Masonic rites, named in Mackey's Masonic Encyclopedia one may choose to investigate.

This chart shows in the Blue Lodge the position of the Worshipful Master and some of the other officers of the lodge. Several positions of the candidate who is being initiated are also shown. In the Master Mason's degree is recognized the murder, burial and resurrection scene so full of religious significance to Freemasons.

A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery.

Scotch Rite Masonry Illustrated. 2 vols. Per vol., cloth, $1.00; paper, 65c.
The complete illustrated ritual of the entire Scottish Rite, comprising all the Masonic degrees from 3rd to 33rd inclusive. The first three degrees are common to all the Masonic Rites, and are fully and accurately given in "Freemasonry Illustrated." Vol. I comprises the degrees from 3rd to 18th inclusive.
Vol. II comprises the degrees from 19th to 33rd inclusive, with the signs, grips, tokens and passwords from 1st to 33rd degree inclusive.

Hand-Book of Freemasonry. 274 pages, flexible cloth, 50c.
By E. Ronayne, Past Master of Keystone Lodge No. 639, Chicago. Gives the complete standard ritual of the first three degrees of Freemasonry.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. 110 pages, paper, 25c.
The genuine old Morgan book republished.

Allyn's Ritual of Freemasonry. By Avery Allyn. Cloth, $5.00.
Contains the fully Illustrated Ritual of the Blue Lodge, Chapter Council and Commandery, 11 of the Scotch Rite Degrees, several Masonic side degrees and what is termed a Key to the Phi Beta Kappa, and the Orange Societies.

Duncan's Masonic Ritual and Monitor. Cloth, $2.50.
Profusely illustrated with explanatory engravings, and containing the ritual and work of the order for the seven degrees, including the Royal Arch. Though extensively used as an Instruction Book and one of the best in the market, it is not as accurate as "Freemasonry Illustrated."

Richardson's Monitor of Freemasonry. Cloth, $1.25; paper, 75c.
Contains the ceremonies of Lodges, Chapters, Encampments, etc. Illustrated. Although extensively used in conferring the higher degrees, it is not only very incomplete but inaccurate especially as regards the first seven degrees, and as to the higher degrees it gives but a description and general idea of the degrees rather than the full ritual.

Judge Whitney's Defense before THE GRAND LODGE OF ILLINOIS. Judge Daniel H. Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. H. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge, but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each.

General Washington Opposed to SECRET SOCIETIES. This is a re-publication of Governor Joseph Ritner's "Vindication of General Washington from the Stigma of Adherence to Secret Societies," communicated to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, March 8, 1837, at their special request. To this is added the fact that three high Masons were the only persons who opposed a vote of thanks to Washington on his retirement to private life—undoubtedly because they considered him a seceding Freemason. 10cts each.

Morgan's Exposition, Abduction AND MURDER, AND OATHS OF 33 DEGREES. Composed of "Freemasonry Exposed," by Capt. Wm. Morgan;" "History of the Abduction and Murder of Morgan;" "Valance's Confession of the Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan;" "Bernard's Reminiscences of Morgan Times," and "Oaths and Penalties of 33 Degrees." 300 pages; cloth, $1.00.

Mah-Hah-Bone; comprises the Hand Book, Master's Carpet and Freemasonry at a glance. Bound in one volume. In cloth, 589 pages, $1.00.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin trials. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian) a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. 15 cents each.

Are Masonic Oaths Binding on the INITIATE? By Rev. L. A. Post. 5 cents each.

Sermon on Masonry. By Rev. J. Day Brownlee. In reply to a Masonic Oration by Rev. Dr. Mayer, Wellsville, Ohio. 5 cents each.

Masonic Outrages. Compiled by Rev. H. H. Hinman. Showing Masonic assault on lives of seceders, on reputation, and on free speech; its interference with justice in courts, etc. Postpaid, 20 cents.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Pres. J. Blanchard. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each.

History of the Abduction and Murder OF CAPT. WM. MORGAN. As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. 25 cents each.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a LEAGUE WITH THE DEVIL. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason. 15 cents each.

The deaf mute institute at Salt Lake City has been destroyed by fire. Loss, $75,000.

SITUATION EXAGGERATED.

Bayle's Report to the Governor on the Spring Valley Trouble.

Springfield, Aug. 10.—Reports from Spring Valley are that the town is peaceful. Just how long the situation will remain peaceful cannot be told. Superintendent Dalzell, of the coal mines at that point, has stated that if any further trouble arises he will discharge every Italian miner employed, and will then employ none but colored workmen, or white men of this country. He declares himself to have had his fill of foreign laborers of a low birth, and will steer clear of that element in the future. Colonel H. E. Bayle, assistant adjutant general I. N. G., who made a thorough investigation of the situation at Spring Valley, has made his report to Governor Altgeld.

He states that the situation was one of a local character and grossly exaggerated by incendiary press dispatches sent from that point to Chicago papers, which aroused public feeling in Cook county and other portions of the state to a degree of war, and had the matter continued a bloody civil war would in all probability have ensued. As it was the matter could have been controlled at any time by the mayor had the correspondents been more practical in their dispatches. The original trouble was ceused by a small fight between a negro and an Itelian in which other Itelians came to the rescue of their brother and severely beat up several colored miners who took a hand in the fight. Had the town mershal arrested all violators of the peace and had them roundly fined in the local courts the matter would not have occesioned the trouble it did.

George Schilling, secretary of the bureau of labor statistics, who had also been sent to Spring Valley to investigate the matter, has wired the governor as follows: "The negroes have gone to work with the whites this morning. Everything quiet. Shall I stay longer?" Governor Altgeld replied that he could use his own judgment about remaining there eny longer. During the day Mayor Delmargo wired that the miners had started to work and the colored miners were returning to town and no further trouble was apprehended. The situation was well in his hands and he was amply provided to control the same.

MISSOURI DEMOCRATS.

They Meet in Convention and Declare for Free Silver.

Pertle Springs, Mo., Aug. 7.—Free silver has conquered in Missouri, as it did in Illinois. The so-celled gold, "or sound money," adherents were so overwhelmed by the superior generalship and numerical strength of the free silver leaders and forces that they made but a very faint effort to stay the onslaught of the white metal adherents. Bland said in opening the convention that the Democrats of Missouri had assembled to adopt resolutions for the free coinage of silver, to select a state committee which was in sympathy with the popular will, and how well his prophesy was carried out the result of the convention tells. The report of the committee on permanent organization, which practically snows under the old committee, was adopted with but one or two dissenting voters.

The resolution committee report for free and unlimited coinage at 16 to 1, regardless of any foreign nation, was carried with a hurrah and expedition seldom seen in any convention; and furthermore, men were selected to nominate delegates favorable to silver to the national Democratic convention in 1896. As a whole, the friends of silver are feeling happy, and congratulations are in order.

BRITISH BUTCHERED IN CHINA.

Ten Killed by a Chinese Mob, Including Men, Women and Children.

London, Aug. 5.—A Shanghai dispatch to The Times says that the mission and sanitarium at Wha Sang, near Ku Cheng, province of Fokein, has been attacked and ten British subjects killed. The Rev. Mr. Stewart, wife and child were burned in their house. The Misses Yellow and Marshall, two sisters named Saunders, two sisters named Gordon, and Steetie Newcombe were murdered with spears and swords.

Miss Codrington was seriously wounded about the head and Stewart's eldest child had a knee-cap badly injured, while the youngest had an eye gouged out. Rev. Mr. Phillips, with two Americans—Dr. Gregory and Miss Hartford—were both wounded, but arrived safely at Fu Chau Fu.

Washington, Aug. 5.—A dispatch has been received at the state department from Consul General Jernigan, at Shanghai, stating that in the riots at Ku Cheng, China, no American missionaries were hurt, the victims being all British.

OMAHA POLICE WRANGLE.

The Judge Renders a Decision That Settles Nothing.

Omaha, Aug. 12.—Judge Hopewell's decision in the police board injunction case gives the new board prima facie right to office. It also restrains the new board from taking forcible possession. The decree says: "The defendants appointed as fire and police commissioners under the law of 1885, now in force, must be held to have the apparent right and to be entitled prima facie to the offices in question. Such being the case a court of equity will not restrain them from claiming such offices or from proceeding in a peaceable and lawful manner to obtain possession thereof. * * * Title to the office cannot be decided in this suit. The question is, will the court by injunction protect the old board, thus obliging the defendants to bring quo werranto proceedings."

Referring to the suggestions that there might be a conflict between the old and new boards the judge said: "Should anything of the kind happen the responsibility will be with those who precipitate it or incite it, and I take occasion to say here that notwithstanding the views herein expressed as to the rights of the defendants to the possession and occupancy of the offices in question, yet the plaintiffs have the right to remain peaceably in possession and to execute the functions of said office until otherwise ordered in a proper legal proceeding." The excitement wes intense when court convened. The room was crowded to suffocation. Every aisle wes jammed with spectators, and every available seat was taken. Many prominent politicians and officeholders were on hand.

The hold-over board in conference with the mayor determined upon a continued policy of resistance, and proposes to hold the fort until the supreme court shall pass upon the validity of the new law. The somewhat embiguous character of the decision has had the effect to confuse the people, who ere expecting trouble as a result. More than 100 special policemen are now guarding the central police station, and the guard in the city hall to protect the patrol signal station and the records of the old board has been retained. The members of the new board and their expectant friends are jubilent over the decision. They affirm that no violence will be countenanced, and they hope to see none. Their followers, however, are not so passive.

It is reported that Police Judge Beerka will decline to recognize as lawful arrests made by Chief White's men, and will recognize the authority of the appointees under the new regime. It is also said that Chief Redell, of the fire department, will recognize the new board's authority. The city council has already declared it will vote pey only to the new board and those who recognize its authority. This all looks as if a starvation and freeze-out policy has been agreed upon, and that the new board does not now intend to resort to force to gain possession of the department.

RAGING FLAMES AT LOCKPORT.

Score and a Half of Buildings Destroyed with a Money Loss of $250,000.

Lockport, Ills., Aug. 12.—The fire that so badly scorched this place broke out in the Phœnix building, and it was quickly found that the fire department here was inadequate to cope with the fire, which had started from a stove overturning on the roof of the building where a new roof was in course of construction. Telegrams were immediately sent to Joliet, Lemont and Chicago for assistance. An engine and chemical was sent from Joliet, hose from Lemont, and two engines from Chicago. The engines immediately upon their arrival began to pump from the Illinois and Michigan canal. The fire had gained a terrible headway by this time and raged altogether for four hours before the flames were gotten under control.

The buildings totally destroyed were: McDonald's theatre, O'Brien's saloon, C. H. Bacon & Co.'s drug store, J. F. Fisemin & Co.'s grocery; the buildings of Z. Lundstrum, William Schulz, D. J. Whalen and W. S. Myers; Dr. O. W. Moon's drug store, O. S. Gainer's dry goods store, W. S. Myers' two frame buildings, S. Berger's general store, Thompson's restaurant, Adelman's building, Edward Flavin's saloon, two-story brick owned by Waldrogle, J. A. Donahue's saloon, D. C. Baldwin's two-story brick, O'Connell & Sloan's hardware store, J. S. Alexander's residence, Mrs. J. Sullivan's house, J. S. Finder's store, store occupied by F. S. Hutton, post-office (entirely destroyed, mails all removed), stone schoolhouse of District six, entirely destroyed. A number of other dwellings were also destroyed. Total estimated loss is about $250,000.

Notes of the State.

Drillers found gold and silver bearing rock while sinking a well on the farm of Jacob Glasser, near Pearl City, Ills.

Peoria has been decided on as the permanent headquarters of the Order of Railway Telegraphers.

Hearst, Dunn & Co., agricultural implement manufacturers, Peoria Ills., have assigned. Liabilities, $123,435; assets, $115,649.

Mrs. C. A. Swan of Jacksonville, Ills., shot herself through the heart. She was the wife of an engineer, and her act was caused by despondency, due to long sickness.

Governor Altgeld was almost prostreted by the heat while reviewing the Third regiment at Camp Lincoln. He was taken to a tent where, under the tender ministrations of his wife, he quickly recovered.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.....16

In Nebraska City, Neb., which is a stronghold of the lodge and rum power, and where professed Christians vote and sign bonds to authorize men to run saloon hells, the police authorities ordered the fire department to turn the hose on the Salvation Army.

An exchange says of the mission of the various churches in saving sinners that the Methodists pick them out of the gutter, the Baptists wash them, the Congregationalists starch them, and the Presbyterians iron them. We add that one great defect in all this machinery is something to lift them out of the lodge, and this the National Christian Association is doing for all these churches.

Past Master E. Ronayne's three admirable letters which have lately appeared in the Cynosure and which so thoroughly analyze the Masonic oath, can be had in the August Lodge Lamp, at $1 per hundred. We hope the friends will make every effort to give the widest circulation to this issue, as no more pointed and convincing testimony against Masonry has ever been published. An influential Baptist pastor in the East wrote last week that it was a tract handed him by a friend which opened his eyes and delivered him from the coils of Masonry.

President Blanchard well said, in his recent address at the Christian Conference, Northfield, Mass.: "The Bible is the rule of life for all men. It includes the entire life—personal, social, domestic, industrial, political and religious. It tells us how to eat, how to dress, how much to pay our hired men, when to pay them, how to loan money, how to collect debts, and how to worship. At this time men often act as though the Bible has only to do with the church and the Lord's Day. Men act as if God had never told men how to vote, and the result is that our churches are being flooded out by vice and crime. They are trying to save a few wrecks here and there while thousands go down, and the wreckers keep plying their trade. It were better to kill the wrecker than to save one wreck."

It is said the Masons recently, for the first time in the history of Western Pennsylvania, laid the corner-stone of a public school building at Millvale. More than fifty lodges were represented, and the G. A. R. headed the procession. If, as an apostle says, "He that buildeth the house is greater than the house," then the Masons must surely have a bottom mortgage on Western Pennsylvania, and it well becomes reformers in that region to bestir themselves.

REV. H. L. HASTINGS.

The distinguished Boston lecturer and publisher, Rev. H. L. Hastings, whose portrait we here present, has perhaps, through the press and platform, reached more people with the Gospel than any other man in this country. During the last forty years he has put in circulation, in every quarter of the globe, six hundred tons of books, tracts and pamphlets, filled with the most practical presentations of the Gospel, and the clearest refutations of the infidelity of the times. In May, 1885, he was fined $30, and sent to Charles street jail till the fine was paid, for preaching the Gospel on Boston Common without a permit from a wholesale and retail rumseller, who would not have given the permit. A week later he was again fined the same amount, and locked up in a cell of the same jail for the crime of reading three chapters from the New Testament on Boston Common.

The Christian Statesman calls attention to the Sabbath desecration prevailing as never before in Pittsburgh and vicinity this summer. It specifies first and foremost, as leading this Sabbath destroying crusade, the Home Guard and G. A. R. encampments with their Sunday excursion trains. This evil prevails to an even greater extent in the West. Civic society encampments and conclaves, with their Sunday excursions, is the most striking feature of this Sabbath desecration. A more subtle and dangerous form which has broken out this summer, as never before, is the custom of secret societies in holding memorial services for their dead on Sabbath, and marching out to cemeteries with brass band processions. Thus each day's report affords more convincing proof that the secret society question is a great and indispensable factor in the Sabbath reform as well as in every other. And what is most alarming is that the secret society evil is so powerful that but few reform papers dare touch it.

The Grand Commander of the Indiana Knight Templars at their last annual meeting called attention to the beer drinking and wholesale intoxication noticeable in past years at their encampments, and declared his purpose to divorce Knight Templars and the saloon. Our Masonic exchanges show that a strong effort will be made to keep Knight Templars, when in uniform, out of the Boston saloons. But is not the Grand Commander of Indiana somewhat severe on his brother Templar, the Grand Commander of Massachusetts, who is a leading brewer? Why does he not draw a line against the breweries as well as saloons? The Templars can get along without the saloons if the breweries are retained. One of the cards of a Chicago section of the Templars bound for Boston has these lines from Burns:

"We thank the Lord for giving us
Sae much beyond our merits.
Noo, waiters, clear the festive board,
And bring us in the sperits."

John N. Edwards, in his book entitled "Guerrillas of the Border," giving the lives of such men as Quantrell, Anderson, Todd, Jessie and Frank James, incidentally shows that Masonry played an important part in this warfare of the Border. He relates the experience of a lieutenant who, when captured by the guerrillas, said what prayers he remembered and made what Masonic signs he was master of, when they enquired if he was a Mason. He replied in the affirmative, and they let him go. After giving an account of the terrible Lawrence massacre by the guerrillas under Quantrell, he adds, "Some were saved through the mysteries of the Masonic order, notably Gen. C. W. Babcock. Jarrette, one of the most blood thirsty of the guerrillas, and not given overmuch to tenderness or compassion when Kansas men were to be killed, yielded sufficiently to the requirements of his order to save five prisoners who gave him the Masonic sign of recognition."

Rev. J. P. Stoddard in his Roslindale, Mass., address well said: "Christian patriotism is a righteous principle, and not merely an emotion. Its seat is in the heart, and not simply in the head or in the lungs. It springs from a worthy motive, and is inspired to action by a deep and abiding conviction of personal responsibility to God, and of solemn obligations to the state, as God's ordinance. It begins with the exaltation of Him by whom all things were made, and the equality of natural rights to all men made in the image of God. It accepts the great truth that He 'hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth,' and that existing evils can be most speedly removed, and conflicting elements in civil society most effectually harmonized by 'seeking first the kingdom of God and his righteousness.' It sets Divine authority and law above human authority and law, and recognizes neither civil or ecclesiastical magistrates, potentate or edict that contravenes the higher law, which demands the first allegiance of every man."

BATTLE HYMN OF THE REPUBLIC.

BY JULIA WARD HOWE.

Mine eyes have seen the glory of the coming of the Lord;
He is trampling out the vintage where the grapes of wrath are stored;
He has loosed the fateful lightning of his terrible swift sword;
His truth is marching on.

I have seen him in the watchfires of a hundred circling camps;
They have builded him an altar in the evening dews and damps;
I can read his righteous sentence by the dim and flaring lamps;
His day is marching on.

I have read a fiery gospel writ in burnished rows of steel,
As ye deal with my contemners so with you my grace shall deal;
Let the Hero born of woman crush the serpent with his heel,
Since God is marching on.

He has sounded forth the trumpet that shall never call retreat;
He is sifting out the hearts of men before his judgment seat;
O be swift my soul to answer him, be jubilant my feet;
Our God is marching on.

In the beauty of the lilies Christ was born across the sea,
With glory in his bosom that transfigures you and me.
As he died to make men holy, let us die to make men free;
While God is marching on.

THE WORLD FOR CHRIST.

BY REV. C. D. TRUMBULL, D. D.

When the spies came back from searching the land of Canaan, the majority discouraged the people on the ground that the nations of Canaan were stronger than they; "but Caleb stilled the people and said, Let us go up at once and possess it, for we are well able to overcome it." The application we desire to make of this is to teach the duty and ability of Christians to take the world for Christ. True, there are mighty enemies to be overcome, even as in Canaan, ere this is accomplished. Among these there are three, which are as fully intrenched in this land as in any other, and must be overcome ere the world is taken for Christ.

SECULARISM

is the first of which we make mention. The secular idea is that government has nothing to do with God or Christ or the Bible or religion. Secularism is a re-action from Romanism, which always, when in power, unites church and state, and makes the church in the person of the Pope supreme, and like most reactionary movements, has gone to the other extreme. It not only divorces church and state, which is all right, but divorces the state from God and religion, which is all wrong. It rejects the Bible doctrines, that God is the author of civil government; that Jesus Christ is the mediatorial King of nations, and that the law of God is the true basis of all civil laws and the rule of national life, and must be rooted out ere the world is taken for Christ.

SECRETISM

is a close ally of secularism and tends to foster it. True, secretists before initiation are required to profess faith in God, yet, in the major orders, they are practically required to deny Jesus Christ—they are not allowed to mention his name in lodge ceremonies or in lodge prayers. To remain in such orders is to deny both the Father and the Son. We need not wonder that those who continue in this school ally themselves to the enemies of Christ's kingdom. Another great enemy of this kingdom is

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

No drunkard belongs to Christ's kingdom; neither does the drunkard maker. No government which licenses or protects the liquor traffic is properly Christian. No argument is needed to prove that this awful traffic must be made to cease ere the world is taken for Christ. What is the outlook for the attainment of this end? Men of weak faith say: "These enemies are intrenched in the world; they are here to stay; we cannot overcome them;" but every Caleb is ready to say, "Let us go up at once and possess the world for Christ, for we are well able to overcome it." God has provided the necessary equipments and is ready to go with his people. Their duty is to separate from complicity with secularism, secretism and the liquor traffic; in short, to separate from all sins, and taking the whole armor of God, to go forth in faith and courage and zeal for Christ and his church; so doing they will be honored instruments in his hand in ushering in that glorious day when great voices shall be heard in heaven, saying, "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ."

Morning Sun, Iowa, Aug. 9, 1895.

THE SITUATION IN NEW YORK.

BY REV. F. M. FOSTER.

Probably in no city of the United States do secret societies have such controling influence, and occupy so fully official position, as in this great metropolis. It is not too much to say that they run everything. They are in the church; they are in the state; they are in business; they are in corporations. When a popular meeting is called they are at the forefront. The State president of Christian Endeavor three years ago, and probably the present one, was a secret society man. They are everywhere and in everything. Worse still, they are reaching out, striking their roots deeper and seeking to get undisputed possession all over.

At the same time, there is less parade and show on the streets than will be seen in smaller places; just why is not so well known. Now and then a company will be out in all their "fuss and feathers;" but not often. Possibly there is a consciousness that the city is so big that they cannot "get it by the ears" and it is useless to try.

Workingmen's orders are multiplying also. You can hardly "buy or sell" without the "mark of the beast." Many trades you cannot enter at all, indeed nearly all of them, without being identified with these orders. You may be skilled, but if the contractor gives you a job, his three or four hundred men step out. If this does not secure your discharge, the orders will call out workmen on other buildings, and everything will stop.

There is some dispute as to whether these orders are "secret; some say, "yes;" some, "no." A member explained their secrecy in this way. "We have no secrets as an order. A resolution may be passed taking action on a certain mater; this is not to be told, if so required, until its purpose has been attained." Will the Cynosure throw further light on the subject?

TRUE AND FALSE RELIGION.

BY E. RONAYNE, PAST MASTER KEYSTONE LODGE, NO. 639, CHICAGO.

"Freemasonry is a good enough religion for me" exclaimes the Masonic infidel. "If I were obliged to leave either the lodge or the church, I would leave the church" exclaims the Masonic church-member, and so thus, both the Masonic infidel and the nominal Christian stand upon the same platform, profess the same religious faith, and base their hope for time and eternity upon the same shallow, moral teaching of Masonry. There is this difference, however, between the two men. The Masonic infidel is not a hypocrite; the Masonic professing Christian is. The Freemason claims to be a Mason and nothing more, while the Masonic church member, although professing to be a Christian, yet cherishes Masonry in his heart and loves the pagan ceremonies surrounding the death, burial and raising of Hiram Abiff more than he does the worship of the true God and the contemplation and remembrance of the death, burial and resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ. Which of these two men then under these circumstances ought to be respected the most? To my mind neither is deserving of very much respect, but if any is to be accorded to either, the Masonic infidel is than the church member who, like Elymas the sorcerer, professes to be a Christian and yet at any time is ready to give up his Christianity for the sordid advantages supposed to be derived from the hypocritical blasphemy and the disgusting ceremonies of a Masonic lodge. And here let me say that in using the term "Masonic infidel" I do not mean a man who does not believe in a God; such a one is an atheist; but by the term "infidel" I mean one who believes in a God, but at the same time does not believe what that God says. In other words, a Masonic infidel is a man whose god is a liar unworthy of being believed and hence deserving of all the contempt and contumely that can be heaped upon him.

I am led to make these remarks from some singular statements made by D. W. Starkey, of Wheaton, Ills., in the August number of the Voice of Masonry, where he asserts among other things that Freemasonry inculcates "duties to God, our neighbor and ourselves;" and again, "It (Freemasonry) teaches obedience to the dictates of the higher intelligence, and all this in the name of God." Now all this I utterly and absolutely deny.

FREEMASONRY DOES NOT INCULCAET FAITH

or trust in the true God the creator of the heavens and the earth, and neither does it teach anything whatever in the name of that God. In the United States and in all other English lodges I am well aware that "trust in God" is brought in as part of the ritual, but how is it in France and among all French Masons? There, by a solemn decree of of the Grand Orient, passed a few years ago, the very name of God has been entirely expunged from every part of the Masonic ceremonies, so that to-day throughout all French lodges no more mention can be made of the name of God than there can be of the name of Christ in all American and other English lodges.

But supposing that all Masonic lodges everywhere did inculcate "trust in God," what of that? What does faith or trust in God mean? Simply believing that he exists—simply believing that there is a God, is that it? Why, the very devils, the apostle tells us, believed that, and yet they remain devils still. But faith in God means faith in what he says, believing his word—the written word and the Word incarnate—and trusting his promises which are all made in and through Jesus Christ. This is faith in God, and nothing else is. Freemasonry tells us that it possesses "three great lights, the Holy Bible, square and compass." Now let me ask my dear Bro. Starkey a question. Suppose there were no "square and compass" on the Bible the night he was initiated as an Entered Apprentice, or when he was passed and raised, would he to-day be a Freemason and recognized as such by all regular Masons? Most assuredly not; in that case the Masonic oath would be null and void, and it is the oath that makes the man a Mason. What is it then? Why, that the in the lodgeroom, and of no more force or value among Masons than the square and compass, if indeed it is as much; and yet Freemasons will have the impudence to assert that Masonry teaches faith in God. Trust in God, whose word they deny and reject! why that is simply blaspheming God instead of trusting him. I would like to know how much or what part of the Bible does John O'Neil of the Thirty-fourth ward believe, and he is considered the highest and one of the oldest Masons in Chicago? How much or what part of the Bible does ex Grand Master Cregier believe? How much or what part of the Bible does Lorenz Kurzka, the rum-selling Master of Keystone Lodge, believe? How much of it do the Masons in general, preachers and all throughout the country, believe?

And my dear friend Starkey, let me ask how much of the Bible, God's word, do you believe yourself? Do you believe, for instance, in the New Testament? Do you believe what God says concerning the Lord Jesus Christ when he declares in Matt. 17: 6, "This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased; hear ye him?" You know you don't, for I take it for granted from what you say in the Voice of Masonry of Christianity that you know nothing whatever about it, and yet you'd blindfold yourself and others far worse than when taking the degrees, by pretending that "Masonry teaches faith in God and inculcates obedience to the dictates of the higher intelligence in the name of God." What! trusting a God whose word you would not believe for the smallest promise he could make. Believing in God, whose word and promise and Son and salvation you reject, and then making your boast of Masonry and deliberately lying about it when you affirm that "Freemasonry never has been nor can be exposed." Oh, friend Starkey, what an experience you must have in Masonry, and what a pack of idiots you must imagine your brother Masons to be if you think they'll believe all that nonsense you wrote concerning that revived sun-worship which is nightly practiced under oath, and which you yourself know to be the of modern times. But then possibly you are self-deluded; you are certainly spiritually blind, but you're no hypocrite. You make perhaps the worst mistake of all, however, when you say that "a Christian may be a Mason." No, sir, he cannot. A Christian cannot be a Mason any more than he can be a Parsee, a Buddhist or a Mohammedan. A nominal Christian can be a Mason, and being so, is a hypocrite; but a Christian, never. "For what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness? and what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? and what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? for ye (Christians) are the temple of the living God." 2. Cor. 6: 14-16.

This is what God says, friend Starkey; do you believe it? A Christian is one who has been "begotten again by the word of truth." 1. Pet. 1: 23; Jas. 1: 18. One who has received Christ into his heart (Jno. 1: 12), and has therefore the spirit and the mind of Christ. Rom. 8: 9; 1. Cor. 2: 16. Do you think such an one can be a Freemason and enter into the spirit and meaning of the Hiram Abiff tragedy? No, by no means. Do you think that a Christian will go where his and despised? Surely not; and so both the Mason and the church member, though "meeting on the level," cannot, and do not, meet on Christian ground.

But the teaching of Masonry itself is most clear and explicit on this very point. Here is what it says: "Blue Lodge Masonry has nothing whatever to do with the Bible; it is not founded upon the Bible. If it was it would not be Masonry, it would be something else" (Chase's Digest of Masonic Law, p, 208); and yet the preacher and the church member will exclaim, "Freemasonry is all the religion I want."

THE IOWA SITUATION.

BY REV. H. L. F. GILLESPIE.

In Iowa the divisions of social and moral life, which in the East have long been open chasms crossed only by strife and sorrow, are but shadowy lines standing out here and there with distinctness where leaders have unwittingly become prophets. The future is as uncertain here as anywhere; this applies to the moral conditions induced or indicated by secret societies.

Iowa is dominated by the lodge, everywhere from the "tough" country settlements to the capitol. Men, women and even children daily engage their minds with the interests or doings of some chapter, camp or conclave. I seldom attend a gathering of any kind or enter a train without being the involuntary auditor of some lodge business; friends who meet upon the street, in the store, workshop or hotel, and upon the Sabbath at church and Sabbath-school appear to be more interested in the lodge than the business and duties of the hour. The professions are largely represented in Masonry and Odd-fellowship. The numerous tribes of Elks, Woodmen, Knights and their "Sisters" absorb the middle and poorer classes, likewise their hard-earned money. The Jesuits are busy, but so far have done nothing more than create local disturbances about public schools and "run" city politics in the larger cities. The A. P. A.s have not spread beyond the larger cities, but there their influence is easy to see in their cheap notoriety, office holding and furthur complications of the Catholic problem, accompanied by needless strife and bitterness. The number of young people who enter or are dragged into the lodge is amazing.

Little opposition is made to secretism, and before the masses there is but one side taken for granted, viz , the lodge is all right; a good thing to get into. Politicians and churchmen court the lodge with diligence and use its influence for "all it is worth"—and they are honorable. In nearly every town one or more individuals perceive the nature and intent of the lodge system and abhor it. Here and there a Christian dares to stand against it, and here and there a minister defines the truth. The evils of the lodge have gone so far that the common sense of a considerable portion of our citizens tells them that something is wrong, and in a few instances this feeling deters them from joining, but lodge tactics soon overpower the majority. Competition between rival orders has become so great that it is improbable that secretism will increase in numbers in proportion to the population unless the ranks are recruited from the jails, asylums and reform schools. The officials already find it an unwieldy and unmanagable creature, and where the chapters have long been in social power there is much difficulty in making the "work," initiations, etc., impressive, and to keep the rank and file alive to their duties as brothers loyal to the high aims, etc., of their order, except at banquets, where fraternal gaity becomes fraternal dissipation and lewdness.

In justice to the lodgemen it should be said that some of them are really kindhearted and sincere in their desire to help mankind, and actually believe they are doing so, and that the selfishness of the secretists of Iowa is no greater, except inadvertantly, than the Christian sentiment of the State will permit. With the exception of strikes, formation of whisky rings within political parties, cowardly tyrannies in Masonic office holding, corrupt ring management in local politics and Satanic opposition to the Gospel of Christ, the acts of secretism in Iowa indicate that its followers are good citizens.

THE BACCHANALIANS OF ROME.

It has been frequently said by various writers in the Cynosure that Freemasonry is comparable to the Bacchanalia of Rome. As the history of Rome by Livy, the great Roman historian, in which the incident is related, is inaccessible to most readers, I copy the account for their benefit. It will be seen that the immoral practices were the principal object of the Bacchanalians, and false witness, false wills, and other mutual aid, the subordinate. Some think that this is reversed in Freemasonry, and mutual aid is the principal and immorality the subordinate object; but I believe the same order prevails in both. The import and importance of Freemasonry may, therefore, be gathered from the narrative. It is the key to the handwriting on the wall, the "Mene, Mene, Tekel, Upharsin" of the present.

Livy, like some modern writers, was led into minor errors in writing on this dark subject. It is plainly stated that the Bacchanalians began and ended with men, but some attempted to transfer the greater part of the guilt upon women. As recorded in the transactions of the Illuminati, the latter were made to believe that they were the principals while they were the tools, and secretly under the control of the former.

"The following year, 185 B. C., diverted the consuls from wars and provinces to the punishing of an intestine conspiracy and making inquisitions of clandestine meetings. A Greek of mean condition came, first, into Etruria, not with one of the many trades which his nation, of all others the most skillful in the cultivation of the mind and body, has introduced among us, but a low operator in sacrifices, and a soothsayer; nor was he one who, by open religious rites, and by publicly professing his calling and teaching, imbued the minds of his followers with terror, but a priest of secret nocturnal rites. These mysterious rites were at first imparted to a few, but afterwards communicated to great numbers, both men and women. To their religious performances were added the pleasures of wine and feasting, to allure a greater number of proselytes. When wine, lascivious discourse, night, and the intercourse of the sexes had extinguished every sentiment of modesty, then debaucheries of every kind began to be practiced, as every person found at hand that sort of enjoyment to which he was disposed by the passion predominant in his nature. Nor were they confined to one species of vice—the promiscuous intercourse of free-born men and women; but from this storehouse of villainy proceeded false witnesses, counterfeit seals, false evidences and pretended discoveries. From the same place, too, proceeded poison and secret murders, so that in some cases even the bodies could not be found for burial. Many of their audacious deeds were brought about by treachery, but most of them by force; it served to conceal the violence, that on account of the loud shouting, and the noise of drums and cymbals, none of the cries uttered by the persons suffering violation or murder could be heard abroad." (Like rolling balls in Masonic, and sliding rings in Odd-fellow, lodges.)

"The infection of this mischief, like that of disease, spread from Etruria to Rome, where the size of the city, affording greater room for such evils and more means of concealment, cloaked it at first; but information of it was at length brought to the consul, Postumius, principally in the following manner: Publius Ebutius, whose father had held equistrian rank in the army, was left an orphan; and his guardians dying, he was educated under the eye of his mother, Duronia, and his stepfather, Titus Sempronius Rutilus. Duronia was entirely devoted to her husband; and Sempronius, having managed the guardianship in such a manner that he could not give an account of the property, wished that his ward should be either made away with or bound to compliance with his will by some strong tie. The Bacchanalian rites were the only way to effect the ruin of the youth. His mother told him that during his sickness she had made a vow for him, that if he should recover she would initiate him among the Bacchanalians; that being bound by this vow she wished to fulfill it; that it was necessary for him to preserve chastity for ten days, and then she would conduct him to the place of worship.

"There was a freedwoman, Hispalia Fecenia, a courtesan, but deserving a better lot than the mode of life to which she had been accustomed when very young and a slave. As they lived in the same neighborhood, an intimacy subsisted between her and Ebutius. The young man told her he should separate from her for a few days on account of a religious duty, to discharge a vow made for his health, by being initiated among the Bacchanalians. On hearing this the woman declared it would be better for both to lose their lives; and that his stepfather wished to destroy his character, hopes and life; and said that when in service she had gone into that place of worship as an attendant on her mistress; but since she had obtained her liberty she had never once gone there; that she knew it to be the receptacle of all kinds of debaucheries. When any person was introduced, he was delivered as a victim to the priests, who led him away to a place resounding with shouts, the sound of music and the beating of cymbals and drums, lest his cries, while suffering violation, should be heard abroad.

"When he came home, and his mother made mention of such things pertaining to the ceremony as were to be performed on that day, and on the several following days, he told her that he would not perform any of them, nor did he intend to be initiated. His stepfather was present at this discourse. Immediately the woman observed that he could not deprive himself of the company of Hispalia, and was so fascinated that he had no respect for his mother or stepfather, or even of the gods themselves. They loaded him with reproaches and drove him out of the house, with the assistance of four slaves. The youth, on this, repaired to his aunt, Ebutia, told her the reason of his being turned out, and the next day, by her advice, gave information of the affair to the consul, without witnesses of the interview. He was dismissed, with orders to return on the third day. Ebutia, on receipt of a message, came to the house of Sulpicia, mother-in-law of the consul; and the latter, soon after, coming in as if by accident, introduced a conversation about Ebutius, her brother's son. The tears of the woman burst forth, and she began to lament the unhappy lot of the youth, who, after being robbed of his property by persons whom it least of all became, was then residing with her, being driven out-of-doors by his mother, because, being a good youth, he refused to be initiated in ceremonies devoted to lewdness, as report goes.

"The consul, thinking that he had made sufficient inquiries concerning Ebutius, and that his testimony was unquestionable, having dismissed Ebutia, requested his mother-in-law to send again to the Aventine and bring Hispalia. The woman, thinking without a doubt that it must certainly be Ebutius who had discovered the secret, threw herself at Sulpicia's feet and at first began to beseech her not to let the private conversation of a freedwoman with her lover be turned not only into a serious business, but even capital charge, declaring that she had spoken of such things merely to frighten him, and not because she knew anything of the kind. On this Postumius, growing angry, said she seemed to imagine that then, too, she was wrangling with her gallant Æbutius, and not that she was speaking in the house of a most respectable matron and to a consul. Sulpicia raised her, terrified, from the ground, and while she encouraged her to speak out, at the same time pacified her son-in-law's anger. At length she took courage, and, having censured severely the perfidy of Æbutius, because he had made such a return for the extraordinary kindness shown to him, she declared that she stood in great dread of the gods whose secret mysteries she was to divulge; and in much greater dread of the men implicated, who would tear her asunder with their hands if she became an informer. Therefore, she entreated that they would send her away from Italy, where she could not live in safety." Historicus

A merchant learned that a favorite clerk had won a prize in a lottery. He called him up to the desk and discharged him, with the following remarks: "I have been in business forty-three years, and have yet to see the first man who gambled and remained absolutely honest. Twenty years ago I would have tried to cure you. I am too old now to take on new worries. Remember that I told you that the gambling habit was a disease fatal to honesty and almost incurable." The young man secured another position, from which he was discharged inside of two years for stealing.

REFORM NEWS.

THREATENING STORM CLOUDS.

Boston, Mass., Aug. 16, 1895

Editor Cynosure: — Lurid scenes fleck the heavens of this old commonwealth these days when the mercury lingers in the nineties. Possibly the approaching army of sabered Knights or the dangerous proximity of the A. P. A. political dog star to the star of our republic is jostling party luminaries in their orbits. Whatever the cause, there is an impression abroad that there is a dog in the manger somewhere, and that crouched in darkness he snarls and snaps at every intruder who presumes to question his right to possess the earth and the fullness thereof according to his own sweet will. Figuratively speaking, the storm signals are out, and to an outsider there is an odor of brimstone about headquarters. The tempest is evidently brewing, but just when or where it will burst or who will be inundated no one seems able to foretell. Demagogues and trimmers have set sails for a squall, while old tars are preparing for a regular northeaster. Light-weight, adventurous skippers bob up and down on the choppy sea of public sentiment, tacking right and left to avoid the undertow.

Occasional rifts revealed a murky background that sends a quiver of dread apprehension through the brain and nerve centers of party leaders, whose supreme ambition is to be counted in when the loaves and fishes are dispensed. The outer gyrations of this swirling maelstom is sucking in a variety of issues, but the whole commotion centers upon the employment of secret or open methods in conducting campaign and State affairs. Senator Geo. T. Hoar has declared his preference for open measures, and entered a strong protest against any restriction of citizenship or political privileges on account of race or religious creed. T. C. Evans, Esq., takes exceptions to the Senator's open day-light policy, and advocates the African Purrow or native American Indian bushwhacker method as the most effective. Disavowing membership in the A. P. A., he nevertheless indorses its movements and quotes with approbation from an editorial in the Boston Standard to justify his position the following paragraph:

> The fact that certain bodies of men prefer to meet in secret is not considered a serious reflection on the good citizenship of such men. The Masons, Odd-fellows and scores of other organizations meet in this way, while many secret meetings are held by Republicans and other politicians for the purpose of campaign planning. This is all the A. P. A.'s are doing. If this be treason, then is Senator Hoar a very guilty man, for he has met in secret political conclave scores of times.

The policy of this position is to transparant to have weight with thinking men. It is equivalent to a full indorsement of Masonry, Odd-fellowship, et. al., and because there are privacies in state and national affairs, therefore, the principle is right and may be employed to any extent and for any purpose. This general indorsement includes the covenant which makes the A. P. A., and without which no such secret body could exist. In accepting the A P. A. Mr. Evans indorses its purpose and the means employed by which to attain its ends. Some of the well-known objects of this order are to eliminate Catholic citizens from the teaching force in all public schools; to put sincere Catholics at great disadvantage in the industries of our country; to curtail their privileges as office holders in the state and compel them ultimately to abandon their citizenship, renounce their religion or leave the country.

The Boston Herald and Transcript indorses Senator Hoar's position and have spoken editorially and ably in its defense. The Standard, true to its instincts, champions the whole brood of secret orders and hurls anathamas at Senator Hoar, because he has spoken against the gods which Masonry, Odd-fellowship and especially the A. P. A. worship. The scouts and pickets are out, and the sharpshooters are picking their flints, and indications are that the battle will soon be on in dead earnest. I will try and keep your readers posted. J. P. Stoddard.

SUNSHINE THROUGH THE CLOUDS.

INTERESTING LETTER FROM SEC. W. B STODDARD.

Barre, Vt., Aug. 15, 1895.

Dear Cynosure:—You would conclude from my last that I had found a very difficult field to work. I am again realizing what I have often found to be true, that our God can give victory where the obstacles seem almost insurmountable. I am meeting with more success than I could have expected from the outlook one week ago. The popular churches do not open for a presentation of this subject, but God has his faithful few here as elsewhere. Brother Shaw of Montpelier gave me a full day's work Sabbath. In the morning I preached to his people and addressed the Sabbath school. In the afternoon I spoke in the schoolhouse at Berlin Pond, and again in Montpelier in the evening.

Last Friday evening a goodly number gathered on my invitation for a Bible reading and parlor meeting. On Monday evening I attended a holiness meeting. The leader being absent I was invited to take charge. Two hours passed very pleasantly in prayer and conference. I found no one who expressed sympathy for the lodges, and some who were rejoiced to know of my work. So God is leading on. All these services have been attended with considerable interest, and I trust with profit to many. I have distributed a large amount of literature, and engaged in conversation with many. Ten new readers to the Cynosure have been secured and more will follow. Nothing is more manifestly true than Christ's statement, "My people are gone into captivity for want of knowledge." To one who has seen and heard so much of lodgery, the blindness of many professed Christians is astonishing. It requires great patience and perseverance to help them into the light. I have talked with two who have recently given up their cannection with the Masonic lodge here, and are willing to testify to the truth as they understand it. One brother has promised, if the Lord so leads, to write for the Cynosure. The burial of a drunken fellow, who drowned himself in the canal, was one thing that led this brother out. The drunken man was a Mason, and of course professedly transferred from the lodge on earth to the "grand lodge above."

The Free Methodist camp meeting opened yesterday at the Quarries, four miles from here. I saw the presiding elder, Bro. Fish, and he will doubtless open the way for me to speak on the camp ground. I also met our old friend and coworker, Bro. Clark of Binghampton, N. Y. I am glad to see that Senator Hoar has too much of the Puritanic, anti-slavery blood in his veins to be bluffed by a secret society. Statements have been published as coming from him which he declares are without foundation. In reply to a Mr. T. C. Evans, writing for the A. P. A's, the Senator asserts himself as follows:

"Further, I want to state and advocate my opinions in the face of day, and you may be sure that this I shall do without flinching before anybody's threats or anybody's displeasure or indignation. You, on the other hand, I understand, want to go into a cellar to declare your principles. You want to join an association whose members are ashamed to confess they belong to it, many of whom, without apparently forfeiting the respect of their fellows, lie about their membership in it when they are asked about it."

Again: "You think the way to make good citizens and good men of them, and to attract them to Protestanism, is to exclude them, their sons and daughters, from all public employment, and to go yourself into a dark cellar and curse at them through the gratings of the windows."

While we may not agree with the Senator in his political views, every true American must admire his open, frank, outspoken way as compared with the underhanded manner of the lodge. If there is not enough Christian patriotism in our government to uphold it, it must go down. Let appeal be made to the enlightened conscience in an open, frank way. In this way only can we expect good results. W. B Stoddard.

CORRESPONDENCE.

ALL-ROUND REFORMERS.

Clay Center, Kans., Aug. 15, 1895.

Editor Cynosure:—Again I wish to say in favor of my proposed constitution for All-Round Reformers, it does not follow necessarily that when we sign it we must hurry off to the polls and vote. Each one can use his own judgment in this matter. In fact, this very clause would have a tendency to make men think before they leap. To use Bro. Paden's own language: "If anyone did not wish to support one or more of the movements represented, he could give instructions with remittances as to how the money he gives should be used."

If you disagree with us on this point you can send your money and have it used for some of the other reforms. And thus you will find that this is not a fly in the ointment; it is only a pure chemical, which will have a tendency to keep "the ointment of the apothecary" from sending "forth a stinking savor."

Our Connecticut pastor, as quoted by the editor in the July Cynosure, offers so many objections to what we supposed was plain and simple language, that we were reminded of the young man's experience on his "first night out," who thus jokingly told the story: "I was on foot and all alone, when a prairie chicken flew up with a buzz and frightened me almost out of a year's growth. I was walking cautiously and quietly, just looking for a 'fraid,' and I got it."

The good brother propounds a question: "If the doctor's idea is feasible, then what does the church lack of being the society proposed?" When we come to examine the church as it now exists, divided into so many sects or denominations, and take their various creeds in one hand and examine them, with the Bible in the other, we see one teaching one doctrine and the other teaching exactly the opposite. We see taught in nearly all some things for which no warrant can be found in Holy Writ, being of traditional origin. We see each sect picking up a few of the doctrines peculiar to apostolic times which each one chooses to call "the distinctive principles of our church," while many other principles, though they may be just as important, and also taught in the New Testament, are lightly passed by as non-essentials to salvation. With this array of facts before us, we ask our Connecticut brother, which one of the two hundred and fifteen Protestant denominations is the "all-round reform church?"

Our brother deplores the introduction of "a new annex" into the arena of reform, thinking that it would tend to divide rather than to unite; but it has always been necessary to meet this objection by every reform that has yet been started. He also thinks that there are some able reformers whose help we would need who could not see their way clear to go in with us. We would be very sorry indeed to drive any away, especially those of ability and sincerity; but if they cannot go with us, then we will have to get along as best we can without them; for if it is the will of Providence that this movement shall go on, it will not stop, no matter who refuses to go.

If we go into reform work fearing and expecting to find lions in the way, we will be sure to find them; but if we go into it with a will, following the example and leadership of the greatest Reformer of all, working faithfully in season and out of season, we will find to our astonishment that the "lions are chained." Yours as ever for all-round reform, D. M. Gillespie, (M. D).

A STILL GREATER POWER.

Hinsdale, N. H., Aug. 14, 1895.

Editor Cynosure:—As your Kansas correspondent well says, secrecy is hand in hand with, and the enemy of, temperance and all other reforms. But the ones who uphold and help on secrecy are those who try to serve two masters—Christians who stay in, and are allowed to stay in churches while not lodge members, they make excuses for and help protect secret societies. What a scattering there would be if "make-believe" church members were weeded out and only true and real Christians were left in the churches. This is an age of pretence, of policy, of trickery; and religion is more than ever before used as a means of worldly advancement.

At D. L. Moody's great meetings last week in Northfield, Mass., a certain general was much talked of because he chartered a special excursion train to attend the meetings. This week this same gentleman will parade Boston streets with thousands of other Knight Templars, in his dashing uniform and with clanking sword, along with his brother general the celebrated maker of Medford rum and other "Sir Knights," "Right Eminent" and otherwise. Well, he will be among a somewhat different crowd than last week. Opposite the town where this gentleman resides, and where he is quite influential, are several low saloons and drinking places. They are a nuisance and doing great injury to all in the v'cinity, besides being illegal. This versatile gentleman with his brethren could clean out these saloons if he chose so to do. Of course his parade with the "Sir Knights," the special Moody train, and the protection of saloons and their supporters has nothing to do with influencing votes which it is hoped may land him in the Senate chamber at Washington.

I question if any influence is so powerful a help to secrecy as that of clergymen, even those not members. In a Congregational church established 1763, a year or two ago the "business committee" was made up of the wife of a Masonic member and two gentlemen, one a Mason, but neither of them members of the church. The pastor of this church recently resigned. Two young persons had joined the church in six years. On the last Sabbath in town he invited the G. A. R. to attend in the morning. Fifteen attended, nearly all Masons. His "farewell" sermon he preached in the evening. What can be expected of a church whose members cannot manage its affairs or whose pastor serves lodgemen, and even seems to enjoy and court their society? And, worst of all, in the above case the preacher had regularly received the Cynosure for a whole year.

THE ENGLISH ELECTIONS.

Derby, England, July 29, 1895.

Editor Cynosure:—The elections have taken place, and the result is the reversal of the general expectation of the nation. The character of the electorate must have undergone a startling change, when it fails to appreciate the services which the outgoing government have rendered to the democracy. The work done has been magnificent. The principle of taxation according to ability to pay has, for the first time, been recognized. Home Rule for the parishes by means of the Local Government bill, and a series of other beneficent measures, have been passed into law, and these would have been increased but for the unscrupulous tactics of the Opposition, aided by a fossilized House of Lords.

The overthrow, by a mere snatch vote, of a government that has done more, in the time, of beneficent legislation than any other government that has ever existed, has been the cause of immense surprise. For the democracy to willingly give up the privileges for which our fathers fought into the hands of the wealthy classes, and to give them at the same time a carte blanche to reverse all progressive legislation is, on any theory, well-nigh incomprehensible. Prominent among the causes which have contributed to this result may be mentioned the following:

1. Socialism. The word has a very wide range of meaning, but as used by the orators of the parks and market places suggests the

PUTTING DOWN OF ALL THAT IS UP.

Workmen, who by industry and frugality have bought or built houses of their own, and in other ways have made or are making provision for the future, and who see an opportunity of rising in the social scale by their own efforts, dislike the prospect of having their affairs brought under the control of boards of management. Many of this class have got the suspicion, and this has been fostered by the Tory party for political purposes, that the Liberal party has a leaning towards this worst phase of socialism, which is not true.

2. The so-called Independent Labor party has contested twenty-six seats, with the avowed intention of splitting the Liberal vote. By this dishonorable ruse twelve or more seats have been won for the Tories. Mr. Keir Hardie, the leader of the movement, has deservedly lost his seat. This however has so soured his temper that he threatens in revenge to contest any constituency which Mr. John Morley, who has fallen a victim to the Labor movement at Newcastle-on-Tyne, shall seek hereafter to represent. If the Liberals have deservedly snubbed the I. L. P. the Tories will certainly snub them much more.

3. The Tories have falsely but persistently represented Home Rule as the SEPARATION OF IRELAND FROM BRITISH CONTROL.

This reminds us of a man who is said by mere persistency of statement to have convinced a large audience that he had seen the stone lion, which was fixed in the market place, "wag its tail." The moral is, keep on stating falsehood as truth and the people will finally accept it as truth, as they have done on the present occasion.

4 The Local Veto bill, which proposed not to close the public houses, but to transfer the power to the people themselves, to decide whether they will have public houses in their midst, and how many they will have, has been fatal to the Liberal cause; for John Barleycorn took offense, and induced the great brewery companies throughout the kingdom to send out circulars to all the shareholders, assuring them that to vote for the Liberals meant ruin to the shareholders.

THIS APPEAL TO HUMAN SELFISHNESS

won many over to the Tories. Then the publicans were deluged with circuiars, urging them to sacrifice their political opinions, and make their trade their politics, which they have done. I have seen scores of public houses with bills pasted upon the walls: "If the Liberals are elected this house will be closed; and where will the poor man get his beer?" In order to bolster up a trade which is a scourge to the country, men like Sir W. V. Harcourt, Mr. Wm. Caine, and Mr. John Morley have been sacrificed.

5. Disestablishment in Wales has been interpreted as the forerunner to disestablishment in England. The result of this has been that in thousands of parishes the whole church organization, down to the humble Bible woman, has been pressed into service in order to defeat the Liberal candidates. Priests, bishops and deacons have been so afraid that their wealthy people would not support their own clergy, as the poor dissenters support theirs, that they have joined the brewers and publicans in electing a parliament that will support

THE CHURCH AND THE DRINK INTERESTS.

One wonders whether these clergymen, in their eagerness to secure the income of the church in Wales, have lost faith in Providence, and have forgotten that Christ owned no property? He exhibited a spirit of self-sacrifice which was intended to operate upon bis followers. A church propped up by beer barrels cannot be very safe. There are however a few, even in the Established Church, who have not defiled their garments either with the love of gain or the love of beer. Canon Wilberforce and a few other clergymen have nobly stood out in defense of morality, and against degrading the country by electing men to govern the nation who will not only resist progressive legislation, but, as far as they dare, legislate in favor of a trade the existence of which the best and wisest men regard as a menace to virtue and righteousness.

We take comfort from the belief that God never legislates backwards, and that ultimately the right must triumph. The pendulum may swing backwards and forwards but the works keep on, and the hands point out the correct time. The danger is lest the friends of progress, seeing their efforts to help on the human race nullified and villified, should become weary in well doing and cease to labor.

ENTERED INTO REST.

Berwick, Nova Scotia, Aug. 12, '95.

Editor Cynosure:—I write you of the death at his home in Millville, Kings Co., Nova Scotia, July 8, 1895, of Rev. Robert S. Morton, aged 75 years. Our dear brother for nearly 27 years has been confined to his home from injuries received by a fall, yet amidst the long and painful affliction he would look up and say, "'Twill all be over soon: my Father knows what is best." He was truly a father in Israel, and a true follower of Jesus Christ; and by his voice, as opportunity offered, and from time to time with pen, did he warn men and women of the evils of the secret lodge system, admonishing, entreating and beseeching them to come out from the lodge and worldy, ungodly societies, so that they might live and work for Jesus. In this his labors were not in vain. Many from friends became enemies, because he showed them the evil of being unequally yoked together with unbelievers. Yet God raised up other friends, so that he proved God's promises true: "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee;" and, "I will withhold no good thing from them that walk uprightly." We can say of our dear friend and brother, as Paul said of himself, "I have fought a good fight: I have kept the faith," etc. Thus we are assured that he enjoys the rest which is for the children of God, and we can say,

"Servant of God, well done;
Rest from thy loved employ:
The battle fought, the victory won,
Enter thy Master's joy."

A VOICE IN REPLY TO THE "VOICE OF MASONRY."

In the Voice of Masonry for August of the current year, a Mr. D. W. Starkey of Wheaton, Ill., makes the following extraordinary statement: "Not long since," he says, "I received a letter from a newly-made Mason asking information regarding a so-called exposition of Freemasonry. My answer was, that there is no such exposition extant, nor can there be. Freemasonry never has been nor can be exposed." Now with all due respect to Bro. Starkey's veracity, I must flatly contradict his statement as above and positively affirm that he says

WHAT HE KNOWS TO BE ARSOLUTELY FALSE.

Freemasonry has been exposed time and time again, both by members of the various Grand Lodges, by seceding Masons, and even by men who were never initiated into any of the Masonic degrees, but who received it verbatim from friends and acquaintances in the different lodges. Such was the case of Richard Carlisle, for instance, who in 1825 published the standard work of the United Grand Lodge of England and Ireland under the title of "Carlisle's Manual of Freemasonry," and according to which the English and the Colonial lodges are working to-day.

If Freemasonry cannot be exposed, as Mr. Starkey alleges, then in the name of common sense why are all Masonic candidates sworn under an iron clad oath, backed by a most horrible death penalty, not to reveal any of its "secret arts, parts or points?" Where is the sense of making a man to swear most solemnly not to expose what cannot be exposed? And if I was not exposing Freemasonry when I worked the Master Mason's degree publicly in the city of Boston some years ago, then why were the high-toned Masons of that cultured city so enraged that nineteen policemen had to be hired to preserve order and to protect me and those who were with me from the violence of my former brother Masons? Yes, I exposed Freemasonry as it is—the standard work of Illinois—and it has been published inbook form since 1875, and can be had at the officeof this paper, and Mr. Starkey knows it. But Freemasons themselves have fully exposed Freemasonry in the abstract, or the spirit of Freemasonry, by resorting to mob violence in Boston, Albion, N. Y., Marshalltown, Ia., and in almost every other town or city in which I publicly worked the Masonic degrees. Mr. S. asserts that in order to understand it. That is true. Poor Richard Pritchard, of London, England, had an experience of it when the Masons of that city cut his throat from ear to ear. Capt. William Morgan, of Batavia, N. Y., had a most terrible experience of Freemasonry when he was forcibly abducted from in front of his own home, torn away from his wife and two little children, secretly locked up in Fort Niagara, and finally murdered in cold blood by being thrown from a row-boat into the Niagara river. Wm. Whitney, the county judge of Boone county, Ill., and Worshipful Master of Belvidere Lodge, had a most thrilling and singular experience with Masonry in 1845 in this State, when he detected and exposed the plot of his brother Masons to assassinate him in the lodge room at Belvidere because he wanted to bring two of the members of his lodge to justice for the murder of Ellen Slade, an English orphan girl.

And I myself had a very peculiar experience with Freemasonry—its true spirit and inner working; when right here in my own house, on the afternoon of July 4, 1872, a meeting of all the officers of Keystone Lodge No. 639 was held to see what plan could be devised to bring a brother Mason and member of the lodge free from the consequences of that very forenoon. I peremptorily refused to enter into any such plot, thereby incurring the lasting enmity of the Masonic homicide and his friends; and this was my first real difficulty with Freemasonry. Oh, yes, friend Starkey, Freemasonry must be experienced, sure enough, and those varied experiences are seldom or ever exposed; indeed, I don't know but that I half agree with you in saying that they cannot be exposed. Every part of Freemasonry is based upon a most horrible oath and backed up by a death penalty unworthy even of savages, and possibly Mr. Starkey will explain the kind of an experience derived from having one of those penalties inflicted. Wonder how does it feel to have "the throat cut and the tongue torn out" or to have the body "severed in twain, the bowels taken from thence and burned to ashes?" Yes, indeed, we can tell all about this craft, we can give the whole secret standard work, so that every man, woman and child in the land may know all about Freemasonry; but we are not able to reveal the varied experiences deep down in the bosom of the lonely and broken-hearted wife or of those cheated, ruined, defrauded and tyrannized over by that beautiful system of morality called Freemasonry. No, sir; you are quite right, friend Starkey; Freemasonry cannot be exposed. The world will never know the its deceit, its cunning devices for supremacy or its hypocritical cant in lauding its alleged benefits before an ignorant and gullible people.

But Bro. Starkey a little further along freely admits that it was "mistaken zeal" on the part of Freemasons that abducted and murdered poor Captain Morgan in 1826, but not as "a result of the teachings of Masonry." Then why did they murder him? Are not Freemasons sworn to kill a brother Mason who reveals the wonderful secrets and mysteries of that divine institution? What is the meaning of those horrible death penalties attached to every Masonic oath? Are these not to be carried out, or is it all a mere fiction simply put into the Masonic ritual under false pretences and to frighten their candidates into more unquestioned obedience? What does Bro. Starkey mean by those death penalties which he voluntarily invoked upon himself and which he solemnly swore to submit to in case he "should ever reveal any of the secrets of Freemasonry unlawfully?" Who is to perform all the

in the Masonic system? Shall the Masons themselves become the assassins of their fellowmen and brother Masons or, should occasion require, it will they let out the job to more experienced hands? Masonic murders not the result, forsooth, of Masonic teaching! Most assuredly they are and ever must be so long as Freemasonry lives. Every Masonic victim, every instance of mob violence by Masons, and every attack by Freemasons upon free speech throughout the world, are but the direct results and the legitimate outcome of Masonic oaths and its inhuman penalties of death. I repeat it, every Freemason is solemnly sworn to assassinate, or to be assassinated, Bro. Starkey even among the rest, should the occasion ever arise for so doing, and it is both foolish and wicked to deny this.

But still further along Mr. Starkey in his article in the Voice of Masonry very flippantly draws a parallel between Freemasonry and Christianity; but with regard to this part of his subject I shall merely remark that if he knows no more about Masonry than he apparently does about Christianity then he must be a very unreliable teacher indeed. I shall leave this, however, for discussion in a future paper, simply remarking just now that all he has tried to say about Christianity, every word of it, is absolutely and entirely untrue; and that, although nominal Christianity, broken up and divided as it is into numberless sects, may not represent the truth, but in fact be a hindrance to it, yet even the very worst form of it is so much brighter, purer, nobler and better than the devil worship of Masonry, that there is no comparison.

PROSTITUTION THE TWIN OF FREEMASONRY

St. Paul, Minn., Aug. 12, 1895.

Editor Cynosure:—The Emmet County Republican of Estherville, Iowa, of July 4, 1895, says: "Masonry needs no defense. It has withstood the tirades and abuse by unprincipled and vicious men for centuries without injury to its growth and prosperity, and it is stronger to-day than ever."

It is difficult to see why vicious and unprincipled men should attack Masonry, since none but vicious and unprincipled men could have invented such a compound of blasphemy, false swearing and swindling as Freemasonry is. If ever a good man got into Masonry it was by means of false promises, lying, fraud and the seductive wiles of its devil worship on the part of Masons, as multitudes do testify, having had the courage to break the horrid obligations that a wily craft had imposed upon them.

It is true that the truest and noblest men that the world ever had, have defended God and country against Masonic blasphemy. To say that their noble and self-sacrificing efforts have not been successful in injuring the growth and prosperity of the venomous thing, Freemasonry, is no more than to say that good people, true lovers of mankind, have failed to injure the growth and prosperity of prostitution. Prostitution is the twin of Freemasonry. The brothel has the same relation to the pure and undefiled home that Masonry has to the pure and undefiled religion.

We have no more hope of destroying the lodge than we have of destroying the brothel. But if good people do their duty God's honor will be vindicated against the lying blasphemies of Masonry, and the good will be saved from the lodge in time. God's honor will also be vindicated at the day of judgment in the eternal doom of all who abide in the lodge.

EDUCATION CONTROLLED BY THE LODGE.

Cameron, W. Va., Aug. 15, 1895.

Editor Cynosure:—The church of Rome is not the only institution that seeks to control this republic by controlling the education of its youth. For years I have been noting how the machinery of our public education is worked by the secret empire. As a rule, few of our school teachers, especially the female teachers, are connected with the lodge. But as a rule, county and public school superintendents are lodge members, and they, through the teachers' examination system, hold them under absolute control.

Some years ago many pious people in Pennsylvania were in the habit of holding religious service in schoolhouses. The scholars were also in the habit of organizing debating clubs, in which, among other questions, they discussed the secret society question. These debates led to reading and enquiry after facts and literature. It was a grand means of throwing light upon this question. The lodges complained to headquarters, and the State Superintendent at Harrisburg issued an order, which was published in the local press, that the schoolhouses must be closed against everything except the regular public school exercises.

So the lodge influence, having effectually shut off the prayer meeting and debating club, has recently started something of its own in the form of the military drill for boys and girls, thus inspiring in their young minds admiration for the G. A. R. But I started out to call attention to the fact that the superintendent, by having the power to decide who shall and who shall not teach our public schools, has a most arbitrary and autocratical power; so that all the teachers, not one in a hundred of which, perhaps, belong to a lodge, yet they must obey the superintendent or do without the certificates which make it possible for them to secure positions as teachers.

In Greene county, Pa., where I live, as nearly as I can ascertain every county superintendent, during a period of forty-one years, has been a member of the Odd-fellow fraternity; and I understand this to have been much the fate of all the counties in the State. The busy hand of the secret lodge is ever at work grasping for power and binding every limb of the State with fetters, and doing it so quietly that the victim cannot be made to believe that he is not free and independent.

A CHAT ON THE WAY TO CHURCH.

Chicago, Aug. 12, 1895,

Editor Cynosure:—On my way to church, on a recent Sabbath, I was in the company of a man and his family, one of them a boy of three years with a showy Masonic emblem on his breast. "Hello!" said I, "he is young to be so advanced in Masonry; but I do not approve of such symbols for any one. "Why not?" said my neighbor, "I've been a Mason since I was twenty-one, and have seen nothing wrong in it yet."

So our talk turned on the character of Freemasonry in relation to Christianity, when he declared that to be a good Mason was to be a good Christian. This I of course denied, because Masonry claims to be a universal brotherhood in which a member might be of any other religion, Mohammedan or Brahmin, or nothing or anything, so long as he was a loyal Mason; and so would expect to go to the grand lodge above when he died. My neighbor said, "You don't understand Masonry." But a Mason with us declared his agreement with my statements, adding that "the Christian religion was no better than the others. That though Jesus was a good man, he was only like other good men." I said, "You would be called an infidel by Christians, and infidels, of course, regard Jesus as a false teacher—a liar—when he says: 'I am the way the truth and the life. No man cometh to the Father but by me.' Yes, and Freemasonry justifies infidelity by this false charge."

There was no loss of good temper in our talk; there seemed an increasing interest; but when I came to part with my companions I invited them to come to church with me; but he smiled as he told me he was going to see a sick friend, evidently hinting that his good works would better entitle him to future reward than the perfect work of Christ. Now let us be as charitable as possible and admit that my neighbor Mason sincerely believes that his Masonry is as good as, or better than, Christianity. Still it is evident that it deludes him by the fundamental error that he shall be saved by good works of his own as taught by Masonry, and thus he is practically also an infidel, who denies some of the vital teachings of Christ and his apostles. For example, Jesus says, "All men should honor the Son as they honor the Father....he that heareth my word and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life." John 5: 23,24. And his apostle Paul tells us that "a man is not justified by the works of the law, but by the faith of Jesus Christ....for by the works of the law shall no flesh be justified." Gal. 2: 16. But Freemasonry teaches "another Gospel," and so comes under the divine anathema, Gal. 1: 7,8,9. It is, therefore, one of the anti-Christs that abound in our pitiable world, and perhaps they were never more active than they are to-day in all Christendom.

HOW TO GET RID OF RODENTS.

The Old Bell Trick Is Declared to Be the Most Efficacious.

A gentleman who has experimented and insists that he knows what he is talking about says that it is possible entirely to clear premises of rats by a simple device.

One must have a trap that will catch a live rat. It is a good plan to chloroform the creature, as then there is no danger of getting bitten, and the bite of a rat is sometimes a very troublesome thing.

Then a tiny, tinkling bell is fastened around the rat's neck by a fine, strong chain or a wire, with the ends securely twisted, so that the rat may neither slip the collar off nor be caught in any place that it may attempt to crawl through.

In a few minutes it will recover from the effects of the chloroform, when it should be turned loose in the cellar, or whatever building one chooses to clear of these troublesome tenants.

The noise of the bell frightens it, and it rushes instinctively toward its comrades, and they in turn become frightened, and a panic takes possession of the entire colony. This is certainly a good way to banish rats.

It is suggested that a similar experiment be tried on the ground mole. These creatures are said to be extremely sensitive to noise, and the tinkling of a little bell through underground ways might be the means of driving them out of the neighborhood.

How to Shoot "on the Wing."

It is not difficult to shoot a bird "on the wing" with a little sensible practice. Every human limb is subordinated to the eye. It therefore follows that if while looking at a bird you can mechanically bring the barrel of your gun up exactly in line with your eye, pulling the trigger the instant the fircarm reaches that point, the bird will be hit. Consequently the main essential in wing shooting is accuracy and rapidity in elevating your gun to your shoulder while you gaze at a certain object. This can be practiced just as well with an empty gun as with a loaded one, and a few weeks' exercise will make you more than a passable marksman.

How to Use Kerosene For Many Purposes

To clean windows and mirrors add a tablespoonful of headlight or kerosene oil to a gallon of tepid water. A polish will remain on the glass that no mere friction can give.

To remove fruit stains saturate the stains with kerosene, rub thoroughly with baking soda and leave in the sun.

To remove paint from any kind of cloth saturate the spot with kerosene and rub well. Repeat if necessary.

To clean brass stair rods, brass bedsteads and other brasses, rub with kerosene and rotten stone, put on with a soft cloth and polish with a dry cloth, soft paper or chamois.

To remove rust from kettles or other ironware rub with kerosene and let them stand. Keep a day and then wash with hot water and soap, repeating if necessary.

Tarnished lamp burners may be rendered almost as good as new by boiling them in water to which a teaspoonful of soda and a little kerosene have been added. Then scour with kerosene and scouring brick, and polish with chamois or soft leather.

To clean iron work rub with a cloth dampened with kerosene.

To renew woodwork and furniture rub with kerosene and then with linseed oil.

To renovate black walnut furniture varnish with black varnish plentifully diluted with kerosene.

How to Blue Steel.

In order to blue steel pieces evenly the following will give satisfactory results: First blue the object without any special regard to uniformity of color. If it proves to be imperfect, take a piece of dead wood that does not crumble too easily or of clean pith and whiten the surface with rouge without letting it be too dry. Small pieces thus prepared, if cleaned and blued with care, will assume a very uniform tint.

How to Pack Small Chickens For Market.

Before packing broilers in barrels for shipment to market precaution to remove all animal heat must be taken. It may be done by placing them in ice water after they are picked, allowing them to remain in it 10 or 12 hours, then removing and hanging up by the feet in a cool place to drain. After this wipe them dry with a clean towel and put a layer of broilers in the barrel, then a layer of ice, broken in pieces the size of a turkey's egg, covering the broilers well with the ice, followed by alternate layers of broilers and ice until the barrel is full, which should be covered with clean muslin and a thickness of bagging.

THE TREND OF LODGEISM

The Boston Record gives the account of a funeral of a prominent lodge man, Leopold Vogel. He had, while in the boot and shoe business at Jamaica Plain, gathered a fortune of $50,000. His funeral is reported as the largest ever known in that community. The character of Vogel affords a striking illustration of the trend of lodgeism in producing a blind animal feeling respecting death. The Record thus defines his character.

"Vogel was a peculiar man in many respects. He had a deep-rooted abhorrance of churches and ministers; he was an ardent society or club member, and he loved beer with a genuine German love. Vogel had decided opinions regarding the conduct of his own funeral, and so he left sealed instructions for the program of that occasion with Gottlieb Rothfuss, an intimate friend, who carried out Vogel's expressed desires to the letter.

"First of all came the request that his friends should not give themselves over to grief, but should be as merry as if he were still among them. Then, lest the attendants at the funeral should become over dry and dusty with the march, Vogel ordered his admisistrator to provide a liberal quantity of beer for the occasion, that all might not only satisfy their thirst, but might drink and enjoy themselves as he was wont to do.

"Ministers were forbidden from participation in the funeral exercises; but Mr. Rothfuss was requested to read the letter Vogel had left, and add such commentary as he might wish. This strange funeral took place in Schul Verein Hall on Danforth street, and hundreds were turned away for lack of room. There was a large and beautiful display of flowers, including the gates ajar, a Bible and a target.

"After the reading of the letter and a brief eulogy the funeral procession took up the line of march to Forest Hills. A brass band headed the procession, and Teutonia Lodge, Hauraguri of Dedham and Kossuth Lodge of Roxbury, Quinnobequin Lodge, I. O. O. F., of Jamaica Plain, the Germania Rifle Club and Germania Lodge of Freemasons of Boston, followed. Next came the hearse, drawn by four black horses, with long black mantles, and then ten pall bearers from the various organizations to which Vogel had belonged, and forty carriages brought up the rear.

"The route of the procession was lined with spectators, and nearly 2,000 persons had congregated around the grave. The last services for the dead were conducted by Joseph Gahm, grand master of Germania Lodge. After the interment the whole procession marched back to Schul Verein Hall, where cigars and lager beer were liberally provided, and rapidly consumed for several hours, while the virtues of Leopold Vogel were made the chief subject of conversation."

UNLAWFUL STRIVING.

Rev. J. P. Stoddard made a good point in his address in the Baptist church at Roslindale, Mass., against the folly of working for good objects through secret organizations. He said:

"Over these evils and others akin is spread one vast network of secret combinations for political and other purposes diverse in name, form and object, but springing from one tap root and tending in the same direction. Romanism, the liquor oligarchy, the house that is the way to hell, going down to the chambers of death, with all other organic systems that hate the light, are simply parts of one stupendous whole, whose body is falsehood, and whose soul is Beelzebub. Together they constitute Satan's earthly empire, over which he rules with a devil's delight. No marvel that when confronted by such an allied power of evil, the faint hearted tremble, or that the strongest and bravest are sometimes perplexed. Nor is it strange that when witnessing the triumphs of the wicked, some should conceive the idea of turning their own weapons against them. 'Fighting fire with fire' has passed into a proverb which too many accept as sound and logical. Never was a greater fallacy suggested by the father of lies. Fire is often used to advantage when contending with the destructive element on our Western prairies, but it has no place in the domain of moral conflict. He that contends for the victor's laurel upon the moral battlefield, is not crowned except he strive lawfully. Those who seek to destroy the devil or any of his works with fire stolen from his altar, need expect no better fate than befell the men who cast Shadrach, Meshack and Abed-nego into the burning fiery furnace. It is only the Holy Ghost and fire which comes down from God out of heaven that the devil fears; and God never sends these destroyers of unrighteousness to co-operate in schemes borrowed or stolen from the devil. The devil once proposed to form a partnership with Christ, and put in the kingdoms of this world and the glory of them as his share in the concern, and he offers stock in his bogus concern to every man or movement having either character or influence in the world. He urges the church and ministry to take liberally. He fairly forces whole blocks of his worthless stock upon the state and her party politicians, and no man made in the image of God escapes his attention. Now it is under such a condition that we are compelled to choose and act. Christ and his example on one side, the devil and his offer on the other, and the word of command comes, 'choose ye this day whom ye will serve.'"

THAT AMAZING WILLIMANTIC SAVINGS BANK.

What a record! Ten years of incompetence; ten years of slouchy bookkeeping; ten years of directorlal stupidity; ten years of bank examiners' dullness; misapplication of funds; shortness of accounts; a scalling down of deposits 16 per cent; a straight theft; straw bonds; the flight of the treasurer; the bank ready for a receiver; another scaling down of deposits probable; and a board of directors who do not feel certain that there is any criminal evidence against John L. Walden, the incompctent and criminal treasurer who is missing.

There is no doubt in any one else's mind that there is evidence enough about that institution, if justice were done, to send several men to prison. It will be a shame if the men who have been guilty of such criminal negligence of duty are not made to suffer.—Norwich Bulletin.

The Hartford Courant, of Aug. 12, from which the above was taken, contains a column headed, "New Bank Surprises." Some of the headlines are, "Pass-books given but no record kept;" "No entries made of various important transactions;" "Many unrecorded mortgages." These must now be added to the list of charges recited by the Bulletin. But probably the directors are still uncertain about Walden.

SANCTIFIED COMMON SENSE.

There is no place in which common sense is more in place than in the religious sphere. The Bible enjoins no duty which is not based upon the best common sense. Sometimes reformers think it is common sense to secure a large following by suppressing part of the truth. But in the long run such compromises always fail. We dishonor Christ by being ashamed of any part of his truth. "They that honor me I will honor," is a law as certain as rising and setting suns.

Stephen Merritt gives some good thoughts along this line in the King's Messenger. He says: "Common sense said, 'Separation;' worldly wisdom said, 'No,' and so when the question came: 'Shall I come out from among them?' and my Masonic associations stood between me and a sweeter communion with Him, I did not confer with flesh and blood; did not say, will it pay, profit or please? but, returning my jewel of gold, I left all and followed Him, not to my loss but gain.

"Masonic ministers are afraid and hug their chains, and cling to their bondage, when sanctified common sense would lead them out to liberty and light. It is not good common sense to be bound when you might be free, to be empty when you may be full, to run in narrow, rough ruts when you might mount and fly. Why is it thus? Why, trying to save life they lose it. Seeking for place, position and pay, they lose even them, and are of no account.

"Renown, recognition, remuneration and remembrance comes only to those who are filled with the Holy Ghost. Where would Peter or Paul or Barnabas or Stephen have been to-day without Him? No one would have ever heard of them in this day. Where would Wesley, Whitefield, Finney or Caughey be? Their names would be forgotten. Common sense tells us the way to achieve a record for good, and to be blest with achievements in the work of the Lord that shall remain, is to receive the Holy Ghost. Everyone that does enthrone him receives power that is abiding; and a Holy Ghost person never dies; their lives are transmitted to others, and being dead they yet speak, and being buried their lives live in others, and walk the world as a thing of life. Common sense says, 'Seek first,' and all things are added. No loss in the Holy Ghost. Lose a friend, gain a host; lose a dollar, gain a thousand; lose a fortune, gain a crown.

"Oh, for a sanctified common sense that believes God, and accepts and secures the Holy Ghost."

THE MISSING TREASURER.

Is it true that nobody is concerned about the whereabouts of the disappeared Mr. Walden; that public and private anxioty about him is satisfactorily allayed, momentarily at least, with the offer of a reward--for the return of him? No, not at all, but for the return of the bank books he took away with him.--Norwich Record.

If it comes about that those books are returned, who is more likely to get the reward than Walden? The sort of man Walden was may be partly inferred from his membership in a dancing club. It is reported, by a man who should know, that every person about whom anything not agreeable to himself has been said in connection with the misfortunes of the National and the Dime Savings Banks, was a member of the Harmonica Dancing Club. One would think that this might have been noticed by hard-headed, practical men.

"Is it true," asks the Record, "that nobody is concerned about the whereabouts of the disappeared Mr. Walden?" It notices that the reward is offered for the missing books, not for the missing man. The Bulletin marks the uncertainty of the bank directors about there being any criminal evidence that John L. Walden has injured their bank. Possibly neither is aware that John L. Walden is a Mason.

RELIGIOUS LIBERTY.

Fifteen months ago the Methodist Ministers' meeting started a movement to secure for Protestants in the republics of Peru, Eucador and Bolivia the same liberty of conscience that is enjoyed by Roman Catholic citizens in the United States. Quite recently editorials have appeared in the Chicago Times-Herald, the Inter Ocean, the Chicago Tribune, the Chicago Evening Journal, the Citizen, the Northwestenn Christian Advocate and the Interior, strongly endorsing this movement.

An interesting correspondence between the Chicago Methodist Preachers' Association and the high authorities of the Roman Catholic church has just reached a satisfactory conclusion, and as it illustrates an era of better feeling between Catholics and Protestants, a sketch of it will be of general interest.

In April, 1894, a committee of the association was appointed to protest to the Pope:

"That our Protestant brethren in the republics of Peru, Eucador and Bolivia labor under oppressive disabilities that affect not only the profession of their faith, and the public worship of God according to the dictates of their conscience, but also their civil and inalienable right to be legally married without being compelled to forswear their religious convictions," and to respectfully and earnestly request him to secure for these Protestants "the same liberty of conscience that is enjoyed by Roman Catholic citizens of this country."

The committee having the matter in charge went at its work promptly and vigorously, but met with discouragements. After more than a year of attempts to get some expression of opinion from the Roman Catholic authorities, Cardinal Gibbons replied to the committee as follows:

Rome, June 14, 1895.

Mr. John Lee;

Dear Sir:—In reply to your favor of the 20th ult. I beg to say that some days ago I referred the matter of the disabilities of Protestants in Peru, Eucador and Bolivia to the cardinal secretary of state. His eminence now writes me as follows:

"The letter written to your eminence by Mr. Lee of Chicago has reference to a state of things solely dependent upon the civil laws in force in the republics of Peru, Eucador and Bolivia. Neverthless, as your eminence has been pleased to communicate to me the said letter, I have written to the apostolic delegate in the above-named republics to obtain precise information concerning the laws which affect the condition of Protestants there, as regards both the exercise of their religion and the celebration of marriages. In communicating this to your eminence, and taking upon myself to call the attention of the holy see to the information which the aforesaid delegate will send, I am, etc."

Availing myself of the opportunity to tender to you my best wishes for your welfare, I am, dear sir, yours sincerely in Christ, J. Cardinal Gibbons.

All fair and rational Catholics everywhere will favor the privileges for which the committee has asked, and will indorse the statement of that good Catholic, Captain Finerty, who says in the current issue of his paper, The Citizen, "Mr. Lee deserves praise for his manly perseverance in this matter, and we hope the action taken by the cardinal secretary of the holy see will have the good effect of abolishing odious religious restrictions in the countries named."

All Protestant denominations will be gratified at the outcome of the correspondence, while Mr. Lee may specially plume himself that, after many discouraging trials, he had the grace to persevere, and at last found out the postal route that leads from Chicago to the Vatican.

The "Mr. Lee of Chicago," to whom the cardinal secretary of state refers in his letter to Cardinal Gibbons, is the Rev. John Lee, pastor of the Wheadon Methodist Episcopal church of Evanston.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Pres. C. A. Blanchard's admirable address on "The Church and the Lodge," before the Northfield, Mass., Conference, we will publish in abstract next week.

—Rev. H. W. Johnston, who is at the head of the Wesleyan Methodist Mission in Africa, spent last Sabbath in Wheaton and preached two excellent sermons in the College church.

—Rev. J. A. Edmondson, pastor of the M. E. church, Vermont, Ill., visited the Cynosure office last week. He is a man of influence and wields it powerfully against the secret lodge system.

—A new Indiana subscriber writes, "I never knew a Mason to lose a suit in court during my life, now past fifty years. I knew a Mason that killed his wife, and went to California a free man, as regards the law."

—Rev. J. C. Reiff of the Dunkard church at Huntington, Pa., writes us: "We neither admit nor retain members in the Dunkard church who are members of any secret organization. This principle is strictly carried out throughout the brotherhood."

—Some of our correspondents enquire, "What has become of the Lodge Lamp?" If they will refer to their June number they will find that it was an eight page or double number including June and July. The August number will be issued this week.

—The Y. M. C. A. of Chicago made a canvass of the city to ascertain how many young men attended the churches. They found that only five out of one hundred were regular attenders, and that there were four secret lodges for every church, and that these lodges were mostly filled with young men.

—Rev. John Lee, pastor of the Wheadon M. E. church of Evanston, was a caller at the Cynosure office last week. He claims to be a devoted friend of our cause. He has been taking a deep interest in securing the rights of Protestants in South American countries by correspondence with the leaders of the Romish church.

—President Blanchard called at the Cynosure office upon his return from the Moody Conference at Northfield. Counting laymen as well as ministers there were some fifteen hundred present on the evening that he spoke upon the lodge question. It was seed sown over a very wide field. May it bring forth a hundred fold.

—Readsboro, Vt., is a town of some over a thousand inhabitants. It is presumably a lively town as it has a band which attended the Knight Templar Conclave at Boston last week. With the band went no doubt quite a party, the expenses being several hundred dollars. Vermont like New Hampshire is largely under lodge rule while nine out of ten of the rank and file are simply dupes overcome with the honor of associating with "Right Eminent" this, or "Sir Knight" that.

—The Congregational churches have a national gathering once in three years called a Triennial Association. The last meeting was in 1892, at Minneapolis, Minn., at which time a committee was appointed to report on secret societies at their next meeting. We are glad to announce that President Blanchard is one of that committee. The Triennial Association at which this committee are to report is to be held this year in Syracuse, N. Y., during the first week in October. We shall keep our readers posted as to the results. The N. C. A. will supply delegates with literature.

—Bro. W. H. Layton, of Blackmore, Ringgold county, Ia., writes: "I pray for the success of the anti-secrecy cause, believing it to be the cause of Christ, our dear Redeemer, for whose sake we ought to be willing to suffer persecution. The Bible declares 'All they who live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution.'" It was to Bro. Layton's home, nine miles from Kellerton, that Elder D. P. Rathbun was taken all covered with blood and mud on the night of the Kellerton mob, June 21, 1881. It was there he lay for many weary weeks on a bed of suffering. while J. P. Stoddard, Lewis Blanchard and other heroes of the cause visited him in his affliction.

—The Woman's Voice of Boston says: "The Manitoba school question seems as far from settlement as ever. Premier Greenway has refused to recede from his position in regard to the Catholic schools, announces that he will accept no compromise, nor consent to the slightest change in the Manitoba school act. To a direct question whether he would agree to a compromise, he made this reply, 'The communication will be treated respectfully and carefully considered. However, I do not think the sending of it is likely to provide the Dominion Government with a way out of the difficulty. We will stand or fall by national schools. We cannot consent to return to Catholic schools.'"

—The Cissna Park (Ill.) Review of August 1 contains a letter from our good friend J. S. Hickman, in which he proves the oft-denied fact that Masonry has been revealed. He says: "There is perhaps not a single county in the State of Illinois but what some lodge in each county has been watched by outsiders from first to last in the so-called "work" of the A. F. and A. M. organization, and the testimony of these would prove that the secrets (?) of the order could be proved by outsiders, as charged by the writer. Scores of seceders could be introduced from all over the country. The law court records prove the same thing, as they are to be had to-day and can be read by outsiders, corroborating that these charges are as so alleged. We particularly refer to the Morgan trials, as spread out on the court records in the State of New York; and yet you fellows are peddling out for ready cash these so-called secrets; and, perchance, if you bury the dead and assist the widow and orphans with this money fraudulently obtained, you call it charity! Go to your dictionary and see if 'charity' has any such a meaning. The writer is glad he is an American citizen and that he has the right to hold up to ridicule all such frauds. Our country is menaced by three great evils: the money power, the rum power, and the lodge power; but the greatest danger is from this sneaking and, in some respects, this hidden power. But the writer believes that the good sense of the American people will finally put all these powers to rout. Anything but a secret, sneaking foe! Open and fair dealing is what we want. We hope that the fellow, for his own self-respect, will confine himself to arguments, and not take up the role of the street gamin by insinuations, and then have them printed in capital letters. Be a man."

SUBSCRIBE FOR THE CYNOSURE.—WHY.

1. The Cynosure is the most feared and thoroughly hated by the lodge leaders of any opponent to their deep-laid schemes.

2. It is blazing the way for the non-testifying churches in this reform that is to lead them out into the Canaan of light and freedom.

3 It is the organ of communication and bond of union between widely-distributed forces contending for the destruction of the anti-Christ of these last days.

4. Old subscribers should renew in order not to part company with such a precious friend. Those who have never taken it should subscribe in order to form its acquaintance.

5. The reform it advocates bears a vital relation to every other, because no reform legislation can be effective while its enforcement is in the hands of secret lodge members sworn to favor one another.

6. That our free institutions are assailed by secret and subtle foes the most incredulous cannot doubt, and it is the mission of the Cynosure to sound the alarm and warn the people of this danger.

7. Our interest in any reform will be in proportion to our knowledge of it. And the best means of informing ourselves and others on this question and thereby deepening our interest in the subject is by reading the Cynosure.

8. It is the most reliable source for obtaining information upon the history, character and doings of the secret empire that is accessible to the people. No other paper has such facilities for turning the light upon this important subject.

9. It is independent, and neither courts the favor of the great or condones the sins of the wealthy; nor does it "call good evil or evil good" at the behest of party, church or lodge. It does not shun within its sphere to declare the whole counsel of God.

10. The paper will not only visit your home each week, keeping yourself and family in touch with the work and literature of the movement, but it will afford you an opportunity of circulating it among your neighbors and interesting them in the cause.

11. The Cynosure's long fight against great odds appeals to every brave man's sympathy. It antagonizes the most powerful foe of the church to-day. In early days it went through two baptisms of fire, but, like Moses' burning bush, it was not consumed.

12. The one idea of the Cynosure is broad. It is not a party or denominational journal. It stands for the authority of Christ and his law. It opposes secret organizations because they rend and destroy Christ's three divine institutions, the family, the church and the state.

13 It has enlisted in the various churches faithful, radical, life-long friends who have stood by the paper from its first issue. It is an honor to be enrolled with such a devoted class of witnesses for Christ. Its writers are able, self-sacrificing, loyal to Christ and their convictions of truth.

14 The Cynosure is the right arm of the anti-secret movement. The agent or lecturer comes and goes, but the paper comes and comes, and it goes where the lecturer cannot. No other reform is so dependent upon its literature, because so few platforms and pulpits are open for the discussion of this question.

15 The Cynosure has during twenty-seven years been faithfully declaring its testimony on this great question. It is no longer an experiment. The fact that it has been enabled to pursue its work for so many years without interruption is evidence that God is hearing the prayers of these witnesses and blessing their testimony.

16 The Cynosure is in line with twenty different denominations in this country which exclude secretists by rule from their communion. It has been acknowledged that the paper has been a tower of strength to the loyal element in these communions. It ought, then, to be a matter of conscience with each church member to subscribe for it.

17. Because it is the duty of all citizens and followers of Christ to post themselves on the evils of secret societies. It is impossible to be an intelligent, loyal Christian and remain silent on this subject. The excuse that you have too many papers will not justify you in refusing to support this firstclass anti-secrecy paper. Stop half your other papers and take the Cynosure.

18. The power and influence of the anti-secret movement is largely estimated by the number of those who support its organ. The number of Cynosures taken in any community is the best index of its reliable aggressive interest in the cause. Thus by taking the paper you help to swell the influence which enables the movement to command the respect of the world.

19. You should at least contribute the price of the paper to this cause for the reason that its supporters are so few and far between. Other reforms, such as Prohibition and the Sabbath, do not encounter such opposition and have enlisted hosts of followers. Remember it costs much to speak out on this question. The great publication boards of the popular churches dare not carry in their stock, books or literature on this subject. The great church papers scarcely ever touch on it. Even the press of most of the anti-secret churches only occasionally publish on it.

SEEKERS OF PEARLS.

CHRISTIAN WORK MUST BE UNCEASING AND ABSORBING.

As the Fisher In the Sea Labors Constantly, So Should We Seek Peace of Conscience and a Clean Heart—Blessings Which Christ Has Given.

On Sunday, July 28, Madison C. Peters, D. D., preached at the Auditorium in Asbury Park, N. J. Text, Matthew xiii, 45, 46:

"The kingdom of heaven is like unto a merchant seeking goodly pearls, who when he had found one pearl of great price went and sold all that he had and bought it."

Following is an abstract from the sermon:

From a very early period pearls have ranked highest among the gems and have been highly esteemed as ornaments. The Greeks and Romans even decorated their feet with pearls, as Pliny informs us. Cleopatra's pearls, which she proposed to dissolve in vinegar at a costly repast, the subject of a wager, were valued at about $400,000.

The book of Job and other parts of Scripture make frequent allusions to pearls. It was supposed for centuries that the pearl was formed from a drop of rain falling into an oyster, when it straightway congealed into a pearl, and upon this fanciful theory many of the old pearl legends and poems are founded. Perhaps the most ancient notion was that the fish conceived the pearl from the dew of heaven, and according to the quality of the dew the pearl was pure or round or cloudy or deformed with specks; the state of the atmosphere at the time of conception and the hour of the day were supposed to have great influence on the size and color of the pearl.

But instead of having a celestial origin, mud, sand or weed is the beginning of the pearl. The grains of sand or other foreign bodies lodging between the mantle and the shell of pearl oysters produce an irritation of the delicate tissues which causes the deposition of pearly matter around them for protection. Advantage is taken of this by man, and by the introduction of different foreign bodies pearls of different shapes are made to grow. And as the pollution or irritation creates the most valuable of all jewels, so from the suffering and discord of earth our God can fashion a holiness and a harmony which shall by and by form the gates into the golden city.

The pearl is not without its prior friction, the throes and agonies of which we can have no conception. So neither could there be salvation without suffering, nor can there be holiness without conflict.

In the east men had their wealth in jewels. In the form of jewels property was most safely because most secretly kept and, in case of flight, often made necessary in that land of revolutions, most easily removed. Remember that in the east precious stones were a form of money and often of immense wealth, then you will rise to an adequate idea of the full value which Christ puts on his people in calling them his pearls or the full meaning of the figure that represents the blessings of his salvation as one pearl of great price, which all other pearls and property should be sold to buy.

Besides its money value a pearl as a beautiful emblem of salvation in respect of its color, of snowy whiteness, a purity unclouded by the slightest haze and a form so round and polished and perfect that it is impossible of improvement. What an emblem of that salvation which came perfect from the hand of God without any admixture of error and which no learning or work of ours can ever improve!

The dreadful dangers which pearl fishers have always to encounter, the dreadful deaths they have often to endure, will recall to a thinking mind the fact that the church ought to be ashamed of the spasmodic efforts she puts forth.

Think what it cost Christ to secure for us the pearl of great price, our redemption! Agonies which no mortal tongue has ever told rent and tore his holy heart, and all this agony, the agony of eternity and of infinitude, compressed into moments! The very thought is colossal. It is overmastering. Language droops under it.

As seekers for pearls make everything bend to their one absorbing purpose and live only for that, so must we make our Christian work and our Christian living the primary thing.

As all which the merchant sought in acquiring goodly pearls was found in one—the precious, peerless gem—so Jesus teaches us that the soul finds in himself all it feels the want of and has been seeking in other ways—peace of conscience, a clean heart, a renewed mind, comfort in sorrow, light in darkness, hope in difficulty and life in death.

These blessings, which cost Christ long years of suffering and deepest humiliation, bloody agony and dreadful death, in being offered to sinners who despise and reject him—how is this pearl cast before swine? To them who believe Christ is precious, but what can be more sad than to see the value a woman sets on trinkets, the pride with which she wears her pearls, while Jesus has no preciousness in her eyes?

The eldest daughter in a fashionable house was dressed for a sumptuous ball when her little sister, seeing the flashing gems in her hair, climbed on a chair, and winding her arms around her neck said, "Sissie, shall you have any jewels in your crown when you get to heaven?" She did not answer, but when she got to the assembly nothing seemed to be right to her—the lights burned dimly, the music was discordant, and the dancing lagged until she thoroughly tired of it. She ordered her carriage very early and went home. Going straight up to her little sister's bedroom and throwing herself on the bed, she awoke her and said, "Sissie, you shall have one jewel in your crown, for I'll give myself to Jesus tonight." Shall you have any jewels in your crown?

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic For the Week Beginning Aug. 25. Comment by Rev. S. H. Doyle.

TOPIC.—Conquering difficulties with Christ's help.—II Cor. xi, 24-28; xii, 7-10.

1. Difficulties (II Cor. xi, 24-28). In these verses Paul recounts the trials and tribulations that he had endured as a servant of Jesus Christ, and the long list of calamities place vividly before us the difficult path of the faithful and true servant of Christ. He had been beaten, stoned, shipwrecked, attacked by robbers, by his own countrymen and by the heathen, and had suffered much from physical privations, such as hunger, thirst and cold, and in addition to all these things there was his great anxiety for the churches which he had organized, and over which he had a general supervision. It seems hardly possible that so much that was difficult and had to be borne should have been the lot of one man, and yet Paul's experience is only that of all disciples of Christ. "Strait is the gate and narrow is the way that leads to life." The pathway of every Christian is strewn with hardships and difficulties. There are adversities, calamities, difficulties, doubts, privations, mysteries, afflictions and sorrows to be met upon every side. The one consolation in it all is that we do not meet these difficulties single handed. There is one who strengthens us, and it is through Him that strengthens us that we are enabled to do all things.

2. Conquering difficulties with Christ's help (II Cor. xii, 7-10). While troubled much in his Christian life, Paul was yet singularly blessed by his Master, and that he might not be too much exalted over these superior advantages there was given to him some affliction which he calls "a thorn in the flesh." Paul prayed three times that this might be removed, yet it was not, but instead Christ gave him grace to bear it, saying unto him, "My grace is sufficient for thee." In answer to our prayers Christ will not always remove difficulties and obstacles from our path, but He will give us the strength to conquer them. The Christian is able to undergo every trial, to brave every sort of suffering, to overcome every variety of temptation, to perform every duty because Christ helps him by His teaching, by His own patient example in enduring hardships and particularly by the abundant bestowal of His Holy Spirit.

Bible Readings.—Deut. xxxi, 6; Ps. xxiii, 3; xxxiii, 20; xlvi, 1; cxxi, 1, 2; Isa. xliii, 2; Dan. iii, 21-26; vi, 19-23; Math. v, 11, 12; xxviii, 19, 20; Rom. v, 3-6; viii, 26; Acts v, 41, 42; xxvi, 21, 22; Phil. ii, 17-19; Heb. iv, 15, 16; xi, 32-38; Jas. i, 2-5, 12; I Pet. iv, 12 16; I John v, 4, 5; Rev. iii, 10.

A Few Suggestions.

The members of one Australian society have agreed among themselves to pray regularly for one another, and a special hour is set aside on Sunday morning for this purpose. All the officers pray for one another by name, and the committees do likewise.

The Christian Endeavor cause across the water is of the genuine stripe. In England one society has, in addition to the regular committees, an "old people's committee" and an "associate members' committee." Societies on this side of the Atlantic may well heed this hint.

A capital suggestion is that no meeting of a Christian Endeavor society be allowed to pass without some item of missionary information being presented and a missionary prayer being offered. The missionary committee is made responsible for this. There is no subject with which the great missionary theme cannot accord.—Golden Rule.

Remember These Proverbs.

He whose goal is better never finds best.

Who hates not rightly will not rightly love.

Do not let your clothes smother your souls.

Blank cartridge, big gun; all talk and nothing done.

Seek God for Himself, or you will never find Him for yourself.

The rivulet can fill a bottomless cup as well as Niagara could.

You will take nothing from church unless you take much to church.

For a cracked boat a pound of putty is better than a ton of cargo.—Golden Rule.

Enduring All Things.

Paul made the sanctified soul a well rounded character, broad and liberal, that could "endure all things," could be just as much of a saint in the kitchen on a July day as in the parlor on a holiday, just as pious behind the counter six days in the week as in the pew on the Sabbath.—Mrs. C. F. Wilder.

Christian Endeavor Briefs.

The Irish Wesleyan Methodist church has practically decided to adopt the Christian Endeavor society as the official young people's movement of the denomination, instead of a Wesleyan guild.

The North Carolina state colors are white, green and gold—white for purity, green for growth and gold for sunshine.

South Carolina's Endeavorers are loyal to their churches. From the latest statistics it is learned that 97 per cent regularly attend the Sunday services, over 50 per cent regularly attend the midweek prayer meeting, and nearly 20 per cent are teachers in the Sunday school.

The territory covered by the Canadian Northwest Territories union extends north and south 367 miles and east and west 711 miles. Sixty-five societies, with a membership of 1,552, are reported.

It has been found that there are only six countries into which Christian Endeavor has not penetrated.

For genuine happiness and true mirth give me any one of the many Christian Endeavor socials that I have attended.—Bishop Rondthaler, D. D.

The Epworth league, at its biennial convention, held at Chattanooga, used the great tent used at Cleveland by the Christian Endeavor convention.

The society among the apprentices of the United States naval training station at Newport, whose members were transferred to service on the training ship Essex, has reorganized with 27 members.

What Beauty Will Ever Do.

To put it shortly, if with somewhat brutal frankness, the majority of women have hitherto wished to get married, and, being in action, though not in argument, supremely logical creatures, they discovered centuries since that the quickest and most certain way of attaining this end was to make themselves attractive to men. The most powerful form of this attractiveness has been, is and probably always will be their personal beauty, and to enhance that beauty by every means in her power and to afford as frequent and striking occasions for its display as possible have been the aims of every civilized society, in so far as women have been able to determine them. And there is not the faintest reason to believe, cranks male and female notwithstanding, that these aims have become one whit less universal, less potent or less eagerly desired.

If women are willing to pay this price, they at least show no sign of such readiness, and this can be proved not only from the consideration of their fashions in dress and analogous matters—it is even more clearly revealed in the education which is still assigned to girls, the subjects taught therein and the methods of life and study. But slight examination is needed to show that here, too, all is founded upon that same aim of rendering the girl socially attractive and effective, rather than of rendering her competent for the discharge of any special duty or making her capable and thoroughly proficient in any branch of learning or fit for any profession.—Fortnightly Review.

To Make the Hair Curl.

Tight frizzes are not permitted, but loose, natural turns are still a graceful finish, and there is just one sure way to accomplish them. Wind the lock from the very end in a flat, close wad. Be sure the very tip of the lock is snugly curved down in the very center of the little mat the turns make. Fold up the mat in a square of tissue paper. Press it, paper and hair, at night before you go to bed and let it stay in the paper all night.

In the morning, the paper unfolded, down will tumble the lock, glossy and curved into a loose series of rounds, as different as can be from the quirk of corners that passes for the usual artificial curl. No matter how long or how short the lock, it will come from this treatment "natural," and, what is more, it will seem to hold the curl, coming out in a pretty loosening of the curve instead of in sharp angles.

All this takes time, though, and a shorter way and almost as good is to wind the lock over a roll of silk, being sure the tip of the lock curves under snugly. The difference between the natural and the coaxed curl is all in the curve of the tip. No natural curl ever starts to corkscrew right from the scalp, though a wave or so may show there. So devote all attention to the rounding of the ends.

Discriminating Wisdom.

A correspondent thinks he has discovered a discrepancy in the Bible because one verse says, "Answer a fool according to his folly lest he be wise in his own conceit," while another verse says, "Answer not a fool according to his folly lest thou also be like unto him."—Albany Times-Union.

Grace In Walking.

To put the foot down prettily is to walk gracefully, to seem to have a pretty foot whether it is really pretty or not, to secure a stylish carriage, to make the skirts hang well and the waist seem long, to—well, to put the foot down well is to secure many of the blessings of life. Don't believe it when you are told to put the toe down first. The foot should be so lightly poised on the ankle that when the lift from the hip is made in taking a step the foot naturally swings, toe down, so that the forward part of the foot touches the ground first. That is very different in effect from stiffly pointing the toe down and trying to walk that way.

Put the feet down so that the heels would keep pretty closely on an imaginary chalk line, the toes always falling a little outside of the line. The full weight of the body should be on the foot that is on the ground, and one ought to be able to balance prettily at any moment on the single foot that is supposed to be carrying the walker's weight. If this can be done, it is proof that the body is well poised and well carried.

The woman who wears a house gown of correct length, that gracefully hangs about the feet and touches the floor all around, should hardly lift her sole from the floor when she walks. The heel rises a little, but the toe pushes prettily forward, shoving the hem of the dress out of the way as the step is taken. To put the foot down well is to walk well, to stand well, to be well, and, besides, it has a moral side, for the girl who has the strength of mind to say "No" in the right place is the girl who can "put her foot down," isn't she? If a woman could only be guaranteed that footing her bills would be included, she would be converted to the proper way of walking at once, but that cannot be done, and graceful walkers are very scarce.—Philadelphia Press.

Because She Is Fifty.

Some time ago, after publishing an article on the sad case of "The Unemployed In Pall Mall," I received a very pathetic letters from a lady, who claimed to represent a class of unemployed perhaps the most deserving of all. I have kept this letter by me for three or four weeks, in the hope of arriving at some practical suggestion for the relief of such cases as it describes. But the problem is too hard for me. The writer is one of the numerous daughters of an officer, left with an income insufficient to keep her in decency, and at 50 years of ago she finds every field of employment closed to her, simply because she is 50. Let her speak for herself:

I am still active and energetic, with good health. I do not look much over 40. I can teach well all the usual subjects except music, and I am a fluent French scholar, but I date from the pre-examination period, and, alas, have no certificates. I am an experienced housekeeper and understand accounts. I could chaperon girls, having been accustomed to moving in good society. I could mother the children of a widower, for I have had great experience with children, more especially with delicate ones. I could be useful to a literary man, for I am a rapid writer, or as a secretary, for I can write a letter from a hint of what is required. Yet nothing can I find to do. I have answered advertisement after advertisement. I have corresponded with all those agents whose frauds you so frequently expose. In despair I ask: What am I to do? Can you, and will you, suggest some opening?

Can anybody else? Although the problem is too much for a mere journalist, it seems to me one well worth the consideration of the benevolent. For the above is not the voice of an individual only, but of a class, and a large one.—London Truth.

Housekeepers Should Rest.

Either in city or country the homekeeper should so arrange her affairs as to have the middle of the day to rest and the remainder of the time live out of doors as much as possible. Too much cannot be said in favor of planning and systematizing the work as well as simplifying it. Where only one pair of hands do all—and this is the case in a majority of homes—it takes a good head to keep the house cool and comfortable, the cuisine well managed and yet not overdo. Trained intelligence of a practical kind is growing among women. In cooking schools we learn how to conserve force—that is, not waste steps and strength—and learning in one department helps all.

A little after the midday lunch or dinner the homekeeper ought to retire to her room and in a loose wrapper rest, and if possible go to sleep. Next to good nutrition, nothing so well sustains vigor as this state of equilibrium. Ten minutes' slumber refreshes the nervous system, wipes off the narrow marks of care and makes life seem worth living. First, feel at ease and peace with all the world. Forget everything unpleasant, throw care to the winds and glide into that region where all is beauty and happiness. Let frets and worries pass by as idle wind. And don't say you can't; you can! Having faith in the eternal goodness, show it practically. Have we reached this present year 1895, through the evolution of billions upon billions of ages, to be thrown off the balance by some little perturbatien of the domestic machinery? Next year, if not next week, it will be forgotten.—Hester M. Poole in Household News.

Transparent Window Blinds.

A new invention for the production of a fabric for window blinds is reported from Yorkshire, England. The material and apparatus employed and the process adopted in the manufacture give a fabric that is transparent from the room, but opaque from without. The fabric contains linen, aluminium, isinglass, borax, tallow, etc. The apparatus contains a cylinder filled with a patent glassifying compound, in which bobbins of linen yarn are placed. The yarn is saturated and coated with this compound as it is wound off the bobbins and drawn through an opening at the top of the cylinder. It is then passed over a roller, situated above this opening and down to a series of heating and drying plates; then around another roller, to the rewinding arrangement of the apparatus, where the yarns are wound upon the bobbins again and are then ready for a knitting machine.

The inventor claims that this blind is so flexible that it can be easily rolled up and down; that it is so transparent that a room is not darkened when it is drawn; that while those inside a room can see through the blind almost as perfectly as though it were glass, those outside cannot see inside the room, unless the latter is lighted most brilliantly and darkness prevails outside, and that it is artistic, and therefore pleasing to the eye. The blinds at present are hand painted, but it is expected that in the future it will be possible to print them by machinery, and thus reduce the expenses of production, so that the cost of fitting windows will not be much greater than that incurred by ordinary blinds.—Upholsterer.

A Parisian Novelty.

A Parisian novelty for midsummer is the frock of white brilliantine, with vest, collar and cuffs of grass linen. The godet skirt has each gore defined by a line of grass linen insertion, which gives it a novel touch. The waist has a short Eton jacket effect, with a full vest of eyelet grass linen over white silk. The rather small revers are lined with white silk and edged with grass linen insertion. Brilliantine is used for the leg o' mutton sleeve, which has three bands of the insertion arranged half an inch apart as the cuff.

OLD DRINKING LAWS.

DRUNKENNESS SEVERELY PUNISHED BY THE ANCIENTS.

Romans Prohibited Wine to Women and Men Under Thirty—Mohammed Bastinadoed Drunkards—Aristotle and Plato Favored Rigorous Treatment of Tipplers.

The offense of drunkenness seems to have been a source of great perplexity to the ancients, who tried any number of ways of dealing with it. If none of them succeeded, it was in all probability because they failed to suppress the means by which this insidious disease is incited and propagated. Severe treatment was often attempted without any satisfactory result.

The Romans prohibited the drinking of wine upon the part of men under 30 years of age, a rule which applied to women of all ages. If a wife were declared guilty of consuming fermented liquor her husband might legally scourge her to death.

The Carthaginians prohibited governors, magistrates, soldiers and servants from drinking anything stronger than water, and the Athenians made it a capital offense for a magistrate to be drunk.

The Suevi seem to have realized the necessity of drastic measures, as they went so far as to prevent the importation of wine into their country.

The Locrians, under Zalenous (660 B. C.), made it a capital offense to drink wine unless it were mixed with water; even an invalid was not exempt from punishment unless his physician had ordered him to drink undiluted wine. History does not relate whether physicians were in the habit of giving such instructions.

Pittacus of Mytilene (651-569 B. C.) made a law that he who, when drunk, committed any crime should receive double the sentence which he would have received had he been sober. Aristotle and Plato considered this law the height of wisdom. The Roman censors were empowered to expel a senator for drunkenness and were at liberty to confiscate his horse.

Mohammed ordered drunkards to be bastinadoed with 80 blows.

Some nations seem to have approved of "moderate" drinking, as they limited the quantity to be consumed at one sitting. This was the system adopted in ancient Egypt, but the limit does not appear to be stated in any history now extant. The Arabians fixed the quantity at 12 glasses a man. Unfortunately, however, the size of the glasses was not clearly defined. The Anglo-Saxons ordered silver nails to be fixed on the side of drinking cups, so that each person might know how much he had consumed. This method is said to have been introduced in consequence of King Edgar noticing the drunken habits of the Danes.

Lycurgus of Thrace (about 900 B. C.) was a thorough prohibitionist; he ordered the vines to be cut down.

The Spartans tried to turn the vice (as it was then regarded) of drunkenness into contempt by systematically making their slaves drunk once a year, in order to show their children how contemptible men looked when in an inebriated condition.

Drunkenness was considered much more vicious in some classes of persons than in others. The ancient Indians, for example, held it lawful to kill a king when he was drunk. Charlemagne (A. D. 742-814) enacted a law that judges and pleaders should do their business fasting.

The English expression "drunk as a lord" proves that at one time to become intoxicated was regarded as indicative of aristocratic birth and breeding. Moreover, "a three bottle man" was respected as one who displayed qualities which his friends might well envy. It is not a great many years since people supposed total abstinence from alcoholic stimulants actually shortened life, and there exists in London today a gentleman whose life was refused by an insurance company solely upon the ground that he was a teetotaler!—New York Voice.

Won't Marry a Man Who Drinks.

The young women of Danbury, Conn., have started a new ball to rolling, says the New York Voice. They have organized a society each member of which pledges herself not to marry any man who drinks. "The lips that touch wine shall never touch mine" seems to be the idea, and a mighty good idea it is too. Since railroad corporations are refusing to intrust the care even of a freight train to a man who drinks it is time for women to refuse to intrust their destiny and the destiny of their children to such men. Stick to it, ladies.

Sobriety Is Truthfulness.

A recent decision of a court was that a man with three drinks in him was not to be believed as against a man with two, a man with two as against a man with one, a man with one as against a man with none. Courts of justice generally observe the rule that sobriety is truthfulness.—Scranton (Pa.) Index.

SABBATH SCHOOL.

LESSON IX, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, SEPT. 1.

Text of the Lesson, Joshua vi, 8-20—Memory Verses, 15, 16—Golden Text, Heb. xi, 30—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

8. "The seven priests bearing the seven trumpets of rams' horns passed on before the Lord." At Gilgal the reproach of Egypt was rolled away in connection with the rite of circumcision, the feast of Passover was kept, and the manna that had come from heaven so faithfully all those 40 years ceased after they had eaten the old corn of the land (chapter v, 8-12). Joshua also had taken second place in command, the Lord Himself being the Captain of the host (v. 14, 15). Now under their Captain's orders they are beginning their march around Jericho, which city was straitly shut up because of Israel (verse 1).

9. "And the armed men went before the priests that blew with the trumpets." The armed men, the priests, the ark, all the people. Such was the order of the procession as they marched around the city. The ark is the symbol of the presence of the Lord and all was being done "that all the people of the earth might know the hand of the Lord, that it is mighty, and that they might fear before Him" (iv, 24). Whether the trumpets were rams' horns or silver, their sound was suggestive of atonement, by virtue of which God can deal with man.

10. "Ye shall not shout, nor make any noise with your voice, neither shall any word proceed out of your mouth, until the day I bid you shout." This was very trying to their humanity. Their God had divided the Red sea and the Jordan for them, had fed them with food from heaven and brought water from the rock for them. He was the mighty God of Jacob, and He was going to make the walls of Jericho fall down flat, for He said He would (verse 5), and the hearts of many must have longed to cry out to those scoffers on the walls: "Our God will bring down those walls. He will conquer you." But there was to be not a word from Israel till the appointed time. With the exception of the blasts from the rams' horns the great host passed round in silence. See Zech. ii, 13.

11. "So the ark of the Lord compassed the city, going about it once." Not a word about the people doing it. "It is God who worketh," and "the Lord alone must be exalted" (Phil. ii, 13; Isa. ii, 11).

12-14. "And the second day they compassed the city once and returned into the camp, so they did six days." Day after day the same procession and the same order. No sound but the horns of the priests. Not a word from the people—just the silent marching of the mighty host and the quiet and orderly return to the camp. The walls of Jericho stand firm, and probably the scoffers' hearts grow harder as they find their peace undisturbed, and it is even possible that they find some amusement in watching the daily procession, the priests and their horns will have their share of ridicule, and there may have been many a surmise and even joke about what was under the blue cloth on those men's shoulders (Num. iv, 5, 6). Infidelity is about the same in all ages, and the hard speeches of ungodly sinners (Jude, 15) are always plentiful. It is ours to bear the ark in patience and meekness and faith, giving a clear and consistent testimony as to the only way of redemption through the blood of the Lamb, and at the appointed time the walls of infidelity will crumble and the kingdom will be the Lord's (Obadiah, 21).

15. "Only on that day they compassed the city seven times." This is the record of the seventh day. There must have been unusual interest in Jericho on this day as they heard the sound of the rams' horns earlier than usual and saw the hosts, instead of returning to camp, start to compass the city a second time. Then a third time, and a fourth time, and a fifth, and a sixth. The interest must have been intense, and we may imagine the walls fairly crowded to watch these unusual proceedings.

16. "Shout, for the Lord hath given you the city." This was the command of Joshua to the people as they went round the seventh time. How their pent up feelings would break forth; what a shout it must have been from hundreds of thousands of voices; shout after shout, a prolonged shout that almost, if not altogether, made the earth to tremble! The city was given to Israel before ever they compassed the city once (verse 2). It was theirs by the word of the Lord, now it is to become theirs visibly and actually. Many things are ours in Christ which we will not visibly and actually enjoy till His appointed time.

17. "Only Rahab, the harlot, shall live." By faith she perished not with the unbelievers (Heb. xi, 30, 31). The scarlet cord in her window was the outward evidence of her faith, and she rested on the words of the spies whom she had befriended, saying, according unto your words, so be it (ii, 21). Through her faith deliverance came to her father and mother and brethren and kindred (verse 23). She afterward married Salmon (who may have been one of the spies) and became the mother of Boaz (See Ruth iv, 21 and Math. i, 5).

18. "Keep yourselves from the accursed thing." The whole city and all in it were devoted to be utterly destroyed (verse 17, margin, and verse 21), and this was a warning for Israel's good. If we get mixed up with cursed things we will bring a curse upon ourselves. The only redemption from the curse is through Him who was made a curse for us (Gal. iii, 13). This was typified in the scarlet cord in Rahab's window.

19. "But all the silver and gold and vessels of brass and iron are consecrated unto the Lord." In Num. xxxi, we read that the people were permitted to take of the spoil and give unto the Lord a portion, cleansing everything by fire or water (Num. xxxi, 23), but in the case of the city of Jericho all was to be the Lord's, either for destruction or for His treasury. Jericho being the first city taken may account for this—a first fruits unto the Lord. The story of Achan in the following chapter shows the nature and punishment of the sin of covetousness, with which see also Acts v, 1-10.

20. "The wall fell down flat, so that the people went up into the city, every man straight before him, and they took the city." They slew every living thing and burned the city with fire (verses 21, 24), and Joshua pronounced a curse upon the man who would rebuild it. It becomes us to say, "Just and true are Thy ways, Thou King of Nations" (Rev. xv, 3). "His way is perfect," and some day we shall see a perfect agreement between all His doings and the fact that "God is Love." He is good and doeth good, and the Judge of all the earth cannot but do right.

HORROR AT DENVER

Death Visits Firty-Six People in Their Sleep.

HOTEL WRECKED BY AN EXPLOSION

Two Women Snatched from the Rescuers by the Fire-Fiend at the Moment of Rescue—Whole Building Blown to Pieces and the Slumbering Victims Buried in the Debris, Dead and Mangled—But Twenty-four Rescued Alive.

DENVER, Aug. 19.—The Gumry hotel, 1725 to 1733 Lawrence street, was wrecked by a terrific explosion at 12:10 a. m. The rear half of the building, a five-story brick and stone structure, went down with a crash. The hotel was crowded with guests, and many of them must have been killed, as well as the entire force of hotel employes, who were sleeping in the portion of the building which fell. On both sides of Lawrence from Seventeenth to Eighteenth streets, and on Larimer, directly back of the Gumry, the plate-glass windows of the business houses were blown in and a number of pedestrians were injured by falling glass.

Ruin of the Hotel Complete.

The hotel structure for 100 feet along the alley and extending seventy-five feet toward the front was a mass of debris. Brick and plaster were piled in heaps twenty feet high, and from this mass of wreckage could be heard the moans of the injured and dying. At 12:35 five injured persons had been taken out. They were all inmates of the upper story and sank down with the floors, escaping more fortunately than those below, who were buried in the ruins. The firemen worked like beavers digging into the debris, but made slow progress. The remaining portion of the building, from which the guests were removed by ladders as fast as possible, is expected to fall at any moment.

Scene of Inexpressible Horror.

The cause of the explosion is uncertain, but it is supposed that the battery of boilers in the hotel basement must have exploded. The sound of the explosion was heard throughout the city, awakening people in bed a mile from the scene. At 12:50 the ruins were burning fiercely and the firemen were obliged to retreat from the work of rescue. Every engine in the city poured streams into the mass, but the flames could not be possibly gotten under control before many of the injured had been cremated. As their chances of escape lessened the cries of the imprisoned people increased; heartrending shrieks rose from every portion of the great mass of wreckage.

Two Women Roasted to Death.

Two injured women had been almost extricated from the ruins when the flames approached so close that the rescuers had to abandon them for their own safety. Both voices were soon silenced, fire completing the work commenced by the explosion. The bodies of three women were also to be seen in the back part of the building, but could not be reached. At 1:30 the flames were still keeping the firemen back from the work of rescue, except just at the line of the alley wall. Of those pinioned beneath under the debris only two were thought to bo alive, both men from the fifth story, who were still lying on their beds. Both were covered with several feet of debris about their heads and could not survive another half hour.

TWENTY-TWO OF THE GUESTS.

Names of Persons Known to Have Occupied Rooms.

No meals were served in the hotel, and every guest entered on the register occupied a room in the hotel last night. Twenty-two people registered yesterday, most of them late at night, the list being as follows: Mrs. O. H. Knight, Lake City; Mrs. Knight's sons; J. L. Kirk, Omaha; J. C. Brown, Omaha; Bud Buren, Colorado Springs; J. W. Roberts and wife, Colorado Springs; Miss Jennie Howard, Boston; Mrs. C. W. Williams, Boulder; Miss Hattie H. Williams, Boulder; W. C. McClain, Huron, Kas.; Mrs. McClain and child, Huron, Kas.; Henry Sloan, Huron, Kas.; Mrs. Henry Sloan, Huron, Kas.; George Burle, Colorado Springs; E. T. McClosky, Cripple Creek, Colo.; E. French, Central City, Colo.; B. Lorah, Central City, Colo.; W. J. Corson, Pueblo; M. E. Letson, Denver.

Thus far only fifteen people who are known to have been in the building at the time of the explosion are accounted for. This leaves sixty supposed to be dead. Henry Sloan and wife, of Huron, Kas., and W. C. McClain, cashier of the Huron State bank, arrived at the hotel last night from Manitou. They are among those taken down by ladders, and are more or less injured. Mr. McClain states that he thinks there were sixty guests in the hotel, which, with the employes, would bring the number of people in the building at the time of the disaster up to seventy-five.

LATER.—Twenty-four have now been accounted for, six being probably fatally injured and the rest less seriouly. Shortly before the explosion occurred the night clerk was heard to remark that seventy guests were in the house. The list of servants will not exceed ten, making a possible death list of fifty-six.

Night Clerk Irwin is among the survivors, though badly injured. He states that there were sixty-seven rooms in the hotel, of which fifty-two were occupied, some of them by three people. In the rear portion, which is completely destroyed, were sixteen rooms, all of them occupied. The damage to the hotel will amount to from $30,000 to $40,000.

Substituting Steam for Water.

APPLETON, Wis., Aug. 15.—Since the issue of the government order prohibiting the use of water from Fox river for hydraulic power, all the mills in the Fox river valley have been exerting their resources to provide themselves with steam power. The result of these exertions begins to be apparent. A number of mills are now running wholly or in part with steam. Others are installing plants.

Librarians Elect Officers.

DENVER, Aug. 17.—The American Librarians' association decided to hold the convention in 1896 at Cleveland, O. Officers were elected as follows: President, John C. Dana, Denver; vice presidents, Henry J. Carr, Scranton, Pa.; Charles S. Dudley, Denver; Thersa West, Milwaukee; secretary, H. T. Elmendorf, St. Joseph, Mo.; treasurer, George W. Cole, Kansas City.

Chicago Father Kills His Son.

CHICAGO, Aug. 16.—Jacob Schlesser, a well-to-do grocer, shot and instantly killed his son John last night. The two quarreled over a horse which the young man claimed that the father had driven too hard.

Peculiar Accident to a Boy.

SALEM, O., Aug. 19.—A singular explosion of an empty alcohol barrel occurred at the house of W. G. Bentley, which blew his boy in the top of a pear tree, from which he fell senseless. His face was burned to a blister, and his hair was singed off. The barrel had been exposed to the sun, setting on the spigot end. Gas generated from the alcohol in the wood. The boy had just seated himself on the barrel when the explosion occurred. It is feared he cannot recover.

Mother and Child Drowned.

GRAND HAVEN, Mich., Aug. 19.—The wife and litle son of Arthur Francis, of Englewood, Ills., were accidently drowned in Spring lake. The child was in bathing and got beyond his depth when the mother went to his rescue and both were drowned.

THE DEATH RECORD.

COMMODORE HORACE SAXTON, widely known Minnesota man, at Duluth, Minn.

MISS FLAGG'S
LATEST NEW BOOK!
"A Prisoner of Hope."
COMPLETE IN ONE LARGE HANDSOME VOLUME.
Price, $1.25.
We heartily commend this new work, by Elizabeth E. Flagg, to all our friends. The narrative originated in her personal experience, two or three years ago, when she sought relief and restoration from the results of a painful accident. In that search she availed herself of a unique healer in New Jersey, whom she graphically described, at that time, in her weekly letters to this paper. The ideas created in her mind by that experience form the basis of this well-told story, and thoughtful readers will peruse it with interest. While all may not agree with its deductions, ministers of the Gospel, students in seminaries and intelligent home circles will find it pleasant food for thought. We sell it for $1.25 per copy postage prepaid.

Holden with Cords. OR THE POWER OF THE SECRET EMPIRE. By E. E. Flagg, author of "A Sunny Life," etc. This is a thrillingly interesting story, accurately true to life because mainly a narration of historical facts. In cloth, $1.00; in paper, 50 cents.

ILLINOIS PICKINGS.

NEWS NOTES OF INTEREST FROM HERE AND THERE.

Reports by Telegraph of Important Happenings in Our Own State During the Past Few Days—News of Interest to the People of Illinois.

SPRINGFIELD, Aug. 16.—For the first time in the history of the National Guard has a cavalry troop made an extended detour of the country. Troop B, of Bloomington, Ills., National Guard, spent the day going from Camp Lincoln to Clear Lake and return. The troop was divided into squads, each one sending out scouts and conducting itself as if it were in an enemy's country.

They also made careful maps of the country, showing roads, strategic points, streams and location of bridges, fords, etc. Adjutant General Orendorff was so pleased with the excellent work done by the troop that he presented each member with a revolver of the latest pattern.

SEQUEL OF A LABOR STRIKE.

Three Men Sentenced for Assaulting a Deputy United States Marshal.

SPRINGFIELD, Ills., Aug. 15.—In the United States circuit court Judge Allen sentenced Ransom Paine, John Beady, Jr., and John Stanton to three months in jail each for contempt of court in brutally assaulting Deputy United States Marshal John G. Skerrett, who was guarding the Tudor Iron works at East St. Louis. Patrick Sheehan, charged with the same offense, was discharged. Michael Brazzil was brought here from East St. Louis and lodged in jail charged with contempt of court in badly beating up Edward Morgan, an employe of the Tudor Iron works, threatening to kill Morgan and to burn the works.

Illinois Board of Equalization.

SPRINGFIELD, Aug. 14.—The Illinois state board of equalization met in annual session, State Auditor Gore presiding. Edward Culberton, of Cook county, offered a lengthy preamble and resolution regarding the assessment of the capital stock of corporations heretofore exempted by law. The opinion of the attorney general was solicited as to the board making such assessments. The matter was made the special order for next Tuesday. The state assessors' returns are tabulated and in the hands of the printer ready for action next week. All the railroads reported except two. The assessment of the state this year is $743,000,000, an increase over last year of $5,000,000. Cook county increased $4,000,000. The board adjourned to next Tuesday.

Seems a Wild Young Blade.

ROCKFORD, Ills., Aug. 17. — Charles Youngblade, 20 years old, and Miss Dora Carlson, the 19-year-old daughter of N. O. Carlson, left the city and are supposed to have eloped to either Chicago or Beloit to get married. Miss Carlson's sister gave Youngblade a check to get cashed for her and that he took with him. The young lady also appropriated a portion of her sister's wardrobe. Youngblade attempted to commit suicide in Chicago several months ago.

Does Not Apply to Parochial Schools.

SPRINGFIELD, Ills., Aug. 17.—Assistant Attorney General Newell has given his opinion that the new law requiring the United States flag to be placed on public buildings and schoolhouses does not apply to so-called parochial schools or to Sunday schools under the charge of religious denominations where religious instruction is imparted.

Appointed by Gov. Altgeld.

SPRINGFIELD, Ills., Aug. 15.—Governor Altgeld has appointed as trustees of the western insane hospital, created by the last general assembly, W. Seldon Gale, ofGalesburg; John N. Eden, of Sullivan, and Thomas Silvas, of Rock Island. The location of the new asylum has not yet been determined upon.

Altgeld Appoints Trustees.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Aug. 19.—Governor Altgeld has appointed as trustees of the Asylum for Incurables, created by the Thirty-Ninth general assembly at Chicago, John Finley, of Peoria; N. C. Warren, of Rockford and Henry Alexander, of Joliet.

Queen Vic to Parliament.

LONDON, Aug. 16.—Queen Victoria's speech to parliament is an unimportant document. The most interesting portions call attention to the Chinese and Armenian outrages, the latter of which cause the most anxiety, her majesty saying that she is anxiously awaiting the sultan's decision on proposed Armenian reforms. She tells parliament that nothing will be done at this session except providing the necessary funds to carry on the government.

May Not Have to Go to the Pen.

MINNEAPOLIS, Aug. 15.—A Pierre, S. D., special to The Journal says: The attorneys of W. W. Taylor are jubilant in the belief that their client will not even begin to serve out the five-year sentence imposed on him by Judge Caffey. They will apply to the supreme court for a writ of habeas corpus on the ground that two years is the longest sentence permissible under the statute invoked by the lower court.

The Last of Holmes' Castle.

CHICAGO, Aug. 19.—H. H. Holmes' "Castle," at Sixty-third and Wallace streets, which is said to have been the scene of numerous murders by the owner, caught fire this morning, and the interior was entirely consumed. Loss, about $15,000.

Charge Holmes with Murder.

TOROTO, Aug. 19.—The inquest on the body of Nellie Pitzel, the younger of the two girls believed to have been murdered by the notorious Holmes was concluded. The jury returned a verdict of willful murder against Holmes.

Notes of the State.

Wright & Wright, dealers in wagons, buggies and harness at Olney, Ills., made an assignment. Liabilities, $10,000; assets unknown.

While cooking, the clothes of Mary Myers, the 17-year-old daughter of John Myers of Mattoon, Ills., caught fire and before help could reach her she was so badly burned that she will probably die.

The Illinois board of labor arbitration has organized with Judge Thornton in the chair. Springfield will be headquarters.

The A. P. A. of Rockford, Ills., declared for "one country, one flag, one language and one code of laws" for the United States of America.

Thugs broke into St. Patrick's Roman Catholic church at LaSalle, Ills., and stole silver chalices worth together $500. The altar was completely wrecked.

Near Marion, Ills., Fred Hisholm shot and instantly killed William Maike and William Reed with a double-barreled shotgun. It was the result of a quarrel over a game of cards.

THE DOCTRINE OF THE JESUITS, with supplement containing speeches of M. Paul Bert in the Chambers of Deputies, in Paris, France, at the debate (1879) on the Law Relative to the Liberty of Higher Teaching: "M. Paul Bert, who translated Gury's works from the Latin into the French (from which French this translation has in turn been made), was a statesman of great ability, having the courage of his convictions. He saw the harm done to society by allowing the Jesuits to become educators of the French youth, and struggled successfully to have them disqualified by law from management of such education. This book is a terrible exposure of the principles of these would-be teachers of religion. Their religious principles are simply statutable crimes, unnatural and repugnant to all good men; and how we Americans can let them train our children, when the great French nation across the water have decided that they are unfit to control the instruction of its youth, it is not easy to tell. Surely, we should have as much concern that our future citizens be not indoctrinated in crime, as the French.' 612 pages, paper, 60 cents, but now sent postpaid for 40 cents.

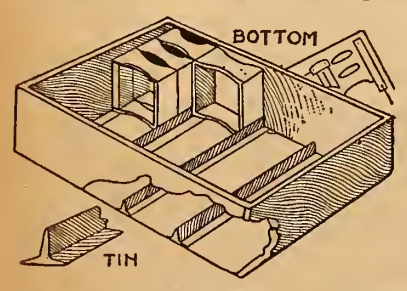
FARM AND GARDEN

Corn For Silage.

Corn has been the main silage crop, though some sorghum, Kaffir corn and other green fodders have also been used. But, all things considered, there is no crop which will yield more nutrition to the acre, one year with another, than corn. For ensilage we plant somewhat closer than we do when a crop is grown for grain. An experiment showed that we got the heaviest yields when the rows were 3.5 feet apart and the stalks four inches apart in the row.

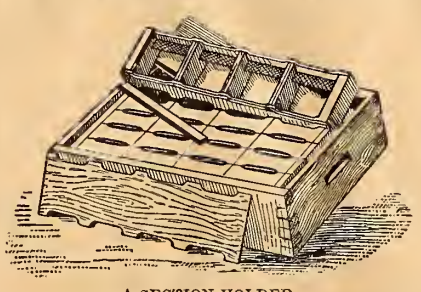


Several plans for covering the silo have been tried, but of them all we have found nothing better than a layer of green grass some six or eight inches thick when settled, spread evenly on top of the silage, and this covered with a few loads of earth sufficient in weight to pack the grass down closely and thus exclude the air. Covered in this way, there is comparatively little decayed silage on top when opened up some months later.—Kansas Experiment Station.

IN THE APIARY.

Two Popular Methods In the Arrangement of the Surplus Story.

The half story on the top of the hive contains about all of the available results for which bees are kept. The half story to any well regulated hive is merely a second hive, but only one-half as high as the full story. All other dimensions are the same, it being intended to be set on the top of a full story. The inside furniture is, however, different from that of the lower story, to suit an entirely different purpose, the production of comb honey for the table or market instead of for the bees.



There are perhaps as many different methods in the arrangement of the surplus story as there are in the brood chamber. The two most in use at present were recently illustrated in American Gardening, either of which has its advantages and stanch advocates. The first pattern shown is the older method, and is known as the T super. It is particularly intended for tiering up in Simplicity hives. These supers are made to set down inside the upper half story and to contain four rows of seven one pound sections, or 28 pounds in all. This number just fills a ten frame Simplicity hive. When filled with honey the entire super may be removed at once. Or, if for want of proper storage room or for any other cause this course is inconvenient, just raise the filled super from its place, substitute one containing empty sections, set the filled super on top, surround with two half or one full story, and replace the cover. There you have your honey at the same time safe from harm and out of the way. Indeed the practice is very generally in vogue of raising the super before the sections are filled, the bees being then compelled to pass through the added empty sections in order to reach those in the super nearly finished. This gets them much more promptly at work in the empty sections and stimulates their production, as they work much more readily when there is plenty of space to fill than after they believe their work of filling up nearly done. Care must be taken, however, not to resort to this tiering up process when the honey flow is too nearly over, else the result will be two partially filled supers instead of one properly sealed and ready for market.

The other process illustrated consists of section holders in place of the super. These are not unlike the sides and bottom of the brood racks except that they are wider and only half as deep. They have no top bars. Into each of these holders four one pound sections are placed, just filling it. One of the advantages claimed for this contrivance is that if one wishes for any reason to remove but a few sections for immediate use a single frame may be lifted out and replaced with an empty one without disturbing the other sections, as would be done in the case of the super. Again, it is well known that bees work best in those sections the more directly over the hive entrance. By this process the end and middle frames may be transposed as necessary and thus kept about evenly filled. This newer plan is rapidly gaining friends and may in time entirely supersede the T super.

Have you ever had in the morning what is fancifully called a "dark brown taste" in the mouth. If so, it is the effect of a deranged stomach and liver, the best remedy for which is a dose of Ayer's Pills, together with a little discretion as to diet and mode of living.

MASONIC CHART.

ILLUSTRATING THE RELATION OF SOME OF THE DEGREES AND RITES IN FREEMASONRY TO EACH OTHER.

The accompanying chart represents one hundred and forty two degrees.

1. The American Rite of 13 degrees;
2. The Scotch Rite of 33 degrees;
3. The Egyptian Rite of 96 degrees.
4. The Mystic Shrine of one degree.
5. The Eastern Star of 5 degrees for Master Masons and for women. These are side degrees, and not genuine masonry.

The Symbolic degrees, or Blue Lodge of three degrees, are common to every Masonic rite, whether American, Scotch, or Egyptian, or whichever of the Masonic rites, named in Mackey's Masonic Encyclopedia one may choose to investigate.

This chart shows in the Blue Lodge the position of the Worshipful Master and some of the other officers of the lodge. Several positions of the candidate who is being initiated are also shown. In the Master Mason's degree is recognized the murder, burial and resurrection scene so full of religious significance to Freemasons.

By E. Ronayne, Past Master of Keystone Lodge No. 639, Chicago. Gives the complete standard ritual of the first three degrees of Freemasonry.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. 110 pages, paper, 25c.
The genuine old Morgan book republished.

Allyn's Ritual of Freemasonry. By Avery Allyn. Cloth, $5.00.
Contains the fully Illustrated Ritual of the Blue Lodge, Chapter Council and Commandery, 11 of the Scotch Rite Degrees, several Masonic side degrees and what is termed a Key to the Phi Beta Kappa, and the Orange Societies.

Duncan's Masonic Ritual and Monitor. Cloth, $2.50.
Profusely illustrated with explanatory engravings, and containing the ritual and work of the order for the seven degrees, including the Royal Arch. Though extensively used as an Instruction Book and one of the best in the market, it is not as accurate as "Freemasonry Illustrated."

Richardson's Monitor of Freemasonry. Cloth, $1.25; paper, 75c.
Contains the ceremonies of Lodges, Chapters, Encampments, etc. Illustrated. Although extensively used in conferring the higher degrees, it is not only very incomplete but inaccurate especially as regards the first seven degrees, and as to the higher degrees it gives but a description and general idea of the degrees rather than the full ritual.

Look to the East. A ritual of the first three Masonic Degrees by Ralph Lester. Cloth, $2.00.
Notwithstanding the high price this book is very inferior in every way to Freemasonry Illustrated or the Handbook of Freemasonry at a quarter the price.

FLASHED IN THE PAN.

The Expected Turbulence at Omaha Does Not Occur.

Omaha, Aug. 15.—All probability of a resort to arms to settle the municipal muddle over the rival police commissions is now very remote, but for two hours it looked very much as though a serious collision was inevitable. The sidewalks and streets surrounding the city hall were crowded with people, and the interior of the building was crowded with sheriffs and officers. The new commission convened at 10 a. m. amid considerable excitement. The members were encouraged with cheers from 200 friends. They were expected to at once place a rival police force on the streets of the city, attempt to oust Chief of Police White, and storm the city hall. This was the schedule as given out by those supposed to be on the "inside."

The situation was intensified by the report from Kansas City that the A. P. A. councils there had 5,000 armed men ready to send to Omaha to maintain the new commission. At the same time the old committee was in the mayor's office ready to issue orders and repel any force necessary to maintain its position. After a brief conference the new commission concluded to confer with the old board before resorting to arms. The conference was the result of a letter which Mayor Bemis sent to the new board asking the members to meet the old board and endeavor to reach a peaceable settlement of the controversy. The members of the new board replied that they had decided to meet Mayor Bemis and his colleagues, and the mayor replied that they were ready.

The two boards remained closeted for an hour or more. When the door was opened it was announced that an agreement had been reached. Mayor Bemis then sent a telegram signed by himself, as chairman of the old board, and by W. J. Broatch, as chairman of the new board, to Governor Holcomb and A. S. Churchill, attorney general, as follows: "If the supreme court will meet at an early date, all the members of the two boards of fire and police commissioners will unite in a request for an early hearing. Can you get the court to fix a short date? Answer." This telegram was sent to each of the justices of the supreme court: "All parties agree to submit police matters to supreme court if early hearing can be had."

This was also signed by the chairman of each board. They wanted it understood that neither board had made any concessions. Each side stood as it had before and in that respect there was no change in the situation. They had simply agreed that the best interests of all concerned would be served by an immediate submission of the controversy to the supreme court, and they had united to that end.

Members of the new board are reticent in regard to what their next procedure would be. When Vandervoort was asked whether the new board would proceed to organize a police force in opposition to that controlled by the old board he would not answer directly, but stated that neither board was going to be very hard on the other while the matter was pending before the supreme court.

Chief Justice Novel, of the state supreme court, announced late last evening that a special session of the court will be held today to settle the Omaha case.

GOTHAM'S BUILDING COLLAPSE.

Inquest on the Disaster Promises To Be a Searching One.

New York, Aug. 16.—The inquest in the case of the twenty-six men who lost their lives through the collapse of the Ireland building at West Broadway and West Third street was opened before Coroner Fitzpatrick and a jury of experts.

Coroner Fitzpatrick has taken great care in the selection of the jury, and is determined that the investigation into the cause of the disaster shall be thorough. At present there are three men under $5,000 bail each, charged with the responsibility. They are John H. Parker, the builder; Jaffords E. Silleck, the foreman, and Joseph Guilder, who had the contract for plastering.

Colored People to Organize.

Rock Island, Ill., Aug. 19.—A movement to organize the colored people of Illinois, which quietly started after the Spring Valley outrage, is assuming definite form. John G. Joones, a colored lawyer of Chicago, who has been here several days in consultation with leaders among his people, has issued a call for a state convention of colored men to be held at Springfield Sept. 24. The purpose is to organize a state league to protect and benefit their race. Each city and town is asked to send two delegates. The call emanates from Rev. H. Laokey of Quincy, Jessey and Call of Rock Island and B. A. and S. B. Walkup of Moline.

EICHT MEN KILLED BY A BLAST.

Premature Explosion Sends Them to Eternity—Ten Seriously Hurt.

Dubois, Pa., Aug. 17.—A dispatch from Clearfield says that eight men were killed and ten seriously hurt last night by the premature explosion of a blast near Mahaffy, on the Pittsburg and Eastern railway. The telegraph offices in the vicinity are all closed and no further details can be had.

SPRING VALLEY RIOTERS ARRESTED.

Thirty of Those Who Attacked the Negro Settlement in Limbo.

Spring Valley, Ills., Aug. 17.—Sheriff Clarke, of Princeton, arrested over thirty of the mob that ran the negroes out of the "Location." He was assisted in the work by fifteen armed deputies. The sheriff and his men went to No. 8 shaft and as the men came up that he wanted he promptly served them with warrants. They were all placed in closed wagons and heavily guarded. They were not allowed to change their pit clothes nor wash their faces. The sheriff started off with his prisoners about supper time and arrived in Princeton about 11 p. m. Major Buckner is here and will prosecute the cases for the negroes. The arrests were made very quietly and no trouble was encountered.

"WILD EXCITEMENT" AT BEATRICE.

City Clerk and Water Commissioner Charged with Fraud.

Beatrice, Neb., Aug. 17.—Beatrice is in a state of the wildest excitement, occasioned by the arrest of the city clerk, J. T. Phillips, and the water commissioner, George Hawkins, upon a charge of obtaing money under false pretenses. City Clerk Phillips sold to the Farmers' and Merchants' bank city warrants amounting to nearly $1,100.

Upon examining the warrants the president of the bank grew suspicious, and by the use of the telephone learned that the parties to whom the warrants were issued held warrants for the same amounts as those purchased by the bank. The city council has deposed both officers.

Waite's Opinion of Business Men.

Gainesville, Aug. 16.—Governor Waite and General Weaver are in attendance on a Populist meeting in this city. In discussing the silver question it was suggested to Governor Waite that a great majority of the business men of Texas were "sound money" men. "Of course they are," he said. "All the bankers are gold bugs and they control the business men. The bankers of Denver are such rabid 'sound money' men that they robbed the people of millions of dollars. 'Sound money' men, bosh! They are robbers and thieves. That's what they are."

International Wheel Meet.

Cologne, Aug. 19.—The world's championship and international cycling congress has commenced here. The best riders, both amateur and professional, of England, France, Germany, Holland, Belgium, Denmark, Italy, Norway, Scotland, Ireland, the United States, and Canada are in attendance. The mile professional race for the championship of the world was won by Protein, of Liege, leading Banker a few inches. The 100 kilometer race was won by Michael, of England, easily, he being three miles in front.

Maryland Republicans Nominate a Ticket.

Cambridge, Aug. 16.—The Republican state convention assembled here and nominated the following ticket by acclamation: For governor, Lloyd Lowndes, of Cumberland; attorney general, Harry M. Clabaugh, of Baltimore; comptroller, Robert P. Graham, of Wicomico county. The convention adjourned at 4:30 p. m. after being in session a little over four hours. The platform is a standard Republican declaration with a vigorous plank in favor of "sound money."

New Witness Against Durrant.

San Francisco, Aug. 16.—The police have located a new witness in the Durrant case. She is Mrs. Leak, a member of Emanuel church. She lives opposite the church and says she saw Durrant and Blanche Lamont enter the building the afternoon of April 3. If she tells the same story on the witness stand as told to the police, it will complete the chain of evidence against Durrant. Mrs. Leak was acquainted with both persons and says she could not be mistaken.

Death of an Ex-Confederate.

Paris, Tex., Aug. 17.—General S. B. Maxey died yesterday at Eureka Springs, Ark., of a complication of diseases incident to old age. He was born in Todd county, Kentucky, March 31, 1825; graduated at West Point with General Grant and served in the Mexican war and the rebellion on the Confederate side. He served two terms in the United States Senate after the war from this state.

Effect of Lightning and the Bike.

Cleveland, Aug. 17.—The Otis Elevator company, which has been in business for years as a retailer and wholesaler of oats, corn, and other grain, has closed its elevator, the reason assigned being the substitution of electricity for horses on street cars and the displacement of horses by bicycles.

New Place for Professor Currell.

Lexington, Va., Aug. 16.—Professor William Spencer Currell, professor of English at Davidson college, North Carolina, has been elected to fill the chair of modern languages and English in Washington and Lee university.

JOHN M. SLOANE.

This time we introduce to our readers by the above picture John M. Sloane, of Oakdale, Ill. He is an old line reformer who, after the anti-slavery movement triumphed, was the first to take the field as the pioneer of the National Reform cause. He spent several years traveling through a large part of Illinois, Wisconsin and Iowa working up conventions. His method was to drive in his horse and buggy from town to town, pleading and arguing with ministers, editors, lawyers and politicians, in order to enlist their sympathies in the movement.

It was Mr. Sloane who worked up the Oskaloosa, Ia., convention in 1869, and the Monmouth, Ill., convention in 1870. No conventions in the history of the movement had a more telling and far-reaching influence. It was after this meeting that the infidel lecturer, W. F. Jamieson, published a three-hundred page book entitled "The Clergy a Source of Danger to the American Republic." Its object was to meet the arguments, and as the author states in the preface, "to awaken the American people to the danger from the "God-in-the Constitution Movement." In this book Dr. Jonahthan Blanchard's speech was published entire, and was regarded as the strong speech of the convention.

KNIGHT TEMPLAR BOMBAST.

Because of the terrible and convincing exposures of Masonry—its falsehood, its fearful oaths and blood-curdling death penalties, and also its absolute antagonism to Christ and Christianity—made during the past twenty-five years by the Cynosure, by seceding Masons and by nearly all our great evangelists and the most learned and eloquent of our ministers and college presidents, the Masons now-a-days seem to be putting forth every possible effort to try and convince the public that Fremasonry is not nearly as bad as it has been painted, but that on the other hand it is a highly moral and Christian institution. Just now especially when the Knights Templars are assembling in Boston, riding thither in the most gorgeous palace cars, each commandary vieing with the other as to which will make the most magnificient display, the Knights, so-called, are most prominent in hood-winking the public by their ostentatious and gaudy attendance at a few of our church services here in Chicago and otherwise pretending to make it appear that they are wonderful Christians and valiant defenders of Christianity.

By his oath a Knight Templar, so-called, is solemnly sworn "to draw his sword in defense of orphans, helpless widows, and the Christian religion." A wonderful "salvation army," truely, marching upon "The Hub" well supplied with the best Kentucky whiskys and Hennessey brandy, a sword in their right hand and a lie in their left; but the best of the joke is that Knight Templarism is not Freemasonry any more than is Odd-fellowship or the Ancient Order of Hiberians. Any man can be an Odd-fellow, while none but Masons can be a Knight Templar. That's all the difference there is; the one is no more Freemasonry than the other. Now as Masons they must reject Christ in the Blue Lodge and chapter, and how then they can be Christians in Knight Templarism must assuredly be one of their grand mysteries.

But such is always Masonic falsehood and bombast. As Freemasons rejecting Christ, as Knights boasting of their morality and Christianity, as both, patronizing saloons and brothels on their way to the conclave can be seen from the following item clipped from the Chicago Chronicle of Friday the 23d inst.:

"The brief visit in this city of some of the eastbound delegates has not been without unpleasant experiences. John Porter, a Sir Knight from Fort Dodge, Iowa, left his hotel Wednesday night and started out to see the sights. He was robbed of $200 in a Custom-House place resort, conducted by Lizzie Anderson, a colored woman."

If the Knight Templars had any decency or or sense of truth they would cease their hypocritical lying, and if Masonic ministers had any sense of honor they would either quit their pulpits or else quit the demon worship of the lodge. Wonder is Bro. Porter a Christian? and will his commandary bring him to book for his Masonic patronage of Lizzie Anderson's Sunday-school for Knight Templars?

ANOTHER BATTLE HYMN.

Say! is that the way to battle,
Simply dodging cannon balls?
Picking up the dead and wounded;
Burying whoever falls?

It that the way to conquer Satan?
Simply shouting "stand aside!"
When the deadly grape comes hurling,
Scattering ruin far and wide?

Say! is that the way to battle;
Simply watching bullets come?
Calculating range, and smiling
That they cannot reach our home?

Simply warning friends and neighbors,
You must keep out of their range,
Or the shot and shell will hurt you;
How the styles of fighting change!

Get the boys to promise caution;
Coax them out of danger's way;
Warn them cannon balls are fatal;
Tell your friends it dosen't pay.

Stop your nonsense; quit your dodging;
Act like MEN, not timid nuns;
Organize and charge the foeman;
Make them flee and spike their guns.

You may guard and coax a lifetime;
Lose them then, when all is done;
The very surest way to save them
Is one grand charge, then spike the gun!

Shut the dramshop; close the lodgeroom;
When these evils are o'er thrown,
Then away with all reform clubs,
For victory will surely come.

MASONIC OATHS NOT BINDING.

BY REV. G. P. AUSTIN.

That Masonic oaths are not binding will seem a startling proposition to many who have been taught to regard them as very sacred. Yet it is clear to every intelligent person that profane oaths are not binding. And if it be asked, what are profane oaths? the true answer is, any oath to which God cannot be a party. In other words, any oath which God has not authorized.

Forty conspirators bound themselves to kill Paul. They made it as strong as possible by a death penalty. They would die of starvation if they did not kill him. Would God require them to carry out their wicked design because they had taken an oath to murder a man for telling them of their sins? Nay, verily. Again, Herod promised, and sealed it with an oath, to give a dancing damsel anything she might ask, even to the half of his kingdom. Did such an oath sacredly bind him to murder John the Baptist? You will answer, no. There is no sacredness about such a promise. He had no business, no right, to swear such an oath. It was rash, and in violation of the clearly expressed law of God. The consequences of such an oath were hidden from him. He did a wicked thing in taking it. The law of God in Lev. 5: 4, says: "If a soul swear, pronouncing with his lips to do evil or to do good, whatsoever a man shall pronounce with an oath and it be hid from him, when he knoweth of it, then he shall be guilty in one of these. And it shall be when he shall be guilty in one of these things that he shall confess that he hath sinned in that thing." From this we know that Herod sinned in vowing to do he knew not what; therefore he should confess it and repent of his wicked oath.

In Matt. 5: 34, our Lord says, "But I say unto you, swear not at all." etc. But Masonry requires its subjects to do a great amount of false swearing; and if they are not such oaths as God can be a party to they are profane. There is no sacredness about them, and they are not morally binding. I undertake to say that those Masonic oaths are not binding. The oaths of Masonry are a part of the covanant on one side where two parties are entering into a contract. There are conditions and obligations on both sides, as in a matter of buying and selling. The Masonic fraternity has ostensibly valuable secrets to sell. The candidate for Masonry wants to buy them. The fraternity through the Worshipful Master makes a guarantee on its part, and now the candidate repeats the oath as dealt out to him by the Worshipful Master.

Now I submit that if the fraternity utterly fails to keep its part of the contract, then the candidate is not in honor bound to keep the contract on his side. There are several clauses to the contract and they are equally binding upon both parties. The conditions of the Masonic covenant are these: The Worshipful Master says to the candidate, "It is my duty to inform you that it is necessary for you to take upon yourself a solemn oath or obligation pertaining to this degree. It is one such as we all have taken; but I assure you upon the honor of a man and a Mason, that in this obligation there is nothing that can conflict with any of those exalted duties you may owe to God, your country, your neighbor, your family or yourself." Now the facts are that the Master makes a dishonorable statement, because it is untrue. He is acting under Masonic duty; is speaking for the fraternity when he makes those statements. He is acting under authority of the Grand Lodge. He is the agent of Masonry invested with full power; and he informs the candidate that "Masonry is a secret, a valuable one, and we sell it to you as such; we entrust it to your keeping and you must therefore take a solemn oath or obligation to keep it a secret forever." He pays his money—perhaps $25 for the first installments of valuable secrets. When lo and behold! all told there are no secrets revealed but what he could have bought at a book store for twenty-five cents. What is there in ancient Freemasonry that is a secret to the world at large?

In 1730, when Freemasonry in its present outward form of Grand Lodge government was only thirteen years old, all its secrets and so-called mysteries were printed and publiished by one Samuel Pritchard, of London, England, in a work entitled "Masonry Dissected." This book can be procured even to-day of I. Fitzgerald, publisher, New York, or through any other respectable bookseller. In 1825 the celebrated Richard Carlisle published all the pretended secrets of Masonry. They were also written out and published by Avery Allyn, Jabez Richardson, Malcom Duncan, Dr. Robert Morris, Past Grand Master of Kentucky, President Charles G. Finney of Oberlin College, Ohio, Rev. J. G. Stearns, and by other adhering as well as by seceding Masons. And later by Edmond Ronayne, Past Master of Keystone Lodge, No. 639. Chicago, having been Worshipful Master in 1872 and 1873, and who publicly seceded from the order, worked the degrees in public and wrote out Masonry just as it is worked in the lodge, word for word, and made a legal attestation of its correctness before a proper officer and published it to the world under the name of the "Handbook of Freemasonry." This book gives the "standard work" as it was rehearsed and promulgated by the National Masonic Convention held at Baltimore, Md , in 1843. Twenty thousand copies of this book were sold from 1876 to 1880. This book is now often used by Masons themselves as a secret monitor.

THE MARK OF THE BEAST AND THE NUMBER OF HIS NAME.

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

In a former article I attempted to show that "the beast" of Rev. 13:1–3 was identical with that of Daniel 7:7, and that it represented the Roman Empire, both pagan and papal, or perhaps more accurately, the that was inspired by Satan in that world-wide dominion. Daniel says of him that he shall "devour the whole earth and tread it down and break it to pieces." Dan. 7:23. John says "It was given to him to make war with the saints and to overcome them, and power was given him over all kindred and tongues and nations, and all that dwell on the earth shall worship him whose names are not written in the book of the life of the Lamb slain from the foundation of the earth." Rev. 13:7, 8. To kill and make captive was his business; and John adds in speaking of his doom, "He that leadeth into captivity shall go into captivity; he that killeth by the sword shall be killed by the sword. Vs. 10, 11.

Now it is this beast whose life is prolonged in the ten horns, and to which the two-horned beast seems to be subservient that all except God's people were to worship—that is,

PAY A SUPREME RESPECT.

It was to him that an image was to be made, and that "all, both small and great, rich and poor, free and bond, should receive a mark in their right hands and in their foreheads, that no man might buy or sell save he that had the mark of the beast or the number of his name." Vs. 17, 18. The figure is doubtless taken from the practice of putting a brand on the forehead or right hand of the Roman slave, which mark indicated the name of his master and the slave's number. But since we are told that all who worship the beast and his image and who receive his mark shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God" (Rev. 14: 9, 10), it follows that none except those who worship him and whose names are not in the "book of life" shall willingly receive this mark.

Now if the beast—the cruel, despotic and warlike principle—still lives in the nations of Europe, then it ought to follow that there is something of universal prevalence, something in the very constitution of their governments that should correspond with this mark which is put upon every man and which is accepted by all those who love and honor human more than divine power. Now is there such a mark, and if so, what is it? Albert Barnes and others have held that it was the mark of the papal church. But it yet remains to be proved that

THE BEAST IS THE PAPACY.

The evidence is strongly against it. For if the scarlet woman of Rev. 17th is the papal church, then she cannot at the same time be the beast, since we learn from Rev. 17: 16 that the beast "shall hate the harlot and eat her flesh and burn her with fire and make her desolate." There is a symbol of the papal church that is universal—the cross. But we would hardly dare to call that a mark of the beast, since it is a universal emblem of Christianity and is hallowed with all the most sacred memories of our Lord and his church. Nor can we agree with our S. D. Advent brethren that this mark consists in keeping the first day of the week as the Sabbath. This practice is not conspicuously written on men's foreheads or hands, and multitudes do buy and sell who have it not; especially the Jews, who attach no sacredness to that day. Mohammd, too, changed the day of the Sabbath from the seventh to the sixth day of the week, but that does not prove him to be the beast.

Now we find that in nearly all European nations all able-bodied men are not only held to our military service, that is, aid in prosecuting any war in which their country may engage, but are and in some countries required to serve from two to five years in actual military drill. Besides the vast standing armies constantly filled up from the mass of the young men, the remainder constitute a reserve, liable at any time to be called out. Within sixty years a similar system existed in the United States, and all men between the ages of eighteen and forty-five were liable to do military duty, and required, at least twice a year, to be drilled in the arts of patricide.

During the latter part of the present century a resort to arms has been less frequent than before; but as a general fact the grand drama which was open to the vision of the sacred writer was one scene of murderous conflict. The wild beast of war has raged almost continually. The appeal has been to the sword as the source of all authority and all law, and has been accepted by the great mass of the people. They have practically worshiped the beast, rendering homage to despotic power and the rule of war. The nations have held that all who would not do this were disloyal. The god which they have especially required to be worshiped was the god of force. There are doubtless many of God's children that have been involved in the war system, and some have borne arms, just as some are now involved in the "mystic Babylon," but no true Christian ever conscientiously recognized the or the law of force as the law of right.

Now as nothing is so abhorrent to both the letter and spirit of Christianity, nothing so much resembles the raging of a wild beast as the spirit and practice of war, may we not reasonably conclude that this enrollment and numbering of all able-bodied men for war purposes is putting on them the mark of the beast and the number of his name?

And if the image of the beast is the secret lodge system which, like its prototype, is always selfish, autocratic and warlike, can we wonder that there is such an intimate relation between the military system, which is also and always a system of organized secrecy, and these latent lodge conspiracies against society at large? May we not conclude that they are all of the wicked one?

WHILE MEN SLEPT.

BY REV. W. J. COLEMAN.

"But while men slept, his enemy came and sowed tares among the wheat." Evil that does not dare to meet the eye of day does its work in the darkness. If the enemy had sowed tares in the daytime the owner of the land would have stopped him, or failing in that would have known where to lay the responsibility for the weeds that hindered the wheat. That the enemy chose night and the darkness for his work was a confession that his doing would not bear the light of day. Anyone who might have caught a glimpse of his dark moving figure in the gloom and have noticed the swing of his right arm would have suspected mischief at once. Why should he rise in the night to sow wheat? Sowing can be done more accurately and evenly in the daylight. But the fact that he did his work under cover of darkness showed that he was an enemy and that he was sowing tares. Anyone who caught him at his work would have been sure he was sowing tares without wating till the seed was grown. "Quiet night, that brings rest to the laborer, is the outlaw's day, in which he rises early to do wrong."

This man sowing steadily in the darkness is the type of all organized and deliberate secrecy. Honest, upright, honorable work can best be done in the day. The work of an enemy to mankind must be done in darkness. We are all sowing in this world both for ourselves and others. A part of the harvest of the past, whether it be wheat or tares, goes out of our hands as seed for the future. And we show our estimate of the seed we sow by the time and circumstances we choose for the sowing. If we are sure it is wheat, if we are looking to a harvest of wheat, if we are confident that men will approve of the seed and of the harvest, we will sow in the clear daylight. Why should we not? "He that doeth truth cometh to the light, that his deeds may be made manifest." The man which sowed good seed in his field is the Son of man. He sowed in the day; did nothing in secret, and his children are like him. And the enemy that sowed the tares is the devil. He sowed at night, in the darkness under cover of secrecy. "He that doeth evil hateth the light."

THE APOCALYPSE:

OR THE BOOK OF REVELATION.

BY REV S. A. MANWELL.

The interest now taken in the study of the Apocalypse can but result in great good to the church. It is without doubt a message of the utmost importance to the church, although it has been too much neglected, or passed by with the understanding that it is a book of symbols or figures so mysterious as to baffle any attempts at interpretation. We are told it is a sealed book, and we would better not meddle therewith.

The question naturally arises, would God give us a revelation which did not reveal anything definite? In the twenty-second chapter, tenth verse, the Angel tells John not to seal "the sayings of the prophecy of this book." In the first chapter, third verse, he says, "Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy and keep those things which are written therein," all of which would be meaningless if we could not comprehend it. The word, apocalypse, means a disclosure, manifestation, appearing. The apocalypse of Jesus Christ is, therefore, a disclosing or manifestation, or an appearing of Jesus Christ. "Behold he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see Him, and they also which pierced Him; and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of Him." From this it is evident that Christ is the central figure; that, in some very important sense, he has to do with the great events announced, and also that these events follow his coming in the clouds. The common method of interpretation has been misleading. If the book is a book of symbols every reader is left to conjecture as to the thing symbolized, and one conjecture is as good as another; hence the babel of opinions. As was intimated in a recent article by Bro. Wylie, it is worth a man's reputation to offer an opinion, yet, at the risk, I venture the following suggestions:

The entire book is prophetic. The letters to the seven churches cover the entire church-period from organization to close. Seven is the number of dispensational fullness—the complete number. Each letter covers its respective part of the period and points out the distinguishing characteristics of the church of that period. Notice the first, or Ephesian period, during which the church left its "first love." All subsequent trouble in the church dates from that period. This was followed by the Smyrnian or period of persecution, etc. The history of the Christian church plainly points out these different epochs. It is the belief of many that we are living in the last or Laodicean period of lukewarmness and drift. Our observations confirm the belief. Beginning with the fourth chapter, we have a detailed account of the judgment, no part of which has been fulfilled, nor can it be fulfilled until Christ shall come "the second time without sin unto salvation." There may be a seeming similarity between recorded events of the last two thousand years and these prophetic announcements, but what the world has done falls infinitely below what must yet occur. If we must understand this book by what has already happened, then every reader must be a perfect historian, and that, too, for a period of two thousand years. God has not left us to grope our way in uncertainties. If we allow the book to tell its own story and take it as it reads, as a book of stern realities and literalities, there appears a beautiful consistency and harmony between this and all other prophetic utterances.

A single example, that of the two witnesses spoken of in the eleventh chapter, will suffice to illustrate. We do not see how anything can be established in regard to them by the usual method of interpretation. To make them embrace the church, or any part of it, seems but to plunge us into doubt and increase the difficulty. The troubles in the church of to-day are great. Her failures to do what she ought are distressing. But we can see no comparison between them and the two witnesses. Everything said of them tends to show that they are real men, and that their slaughter will be a real, literal slaughter. Their dead bodies will lie on the ground three and a half days; and all this will take place in the streets of Jerusalem "where also our Lord was crucified." What is said of them further, viz.: Their resurrection and ascension to heaven in a cloud; and what is said of the simultaneous earthquake which causes a tenth part of the city to fall and results in the death of seven thousand men, puts the whole transaction beyond anything the world has yet witnessed. All this we take to be literal and constitutes but one of many acts in the final judgment of the world.

THE FOOLISHNESS OF THE A. P. A.

BY PROF. J. M. COLEMAN.

When one plays with the devil, the latter deals the cards. There is no chance in the game, for the dealer wins every time. Satan has mastered the use of his own weapons, and the one who proposes to beat him with them loses every point. Herein lies the inherent foolishness of the A. P. A. They took the weapons of darkness to beat the devil, and he laughs at their efforts. In speaking of Roman Catholicism as of satanic device, a clear distinction must be drawn and maintained between the system, and its members. For the sincere member we have the kindliest sympathy, but for the system none at all. It may not seem the part of wisdom to speak thus harshly of even the system at a time when Bishop Vincent is trying to get the Catholics to bring a priest to Chautauqua to hold service, provided they will agree to it; but as the fear of the bishop is not before our eyes, we will risk the statement of facts.

The A. P. A. adopted the methods of secretism to overthrow the most thoroughly organized system of secretism that this world has ever seen or will ever see. The Jesuitical heart which works through the papist body works in a darkness which may be felt but not understood. Who knows the secrets of the Vatican, of the Jesuit College, or even of the confessional! The secret methods of the A. P. A. are but a child's toy in comparison. There is not an important plan of the order which the confessional will not reveal. The priests have their spies in the lodge-room. In evidence of this, the A. P. A. in Youngstown, Ohio, had its minutes, plans, and members made public by some unknown party. The order is naked and open before the priesthood. The Jesuit system with its wrist at Rome and its fingers everywhere knows the secrets of all others and keeps its own. Satan is not cast out by his own methods. He is not divided against himself.

The A. P. A. had a good cause. Too far to a great extent is the Romish church allowed to dominate our political life. Citizens who own allegiance in all things to a sovereign on the Tiber are not the men to whom should be intrusted the keeping of institutions which Rome has never tolerated where she had the power to forbid. But when the A. P. A. adopted the methods of Rome in its oath of secrecy, it no longer can claim the sympathy of Christian citizens. The same end has been sought by the same methods, and nothing was gained. The present movement is but a resurrection of the Knownothings of the fifties, baptized with a new name but holding the old faith. Such movements are and can be but of transient importance. Only the forces of light can make permanent contest with the powers of darkness. Long before the struggle with the secrecy of Rome is at an end the secrecy of the A. P. A. will have been forgotten. It is not necessary to bring indictment against the order for its un-Christian character aside from the oath. In its attempt to boycott those who did not see fit to join the order it has shown the spirit of Rome herself. The adoption of a false principle of action is sure to bear fruit after its kind. "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them."

PERILOUS TIMES SHALL COME.

BY REV. J. R. LATIMER.

"Shall I not visit for these things? saith the Lord; and shall not my soul be avenged on such a nation as this?" The Lord never proceeds suddenly to extreme measures. He always gives opportunity for repentance and reformation. When he purposed to destroy the antediluvians by a flood, he gave them warning during a period of six score years. When he would punish Egypt for their cruel oppression of Israel, he sent Moses to warn Pharaoh. Likewise he sent Jonah to Nineveh. In this case we see how God delights in showing mercy, how long-suffering he is and slow to inflict punishment, if there be even temporary repentance and reformation. So he warned the Jews again and again by his prophets. His voice of warning rings out here by Jeremiah: "Shall I not visit for these things?" For what things? Let us notice a few as stated in this and other passages. The study is a profitable one. There is instruction here for America to-day. There are some striking and suggestive parallelisms between ancient Judah and the United States.

There is a failure to execute judgment. Jeremiah says, "Run ye to and fro through the streets of Jerusalem, and see now, and know, and seek in the broad places thereof if ye can find a man, if there be any that executeth judgment." Those whose duty it was to enforce the laws were not faithful. Criminals were allowed to escape. The sword of civil magistracy was not a terror to evil-doers.

How exact the parallel to-day! Would we be far astray to read these words of Jeremiah, and substitute for Jerusalem the name of any one of our large cities, or even of the United States? How far would it be from the truth? Is there not a sad failure in judgment in our country? How many criminals go unwhipped of justice? At this point the lodge gets in its baneful work? Doubtless through this influence there are hundreds in the nation to-day, and some in official position, who, if justice had its due, would be behind prison bars, at least. But the lodge has left them at liberty still to prey on society and pollute the air of heaven with their vile presence.

The experience of Hiawatha, Kan., in relation to the enforcement of the prohibitory law, as told in a letter in the Cynosure of Aug. 8, is a case in proof of the above statement. But what else can we expect, when societies are not only suffered to exist, but given a legal existence by charter, which bind their members by the most horrid and murderous obligations to defend one another, whether right or wrong?

Again Jeremiah specifies false swearing: "And though they say tne Lord liveth, surely they swear falsely." We find this sin again mentioned in Jer. 7: 9. It seems to have been a prevalent sin among the Jews. How alarmingly prevalent it is to-day? Here is the charge which the financial editor of the N. Y. Witness brings against the mayor of Brooklyn, N. Y., in a recent number of that paper: "We have a Christian gentleman—so-called—a German—as mayor of Brooklyn, who will not enforce the law against the liquor-sellers. He took an oath to do it. But it would cost his party 30,000 German votes." A sad, sad state of things! For fear of losing a few votes a man will perjure himself. But, alas! Brooklyn's mayor is not the only official against whom the same charge can be brought. Why is it that law and order leagues have to be formed so often to get law enforced? Men are elected to enforce the law. They swear to do so. Yet how little attention they give to their official oath! It requires the spur of a law and order league to compel them to do their duty, their sworn duty. "Surely they swear falsely."

How much perjury at this point! How seldom is one of these false swearers punished for his crime! Here is a national sin that cries to heaven for vengeance. It is a sin, national in character, in that such men are constitutionally eligible to office, and the mass of the nation accept of this state of affairs, and vote and hold office on this basis as good enough. Such men, of course, are as good as the constitution, which has no moral test for office, requires. Thus the nation is responsible.

WORK WHILE IT IS DAY.

Very few have contributed to the National Christion Association during the past few months. But now the hotest weather is past, the time for State conventions, the distribution of tracts, in short, the time for hard work is again upon us all.

Your agents are doing very much considering their fewness, but we are now much in need of funds. The college reading rooms ought to be supplied again with the Cynosure. The same is true of the Y. M. C. A. reading rooms. The Jamestown Y. M. C. A. has lately received from this Association our anti-secrecy library. It ought to go into many Y. M. C. A. libraries. Our tract work among the Baptist pastors has been considerable this summer, but now our free tract fund needs replenishing.

We are now corresponding about State conventions. The State and general work needs your support. Shall we not hear from you very soon?

CHINESE IDOLATRY.

"Lee Jim Nun, a Chinaman who lived at Derry, Pa., and who died one week ago, was buried at Pittsburg, July 21, with Chinese and Masonic rites. He was a Freemason, and more white people than Chinamen were at the grave. Lee Tom Ma of Cincinnati, whose Christian name is Rev. Y. S. Thomas, had charge of the ceremonies. Five hundred dollars were subscribed by the Freemasons to cover expenses. One thousand persons attended the ceremonies. On two tables on the sidewalk were placed a large roast of meat, two roasted chickens, a piece of fat pork, nuts, oranges, apples, candy, rice and tea. The coffin stood on two camp stools in the gutter. Joss and incense sticks were burned, and Chinese holy water was sprinkled on the remains. In the coffin were money, towels, soap, combs, a fan, and something to drink. One eye of the dead man was open. This was regarded as a good omen by the Chinamen. Dan Do, of Chicago, on horseback, led the funeral procession. He carried a large three-cornered red banner and an ugly-looking knife, which he swung through the air in a menacing manner, to drive away the bad spirits. Behind him was a brass band of music. All the eatables, money and other offerings were thrown into the grave. Five thousand people were at the cemetery."—Boston Standard.

The most laughable thing connected with the above is the terrible effort on the part of the Freemasons to establish the antiquity and universality of Freemasonry by connecting it with hocus-pocus idolatry of the Chinese. This one point, however, must always be remembered—without the legend and tragedy of Hiram Abiff there can be no Fremasonry, and this legend of course the Chinese are ignorant of, and hence are no Freemasons. The roast pig, roast chickens, the fat pork, nuts, oranges, apples, etc., of the Chinamen are far more sensible and more to be preferred, however, than the little aprons and mallets and squares and setting mauls and compasses, and other silly jim cracks of the Freemasons.

—Elder Rufus Smith writes from Syracuse, N. Y., that he has held meetings on land and water for twenty-one days between Florida and that city. He expects to reach Minneapolis, Minn., by Sept. 21 his 74th birthday. Here he expects to meet and co-operate with Bro. Fenton. While in that city Bro. Smith will make his headquarters at 29 Washington Ave.

Reform News.

REV. J. P. STODDARD AT THE NORTHFIELD CONFERENCE AND ANNUAL PEACE CONVENTION.

Boston, Mass., Aug. 19, 1895.

Editor Cynosure:—My recent trip to Northfield and Hinsdale is already producing fruits; orders for books and inquiries for information have been received. The address of President Blanchard was well received, and Bro. Moody and the leaders at the meeting gave me every opportunity that could be reasonably asked for, circulating the synopsis I had printed with other documents in the same line. In the busy sessions so near the close I had opportunity to converse only briefly with anyone, but received words of cheer from Bros. Moody, Henry M. Moore, A. T. Pierson, James O. Conner, Webb Peploe, Andrew Murry and some others who accepted a copy of Danger Signals with thanks. I am under personal obligation to our friend H. E Hunter, and Mrs. Hunter, for generous hospitality and for a pleasant hour with Mrs. Gen. J. W. Phelps in a renewal of old friendships.

Judging from newspaper reports our city is very soon to be inundated by an army of Knights whose uniforms and military trappings are to outrival all the showy parades of the crusades. Among the items chronicled are 150 black horses, 700 cases of red and white wine and two tons of fruit already enroute with the California contingent. Each Knight in the General Commandery of Massachusetts and Rhode Island has been assessed "$5 as a starter," which gives the snug amount of near $51,000. In addition to this tax per capita, Boston Commandery gives $35,000, De Molay $10,000, and so on through the list, I suppose.

The steamers in our harbor were not considered sufficiently magnificent to do merited honor to the visiting Knights, and a steel steamer from New York, capable of carrying 2,000 Knights at a time, has been ordered for a trip to Nantasket Beach. As a mark of special recognition the gates of our ancient graveyards are to be opened and the question of closing business houses on the day of the parade is being agitated. Decorations are not numerous, but extensive preporations are in progress. Aside from Masonic Temple, the first of any considerable pretensions that I saw was a tobacco and cigar store on Tremont street, though I learned of saloonkeepers who were pressing their landlords and fellow tenants for contributions for decorations.

Mystic, Conn., Aug. 21.—Enroute to this annual Peace Convention I stopped with Bro. J. A. Conant at Willimantic over night, and was glad to find him and his in good health and heart. So far the gathering here is not as large as on some former years, but to-morrow it is anticipated will be the great day of the convention. I have distributed tracts quite freely and find good results from the labors of last year by Bro. Bacon and myself. I was given a few moments to speak from the platform yesterday, and many have expressed a desire to khown more of the secret lodge system. What the decision of the committee will be in the matter remains to be learned.

The speaking so far has been commendable, and one feature of yesterday's program was especially attractive. Eighteen misses and lads contested for a prize, each selection in the recitation having reference to the subject of peace. The performance was well sustained, and thorough preparation and careful drill was evident. Alfred H. Love, president of the Universal Peace Society, Mrs. Bevy Lockwood, Levi Crouch, James H. Earle, Wm. Lloyd Garrison, Miss C. Whipple and Mrs. Ormsby are prominent in the list of earnest, active promoters of the peace cause present.

Aug. 22, P. M.—The attendance to-day was an increase upon yesterday and more are expected to-morrow. I am announced as one of the speakers to-morrow and hope to shed some light upon the dark empire and its direct tendency to provoke war and bloodshed among men.

ARRANGING FOR THE CONVENTION.

Portland, Ore., Aug. 16, 1895.

Editor Cynosure:—We opened the battle here for reform at Crescent Park, Lincoln county, Washington, August the 2nd, 1895. This is a country place noted for lodges, dancing, base ball, and general Sabbath desecration. The Elder Kenoyer, pastors Griffin and Brink were on hand to render all the assistance possible. During the meeting quite a number were saved. Conviction was deep and pungent with others, but they turned their backs upon God and walked away from him, perhaps forever. One lady, a church member, was so annoyed by stock destroying her crops, she could not be a Christian. This lady was one of the first lady graduates of Cambridge College, England. Her husband belongs to three or four lodges, including the Freemasons. Before we left she got so she could spell "Mah-hah-bone". And I think the husband, when he returns from his mining expedition, will have to answer a few plain questions about the lodge.

In all our meetings the lodgemen were out in good force. On the first Monday, while out walking, I met a man who proved to be a Mason. He had heard me on the day before, and asked me whether I had ever been a Mason. I said, "Try me." He answered, "You know something about it." We talked more than an hour. He took the address of Ronayne's Handbook and Duncan's Ritual, and agreed to send for them to ascertain whether Masonry is an open secret or not. Another man who heard me at the Mondovi camp, a very gentlemanly Odd-fellow, was sorry he could not stay and hear me. He and another man tried, in contrasting the lodge charity with the church benevolence, to make it appear that the charity of the lodge never fails. It was stated by the other man that the lodge always looks after its members, whereupon I had a clipping from the Cowlitz county paper and read where Cowlitz Lodge No. 66 of the Independent Order of Odd-fellows had made application to the county commissioners for the support of one of their members, which was granted.

They tried to make out that he had forfeited his membership, but I showed them that the commissioners state in their report that "The relief of J. H. McElhany is hereby granted, and it is hereby ordered that Cowlitz Lodge No. 66 assume charge of him as they have heretofore, and bring in their bill at the end of each quarter at the regular session of this board, to the amount of $3 25 per week." I told them it was a genuine case of charity dying after a certain number of weeks, when no dues are paid. I gave the initiatory degree sign, and they tried to laugh it away as false, but it did not work.

I met here a young minister whom I met two years ago in Albany, Oregon, and talked with him three hours on the question of his leaving the Odd-fellows before entering the ministry. I was delighted to hear from his own lips that the seed sown had done its work. He told me that he had given it all up, and was determined that nothing should stand between him and Jesus. He is a bright young man, and will make his mark in the world. During this meeting we had plenty of Cynosures, Lodge Lamps and "Disloyal Secret Oaths," by Joseph Cook, lying about the stand where everybody could read them. We had posted up on the centerpole of the lodge tabernacle the testimony and portraits of Dr. A. J. Gordon, D. L. Moody, G. F. Pentecost, Charles G. Finney, and others. The tent was full of people, and they listened with good interest. A few G. A. R. men asked me why I did not wear a copper button. I showed them my discharge and two or three wounds received in active service, and said these are better badges than all your old copper buttons. I received ten Cynosure subscriptions here. Several signed our constitution, among them Rev. J. S. Taylor, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal church, who has been a member of several secret societies, but agrees with us that it is no place for a Christian. We left Crescent Park feeling sure that our work here will tell in eternity.

Bro. M. M. Sprinkle, a dear good young man, brought me to Spokane in time for the morning train to Portland. At Colfax, Prof. Easter, of Moscow, Idaho, boarded the train, and soon we were engaged in a friendly chat about the unfaithfulness of popular ministers and church members in representing true Christianity. We were generally agreed until he made the remark that he did not believe that there was one minister who would speak out against popular evils. My reply was: "I do not claim to be a popular preacher, but I put in one hour and thirty minutes last night with a congregation of about five hundred exposing and opposing one of the most popular evils in this land, secret societies." He said, "I belong to three, the Odd-fellows, Good Templars, and Royal Arcanum, and I see no harm in any of them; if I did I would leave them at once." I urged the Christless character of Odd-fellowship, and he utterly denied that Odd-fellowship was religious in any sense. I said, "You are a teacher, and you know the order has prayers, ceremonies and a ritual, and you know that all these are genuine accompaniments of religion. They are found nowhere else but in religious societies." When I quoted to him what Grosh says in his Manual on the religion of Odd-fellowship, page 90: "In a word, what regeneration is in religion by the word of divine truth, initiation is in Oddfellowship," he said, "Grosh is a cranky Odd-fellow." I asked him if Grosh's Manual was not in most every well-regulated lodge. He answered, "It is." "Then," said I, "Odd-fellowship must be a cranky thing, and you, as an intelligent, honest man, had better get out."

At this juncture we arrived at Walla Walla, where we stopped for supper. I think the professor was glad to cease the conversation. The passengers were seemingly much interested. The next morning after my arrival at home I started again to secure a house in which to hold the convention. I found a number of pastors who sympathized with our work, but they must see their trustees, or present the mattter to the session, until I found Rev. T. T. Vincent, of the First Evangelical church, corner of East Sixth and Market streets. He answered me without any hesitation, "Yes, sir, you can have our church, and welcome. It conflicts with our prayer meeting night, but we will hope to receive more good from the convention than we would from the prayer meeting." It makes an agent feel good to meet such men. Bro. Vincent is elected to represent his conference in the General Conference which meets at Elgin, Illinois, about October the 2nd. He had intended to leave Portland Sept. 26, but will now wait till the 27th and take in all our convention. He is a representative man in his denomination in the West. We anticipate a good time in this church.

While passing through our city yesterday representing our cause I came up with a business man, one prominent in church work, especially some new feature. When he found out my business, he flew to pieces, so to speak, railed out like a madman, and supposed that he would cause me to run, or call for an officer. Among other things he said, "I know Bro. Scott well, and he is doing more harm than good lecturing against Masonry. He misrepresents the institution from first to last." There is a meeting being held near us here on the holiness line. Quite a number of our neighbors are at the altar each evening seeking, but are not willing to pay the price, or meet the obligations, separate themselves from the world. May the Holy Spirit open their eyes. P. B. Williams.

FREE METHODIST CAMP MEETING.

South Rigate, Vt., Aug. 21, 1895.

Editor Cynosure:—This will let you know that I am still up here among the mountains. Were I a poet with the inspiration of the scenery around me I should probably write enough to weary my friends, should they be inclined to read. As I write, I can look off for miles and miles on the most enchanting scenery.

I have just come from the Free Methodist camp meeting being held in Keith's Grove, four miles on the mountan above the village of Barre.

The best granite for monuments in this country is thought to be found in the quarries near this camp ground. A stone weighing seventy-five tons was recently shipped from here. There are about one hundred of these quarries being worked in the vicinity.

It was my privilege to be entertained by Bro. Lewis Keith for a time, and to learn of him much of interest regarding this large and growing industry. This brother purchased land on the mountain some thirty years ago, paying thirty dollars per acre. He has sold some of his farm for $1,500 per acre. Some will bring even more. His early habits of industry have not been laid aside because of the fortunes that have come. I saw him in the early morning harvesting grain. His wife cares for the home as in other years. There is little display, but always a welcome to the worthy in their humble home. I could but contrast this typical New England home with some others where wealth made splendor care and misery possible.

A small army of men are employed in these quarries. They are largely of foreign birth. A great majority of those of any religious faith being Catholic. It was in the hope that many of these would accept Christ that this camp meeting was planned. The Gospel has been faithfully and earnestly presented by consecrated men, and I am sure lasting impressions have been made. Three sermons were preached each day, with "love feasts" and prayer meetings between. It was expected to conclude these services last evening, but the interest was such as to warrant their continuance. Friends were expecting to see a mighty work of God. The attendance, which was not large at first, was very much increased.

I was granted the utmost freedom in the distribution of our literature and invited to participate in the meetings. I lectured and labored among the people at such times as it was thought by the committee in charge would not detract from the main object of the meeting. I was greatly profited in listening to the sermons, especially those of Brethren Fish and Clark.

On Monday evening I attended an experience meeting in Barre. All present had an experience and were glad to tell it to the praise of their precious Redeemer. I scarcely need add that no one belonging to the lodge was there. They don't relish such meetings.

In company with Bro. Clark last Saturday morning, I climbed an ascent of granite to where we could get a clear view of the surrounding country. There were no clouds between us and the sun. The atmosphere was clear and invigorating. The scene that met our eyes was enchanting. I shall not attempt a description. The valley was enveloped in a dense fog. Looking down we saw nothing but mist. Out and around was the grand cyclorama of God's creation.

Oh, how many are living enveloped in the mists of earth when they would enjoy the atmosphere of heaven if they would only ascend above the clouds!

I leave Montpelier and Barre, after laboring in them a little more than two weeks, with the feeling that a good beginning has been made. Twenty-four new readers to the Cynosure have been secured, and a large number of tracts and pamphlets circulated. The work has been difficult, but I have learned that blessings are not to be obtained without trials. The way is opened, I believe, for larger meetings; and I trust at no distant day a rousing State convention may be held there. I remain here a few days laboring as the way may open, returning (D. V.) to Boston in time to aid in the circulation of literature at the Knights Templar conclave.

WHAT STARTED THE BOYS' BRIGADES?

Philadelphia, Pa., Aug. 22, 1895.

Editor Cynosure:—At one of the sessions of the Grand Lodge of Knights of Pythias, of Pennsylvania, held at Reading last week, "Major-General" J. R. Carnahan, of the Uniform Rank, says the Philadelphia Public Ledger's account, "was escorted into the Grand Lodge, and delivered an address upon the features of the military branch of the order. He said the reason why the Knights of Pythias were so successful was that the order kept up with the times, and was always in the lead in secret society work. The Uniform Rank came in for much praise. There are 50,000 members in the United States and Canada. He said that Pennsylvania had the men and means to have the greatest military order in the country."

In the light of this statement, let church and school judge whether any apprehension of necessity to "keep up with the times" has operated to originate and keep alive the military drill and Boys' Brigade. Josiah W. Leeds.

REPLY TO ALL-ROUND REFORMER.

Effingham, Kan., Aug. 20, 1895.

Editor Cynosure:—In your issue of Aug. 15, there is found a second article from the pen of Bro. Gillespie. Does not the good doctor's understanding of the attitude of men toward God differ from the inspired writers of the Psalms? The Psalms open with a clear description of men in their heart relationship to God. David describes two classes, the godly and ungodly. Had he been of the same mind with the brother he would have given three classes, the godly, the ungodly and the neutral. Doubtless in the third class, according to this conception of the attitude of men toward God, would be put the agnostic, when asked: Is the Bible true? Is there a hereafter? Is there a God? would have answered upon these questions, we are neutral; we do not know; we neither deny nor affirm. Brother, the Scripture you yourself quoted draws one line, upon one side of which is every man. "He that is not with me is against me." As individuals we are from God, and as such must acknowledge him. And as a nation we are from him, and as such must acknowledge him. Not to acknowledge in either case is to deny.

But the main point for which this article is written is in regard to the manner of getting an amendment made to the constitution. I read a story, a few days ago, concerning two men who were quietly taking a walk. They were unarmed, and while sauntering along they espied a wild beast several rods ahead. If the only way of deliverance had been to go forward and encounter the beast with no weapon in their hands their case would have been desperate. One in a whisper said to the other, stand motionless; and the first one gathered a full breath and yelled with all his might. The beast looked bewildered a moment and then fled away into the brush. If the only way to amend the constitution is to go to the polls and vote for men who are to take oath to support the godless constitution the case would be desperate. "What cannot be cured must be endured." But no one is pushed to that.

Let the brother turn to Article V of our constitution and he will find, that besides the way of ratifying a proposed amendment by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, there is another way. "Or by conventions in three-fourths thereof." Such conventions are open to all, and there is no endorsement whatever of the godless constitution on the part of the people who attend and participate in the proceedings of these conventions. One or two years ago an effort was ably made of getting an amendment before Congress to be sent down to the people met in convention for their ratification. I am safe in saying that conscientiously non-voting Christians have done as much as any other persons in bringing about the increased public sentiment in favor of a God-acknowledging amendment to our constitution.

Brother, your closing words are encouraging. I do not deny that "voting Christians need a little more"—much more—"education along this line." Please consider these things.

A MUCH NEEDED REFORM.

Sanborn, Ia., Aug. 17, 1895.

Editor Cynosure:—Seeing the need of some plan of action to be taken by our churches to give systematically, I propose one on which I would like to have your opinion. The first thing would be to get the names of those in favor of this plan and call a convention; and in this convention pick out the material for an organization. This convention of men all should agree on and practice the system of giving one-tenth of all they make to God. But in meeting together they could, through committees and sub-committees, form some plan to systemize and operate it. by consecrated men of God, regardless of denomination. These men should belong to some Christian church and be in good standing.

The plan of distribution might be this: To give of the money consecrated to God's use for home benevolence, one-third; for foreign missions, one-third; and one-third for the direct support of the church. My object in this is to do away with the necessity of men seeking charity outside of the church of Christ. For this purpose you will find men of all denominations in secret societies. This money given for benevolences should be so divided that each church can take care of its own poor, so that they would not be dependent on the cold charity of the world.

I am told every day by my wife and others to go and join myself to some order or get my life insured. I am a poor man and dependent on my day's work for a living. It looks hard to leave a wife and two or three children without some means to get along in case of death. But I do not believe as long as I belong to the church of Christ it is necessary to belong to anything else; and if there is something that is more charitable than the church of Christ it is a shame; and it is time to act and to act at once. It is a pity that 1895 years after Christ was born his people cannot commonly agree to look after and keep the weak ones of the flock, in case of accident or misfortune. When the wealth of the church members in the United States is estimated at $11,078,840,000, with a daily increase of $1,360,000 after paying all living expenses, luxuries, ornaments, gifts, etc., and of this vast wealth of the children of God, it is a pity that only $5,500,000 are given for foreign and home missions.

Let us as Christians learn to look to each other for charity and love. We all should look after the poor in our churches. Please let me hear from you, as I think something ought to be done to keep our brethren in the church. "Inasmuch as you have done it unto one of these you have done it unto me." Yours in Christ, with charity for all, Louis S. Carroll.

CAN A SECRET SOCIETY MEMBER BE A TRUE CHRISTIAN?

Blanchard, Ia., Aug. 19, 1895.

Editor Cynosure:—I was talking with a Congregational pastor lately on the secret society question, when he made the following startling statements: "I have been a pastor in half a dozen different places, east and west. I have never antagonized the lodge, but have made a close study of its members in my own and other congregations, and I state unqualifiedly that I have never yet known a lodge member who gave evidence of true conversion, or who had even the shadow of appreciation for spiritual revival work; and I never knew a lodge member, rich or poor, who was worth his room in the church to which he belonged." These statements correspond with my observation and experience.

When I went to Michigan in 1878, the M. E. congregation in Watrousville was thoroughly under the control of the lodge. A lodge minister had held a revival and taken in 200 members. The church was actually run by the lodge, through the instrumentality of the choir, which was composed of lodge members and the children of lodge members. Every new pastor, when he came, had to make his peace with the choir and the lodge before he could proceed. The church services were run on the spread-eagle style. They were barren of spirituality. You could not get that church for a reform meeting of any kind, and the pastor dared not preach reform from the pulpit.

At length a minister of an independent character was assigned to that circuit. He was the son of the presiding elder of the district, and thought he needed no other recommendation. He was no enemy of the lodge, but was not willing to bow to it. Consequently on his first appearance on his first Sabbath, there was no choir, and not a full house. They were going to break him in at the start. He asked for the organist. No one knew where she was. He asked for the choir. He received the same response. He asked for the members. One man and four women rose. These were not lodge members. He asked for the 200 converts. Not one showed up. He was equal to the occasion. He said: "We will begin a revival to-day, and I'll do the singing until somebody is converted who can sing." He had a grand revival, but so far as known not a lodgeman was converted, although some of their wives and children were.

The great curse of the church to-day is lodge members. There are churches that can scarcely move their little finger for God and truth and right, for fear of offending the lodge members. We can see it right here in Blanchard. I verily believe that every lodge member in the church is the devil's agent to cripple God's Word.

GOOD MASONS GOOD CHRISTIANS.

Little Rock, Ark., Aug. 19, 1895.

Editor Cynosure:—The caption of this article is both a falsehood and an absurdity, yet many believe it to be a fact, even those who have never been initiated into the so-called secrets or been admitted into the "secret chambers" or the tyled doors of a Masonic lodge; and yet those very men will defend and endorse this masterpiece of Satan, showing only how they are deceived and deluded by the man of sin who sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is god.

A few evenings since, I attended a preaching service at which the minister stated that Masonry was a good institution, but that he knew little about it, yet what he had learned about Masonry was from Masonic books. He said that his father was a Mason; but I could not see how he could be, for he is a blind man. But he knew if a man was a good Mason he would be a good Christian. At that moment I spoke out and interrupted him saying, Your mistaken. He did not notice or take exception to my intrusive remark; but the next day I wrote him a lengthy letter and gave him many quotations from Masonic authors to prove the absurdity of his statement. God pity the poor deluded ones all over this so-called Christian land that bow to and worship the image of the beast, this lodge power; the bulwark behind which is entrenched both in church and state nearly all the iniquity of our country.

A. J. Millard.

CHRISTIAN VERSUS LODGE BENEVOLENCE.

Quimby, Ia., Aug. 18, 1895.

Editor Cynosure:—When I read in a late Cynosure of Dr. Blodgett's sermon to the Oddfellows of Galesburgh, from the subject of the "Good Samaritan". I wondered if he could or could not see the lodgemen in the priest and the Levite, and true Christian benevolence in the Samaritan. Let us study it for a moment. The priest came and looked on him. He saw no square and compass, no three links or badge of any other order to which he belonged. He heard no great hailing sign of distress, and so he went on his way. The Levite came and did the same.

But the Samaritan came, and perhaps he was one of those who told the Saviour "Now we believe—not for what the woman has told us, but because of what we see and hear." I think he must have heard the Saviour preach on the subject of true and false benevolence. At any rate Jesus uses this parable to illustrate it.

False benevolence is giving, expecting to receive as much again, or to be seen of men. Jesus taught us to "do good and lend, hoping for nothing again. Love your enemies. If he hungers feed him . . . if he thirsts give him drink . . . That ye may be the children of the Highest." This is Christian benevolence. This is what the Samaritan did. But if you love them who love you what reward have you, for do not the sinners the same? If you give to those who give to you what do you more than the worst of sinners? Lodgemen give to aid members of their own society, expecting to receive as much or more in return, if they can get it. What reward have such? And what reward have those who give to be seen of men?

Paul in the 13th chapter of 1 Corinthians carries out this idea. He says, "Though I give all my goods to feed the poor and my body to be burned, but have not love, it will profit me nothing." There is no profit, no reward from God, but only from men. But if there is a lodgeman who does good like the Good Samaritan, from pure love to God,—expecting to receive nothing in return, then let him do it as a Christian, not as a lodgeman. True Christian benevolence is from Christ and not from the lodge, and to do it as a lodgeman is to rob God. Do good as a disciple of Christ and receive the reward which he has promised. Lodges are organized selfishness. True Christianity is organized benevolence. P. F. Thurber.

SOULS RUINED BY FALSE WORSHIP.

De Kalb, Ia., Aug. 14, 1895.

Editor Cynosure:—Organized secret lodges contain the principles of Satan's form of warfare, which is to conceal and never reveal that which should be known for the benefit of society, so that those who will may escape dangers which ruin the souls of men eternally. To appear as an angel of light and deceive the church by covering up forms of iniquity so that people may mistake "darkness for light and light for darkness," is the policy of Satan. When he can thus influence the church then it is out of harmo-ny with God.

It cannot be denied that the lodge promotes disloyalty to Christ. Freemasons who profess Christianity did not deny, when talking with me, that the lodge excludes the name of Christ, but they justified this because the lodge was so ancient. It was in the world, they said, before Christ. They seem to forget that Satan tempted Eve before it was necessary for Christ to come into the world to save men. Because an institution is old does not make it right and honorable. Yet good people are deceived with such unreasonable arguments. To worship in the church and then worship in the lodge where Christ is excluded, is trying to serve two masters. What can men do to more effectually grieve the Holy Spirit than to worship, where in prayer the name of Christ is excluded? What can please Satan more than for men of great influence in the church to worship at lodge altars and thus grieve the Holy Ghost? Is it not the greatest blasphemy against the Holy Spirit? It is rejecting God's way of worship for a mode prescribed by the counsel of the ungodly. "Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly." But to do so in the matter of worship pleases Satan most, and the better the man who does it the more damaging it is to Christianity.

Lodge worship is as corrupting to the worship of the only true God, and as insulting to him, as was the Baal worship of Elijah's time. Lodge altars, where Christ is excluded, are no better than the altars of Baal. God has ordained that his Son Jesus Christ should be the Saviour of the world; and Christ only has the right to establish altars for worship, and that only in the organizations which he has ordained, such as the family, church and state. In the first meeting of the sons of God, Satan came also among them; and he is now in the church, deceiving many as an angel of light. It is his business to ruin souls, and this he does most effectually through false worship. It is only in the worship of the true God that there is hope for the child of God. If the Christian is undeceived by Satan he wil strive to honor Jesus Christ in all things. He will "strive to enter in at the strait gate." It is too narrow for lodge worshipers. "Many will seek to enter in and shall not be able." Luke 13: 24. A man is not crowned except he strive lawfully, and no one can serve two masters.

HOW TO MAKE AN INVALID'S BED.

Some Simple Directions Which Are of Great Use In the Sickroom.

Having the bedding at hand, pin the lower sheet in place, stretching carefully and pinning underneath the mattress, that the smooth surface beneath the patient may not be readily worked into wrinkles. Now fold the draw sheet crosswise and lay on the under. Pin on each side to mattress and spread on the upper sheet, leaving a little loose for the feet and long enough to turn over blanket at top. Have the blanket long enough to tuck around patient's neck and counterpane long enough to fold over the same length as sheet, the blanket less.

Beat up pillow smooth. Then turn back counterpane, blanket and sheet, leaving the sheet folded so that it will come next to the chin. In changing the bed where the patient is too weak to be removed roll carefully to one side of the bed, putting one hand against the invalid's shoulder and the other against the hip. Now, keeping the patient well covered, unpin lower and draw sheets on the vacant side and roll up against the patient in lengthwise folds. Replace with fresh sheet and draw, pin smoothly in place, roll the patient gently over on the clean side, still protected with upper sheet, unpin and take off soiled lower sheet and draw, pull the fresh ones in place and pin. Now put clean upper sheet over the soiled one, tuck in and then reaching under remove the soiled one. Lift the head gently and change the pillows, beating and smoothing as before.

To change the nightdress roll up the skirt part to the shoulders, take off sleeves, slip over head and off. Have the fresh one ready, warmed and aired. Put arms in first, then lift over the head, pull down under the shoulders and smoothly under hips, and you will have your patient freshly changed with comparatively little trouble to the nurse and with infinite comfort to the patient.

How to Make Turkish Dessert.

Heat a pint of milk in a double boiler, moisten 3 tablespoonfuls of rice flour with a little milk or cold water and use to thicken the milk. Add 4 tablespoonfuls of granulated sugar, cook until a smooth, thick paste, then flavor with a teaspoonful of rose water and 2 tablespoonfuls of chopped nuts. Use almonds, English walnuts or the two nuts mixed. Pour on a flat dish and sprinkle with whole almonds. If you wish to be very truly Turkish, cut the almonds on top in crescent shape.

How to Renew Hat Feathers.

Light colored feathers can be washed in benzine without losing their curl or color. They should be swung in the air until dry. Another plan is to wash them in warm water and castile soap, rinse three times; pass through a warm solution of oxalic acid and then lightly starch. Dry in a warm room by lightly beating each feather against the hand. To curl ostrich feathers have a dull knife, with the top hollowed out near the point. Hold feather over a fire, shaking gently until warm. Then, holding the feather in left hand, place the fiber between the thumb and knife edge, and draw it along quickly, curling the end only. If feathers are damp, the curl may be retained by holding the hat over the fire and waving it until dry. Then place in a cool room for the fibers to stiffen.

How to Kill Cockroaches.

A housekeeper who was recommended to try cucumber peeling as a remedy for cockroaches strewed the floor with pieces of the peel cut not very thin and watched the sequel. The pests covered the peel in a short time so that it could not be seen, so voraciously were they engaged in sucking the poisonous moisture. The second night this was tried the number of cockroaches was reduced to a quarter. and none was left alive on the third night.

How to Swing a Hammock.

The head of the hammock should be about 6½ feet from the ground and the foot end about 3¾ feet, a curve which secures to the occupant the greatest possible ease of position. The foot rope should be about three times as long as the head rope, the purpose being to give the lower part of the body freedom in swinging, while the head remains comparatively stationary. The ropes with metal catches are to be preferred. Where trees are used to support the rope bearings, the branches should be well protected by heavy canvas or cloth, as the friction is apt to wear off the bark and so work injury to the tree.

How to Iron Napkins Without Starch.

In France, instead of using starch on table napkins, after they are washed and dried and ready to be ironed, they are dipped in boiling water and partially wrung out between clothes. They are rapidly ironed with as hot a flat iron as possible without burning them. They will be beautifully stiff and glossy.

The Christian Cynosure.

REV. M. A. GAULT, - - - Editor.
WM. I. PHILLIPS, - - - Publisher.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, AUGUST 29, 1895.

BENEVOLENCE OF ODD-FELLOWSHIP ILLUSTRATED.

Rev. W. P. White, of Little York, makes this admirable comment upon a speech by a popular lodge orator on the parable of the "Good Samaritan." It is certainly time to call a halt in the frequent perversion of this beautiful parable by lodge men:

"Not long ago I listened to a speech by an ex-presiding elder of the Galesburg district, in favor of Odd-fellowship. He made the startling statement that Odd-fellowship was the most benevolent institution on earth; and then he undertook to illustrate the benevolence of his order. He began by introducing a certain man who fell among thieves between Jerusalem and Jericho. He told of the mean, selfish spirit shown by the priest and Levite, and then said that the third man who came along the road was a Samaritan with the spirit of an Odd-fellow, who did to him what every Odd-fellow is taught to do. But as I listened to that grand old story, told first by Him who knew no class or clan, I could not help but think that it was an exceedingly poor illustration of the benevolence of any order. I would like, without showing any irreverance to the inspired story, to use this parable as an illustration of the difference between the benevolence of Odd-fellowship and true Christian benevolence.

"Here is a man lying upon the rough and rugged road between Jerusalem and Jericho. Thieves have wounded, robbed, stripped, and left him half dead by the roadside. No one to help and he is dying. But see! Coming through that narrow pass where he, poor fellow, first thought he heard the footsteps of the robber, a Levite and a priest appear. They, too, are on their way from Jerusalem down to their home in Jericho. They see the unfortunate man, and touched by human sympathy, they go quickly toward him. And as they go the Levite exclaims, 'Oh! priest, priest! behold upon his gown that little pin with its three links of friendship, love and truth! He is our brother, priest, and we must help him. But the priest, looking critically at the prostrate form, says; 'Hold, Levite, hold! I know this man. He used to belong to lodge No. 120 down in Jericho, but he has neglected to pay his dues for thirteen weeks.' And they both passed by on the other side.

"Then came along a man of Samaria. He saw the man lying in his blood. He did not know him, but recognized in him the features of a Jew; a man who did not belong to his society at all; a man who was his born enemy; a man who had no doubt been in the crowd that very day that had hissed him in the market-place, and spurned him as 'a Samaritan dog;' a man to whom he owed no legal obligations; but he forgot that the poor fellow was a Jew and he a Samaritan, when he saw a man in need. And he stooped down, lifted him up, carried him to an inn and treated him as a brother. And that was Christian benevolence."

KNIGHT TEMPLARISM NOT MASONRY.

A new student of Masonry, learning his first lessons, will make a quick and long advance by mastering the first two or three paragraphs of Mr. Ronayne's article on the second page of the Cynosure of August fifteenth. Just at this time, this part of the paper would be of great use to students of Masonry in Boston. They would do well to commit at least one statement to memory. It is a thoroughly qualified authority who says, "There is no Freemasonry higher or beyond the Master Mason's degree."

To make this clear to himself, the tyro can turn to the diagram on the advertising page of the Cynosure. At the bottom are three degrees, arranged like foundation stones. They are not three separate things. In reality the Master's degree, or the lodge to which it more strictly belongs, embraces all three. The comprehensive name that covers them is "Blue Lodge." Tnis lodge, entered by three steps, or degrees, as the steps are called, is the whole of Masonry.

Those who are Masons, and such persons only, can enter most of the other institutions shown in the diagram. In this sense they are Masonic, containing none but Masons. They make no one a Mason, but they accept him as already a Mason. None but a complete Mason is qualified to take even their first degree.

The order on the right, marked with a star, is for women and not for Masons. Masons manage its work, but its candidates are not Masons and cannot become Masons. All the others require Masonry as preliminary. But they cannot make Masons.

Descending from the circle on the left of the diagram, the learner will find the Knight Templar side show. It is one side, irregular, consistent in character yet inconsistent in form with Masonry. Reference to Masonry is made in its oath, and all who take its oath must be Masons. Yet this does not do away with its separateness and its inconsistency. It is a serious fault of Masonry that it prepares the candidate for such a thing and leads to it. It is a fault of the degree that it is so consistent as it is with such another thing as Masonry. However consistent in one way or inconsistent in another it is not identical, and is not part of the same thing.

Mr. Ronayne is right in saying that Masonry has no degree beyond the third or Master Mason's degree. This is not truer of the female order marked in the diagram with a star, than of other outside things shown with it in the same diagram. Every real Mason is under oath not to be present at the raising of a madman, a fool or a woman. This order is composed of women. If membership made them Masons they would be Masons without the ceremony of "raising," and without taking the Master's "obligation," and in actual violation of that obligation. No such thing is possible. This would be Masonry with Masonry itself left out.

After "raising" and the giving of the "obligation" the candidate is as much a Mason as he can be made. He can join the Mafia, or the Grange, or the Good Templars, or the Knights Templar, but he cannot be made more truly or more fully a Mason. A Templar is worse than a Mason because he is both. One evil is not so bad as two, and for this reason a mere Mason has the advantage.

It is customary to speak of Scotch Rite, York Rite, Masonry and so on. So, too, in loose speech we may talk of a Fellow Craft lodge. Strictly speaking there can be no such, Masonry has no lodge but the Master's Blue Lodge, and no degrees but its own three.

A Mason may be expelled from any of the side degrees, such as Knights Templar or Scotch Rite degrees, and his Masonic standing is unaffected. But if expelled from the Blue Lodge or Master Mason's lodge, he is thereby expelled from Knight Templar Masonry and other side degrees.

Knights Templar must have been Masons and must continue to be Masons, but Knight Templarism is not Masonry.

AN ENEMY UNMASKED.

In a letter just recieved, Rev. R. J. Gault, says: The greatest enemy the cause of Christ has to conbat to-day, is the secret empire. Heathenism, intemperance, impurity and infidelity combined, are doing less injury to the cause of true religion to-day than the lodge. All other evils are outside, in open enmity to the church; but the lodge poses before the world as a reformer. Under the mask of charity, temperance and religion, it has insinuated itself into the church, and always has the kiss of Judas to give to every effort toward reform that the church puts forth.

The daylight of exposure is to this beast of the night like the shadow of death. It threatens, intimidates, muzzles press, platform and pulpit. A wolf in sheep's clothing, it destroys the flock. Deceiving its members with the promise of admission into the Grand Lodge above, they find the doors of heaven closed against them. Dives did get into the Grand Lodge above (?), but when his tongue was on fire the tyler would not let him out or let Lazarus in. Lazarus did not miss much when he could not get into the Grand Lodge. It was better for him to go with the poor cowans, evesdroppers and women into heaven, there to be comforted, while Dives and his followers were tormented. The church is in her captive state. The poor of the land are left to tend and run the church, while the men and means are captives in this spiritual Babylon. If the church could get the interest on the money that the lodge handles, she could do more good.

The Lord speaks through the pen of Ezekiel of the lewd women, which were Israel and Judah, that gave his corn, wine and oil to their guilty lovers. Such is the complaint of the Lord's cause to-day against the lodge. God's substance that should be used in his service is consumed in the offerings of the high places. It not only takes the wealth but the influence from the support of the church. Well-diggers are in the habit of testing a suspected well before going into it. They lower a lighted candle down into the well; if the candle goes out it indicates the presence of well-damp. But you will find a more fatal well-damp in the lodge, one that is more fatal to the Christian's light than well-damp is to a candle. We cannot as Christians go where our influence for good is compromised without incurring guilt.

"Dearly beloved, I beseech you as strangers and pilgrims abstain from fleshly lusts which war against the soul; having your conversation honest among the Gentiles; that, whereas they speak against you as evil doers, they may by your good works which they shall behold, glorify God in the day of visitation." 1. Pet. 2: 11,12.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—The Second Free Methodist church of Chicago has a new church building nearly completed. The site is 48-50 Lexington avenue, between Hoyne and Leavitt. This denomination has seven societies inside the city limits, besides one at Harvey and one in South Chicago.

—We are using one of the fountain pens patented by an old friend of the Cynosure, W. Post of Olean, N. Y. He is much interested also in the republication of Ronayn's letters in the August Lodge Lamp, and sent $1 for one hundred for distribution. It is a telling document.

—Rev. Julius Marks, of Blairsburg, Ia., a life long friend of the anti-secret cause, visited the office last week, leaving money to send the Cynosure to ministers or missionaries unable to pay for it. We have frequent applications of this kind, and money donated to this fund cannot be better invested.

—Rev. Samuel Alexander, an old and true friend of the anti-secret cause, died recently at his home in Lyndon, Kan. The editor has spent many a night under his hospitable roof, while engaged in reform work, and always found his heart beating in strong sympathy with every true reform.

—The editor and his wife enjoyed last week the pleasure of a visit from his parents who reside in Iowa, and on Friday an excursion with them on the steamer "Virginia" to Milwaukee. It was on the occasion of the silver wedding celebration at Waukesha of his brother, T. H. Gault, of this city. The gathering was highly interesting as nearly a hundred of the old neighbors and relatives of the family were present, including Dr. Meloy and wife of this city, and also the president and secretary of the Wisconsin State Christian Association, Rev. J. B. Galloway, of Poynette, and Rev. Isaiah Faris, of Vernon.

—Elder S. C. Kimball, of New Market, N. H., in a letter just received, says, "Rev. A. B. Simpson's Old Orchard (Me.) annual convention was a very remarkable meeting. It lasted two weeks, and the average attendance exceeded five thousadd. Holiness, divine healing, the coming of the Lord, and foreign missions were the leading topics discussed. Much prominence was given to praying, singing and experience. It was difficult to control the testimony meetings, so many wished to speak. Some were converted, many were baptized in the ocean, and about a thousand persons testified to having been healed in answer to prayer, and scores were anointed in the name of the Lord. At the close of the convention a collection of $65,000 was taken for foreign missions, and sixty persons offered themselves for the foreign work. Already 250 missionaries are at work under Mr. Simpson's direction. At the ministers' and workers' conference three of the leading speakers announced themselves as seceders from various secret lodges, including Masons, Odd-fellows and Knights of Pythias. Baal had no defenders.

Lodgism has no place in Mr. Simpson's Christian Alliance."

SPECIAL APPEAL.

We desire to make the coming convention in the First Evangelical church, cor. E. Sixth and Market streets, Portland, Oregon, Sept. 25 and 26, a success in every respect.

It will cost some money to do so.

1. We hope all friends of the cause will attend.

2. Any who find that they cannot attend are requested to send a small cash donation to help defray the extra expenses.

3. As the agent lives here and will share in the extra expense, will those who know themselves indebted to him please remit by money order or registered letter?

4. Let everybody pray for the success of our convention. Without Divine help we shall fail.

Portland, Ore. P. B. Williams.

CHURCH AND THE LODGE.

BY CHARLES A. BLANCHARD, PRESIDENT WHEATON COLLEGE, WHEATON, ILL.

[Notes of an address delivered at the Christian Conference, Northfield, Mass., Aug. 7, 1895.]

1. The Bible is the rule of life for all men. It includes the entire life, personal, social, domestic, industrial, political and religious. It tells us how to eat, how to dress, how much to pay our hired men, when to pay them, how to loan money, how to collect debts and how to worship.

At this time men often act as though the Bible has only to do with the church and the Lord's day. Men act as if God had never told men how to vote and the result is that our churches are being flooded out by vice and crime. They are trying to save a few wrecks here and there while thousands go down and the wreckers keep plying their trade. It were better to kill the wrecker than to save one wreck.

2. The Bible is positive and negative; it requires and forbids; it designates evils as well as remedies.

Some tell us that the way to destroy evil is to declare what is good. God does not do this. He gave us the law and said: Don't bring other gods into my presence; don't make images; don't profane my name; don't steal; don't commit adultery; don't kill. And then he puts in the positive requirements. He says: Honor your father and your mother; remember the Sabbath; love one another as I loved you.

No farmer in Massachusetts is foolish enough to try to kill weeds by planting good corn. He relies upon the plow and the hoe. No briar patch was ever brought into subjection by sowing good wheat upon it.

3. It is interesting to see how instinctively a faithful teacher follows the example of Jesus in this particular.

Here at this conference we have been told to confess sin, to adjust disputes, to avoid dancing, cards and theatres, to pay debts, even old ones, etc. All this is in direct line with the teaching of the sermon on the mount, where our Lord said: I do not destroy the law, I complete it. A lustful look is adultery; hatred and contempt are murder; as you think, you are.

4. It is the duty of the church to do this concerning not some sin, but all sin. The minister is a watchman for his church and parish; the Christian is a watchman for his neighbor. It is the duty of the watchman to look out for enemies and warn those who are in danger.

Yet in every age there are evils which men instinctively avoid mentioning. The wrong is so widespread, so deep rooted, so powerful that the minister naturally passes it by to deal with some comparative trifle. When Mr. Moody came to Chicago, slavery was the law of the land; the church did not even name it. Yet it included theft, adultery, murder and all other crimes. As John Wesley said, it was the sum of all villainies.

5. In our day no one objects to good, pious people saving drunkards. Liquor men like to have it done. They have no use for a drunkard. The poor, besotted, blear-eyed, ragged victim of the trade is a discredit. They are glad to have poor "Delia" taken off their hands. But they don't want their trade meddled with. They want the privilege of making drunkards. Give them this, and they are glad to have you take the "finished product" off their hands.

Another evil that is not usually named in churches is that of secret societies. There are lodges for almost every purpose under heaven. They are drawing in young men by hundreds of thousands, yet the pulpits, the religious press and the platform is, in general, as silent as the grave. Now we are told to examine (1. Thes. 5: 21), and to inform men (Matt. 5: 14).

6. Examining the secret lodge system we find at once that it teaches men to disregerd the example of Jesus Christ. At the time when he was on trial for his life and was asked concerning his disciples and his doctrine, he replied; I ever spake openly and in secret said nothing, John 18: 20.

Now we may for the argument admit that lodges are all good in purpose. Yet how can a Christian go into a secret society to do good when Jesus, who is his teacher, said to his disciples that they should proclaim upon the house-tops what he had taught them in private life, Matt. 10: 26,27.

No man can follow Jesus into a secret order no matter what its professed purpose may be, whether to promote temperance, brotherly love, Protestantism, patriotism, or revolution, as in case of the Ku-klux Klan.

7. But a little thought will show not only that the lodge man disregards the example of Jesus; he also violates his express command.

Jesus said to his disciples, I am the light of the world, John 8: 12. Ye are the light of the world, Matt. 5: 14. Let your light shine, Matt. 1: 16.

Now as above said, even if we admit that all lodge work is good, how can a Christian go into it when the first step is an obligation to secrecy; and how can he keep silence when he sees his fellows by thousands being sworn to secrecy and thus taught to disregard the example and to violate the plain command of his crucified and risen Lord?

8. Still further, the Holy Spirit teaches us not to be unequally yoked with unbelievers, 2 Cor. 6: 14. This is as clear as the word, thou shalt not steal.

It has been shown a thousand times that close and confidential relations with godless men are injurious to the Christian life and progress of believers The lodges bind men so closely as to require them to conceal from wife, child and brother in the church, the transactions of the order.

The dances, wine suppers and Sabbath breaking trains all are parts of a gigantic anti-Christian movement with which the lodgeman is yoked up. Our brothers ought not to go into such a bondage unwarned.

9. The anti-Christian morality of these orders is another reason why Christians should avoid them and warn their fellows against them.

The general spirit of lodgeism is, don't do evil to a brother in the lodge. This is clearly brought out in the Masonic obligation, not to have "illicit carnal intercourse with the wife, mother, sister or daughter of a Master Mason, knowing them to be such." Think of a Christian man taking an obligation of this kind or favoring an institution that imposes it.

God commands purity of heart and life and punishes adultery with death. Masonry forbids adultery with four relatives of Master Masons and leaves the rest of the world unprotected. Such a morality is an incitement to crime.

10. The lodges also teach salvation by works and thus deny the atonement. Lodgemen are continually saying: If a man lives up to the lodge teaching he will be saved.

The Bible teaches that it is by faith in Jesus and by faith in him only that men can be saved. When I see the blood I will pass over you (Ex. 12: 13), is the language of God and the hope of his people. Without this shed blood accepted and pleaded there is no remission of sin (Heb. 9: 22), and yet lodges numbering tens of thousands are teaching men to be saved by works, and we ministers, brethern, are sitting in silence, and too frequently our preaching is being tainted with that same heresy.

11. But this denial of Jesus and substitution of the work of the gavel and the wretched, filthy robes of human righteousness for his precious blood is not all.

The lodge goes on explicitly to put Christ out of its prayers and even out of the Bible. In Royal Arch Masons the Scripture lesson contains twice the words "our Lord Jesus Christ" and each time that holy name is smitten out.

Dear brethren, these orders are hostile to our Saviour and are destroying countless thousands.

Let us be faithful to seek to win individuals to Jesus, but let us also seek to destroy the organizations which are keeping great masses of men away from the church and the Saviour.

TALKS TO YOUNG PEOPLE.

BY PROF. D. A. STRAW.

MIND READING.

The more we learn about the mind of men, the more certain it appears that every thought which comes galloping through one's mind, or creeping through on a hot August day, or tip-toeing through for fear of being heard; every one of the million thoughts that fill one's days and dreaming nights leaves its track or trail in the brain that never can be entirely lost. And another fact is pretty well established, that when one has had a certain thought a few times the brain is inclined to run into that same old track whenever anything suggests it again.

So the twelve o'clock hour makes us all think of dinner unless we have adopted some other dinner hour. So when their father comes from town some children always think of candy, and others think of sour looks, and others think of kisses. For the same reason some young people, when their cherished plans are upset, always think ill-natured thoughts, and others think of wicked words, while some can still think pleasant things and start at once a new plan. So the tale teller spins the same old yarns; the fearful soul sees some new trouble coming; the swearer's oaths come without any calling; and the faithful man abounds in blessings. The more we learn of the unseen forces in us and about us, the less of a marvel seems the great coming day when all men's thoughts shall be revealed; when that which we whispered into confidential ears shall be trumpeted from the house-tops.

Many a man has already been confused and put to shame by the decisive and long-keeping record of the quiet little kodak. Some business men are known to keep in their offices an unseen witness of unfailing memory and truthfulness that can stand in court and repeat the words that a transient visitor says to these business men alone. By putting this phonograph and the kodak together with some more additions of electrical apparatus, Mr. Edison has succeeded in freezing people's talk and petrifying their faces and mummifying their movements so perfectly that one's whole performance is practically placed in cold storage for coming generations in his kinetoscope and phonograph combination. These invented wonders are shadows thrown forward, if only shadows, of the great coming day when the thoughts of all shall be revealed.

How we would tie up our tongues, and tune up our hearts if we knew that some magic machine was phonographing us and making a record of our thoughts to be published to-morrow in an illustrated article with natural coloring! And that is the machine that science is approaching. That is just the machine that the infallible Book describes to us. Ah! forgotten words? Yes, but not lost. Secrets? Oaths cannot conceal them. Dead men tell no tales? Yes, they will. And these machine witnesses are hard to contradict. You carry your own, and I carry mine. God help us make the future record better.

A PLEA FOR CHINESE.

REV. MADISON C. PETERS SAYS THEY ARE UNFAIRLY TREATED.

They Are No Worse Than the Same Class of Other Nationalities—Give Them American Fair Play—Victims of Political Cruelty Because They Have No Vote.

On Sunday, Ang. 18, Rev Madison C. Peters, D. D., did not preach. He sends this plea for the Chinese:

The people of the land have used oppression and exercised robbery and have vexed the poor and needy; yea, they have oppressed the stranger wrongfully.—Ezekiel xxii, 29.

Therefore, all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them.—Matthew vii, 12.

What you do not like when done to yourself, do not do to others.—Confucius.

In the name of God, who of one blood made all nations of men to dwell on the face of the earth, I protest against our unmanly, un-American and un-Christian treatment of the Chinese. They are human beings, having the same parts, affections, passions and the same natural rights as other men have. When we needed cheap labor to develop our country, we begged the Chinese to come. In 1844 our government began to coax them to come. In 1867 our government sent Mr. Burlingame to China, and he presented the invitation to the Chinese to come and stay with us in such a diplomatic way that when he died the emperor deified him, and he is one of the gods of China today.

What could be further from the spirit of Christ than the way in which we have abused and maltreated the Chinese? They did not come by their individual motion, but were imported in overwhelming masses by the concerted action of capital. I have studied this qnestion in San Francisco, and it is dreadful enough. But the Chinese quarter there, with its malodors of opium, is a heaven compared with the brazen faced beastliness of lust in the French quarter, and the Hungarian, Italian and other foreign quarters in New York are more filthy and more iniquitous than Chinatown.

The Chinese are no worse than the same number of the same class of any other nationality in our midst. The 30,000 Chinese in San Francisco pay the landlords of that town $3,000,000 annually in rent. The Chinese in California pay nearly $4,000,000 a year as taxes to the state government, and in customs to the United States government more than $9,000,000 annually. Official statistics show that the Chinese in taxes and in work give to California in a single year the amazing sum of $14,000,000, and this is exclusive of their contribution in railroads and redeemed lands. The surveyor general of California declared that in the two items alone of railroads and redeemed land the Chinese had enriched California by over $280,000,000.

And I want Christians to note this fact—the Chinese Young Men's Christian association of San Francisco recently sent $42,000 to China for the cause of missions in that country.

It has been estimated that of the $15,000,000 made by the Chinese every year in this conntry, $13,000,000 is expended here. Bnt the Chinese are not the only people who send money ont of the conntry. The late J. Boyle O'Reilly, in a lecture on the wrongs of Ireland, declared that "the Irish send ont of this country every year to Ireland $70,000,000," and what is good for one nation onght to be good for another. The Chinese are not fonnd begging, they never reel through our streets, they do not defy onr Sabbath, they do not commit the fearfnl crimes we read about in our daily papers. They are peaceable, industrious, economical, law abiding, and pay their honest debts. But they are heathen. They must be to do that! "The Chinese do not Americanize." They never had a chance to do so. Other nationalities who have had the chance have failed to do so. "They do not come to stay."

In 1889, 11,000 Italians returned to Italy with their earnings. If only more of our nn-Americanized foreigners would go home, we would be able to control our own politics and be given a chance to work out the problem of a republican government. The Chinaman with his laundry is not so dangerous a man to our civilization as some other nationalities in our midst, who run ginmills, commit our crimes and then fill our offices. I bespeak for the Chinese American fair play. If we have a Christian civilization, let us present it to the Chinese in a Christian way. We send missionaries and money to China and profess a deep interest in them, thousands of miles away. There they are an interesting object to us, but at our doors we avoid them, and the very ministers who make the most eloquent pleas for the Chinese in China will, without protest, allow the Chinese in America to become the victims of political cruelty. Some people have more religion than humanity. If the Chinaman had a vote, our demagogues in congress would profess great love for the Chinaman, and they wonld go around on election day with an opium pipe sticking from their pockets. Our political parties will do anything for votes, and this whole business is to catch the alien vote.

The Chinese are no more slaves than the Italians and Hungarians. The six Chinese companies prepay the passage for the Chinese, and then the Chinese here work it out. Investigation shows that the Italians and Hungarians are brought here in the same way, and they will work as cheap and in every way interfere as much with the white man earning a white man's wages as the Chinese. You can buy one or a thousand laborers from the Italian padrones in this city. Within three years we admitted into the American labor market 427,000 Huns, Italians and Poles. Everywhere immigrants swarm in the path of Americans, competing with native industry, glad to do the work for half the price paid the American laborer.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic For the Week Beginning Sept. 1. Comment by Rev. S. H. Doyle.

Topic.—Enthusiasm and what it will accomcomplish.—II Chron. xxix, 1-11; xxxi, 20, 21.

Enthusiasm "is the complete possession of the mind and energies by some cause, subject, passion or fancy." There may be said to be two kinds of enthusiasm—a false and a true. False enthusiasm is fanaticism. It is the state of mind in which the imagination and the feelings predominate the will and judgment. The great danger of enthusiasm is that it may degenerate into fanaticism. True enthusiasm is that state of the mind in which the judgment has selected a subject or cause which is worthy of our interest and attention, and in support of which the whole soul of the man, the entire being, is fervently and zealously enlisted. Enthusiasm is much criticised, particularly religious enthusiasm. We may be enthusiastic in politics, enthusiastic in business, enthusiastic in pleasure without running much risk, but to be enthusiastic for God means at once to subject ourselves to the possibility of being called fanatics. But it should not matter. Enthusiasm, if there is anything to be enthusiastic over, is a good thing, and no one has a cause or subject into which the whole soul, the whole man, so much needs to zealously and fervently enlisted as the Christian. No great movement in the history of the past has been successful without more or less enthusiasm. What is true of the past will also be true of the present and the future.

Enthusiasm calls forth the very best that is in us. It is a godlike inspiration. It inspires men to do their best, to bend forth every energy for success when half heartedness would but lead to disconragement and to failure. Had not Hezekiah had his whole heart in destroying the idol worship and in setting up the worship of the true God it is donbtfnl if he would have accomplished such a gigantic task, but "he did it with his whole heart, and he prospered." We need enthusiasm in working for God, for he wants our best efforts, onr best service.

Enthusiasm enlists the interest and snpport of others. It is contagions. Enthusiasm kindles enthusiasm. Hezekiah's whole heartedness aroused that of his priests and the people. An enthusiast herself, Joan of Arc filled a dispirited soldiery with enthusiasm and was successful. We need to interest others in religion.

Enthusiasm accomplishes definite positive results. Hezekiah was successful. He put down idolatry. He exalted God. It can also accomplish positive beneficial results for us.

Bible Readings.—Num. xxv, 11-13; Deut. xi, 13-15; Joshua xxii, 1-6; I Sam. xii, 20-24; I Kings xix, 10-18; II Kings x, 16-28; xxiii, 21-25; Isa. lix, 19; Math. vii, 7, 8; xvi, 13-17; xxi, 8-11; Mark ii, 1-5; x, 46-52; Luke xix, 1-5; Acts xviii, 24-28; xxvi, 27-29; Rom. xii. 11; II Cor. vii, 6, 7; ix, 1, 2; Gal. iv, 18; Col. iii, 23, 24; I Pet. iv, 8.

The Umbrella of State.

Last year, at the Cleveland convention, New York state received from China a richly embroidered "umbrella of state" for having reported the largest number of societies that had adopted the Fulton plan for giving "2 cents a week" per member for missions. The "nmbrella of state" is a peculiarly oriental object and is usually presented by the Chinese to high officials that have faithfully performed their duty. New York took the "umbrella" to Boston, and this year it was New York's pleasure to place it in the hands of our lively friends from the District of Columbia, it having been decided that this year the nmbrella should be awarded to the union having the largest proportionate number of societies using the Fulton plan for giving sysetmatically to missions.—Secretary Baer's Report.

Hints to Committees.

There are two rules that every social committee should bear prominently in mind when arranging a programme for a social, says The Golden Rule. The first is that the exercises should, in part at least, give something to do to every person present. The second is that they should make it convenient or necessary for all the attendants to be thrown into contact one with another. If these two simple rules are kept carefully in mind, socials will be more generally successfnl, in the fullest meaning of the word "success."

Endeavor Gossip.

Over 20 speakers, including ladies, took part in as many minutes in one of the open parliaments at the Scottish national convention, and each said something well worth hearing.

At a single prayer meeting of the Brookline (Mass.) Baptist society $51 was contribnted to foreign missions.

Several societies in and about Boston have contributed enough money to pay for a bed in the Union Rescue mission, on Knceland street. These societies have paid $8, and the bed nets the mission nearly $40 a year. The name of Christian Endeavor has been put across the headboard.

The Brooklyn Local union has appointed a missionary committee of six to see that each society in the union has a missionary committee of its own.

Within less than a year the First Presbyterian Endeavorers of Portland, Or., have given $185 to missions. One of the members has recently set out for the foreign field as a missionary.

The flower committee of the South Presbyterian Church society of Philadelphia one Sunday distributed 65 potted plants among the sick and shut ins of their members and in two of the city hospitals.

The Philadelphia committee on floating work reports two societies in seamen's churches, one on a naval ship, another on an ocean steamship, and 2,300 comfort bags and thonsands of pieces of reading matter systematically distribnted as its first year's work.

How to Mount a Wheel.

The teachers say no one should leap into the saddle. Stand well in between the handle bar and the saddle, they say, put your right foot on the right pedal, which should be just going down, bear your whole weight on that pedal by drawing up the other foot, sit quietly, without hurrying, on the saddle and let the other pedal adjust itself as it will. Alertness, quickness, presence of mind, but no hurry, is the true motto of the bicycler. More than 40,000 women could probably attest the fact that every failure they have made in mounting has been because they were too feverishly eager about catching that left pedal.

The other way to mount, and the surest for beginners or those in the least timid, is to sit on the saddle and put the right foot, or either foot, on the pedal at the same time, leaving the left foot on the ground. Then steady the machine as long as you like with the left foot and take it up when you have got a good start by pushing and you are perfectly sure of your balance. It is a safe way to mount, but of course requires too low a saddle for fast riding. When you go up a hill, if you ride slowly and zigzag a little from side to side, you have no idea how easy it makes climbing and how little fatigue there is to it.—Chicago Times-Herald.

A Minister's Opinion.

Rev. T. J. Leak of the Trinity M. E. church of Chicago says:

Believing that when "male and female created he them," the Almighty intended that they should walk side by side in all the affairs of life, I cannot see why the line should be drawn at the right of suffrage, which involves so much in which both sexes are interested. For centuries woman has been getting nearer to her brother in recognized rights and privileges and always for the good of both. Why pause at suffrage? Crossing that line, her position will still be one of blessing to the race. It would be difficult for me to state the attitude of our congregation regarding the election of women as trustees, etc., nothing having occurred among us to demonstrate it. I have no doubt that it is a liberal one. As to women in politics, she has a right to be there; whether she should actively use that right and to what extent must depend on circumstances. Many men are not adapted to active political life and do not enter it. That would probably be true with the great majority of women. But she has the same natural right in politics that I have, and if she chooses to enter that arena I have no right to say her nay, but I have a right to vote against her if I wish to.

Marking Linen.

The approved spot for marking sheets and pillow cases that have the monogram or initials embroidered on them is in the center of the top hem for the sheet, or just below it on the crease or middle fold. The bottom of the letter should be toward the edge of the hem, so that it will come right when the hem of the sheet is turned over on the counterpane. Pillow cases are also marked in the center of the hem. Often such linen as well as table linen has in addition the family crest, the same design in different sizes being used through different sets or the same set. The size of the design depends somewhat on the size of the piece marked. In embroidering crests and coats of arms, the lines are done in laid stitch, the device in French knots and the background in seed stitch.

Tablecloths usually have two markings in opposite corners, placed so far in that the design will come on the surface of the table when the cloth is laid. Sometimes the markings are placed on the middle lengthwise crease of the cloth, a little over ten inches from the center, so that they will not come under the centerpiece when one is used. They, too, must be so placed that the bottom of the letter points toward the edge of the table. Dinner napkins have the marking in the center of the square formed by folding them twice each way.

Handsome Towels.

Fayal towels, which are frequently used for side tables, are very handsome and have been used for years by many housekeepers. The long, lacy ends of these towels are made by the women of the islands of Fayal and are exquisite in design. They cost from $2 to $8 each, according to the amount of ornamentation.

Didn't Know Her Customer.

Princess Christian is perhaps the best known of Queen Victoria's daughters and is always actively engaged in philanthropic causes. At a recent bazaar she was seen going from stall to stall making purchases, Prince Christian good natnredly stowing away the small parcels in his pockets. One article purchased, however, was of considerable size, so the attendant put the question, "Shall I send it for you, madam?" To which the princess made answer: "Oh.

yes! Send it to Buckingham palace, if you please." "To whom shall I address it?" was the next query, and her royal highness, who dearly loves a joke, gave the prince a comical warning look and said, "Address it to Mrs. Christian." The attendant was quite unsuspicious of the rank of her customers, and so the parcel was duly dispatched to "Mrs. Christian, Buckingham Palace."

Lew Wallace on Bloomers.

General Lew Wallace says that the future of the bicycle depends on the woman riders. "If the use of wheels were confined to the men," he says, "the fad might spend itself in a season. But when the women take hold of the bicycle its future is secure." General Wallace believes that bicycle racing will eventually supersede horse racing, but never, of course, chariot racing of the Ben-Hur kind. Ladies who ride will be interested to know that General Wallace is an enthusiastic advocate of the fair cycler, and that he approves of bloomers, "about which there is nothing immodest, it being merely their present oddity of appearance that now excites comment. Why, in the Tyrol the women wear skirts coming just below the knee, and no one, not even an entire stranger, looks askance."

Stockings.

A cotton stocking is preferred by many women to a lisle thread, as the twist of the thread in the lisle ones irritates the soles of the feet. Dark blue and black stockings are liked for street wear, except when tan shoes are worn, and then, of course, the stockings match the shoes. The navy blue stocking is usually chosen by those who find that the dye from the black stocking affects their skin. With gray or scarlet shoes or slippers the stockings are chosen to match. These may be gotten in silk at a much lower price than is given for black ones.—Chicago Tribune.

Healthy English Women.

When an American girl first goes to London, she is a little disappointed in the appearance of her British sisters. They seem heavier, slower and less graceful than her own sex at home. Before long, however, she notices some other things which largely change her opinion. These seemingly slow women think nothing of walking their eight and ten miles a day, and then manifest no exhaustion, or even fatigue. An English woman of wealth will work, and work hard, in her garden, among her fruits and flowers, or in her greenhouse, where an American woman leaves it entirely to her gardener. The hard physical labor may injure the skin of the forearm and render it less alabaster-like than what most belles desire, but it develops the muscles of the arm, chest and back, and produces a physical beauty and magnificence which, common in England, is very uncommon at home.—Margherita Arlina Hamm.

Woman's Sphere.

The most frequent objection to woman suffrage, that "woman's sphere is the home," is declared to be as amusing as it is absurd, because thousands of women in New York city alone have no home, unless a bare room in a fourth rate boarding house can be called so. Another objection to giving the ballot to women is that they are too pure and holy to be polluted with politics. Virtue and purity that are so evanescent that they disappear at the slightest touch are not worth the having. If women are so "little lower than the angels" as these flatterers would have them think, the wise course to pursue would be to beg to get that new element into politics.—New York Recorder.

The Diaphanous Damsel's Bodice.

A pretty way to make a bodice for a thin, flat chested girl is to have strips of velvet ribbon about 1½ inches wide starting from the neck and branching off toward the shoulders, each strip having white lace ruffled onto both edges. The effect is dressy, and at the same time it disguises scrawniness.

Wash Dresses.

To keep the color in wash dresses or waists of any kind first put in a bucket of water 5 cents' worth of sugar of lye water; soak the clothes in this for a short time until the color is set, then wash in soapsuds, rinse out and hang up to dry. Do not rub the soap on the clothes; merely wash in the suds.

Baby's Washstand.

Lovely little washstands are now made for babies of white enameled ware and decorated with tiny, gay Kate Greenaway figures. They are no higher than the average child of 12 months and are supposed to be used by the mamma or nurse, seated on a low stool. There is a sunken hole for the large washbowl, a shelf beside it for soapbox and powder case, while a ledge underneath supports the pitcher and comb and brush. They are all decorated in the same way with the pretty little Greenaway children.—Exchange.

Women Switchers.

At Amiens, eight miles from Calais, I saw what I had never seen before—women working the switches in a signal tower. There were two of them, and they appeared to have the station quite to themselves. I make no doubt that they find their work very agreeable and interesting; that they are faithful; that their homes are happy, and that they consider themselves very superior and refuse to exchange calls with their sister the "bullwhacker" over in the field.—Cy Warman in McClure's Monthly.

A Homemade Rug.

The woman who rejoices in homemade things will be pleased to learn that a rug may be made from coffee sacks. Take a sack of the size required and hem it. Then from another sack cut strips 8 inches wide, fold down the center (leaving the double strips 4 inches wide) and sew firmly to the foundation about half an inch apart. After it is all covered, dye the rug any desired color, and after it is dry fringe out the strips to half a dozen threads.

SOME WHISKY RESULTS.

A Great Help In Keeping Prisons Tenanted—Other Phases of Crime.

The following is an extract from a paper read before the Twentieth Century club of Hartford by Professor J. J. McCook of Trinity college: "For 12 years the police arrests for drunkenness alone averaged in Hartford 62.8 per cent of the whole number, while drunkenness and its allied offenses numbered 80.67 per cent. This proportion is perhaps somewhat larger than in most places, but it may generally be expected to be at least as high as three-fifths.

"Ninety-five to ninety-seven out of every hundred incarcerated in our jail are self confessed drinkers, although they pleasantly add 'moderate' to the title, and from 43.6 to 56.1 per cent of them are there specifically for drunkenness, and fully 66 per cent, or two-thirds of them, are there for that and its resulting crimes. There were 1,393 of them there last year out of a total of 2,111.

"Of the 381 captives in our state prison last year 46.8, or almost half, thought drink had done it.

"Take special phases of crime, for example:

"Abuse, neglect or abandonment of children. Those most familiar with the subject in this neighborhood have put the proportion of cases attributable to drink at or beyond two-thirds. From the Pennsylvania Society to Protect Children From Cruelty, with headquarters in Philadelphia, a former vice president, in talking with me, fixed the proportion roughly at four-fifths to nine-tenths. But the secretary gives me definite statistics for 1891-2 showing 309 cases of drink out of a total of 864 in 1891 and 359 out of 987 in 1892—i. e., from 35.8 per cent to 36.4 per cent. In some previous years the percentage had been as high as 50."

A PHILANTHROPIC RUMSELLER.

He Wants the Custom of Men of Money, Not the Poor and Destitute.

A Massachusetts saloon keeper has inserted in the papers the following unique advertisement:

"To whom it may concern. Know ye that by the payment of three hundred dollars ($300) or more, and in compliance with the laws of our commonwealth, I am permitted to retail intoxicating liquors at my store, 5 Fair street. To the wife who has a drunkard for a husband, or a friend who is unfortunately dissipated, I say emphatically give me notice in person of such case or cases, in which you are interested, and all such shall be excluded from my place. Let mothers, fathers, sisters and brothers do likewise, and their request shall be regarded. I pay a heavy tax for the privilege of selling whisky and other liquors, and I want it distinctly understood that I have no desire to sell to drunkards or minors or to the poor or destitute. I much prefer that they save their money and put it where it will do the most good to their families. There are men of honor and men of money who can afford it, and it is with those I desire to trade. I would say to those who wish to trade with me and can afford it, come, and I will treat you gentlemanly and courteously."

That sounds very fine. This saloon keeper wants men to drink, but he does not want to sell to drunkards or to the poor. He wants them to put their money where it will do the most good to their families. In other words, after men have lost all their money through drink and can no longer buy high priced liquors, or even pay for low priced ones, this philanthropic saloon keeper "has no desire to sell to the poor or destitute." Of course not. Whoever thought that he had?—Golden Rule.

Power of the Rum Demon.

The most eminent specialists in insanity and nervous degeneracy and in morbid and criminal heredity have thrown the light of their science upon the liquor question with this conclusion—that "what is common to our whole modern civilization is the constantly increasing influence of alcohol over the development of the western races of mankind." And from this point of view they truly say that the question "surpasses in interest and importance the mere repression of ignoble and misery breeding drunkenness; it passes from the domain of sociology into that of pathology and is quite comparable to the spread of cancer or tuberculosis—with which indeed it is not without connection—or better still, with the increase of idiocy and semi-irresponsible crime!"

Here and There a Gem.

Lord, send thy light
Not only in the darkest night,
But in the shadowy, dim twilight,
Wherein my strained and aching sight
Can scarce distinguish wrong from right—
Then send thy light.

Teach me to pray
Not only in the morning gray
Or when the moonbeam's silver ray
Falls on me, but at high noonday
When pleasure beckons me away,
Teach me to pray.

SABBATH SCHOOL.

LESSON X, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, SEPT. 8.

Text of the Lesson, Joshua xiv, 5-14—Memory Verses, 7-9—Golden Text, Joshua xiv, 14—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

5. "As the Lord commanded Moses, so the children of Israel did, and they divided the land." Moses and Joshua were faithful servants of Jehovah and implicitly obeyed His commands. They left nothing undone that He commanded. Joshua took the whole land and divided it among the tribes, and the land rested from war (chapter xi, 15, 23). But although the land was wholly given to Israel they did not possess it fully (chapter xiii, 1), and they allowed the Jebusites and Canaanites to dwell among them (chapter xv, 63; xvi, 10; xvii, 12). This disobedience on the part of the people afterward brought trouble upon them (Judg. ii, 1, 2). Every true believer in Jesus is now "blessed with all spiritual blessings in the heavenlies in Christ" (Eph. i, 3). Yet but few enjoy full possession. Many prefer to tolerate a few Canaanites and Jebusites and rather enjoy their ways.

6. "Thou knowest the thing that the Lord said unto Moses, the man of God, concerning me and thee in Kadesh-barnea." These are the words of Caleb to his old friend and companion, Joshua. Caleb was of the tribe of Judah, and Joshua was of Ephraim (Num. xiii, 6, 8). Only they two of all the spies believed God and urged the people to go right up and take the land in the name of the Lord. The Lord said that only they two of all that generation should enter the land (Num. xiv, 30) and that the rest would die in the wilderness because of their unbelief. They too, would have to wait 40 years because of the unbelief of others, but they waited with God, for He also waited and was hindered by the unbelief of the people. Hear His words, "How long will it be ere they believe Me?" "Oh, that My people had hearkened unto Me" (Num. xiv, 11; Ps. lxxxi, 13).

7. "Forty years old was I when Moses the servant of the Lord, sent me from Kadesh-barnea to espy out the land, and I brought him word again as it was in mine heart." His heart was right with God. He believed God and feared to grieve Him. Therefore he spake what was in his heart as in the sight of God and sought not to please the people. For this faithfulness he and Joshua were threatened with stones (Num. xiv, 10), but the Lord stood by them. Consider David, with not a human being to stand by him, threatened with stones by his own friends, and observe what he did (I Sam. xxx, 6).

8. "My brethren that went up with me made the heart of the people melt, but I wholly followed the Lord my God." The ten spies had to confess that the land was a good land, but they made so much of the giants and walled cities; seemed so utterly to forget the power of God in Egypt and at the Red sea, and to lose sight of God altogether that they filled the people with fear and discouragement and with murmurings against God. Many such today are seeing themselves and their circumstances, and by unbelief and murmurings are dishonoring God and making infidels.

9. "And Moses sware on that day, saying, Surely the land whereon thy feet have trodden shall be thine inheritance." How Caleb had lived on the word of the Lord all those years! They had been his life, his meat and drink. Perhaps every day he had called them to mind and been strengthened by them. He may, like David, have pleaded them in prayer, saying, "Remember the word unto Thy servant, upon which Thou hast caused me to hope" (Ps. cxix, 49). The word of the Lord is a sure foundation on which we may firmly rest. It endureth forever, is true from the beginning and is forever settled in heaven (Isa. xl, 8; Ps. cxix, 160, 89).

10. "And now behold the Lord hath kept me alive as He said these forty and five years." It always has been and always will be "As He said." The nobleman of Capernaum "Believed the word that Jesus had spoken" (John iv, 50). Paul said in the storm at sea, "I believe God that it shall be even as it was told me" (Acts xxvii, 25). Abraham was fully persuaded that what God had promised He was able to perform (Rom. iv, 21). "The Lord of Hosts hath sworn, saying, Surely as I have thought, so shall it come to pass, and as I have purposed, so shall it stand" (Isa. xiv, 24)). Blessed are all who believe, for there shall be a performance of the things told them by the Lord (Luke i, 45).

11. "As yet I am as strong this day as I was in the day that Moses sent me." As strong and hearty at the age of 85 as when he was 40. Like Moses, at the age of 120, his eye was not dim nor his natural force abated (Deut. xxxiv, 7). "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength, they shall mount up with wings as eagles." "Youth is renewed like the eagles" (Isa. xl, 31; Ps. ciii, 5). Take as living illustrations of the same grace today George Muller in his ninetieth year, journeying and witnessing for Jesus Christ; Dr. David Brown of Aberdeen, the great commentator, who wrote me Nov. 5, 1894, that, though in his ninety-second year, he was in perfect health. He said, "I have no aches nor pains, am not tired of life, but would like to do a little work for my Master before I go or He comes." Jesus Christ is still the very same Jesus.

12. "If so be the Lord will be with me, then I shall be able to drive them out, as the Lord said." He seemed to covet the difficulties that he might see the great power of God. Being not weak in faith, he gave glory to God. He counted not on his ability, but that God was able. Like Paul he could say, "I can do all things through Christ, who strengtheneth me." "For when I am weak, then am I strong" (Phil. iv, 13; II Cor. xii, 10). "God with us" is the secret of all strength in His service. See Jer. i, 8, 19; Hag. ii, 4; Math. xxviii, 18-20).

13. "And Joshua blessed him, and gave unto Caleb the son of Jephunneh Hebron for an inheritance." It was at Hebron that Abraham built an altar unto the Lord and dwelt, after Lot separated himself from him. There he welcomed and entertained the Lord Himself, and there the Lord communed with him (Gen. xiii, 18; xviii, 1, 35). Hebron is suggestive of fellowship or communion, and when we have the spirit of Abraham and Caleb we shall know what fellowship with God means (I John i, 3).

14. "Hebron therefore became the inheritance of Caleb, because that he wholly followed the Lord God of Israel." This following fully is the secret of fellowship, for there can be none with a half hearted following. The next verse says that the old name of Hebron was Kirjath-arba, Arba being a great man among the Amakims. But "arba" is also the Hebrew word for "four," so that it might be the city of four.

THE MISSING MINNIE.

HOLMES' STORY OF HOW SHE MURDERED HER SISTER,

As Alleged by the Phenomenal Rascal, and How He Covered Up the Crime—Ingenious Explanation of the Presence of Dress Hardware in the "Castle" Stove.

NEW YORK, Aug. 26.—A signed statement written by H. H. Holmes in the Moyamensing prison at Philadelphia, and certified to by his lawyer, which goes into all the details of his acquaintance with Minnie Williams is printed by a local paper. Holmes writes that he first met Minnie Williams at an intelligence office kept by one Campbell, on Dearborn street, Chicago, in January, 1893, and employed her as a stenographer. She was installed in his office in the building which has become known as "Holmes' castle," and from March to May of that year occupied rooms in the building, adjoining the office. Occasionally meals were served in the building, and if any bones were found in the stove there Holmes writes that it will be found by microscopic examination that they are the remains of such meals.

Financial Relations with Minnie.

He continues: "Certain it is that no human being was ever cremated there during my occupancy of the room, my own experience, years ago, being quite sufficient to show me the danger of such proceedings on account of the awful odor, if I had no other motive to deter me from such a course." Holmes says that in April Minnie Williams, knowing him to be in need of money, gave him a draft for $2,500, the proceeds of the sale of real estate she had held in Texas, and asked him to use it until she should need it. In order that she should be protected he transferred to her by warranty deed a house and lot at Wilmette, Ills., valued at $7,500. The money was returned to her in May, 1893, being paid by Isaac R. Hitt & Co., of Chicago.

Shows His Innate Rascality.

She desired to convert her southern property into cash or improved northern property, and he advised her to execute a worthless deed (by having some one other than herself sign same) to a fictitious person, and offer the property for sale at a very low cash figure, and years later to demand an additional sum in exchange for a clear title. This was done, Clarence A. Phillips forging the name of Alexander E. Bond upon the deed so made, which deeds are still in existence. About this time, Holmes narrates, Miss Williams was taken ill and was removed to the Presbyterian hospital, near the Clybourne avenue car limits, being enrolled as Mrs. Williams, as her ailment was such that it was prudent for her to pass as a married woman, she having, according to Holmes, been betrayed by a prominent Boston business man.

Thought He Would Never Come.

When she grew better and returned to his house her sister, Nannie Williams, came from Texas to visit her. Returning one evening early in July from a day in the city he was greeted by a cry from Minnie Williams in the parlor: "Is that you? My God, I thought you would never come. Nannie is dead." She was seated upon the floor, holding her sister's head in her arms, rocking back and forth and moaning, much as a mother would over a child. He found that Nannie Williams had been dead for hours, and laid her body upon the bed in his own room, finding no mark of violence but a slight discoloration on one of her temples. According to the story written by Holmes Minnie Williams had been away the preceding night, and he, Holmes, had also been unexpectedly detained by business all night. When Minnie Williams returned that morning she noticed that his bed had not been occupied during the night.

SHE HAD MURDERED HER SISTER,

As Alleged by Holmes, in a Fit of Jealousy Over Himself.

This is what Holmes writes next: "And with only this one thought in her disordered mind had rushed into the adjoining room, where her sister then sat, and in a voice, which only the very few who have been intimately acquainted with Miss Williams can appreciate or understand the the tragedy of, had said: 'You devil. You have stolen my husband from me.' At the same time she had struck her sister with a small foot-stool causing her to fall to the floor, where, with hardly a struggle, she had ceased to breathe." At first Minnie thought her sister had only fainted and tried to revive her, but finding her efforts useless, had remained in the position in which he found her. Then came the question of what to do.

Holmes story of what was done follows: "We clothed Nannie in a light dress she had liked to wear, and taking a large trunk she had brought with her from Texas I placed her therein. I went to a livery stable and obtained a covered conveyance, and upon my return I engaged a man to accompany me to the house and help me place the trunk in the carriage. I then drove to the lake side and waited until night had fallen, thus appearing to parties noticing me, if any, that I was awaiting the return of some belated boating party. Then I procured a boat at some distance and took it near my waiting place, and later with considerable trouble I placed the trunk in the craft and proceeded about one mile from the shore.

"There in the darkness passed beyond the sight of this world into the ever-grasping depts of Lake Michigan all that was mortal of this beautiful Christian girl. Coming toward the shore I thought it wise to deposit the trunk upon another and remote portion of the beach. I did this, and after returning the boat drove away, and later came back for the trunk. The housekeeping was broken up, and very shortly thereafter Mr. Hatch took Minnie Williams to Milwaukee, where she remained in a private institution until later in the summer. The cause that produced her unsound mental condition had then been removed.

"We kept Nannie's things several weeks until I could obtain time to dispose of them, when I assorted some of them and gave them to Pitzel, telling him that they were some that Miss Williams had sent to his children. All the others were burned in the large stove in the third-story office, and this I plainly told the Philadelphia authorities in the fall of 1894.

"Another trunk containing pictures and books was not taken from the express company, owing to a mistake in charges, though Miss Williams supposed this had also been disposed of, and this was the one later returned to Fort Worth. The last I ever saw of Miss Williams was in Detroit last fall, and my belief is that she is still alive and well."

Bank Surprises a Community.

FRANKLIN, O., Aug. 24.—The community was astonished to find that the doors of the First National bank did not open. It afterward developed that Comptroller Eckels had been advised of the suspension. It is the general impression that depositors will be paid in full, as the assets are largely in excess of liabilities.

Racing Experiment Not a Success.

CHICAGO, Aug. 26. — The Northwestern Breeders' association has closed its meeting at Washington park course out of pocket $12,000, the result of an experiment at horse racing without betting. The loss averages $2,000 a day, and but one day of the six was there a paying attendance—the day of the Patchen-Gentry race.

Requital Wins a Great Stake.

SHEEPSHEAD BAY, N. Y., Aug. 26.—Requital won the Futurity with a stake of $53,750, and in the time of 1:11 2-5. Crescendo was second, Silver II third and Handspring, who had been looked upon as the favorite, was back in the ruck. What might have been if he had not been badly cut in the hock by Axiom while jumping around, will never be known, but it was noticed that Handspring did not run with his usual spirit although, in spite of his wound, he made a great effort for the honors.

Chinese Soldiers Revolt.

LONDON, Aug. 23.—A dispatch received here from Shanghai says that the Chinese soldiers stationed at Tien-Tsin revolted and assembled outside the gates of Li Hung Chang's Yamen, clamoring for their arrears of pay. Later they attacked a number of shops in the city and killed over 100 persons.

Every season of the year has its own peculiar malady. To render the system malaria proof during these "muggy" and oppressive days, the blood should be kept pure and vigorous by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It will help you wonderfully through the dog-days.

Hall's Vegetable Sicilian Hair Renewer is, unquestionably, the best preservative of the hair. It is also curative of dandruff, tetter and all scalp affections.

MISS FLAGG'S
LATEST NEW BOOK!
"A Prisoner of Hope."
COMPLETE IN ONE LARGE HANDSOME VOLUME.
Price, $1.25.
We heartily commend this new work, by Elizabeth E. Flagg, to all our friends. The narrative originated in her personal experience, two or three years ago, when she sought relief and restoration from the results of a painful accident, In that search she availed herself of a unique healer in New Jersey, whom she graphically described, at that time, in her weekly letters to this paper. The ideas created in her mind by that experience form the basis of this well-told story, and thoughtful readers will peruse it with interest. While all may not agree with its deductions, ministers of the Gospel, students in seminaries and intelligent home circles will find it pleasant food for thought. We sell it for $1.25 per copy postage prepaid.

ILLINOIS PICKINGS.

NEWS NOTES OF INTEREST FROM HERE AND THERE.

Reports by Telegraph of Important Happenings in Our Own State During the Past Few Days—News of Interest to the People of Illinois.

CHICAGO, Aug. 21.—The state weather service issues the following crop bulletin: The past week has been without rain, except very light thunderstorms on Thursday and Sunday in the eastern and southwestern counties of the central section. The fall was so light that no relief was had from the general dryness prevailing throughout the state. The heat was excessive, although cool nights caused the average temperature of the week to be about 3 degrees only above the normal temperature. Drought conditions prevail in all northern and most central section counties. Pastures are drying up, and corn has been somewhat injured; the central and southern counties have vast numbers of chinch bugs to aid the dryness.

Second-crop clover, now being cut, is proving good in all southern counties, but decreases in yield and results as one progresses northward. Plowing is progressing slowly owing to the dryness, but the usual acreage of wheat will probably be sown; considerable rye has already been sown. Fruit is so plentiful that the markets are glutted, and much will have to be dried to save it. Water is very low in wells, springs, cisterns and streams.

Too Hot for Illinois Corn.

SPRINGFIELD, Aug. 20.—The reports of the anticipated wonderful yield of corn expected in Illinois sent out ten days ago by the state board of agriculture will be modified by the next report, and it is probable that in the central counties of Illinois the yield will be reduced one-third from the anticipated yield. The intense heat of the past week has caused the corn to "fire" badly in this portion of the state and the devastating chinch bug is again making its appearance.

Died on the Train.

PANA, Aug. 21.—Mrs. A. J. Swingley left Pana on the Illinois Central for her home at Creston, Ill., after a visit with her sons. At Logan, when the conductor called "change cars" she did not move, and thinking her asleep he went to awaken her and found her dead, sitting straight in the seat. She will be brought here for burial.

Pardoned by Gov. Altgeld.

SPRINGFIELD, Ills., Aug. 23.—Governor Altgeld has pardoned John Keenan, sentenced to life imprisonment in Joliet penitentiary for the murder of George Hensley in Chicago in 1880, while Keenan was in the act of burglarizing Hensley's house. It was represented to the governor that Keenau is dying of consumption.

Fatal Fire at Algonquin, Ills.

ELGIN, Ills., Aug. 20.—Fire consumed a block of buildings at Algonquin. Two persons lost their lives and two others were seriously injured. The dead: F. D. Kazar, aged 30 years; Sylva Kazar, his daughter, aged 5 years. The injured: Mrs. Kazar, badly burned; James Philp, seriously burned.

Company Fired a Labor Leader.

ROCKFORD, Ills., Aug. 20.—One hundred and fifty employes of the Royal Mantel company went on a strike because of the discharge of one of their number who was a labor leader. The company is one of the strongest in the city, and never lost a day during the late panic.

Appointed by Gov. Altgeld.

SPRINGFIELD, Ills., Aug. 22.—Governor Altgeld has appointed Hon. George M. Lecrone, of Effingham, secretary of the Illinois state live stock commission, vice A. M. Brownlee, editor of the Benton Standard, Benton, Franklin county.

Texas Fever in Illinois.

SPRINGFIELD, Aug. 22.—The Illinois state live stock commission has been notified that Texas fever has appeared in Brown county, and some seventeen head of cattle have died of the disease during the past week.

Disappears with the Cash.

PANA, Ills., Aug. 22.—William Bass, of Oconee, a stockbuyer for the Fayette County bank, has disappeard with the proceeds of a sale of cattle at Chicago. The bank fears foul play.

CALDWELL FOR PRESIDENT.

The Judge Stands Out Squarely for the Free Coinage of Silver.

TOPEKA, Aug. 24.—The movement in favor of Judge Henry C. Caldwell of the United States circuit court for president in 1896 on the Republican ticket has been revived. Judge Caldwell will visit Topeka next Tuesday on business connected with the Santa Fe receivership. His visit is likely to be made the occasion of a demonstration by free silver men and railroad employes in Topeka. The Daily State Journal publishes a leading article nominating him for the presidency. It says:

JUDGE CALDWELL.

"On the question of money Judge Caldwell stands squarely for the free coinage of silver. In a recent interview sent to the Associated Press from Denver this able jurist said it would be little less than a crime if the people of this country permitted Wall street to fasten upon this nation the gold standard."

Judge Caldwell's position on labor matters is commended and his famous Omaha decision in the Union Pacific receivership quoted.

SCHOONER AND STEAMER COLLIDE.

Seven Passengers on the Latter Seriously Injured, Five of Whom Will Die.

TOLEDO, O., Aug. 26.—The passenger steamer City of Toledo, crowded with passengers, was run into by the schooner Magdalene Dowling, in the channel just off Presque Isle, and fifty feet of the steamer's upper works torn away. After the collision it was found that seven persons had been seriously injured and fifty more or less hurt. The following were the worst injured: Mrs. John Sanderson, Miss Annie Zimmerman, Miss Jessie Jackson, Miss Grace Garwood and Miss Nellie Garwood, all of Ada, O., fatally hurt; Mrs. John E. Miller and James Pearing, of Bucyrus, O., badly wounded.

AH SIN CONCLUDES TO CLIMB DOWN.

Foreign Nations Interested Have Their Way in the Outrage Investigation.

NEW YORK, Aug. 26.—The World prints the following cable from Foo Chow, China: "Firmness has brought the Chinese to terms. Foreigners are now present at the trials of natives implicated in the attack upon missionaries. The Chinese officials afford every facility to the foreign commissioners of inquiry. Six of the Chinese who had a hand in the massacre at Hwasang have been convicted of murder."

Seven Out of Fifteen Drowned.

BUFFALO, Aug. 21.—By the capsizing of the small pleasure yacht of Rung Bros. last evening seven of the fifteen men on board were drowned. Following are the names of the drowned: Frank Buggmann, Jacob Baumann, Henry Schindler, Charles Fischer, Thomas F. Cannon, fireman (name unknown), and a stranger (name unknown).

Reed Has One Vote Sure.

READING, Pa., Aug. 25.—Thomas B. Reed will get the vote of the first delegate to the Republican national convention in 1896. The Berks county Republicans have held primaries to select delegetes to the district convention Saturday when a delegate to the national Republican convention will be chosen. That delegate was the issue in the primaries, and a Reed man is sure to be chosen delegate. His name is High.

Three Men Burned to Death.

TOLEDO, O., Aug. 24.—The Air Line hotel at Air Line Junction, four miles from here, burned to the ground last night. Three men were burned to death, one being Tim McCarthy, of Hillsdale, Mich., and the two others unknown.

Rock Island Train Derailed.

ATLANTIC, Ia., Aug. 22.—Rock Island passenger train No. 4 ditched a passenger coach on the Audubon branch here yesterday afternoon. John Clark, of Des Moines, a traveling man, was dangerously hurt. Several were injured.

Death of Ex-Governor Morris.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Aug. 23.—Ex-Governor Luzon B. Morris died at 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon from the effects of a paralytic stroke. Luzon Burritt Morris was born at Newtown, this state, April 16, 1827, and was a self-made man. He had served the state as judge of probate, member of both houses of the legislature, and governor on the Democratic ticket.

Twenty-Two Bodies Recovered.

DENVER, Aug. 23.—The twenty-second body taken from the ruins of the Gumry hotel has been fully identified as that of F. D. Dodge, a mining man whose wife and child are at present in Albany, N. Y.

Notes of the State.

BUILDING A SILO.

The Most Approved Plan, According to a Successful Ohio Farmer.

Silos are usually built in one of two ways—either by what is known as the double boarded or the single ceiled way—and generally in either case out of pine lumber, as that seems to be the handiest and least expensive, although oak, hemlock and other woods, if sound and free of knotholes and cracks, may be used. Many silos are built in some part of the barn, to cheapen cost, because then the barn walls become the outside protection and roof, which reduces the silo to a big box in the barn, this being about as handy a place from which to feed the stock as can be found. In the barn the silo needs no stone foundation. All that is required is to dig a trench the size of the silo, large enough to receive a 10 inch square sill, and bed it in mortar underneath and on the sides to firm it. Set up the 2 by 6 inch studding 18 inches apart from center to center and line up on the inside with inch lumber, 10 inches wide, cross locked at the corner, and so securely that it will be impossible to pull apart. Cover on the inside of this first lining with cheap tarred paper, then run on another layer of the same kind of lumber. Put it on with a half lap, so as to break the joints in the first layer, and nail well with tenpenny wire nails. To make sure that the corners are tight, have a 8 by 3 inch scantling sawed through cornerwise and nail these halves into the corners, with a backing of paper well painted in with gas tar.

In place of two thicknesses of boards single surfaced No. 1 flooring boards may be used and the grooves filled with paint, but in this case there must be more studding used so as to make the walls extra firm. Now and then a man builds a single ceiled silo six cornered and puts the scantling round the pit like hoops, locking them well at the corners.

In this case the lining boards must go on up and down and be jointed with extreme care. The silage is taken out by having manholes in the sides, with small doors—unhinged—set in from the inside. The pressure of the silage holds them securely in place, and these are taken out one by one as the feeding of the silage progresses.

When the walls of the silo are finished and painted with a paint made of three quarts of gas tar and two quarts of gasoline well mixed, taking care that no fire comes near it in mixing or applying, the floor may be made by drawing the soil from the center of the silo up to and pounding down against the side walls until the floor is in the form of a kettle. If well pounded down and dampened in the operation, it makes one of the best of floors. The double boarded silo, with a clay floor, is the equal of any silo made for the proper keeping of silage. Two silos of this kind built eight years ago are still in perfect condition. They hold almost 200 tons of silage and did not cost $100. They fill all the requirements of a cheap and yet durable silo. By double boarding the walls with tar—red paper between—and by having a clay floor much lower in the center the walls are absolutely airproof. The foregoing is from the pen of an Ohio correspondent of The American Agriculturist. He states, in conclusion, that in the last six years he has not lost by mold or decay 1,000 pounds of silage along walls or in the corners, and since he stopped covering and weighting the top and simply wet the surface when the heat begins to show itself with 10 or 15 pails of water, evenly distributed over the top surface, the spoiled silage on top has shrunk to less than a wagon box full.

Fall Rye For Potatoes.

A writer in The American Agriculturist says: Every fall after removing the potatoes I plow the ground, using care to turn under all the tops, and sow it with rye, two bushels to the acre. The rye was tall and well headed out when turned under the latter part of May and furnished a considerable mass of vegetable material to decompose in the soil. The result is always satisfactory, the potatoes being of the best quality and giving a good yield, rather increasing year by year without other manure, while the heavy clay soil became more friable and soon reached that light and crumbly condition so desirable for root crops.

In fact, it finally became so full of decomposing vegetable matter that, being on a side hill, it would sometimes gully with the violent summer showers, and to avoid this trouble I seeded it to grass again. As a matter of convenience and to keep the field smooth it should be plowed toward the center in the fall and plowed out in the spring. This will prevent an increasing unevenness of soil in back furrows and dead furrows and will keep the field in good condition.

Peaches In the North.

If the growing of peaches is attempted north of the regular peach belt, the trees must have considerable protection. The Iowa Homestead says that a warm south hillside behind a grove will do, and they need to be so grown that they can be laid down and covered, or so that the branches of the trees can be laid on the ground, they being cut back semiannually so as to make long, pliable growth. The peach requires a great deal of heat and a late fall for maturing the new growth of wood. If the wood is well ripened and the buds properly matured, they will stand a good deal.

An act of the Michigan legislature makes it an offense punishable by a fine of $50 or 90 days in jail for maintaining a hive of bees on your premises in that state within 90 feet of the highway. So says the Michigan Farmer.

It's Cruel

for them not to give you Pearline for your washing. Your folks can't know much about it. My! They could save their money, and all your hard work besides. I'm thankful the lady I live with is just the other way. She knows what Pearline will do, and she wants it. She'd never let me lose my time trying to get things clean with soap—and she wouldn't stand it to have her clothes all worn out with rubbing, either." That's the truth. The lack of Pearline comes just as hard on the mistress' clothes as it does on the laundress' back. 437

MASONIC CHART.

ILLUSTRATING THE RELATION OF SOME OF THE DEGREES AND RITES IN FREEMASONRY TO EACH OTHER.

The accompanying chart represents one hundred and forty two degrees.

1. The American Rite of 13 degrees;
2. The Scotch Rite of 33 degrees;
3. The Egyptian Rite of 96 degrees.
4. The Mystic Shrine of one degree.
5. The Eastern Star of 5 degrees for Master Masons and for women. These are side degrees, and not genuine masonry.

The Symbolic degrees, or Blue Lodge of three degrees, are common to every Masonic rite, whether American, Scotch, or Egyptian, or whichever of the Masonic rites, named in Mackey's Masonic Encyclopedia one may choose to investigate.

This chart shows in the Blue Lodge the position of the Worshipful Master and some of the other officers of the lodge. Several positions of the candidate who is being initiated are also shown. In the Master Mason's degree is recognized the murder, burial and resurrection scene so full of religious significance to Freemasons.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. 110 pages, paper, 25c.
The genuine old Morgan book republished.

Allyn's Ritual of Freemasonry. By Avery Allyn. Cloth, $5.00.
Contains the fully Illustrated Ritual of the Blue Lodge, Chapter Council and Commandery, 11 of the Scotch Rite Degrees, several Masonic side degrees and what is termed a Key to the Phi Beta Kappa, and the Orange Societies.

Duncan's Masonic Ritual and Monitor. Cloth, $2.50.
Profusely illustrated with explanatory engravings, and containing the ritual and work of the order for the seven degrees, including the Royal Arch. Though extensively used as an Instruction Book and one of the best in the market, it is not as accurate as "Freemasonry Illustrated."

Richardson's Monitor of Freemasonry. Cloth, $1.25; paper, 75c.
Contains the ceremonies of Lodges, Chapters, Encampments, etc. Illustrated. Although extensively used in conferring the higher degrees, it is not only very incomplete but inaccurate especially as regards the first seven degrees, and as to the higher degrees it gives but a description and general idea of the degrees rather than the full ritual.

Look to the East. A ritual of the first three Masonic Degrees by Ralph Lester. Cloth, $2.00.
Notwithstanding the high price this book is very inferior in every way to Freemasonry Illustrated or the Handbook of Freemasonry at a quarter the price.

TRAIN ROBBERS AT WORK.

They Make Daring Hold-Ups in Michigan and Nebraska.

Grand Rapids, Mich., Aug. 21.—The fast express known as the "Flyer" on the Chicago and West Michigan road, leaving Chicago at 5 and arriving here at 10:40, was held up by five men in a piece of woods just before crossing the Kalamazoo river at 9 o'clock last night. The train was flagged by swinging a white light across the track, and when it stopped Conductor E. E. Rice, of this city, stepped out on the platform of the baggage car, and seeing two of the robbers asked, "What's the matter?" The reply was two shots from their revolvers. A moment later two men climbed on the engine and ordered the engineer and fireman to set the brakes and keep quiet.

When the train stopped the brakeman, Timothy Murphy, of this city, jumped off the rear platform and started back with a lantern, as required by the rules. The fifth robber, standing alongside the coach, fired three shots at the brakeman, one of which hit him in the side, struck a rib and glanced out, making a wide flesh wound. He dropped into the ditch, where he remained until the robbers had gone. Without demanding admission the robbers placed dynamite under the side door, blew it off and sprang into the car with the remark "We want all you've got here." They first robbed the trainmen, returning the conductor's watch, however, when he told them he would need it.

They then tackled the safe, and blew it open in less than thirty seconds. It contained no valuables; the messenger having gone out with a fruit car in the afternoon was returning on a "dead" trip. Then saying good night the robbers took to the woods. The passengers—forty-two of them—were not molested.

North Platte, Aug. 21.—Bandits captured the fast eastbound overland flyer about midnight. The engine was cut off and sent forward in the regulation Jesse James order while the outlaws looted the train at their pleasure. No particulars as to the amount obtained are obtainable. The train held up was No. 8. It left North Platte at 11 o'clock and the robbery occurred an hour later.

The country in the vicinity is fairly well settled and the authorities anticipate no trouble in following the outlaws. All were heavily armed and a conflict is quite probable, for while the robbers were blowing up the express car the fireman ran off with the engine to Gothenburg for assistance, and a strong posse was sent out.

CAMPBELL IS NAMED.

The Democrats of Ohio Nominate Him for Governor.

Springfield, Aug. 22.—The ticket nominated by the Democratic state convention is as follows: Gevernor, James E. Campbell, Butler county; lieutenant governor, John B. Peaslee, Hamilton county; auditor, James W. Knott, Richland county; treasurer, William Scholer, Gallia county; supreme judge, Willian T. Mooney, Auglaize county; attorney general, George A. Fairbanks, Franklin county; member of board of public works, Harry B. Keefer, Tusoarawas county; clerk of the supreme court, J. W. Cruikshank, Miami county. The convention made all its nominations without opposition. It was in session from 10:20 till 2:40, and the nominations were completed in a half hour after ex-Governor Campbell had been drafted for the standard bearer. The ballots were all on the minority report on credentials and resolutions, and the time was mostly consumed in the contests between the gold and the silver men.

The convention was called to order by Chairman Brice, who presided in both temporary and permanent organizations, and received an ovation when he took the chair. He made a speech that was devoted principally to claiming that the Democracy was on the eve of victory again and counseling harmony. He eulogized Cleveland as the greatest statesman and party leader of his time, and was frequently applauded. When it came to organizing all the Brice delegates were seated except those from Cayahoga county. Representative Hurd read the resolutions, which on the finances reaffirm the national platform of 1892, and the minority of the committee had a free silver report, which was rejected by a vote of 525 to 270. The majority report was then adopted with a hurrah.

Collapse of a Big Building.

Chicago, Aug. 22.—The Coliseum, a large building lately erected on the site where Buffalo Bill had his show during the World's fair, collapsed last night. The building was an immense affair, and was to have been opened with Barnum & Bailey's circus Sept. 2. It was also intended for use during national conventions. A force of 900 men have been working on the building night and day, but as the accident happened during the lunch hour, when all the men were absent, nobody was hurt. The building is a total wreck and the loss will reach between $160,000 and $180,000.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS AT WAR.

Result of the Investigation Into Dunning Asylum at Chicago.

Chicago, Aug. 24.—The scandal arising from the death of Patient Pucik at Dunning hospital has resulted in charges being proferred against the following people: President Healy, Superintendent Morgan, Commissioner Ritter and Butcher Evans. Filing of charges began during a special session of the investigating committee held at the county commissioners' room in the county building.

It became an exciting meeting as soon as Commissioner Kunstman got up and preferred charges against President Healy and Superintendent Morgan, alleging that they had appointed and retained employes at Dunning asylum who have been bribed, and for continuing contracts with men who are acknowledged by the president and superintendent to have bribed said employes.

Commissioner Ritter followed with another bomb for Healy, alleging in his charge that the president is violating the civil service law by favoritism, incompetency, and neglect of his official duties.

Attorney O'Donnell then appeared for Contractor Keck and preferred charges against Butcher Evans, at Dunning asylum, for his alleged solicitiug of a bribe from a meat contractor. Healy then preferred charges against Commissioner Ritter, alleging that he took too active a part in the contract.

The meeting of the commissioners was an exceedingly stormy one. Such choice epithets as "blackguard," "thief," "bribetaker," "bribe solicitor," "trickster" and "fence" were thrown around in promiscuous fashion, and every one of the commissioners received his share of attention.

FIRE COSTS MILWAUKEE $400,000.

Blaze Breaks Out Among Railway Warehouses and Is Very Destructive.

Milwaukee, Aug. 23.—Fire among the warehouses at the junction of the Milwaukee and Menominee rivers cost the railways and others about $400,000 yesterday with pretty full insurance. Five freight warehouses were burned, which were owned by the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway company, as were the docks comprising 77,000 square feet. The railway officials claim that there was very little freight in the warehouses and the thirty-five cars burned, but shippers and brokers are preparing claims for thousands of barrels of fleur, sugar, oil and general merchandise, which will probably aggregate over $250,000.

The loss of the Wisconsin Central Railway company on the freight house No. 7 and conteuts, about eighteen freight cars, is estimated at $50,000. The loss of the St. Paul company on brokers' warehouse No. 1 and contents, most of which was brokers' merchandise, was estimated at $20,000. The loss of the Anchor line is about $50,000. The buildings of the Anchor line, the Union line and the Wisconsin Central warehouse were owned by the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad company.

DEBS WILL BE LONESOME.

His Fellow Prisoners Leave the County Bastile at Woodstock.

Woodstock, Ills., Aug. 23.—All the directors of the A. R. U. except President Debs left here this morning, after having served a three months' sentence for contempt of court. All of them will resume their duties in the field of the A. R. U. They have demands now which will require them fully three mouths to fill. Keliher goes direct to Minneapolis; Rogers goes to Pueblo, Colo.; Hogan to Ogden, Utah.; Elliot to Philadelphia, while Burns will remain in Chicago and establish district headquarters there.

Their release will mark a new departure in the work of organizing railway employes. District headquarters will be established in all the large railway centers throughout the country. In each of these districts solicitors will be employed to obligate members, keeping their names absolutely secret. Since their imprisonment 156 local unions that were shattered by the strike of last summer have been reorganized and twonty-seven new ones instituted. Applications for charters are being received every day.

Patchen in Three Straight Heats.

Chicago, Aug. 22.—The match race for $3,000 between Joe Patchen and John R. Gentry was an event that took 15,000 people to Washington Park track. There was nothing phenomenal about the race, however, Patchen winning in three straight heats in 2:05¼, 2:07¼, and 2:07¼—the last heat being easily won.

A high wind blew during the whole race, making record-breaking impossible. The other races were won as follows. Abnet, 2:25 trot, best time 2:14½; Susie G., 2:12 pace, best time 2:11¼.

Elections in South Carolina.

Columbia, Aug. 21.—Very full returns to The Register from the thirty-five counties of South Carolina show that the Democratic nominees in every county have been elected, with a few possible exceptions. The "Reform" Democrats will have a large majority in the constitutional convention, which insures the making of a constitution which will largely eliminate the negro vote.

P. B WILLIAMS,
Agent and Secretary.

This time we present the picture of Rev. Andrew Murray, a great preacher of South Africa. He was educated in Scotland and Holland, and at the age of twenty was a noted pastor of a Dutch Reformed church in South Africa, composed of French Huguenots whose ancestors had fled thither in the days of persecution. He has seen many revivals, and has gone on many successful evangelistic tours, and published books that have had a wide circulation. At Wellington he established the Huguenot Seminary and also a training school for missionaries. While on a missionary tour this summer in England, he accepted an invitation from Mr. Moody to address some meetings at the Northfield conference. He also visited this city last week and addressed a number of meetings at the Moody Institute. He spoke on the subject of spiritual life in the church, and made a deep impression. In company with Secretary Phillips we enjoyed a profitable interview with him in his rooms at the Institute. He said: "I once read two books on the subject of Freemasonry. I am a great enemy of secret societies. Spiritually minded people are not found in the lodges. The lodge question does not effect the native Africans, but our foreign population are greatly infected with it."

Bishop Blyth, of Jerusalem, has received from a lady in America whom he does not know personally, $5,000 for building a permanent house for his "Home for Jewesses," in the Holy City.

In the days of the Holy Spirit's power in the church one sermon used to convert 3,000 souls; but now the conditions have changed so that it often requires 3,000 sermons to convert one soul.

It will give our readers some idea of the immense publishing business done in Chicago when we say that the postmaster reports that they handle every day an average of 800,000 letters and fifty tons of newspapers.

As surely and constantly as the water-sheds of our great lakes send their streams down the Ohio and Mississippi into the gulf, so surely do the minor secret orders send their influence and membership into Freemasonry.

The death of Judge Strong, which occurred on Aug. 19, reminds us that more than any of our Supreme Court judges he took radical reform ground. He was for several years president of the National Reform Association. In a call for a convention these words once went out over his signature: 'God and Christianity are not once alluded to in our national Constitution.... Hence it is that all the laws of this country in favor of a Christian morality are enacted and enforced outside of the Constitution. They rest only upon the basis of what is called common law. We have strictly no oath; no law against blasphemy, Sabbath breaking or polygamy, that has any better foundation. And as matters seem to be going it will soon be discovered and decreed that common law is only another name for custom, which has no binding force. And then where are we? In atheism, corruption and anarchy."

Rev. W. H. Chandler, of the College church, Wheaton, Ill., attended the convention at Cleveland, Ohio, of the Christian Alliance, at which some fifty offered themselves for foreign missionary work, and some $20,000 were raised for the cause. This number added to those of Old Orchard, Me., which Eld. S. C. Kimball reported in last week's Cynosure, make a total of about one hundred and ten persons offering themselves for missionary work, their only pay being clothes and board. The free-will offerings were about $90,000. Bro. Chandler also reported that a number of leading persons testified to their deliverance from Freemasonry and other lodges. Stephen Merritt, of New York, told of the thief who stole the watch and chain that his church had given him, but took pains not to carry off the valuable badge which the Masonic lodge had given him, and hence the conclusion that the thief was a brother Mason. This was previous to Bro. Merrit's public renunciation of the Masonic oaths and abominations.

CHEER UP, REFORMERS.

BY NELLIE BARLOW.

Courage, brave heart, nor in thy purpose falter;
Go on and win the fight at any cost;
Though sick and weary after conflict,
Rejoice to know the battle is not lost.

The field is open still to those brave spirits
Who nobly struggle till the strife is done;
Through sun and storm with courage all undaunted,
Working and waiting till the battle's won.

The fairest pearls are found in deepest waters;
The brightest jewels in the darkest mine;
And through the very blackest hour of midnight
The star of hope doth ever brightly shine.

Press on, press on, the path is steep and rugged;
The storm clouds almost hide hope's light from view;
But you can pass where other feet have trodden;
A few more steps may bring you safely through.

The battle o'er, a victor crowned with honors,
By patient toil each difficulty past,
You then may see these days of bitter failure
But spurred you on to greater deeds at last.

THE GREAT DRAG.

BY REV. D H COULTER, D. D.

The prophet Habakuk (1: 15 17) draws a remarkable picture of drag cramming and drag worship. The drag is a fine net, plaited, braided, bound together, strong and large. Have we not a distinct realization of the picture in the modern system of secret societies?

1. In most industrious angling and snaring of men and gathering of them into a great manifold and powerful drag.

2. In the rejoicing and gladness of drag workers and worshipers over their success.

3. In their adoration of their system of nets and drags, "because by them their portion is fat, and their meat plenteous."

"Shall they, therefore, empty their net and not spare continually to slay the nations?" Manifestly the net is now being modified and enlarged and spread for the catching of the last man, though whole nations should perish. There will be no emptying until God rends the system into shreds.

The net is a deceitful thing, a concealed snare. "The heart is deceitful above all things," and modern secretism is the latest finished product. It is a masterpiece of Satan, one of his darkest depths. It is more alluring and deceitful than riches, for many are taken in its net of whom it could scarcely be said that they had fallen into the snare of covetousness. It holds men in stronger bonds. It is more deceitful than strong drink, for it captures multitudes of ministers and church members who scorn the wine cup. It is more difficult to escape from its meshes.

A friend who studies prophecy says that the lodges are the bands with which the tares are being bound in bundles for the great burning, now near at hand. The system is Satan's great drag, interwoven with threads of steel, twisted and knotted and made stronger than the ties of kindred or country, than the obligations of truth or law. If the kingdom of heaven is like unto a net, so is its counterfeit, the kingdom of darkness. With vast new pockets and folds adapted to catch and hold men of every class and condition, this huge net is now sweeping the great sea of the world, and few there be that escape. Satan answers and says to drag-makers and manipulators, follow me, and I will make you fishers of men by the multitude. What weaving and knotting! What spreading of nets and huddling of men together and crowding and cramming of drags! What rejoicing and gladness! What sacrificing and burning of incense to this god of fat portions and plenteous meat! The amazing success of this amazing fraud begets the hope that before all are deceived these days shall be shortened.

CHRYSOSTOM ON SWEARING.

BY REV. C. R. HUNT, PH. D.

Chrysostom, after the death of his mother, who was one of the rarest of women, entered a life of monasticism, from which he entered the pulpit as his throne, which he adorned as much as any preacher, ancient or modern. From the position of preacher at Antioch, he became patriarch of Constantinople, where his eloquence soon gained the admiration of the people. His large income was devoted to benevolence; and he denounced luxurious living unsparingly and enjoined upon the rich the duty of alms giving.

He was the greatest preacher among the Greek Christians, and certainly he was second to none of the Romans while he could attract the crowds from the theaters by his eloquence; yet when he came to minister to the poorer classes and plead their rights, and to preach to the rich of their needs and tell them of their sins, he was persecuted and banished from his country. The following is what I have gleaned from his different sermons on the subject of swearing. Of course it applies as forcibly to so-called secret oaths as to any other type of this degrading sin.

In his twentieth homily on Acts he says: "Nothing can be more chilling than the sight of a Christian who makes no effort to save others. Neither poverty nor humble station nor bodily infirmity can exempt men and women from the obligation of this great duty. To hide our light under pretence of weakness is as great an insult to God as if we would say that he could not make his sun to shine. I proclaim to all and testify, that those who are notorious for this transgression; who utter words which come of the evil one (Matt. 5: 37), for such is swearing, shall not step over the threshold of the church. Talk not to me, 'Necessity of business compels me to use oaths, else people do not believe me.'"....

Again he says: "For even though you do not forswear yourselves, yet by swearing at all do you not know in what absurd consequences you involve yourselves; binding yourselves to an absolute necessity, and as with a cord, and putting yourselves to all manner of shifts as men studying how to rescue their souls from an evil which there is no escaping? Answer me: The birds which are said to be parrots, how are they known to be parrots? Is it not by speaking like men? Let us then be known by speaking like the apostles; by speaking like the angels. If any man bid you swear, tell him, 'Christ has spoken, and I do not swear.' A mouth that cannot swear will soon both engage God in prayer and smite the devil a deadly blow. 'For indeed it is a haven of safety to swear not at all.'....

"For which reason greater shall be the inevitable punishment to him who forces the oath upon another than to him who takes it. The same holds with regard to him who gives an oath when no one asks him....For tell me: you force a man to take an oath with what expectation? That he will forswear himself? But this is utter insanity; and the judgment will fall upon your own head. Better you should lose your money than be lost. Why act thus, to your own detriment and to the insulting of God?"

Union City, Pa., Aug. 26, 1895.

DIVINE JUDGMENTS NEAR.

BY REV. J. R LATIMER.

I specified in my former article the sin of false swearing. It is a sin national in character, because false swearers are constitutionally eligible to office and the mass of the nation accept of the situation. In fact, our national Constitution requires no moral test for office. Thus the nation is responsible.

This widespread disregard of the divine ordinance of the oath may be traced, in part, to the

which has more or less pervaded the entire body politic. In our Constitution, and in civil affairs under it, we have practically said with Pharaoh, "Who is Jehovah, that we should obey his voice? We know not Jehovah." The highest authority we know is "We the people." But this does not, cannot, reach the conscience and bind it.

Another, and no doubt very fruitful, source of this sin is the secret lodge. The lodge oath often is per se sinful, blasphemous. These lodge oaths are also profane. The administration of them is a violation of the Third Commandment, because the lodge has

NO MORAL RIGHT TO ADMINISTER OATHS

The church and state alone have this right. And the multiplication of oaths, where not called for by these institutions, we believe to be productive only of evil in weakening regard for this very solemn ordinance. Much more must this be the case in respect to its use by associations that have no God-given right to administer it. It can not but lead men to regard it lightly. Thus the lodge trains men to false swearing. It does this also by teaching its members that their lodge obligations are paramount to all other obligations. For all this wickedness God must call men and nations to account.

Another dangerous symptom in our body politic is insensibility under divine judgments. Jeremiah says: "O Lord....thou hast stricken them, but they have not grieved; thou hast consumed them, but they have refused to receive correction; they have made their faces harder than a rock; they have refused to return." All this is sadly true to-day. Has not the Lord stricken us in judgments?

WHAT MEAN THE HARD TIMES

through which we have been passing? Why such financial stringency? A great variety of answers are given to these questions. Some say it has been because of the tariff. Others trace it to the threatened reign of free trade. Others tell us it is all due to our monetary system, etc. They are all wrong? With an open Bible in our hands we can give only one answer, and that is, It is Jehovah's hand laid on us for our sins. He may have used some or all of these things as means in accomplishing his purpose; but the only explanation that will meet the case is this, it is the Lord's controversy.

How many recognize the fact? Of course, the world is blind to it; but how much better has the church been? How many church and religious papers generally, how many pulpits, have taught that this is God's hand on the nation for sin? Is it not true of us, as Jeremiah says of the Jews, we have not grieved, and have refused correction, and made our faces harder than a rock? Is not this a grievous sin? Must God not visit for it?

Another of Israel's crimes was disregard of the Seventh Commandment. "When I had fed them to the full, they then committed adultery, and assembled themselves by troops in the harlots' houses. They were as fed horses in the morning: every one neighed after his neighbor's wife." See also Ezek. 22: 10, 11. These passages show how little respect the Jews had then for the Seventh Commandment. They show a fearful state of licentiousness. How much better is it among us to-day? "Adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness," how fearfully widespread are these works of the flesh! Not long since we saw it stated that in the city of St. Louis alone

THERE ARE EIGHT THOUSAND PROSTITUTES.

How many men does that mean are living that kind of life! Then we have no reason to believe that St. Louis is worse in this respect than our other cities. Besides, as various facts that are from time to time brought to light go to show, the number of those who give themselves up to a life of prostitution does not include all who are more or less guilty of violating the law of chastity. Still worse, it has sometimes been proposed to regulate this vice, and so give it a measure of legal standing; and so far as we know, there seems to be but little inclination among our lawmakers and executors to try to stamp it out. We need not wonder at this when men elected to be legislators, etc, themselves keep company with harlots (unless the papers have grossly slandered them). Thus the nation becomes responsible.

But this is not the only way in which the nation is guilty of violating God's law in this particular. There is another in which it is perhaps still more guilty. I refer to

OUR INFAMOUS DIVORCE SYSTEM.

Think of it! More than forty sets of divorce laws! More than forty causes for which divorce is granted in this nation; and then the parties allowed to marry again at pleasure! Legalized adultery! Men and women allowed to indulge their lust to almost any extent if they only follow the legal (?) method! Shame on this nation! It is thus making marriage a farce, nay, worse, a cloak, a shield for polygamy in rotation, prostitution. How alarming is this evil! More than 300,000 divorces in this land in twenty years, from 1867 to 1887. Probably nearly all the parties in these cases married again, thus forming thousands of adulterous connections which the nation has legalized. The nation is responsible. The voters have sanctioned this, at least, implicitly, if not explicitly. Thus God's holy ordinance of marriage, ordained in Eden, to bless mankind, is turned into a curse. Can God be pleased with such a nation? "Shall I not visit for these things?"

Rose Point, Pa., Aug. 26, 1895.

THE TWO WITNESSES.

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

No part of this wonderful book of Revelation has been subject to greater discussion than the eleventh chapter, which tells us of the two witnesses. I cannot hope to give an exegesis that all will except, but if I can point out the correspondence of this eleventh chapter with other scriptures I may throw some light on its real meaning. All true reformers, and especially all the martyrs, have been witnesses. Each age has slain them and the next built their sepulchers. The truth for which they suffered cannot perish, and they themselves shall yet stand in their lot in the great day of the Lord. But these two witnesses have a special character and mission, and they have a more conspicuous place in the last history of the church.

I notice first the time when these witnesses are to give their testimony. This seems

CLEARLY TO BE IN THE FUTURE.

The event which immediately precedes it, is the measuring of the temple, verse 2. We are not necessarily to conclude that this was the literal temple. It is more probably the spiritual house—the professed people of God—who under both the old and new covenants are called "the temple of the Lord." See Jer. 7: 4; 2 Cor. 6: 16. He was told to "measure the temple of God; the altar and them that worship therein." This would include all spiritual worshipers. "The court, which is without the temple, leave out and measure it not, for it is given unto the Gentiles and the Holy City, and they shall tread it under foot forty and two months," or literally, three and a half years. This refers probably to the outward and spurious church, which is, and always has been, in subjection to the unbelieving world.

Such a measuring of the spiritual temple seems to be reserved for the last days. The prophet Malachi, in writing of the time when "the Lord shall make up his jewels," says, "then shall ye return and descern between the righteous and the wicked, and between him that serveth God and him that serveth him not." Mal. 3: 18. There is an apparent identity between this measuring of the temple and the discerning between the false and true servants of God. This is future, for the SEPARATION HAS NOT YET TAKEN PLACE.

The treading down of the Holy City seems to correspond with the prediction of Christ, "Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." Luke 21: 24. This was said not only of the end of the Jewish nation, but also of the end of the age, for he says that "then shall ye see the Son of man coming in a cloud with power and great glory." Luke 21: 27.

The event which follows the conclusion of their testimony is the soundingof the seventh angel, or the consummation of the age. "And the seventh angel sounded; and there were great voices in heaven saying, the kingdoms of this world have become the kingdom of our Lord and his Christ, and he shall reign forever and ever." Verse 15. This surely is at or after the close of the present age, and if the testimony of the witnesses immediately precedes it, as would seem probable, it fixes the time of the testimony as in the future.

Second, the place of their testimony. We are not left in doubt in this matter; we are told it was "in the street of the great city which spiritually is called Sodom and Egypt, where also our Lord was crucified." Verse 8. This can mean no other than Jerusalem, which is, because of its wickedness, called Sodom (Isa. 1: 10), and for its oppressions is compared to Egypt. "And where our Lord was crucified." This is TRUE OF NO OTHER CITY.

As this was probably written after the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus, it doubtless refers to a rebuilt and enlarged Jerusalem of the future.

Third, the final result. "And the same hour (in which they were slain) there was a great earthquake and the tenth part of the city fell, and in the earthquake there were slain of men seven thousand; and the remnant were affrighted and gave glory to the God of heaven." Verse 13. No such event as this has yet happened in Jerusalem nor elsewhere so far as we know; but if, as is abundantly predicted, the Lord is to remember and restore his ancient people, and Jerusalem is yet to be a blessed and holy city (see Isa. 60: 15-21; also 62: 1-7), we may well suppose that such an event as here described will precede its accomplishment.

WHO AND WHAT IS A CHRISTIAN?

BY EDMOND RONAYNE.

Having for some time back been wading as it were through the slime and filth and abominations of the Masonic oaths and their horrible penalties of death, I was just thinking that it would be quite pleasant, and perhaps profitable also, if the readers of the Cynosure and myself would turn our thoughts for a brief period to the contemplation of something nobler and better, and which we will surely find to be in direct contrast to the empty trash and the foul vaporings of the Masonic philosophy. Will you, therefore, kindly turn with me to the first chapter of Paul's epistle to the Ephesians and let us there read together what our gracious and loving Father has done for us, and the

in and through the person of the Lord Jesus Christ. Now, in the first place I want to call your attention to the force and significance of the little word "in," as we find it constantly referred to in this most wonderful chapter.

In the first verse the apostle addresses the saints and the faithful in Christ Jesus. In the third verse he declares that these saints and faithful ones are blessed with all spiritual blessings in the heavenlies in Christ. Not that they shall be blessed when they die and go to heaven, but that their place is already in the heavenlies and their portion there is "all spiritual blessings," and all this because of the principle stated by the same apostle in Rom. 4: 17, that "God calleth those things that be not as though they were." God speaks of what he purposes to do as though it were done. He speaks of a work in process as though completed. He speaks of things that are not as though they were. The Bible is full of illustrations of this divine principle, but we shall now look at only one very striking one. Read the seventeenth chapter of Genesis and note the tense of the verb in the fifth verse: "A father of many nations have I made thee;" and Paul tells us that God was here speaking of things that were not as though they were. God has a right to speak thus. What God purposes to do nothing can thwart or disarrange his plans; there is no possibility of failure; and so here in Eph. 1: 3, he speaks of his children, believers in the Lord Jesus Christ, as being already blessed with all spiritual blessings in the heavenlies in Christ, although in our own experience we are still in the flesh and still on the earth.

But mark again as the primary cause of it all: "The God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ has chosen us in him before the foundation of the world that we should be holy and without blame before him in love" (Eph. 1: 4); and as "he worketh all things after the counsel of his own will" (verse 11), we may rest assured that what he has promised he is able also to perform; and hence that ultimately his purpose and will shall be fully accomplished in us.

But further "God hath made us accepted in the Beloved (verse 6), "Therefore doth my Father love me," says the Lord Jesus, "because I lay down my life for the sheep. John 10: 15, 17. Jesus is indeed the Beloved One, and our God and Father has made us accepted in him. "In him also we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins according to the riches of his grace" (verse 7). So likewise "In him also we have obtained an inheritance" (verse 11), "an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled and that fadeth not away" (1 Pet. 1: 4); and lastly,

"IN HIM WE ARE SEALED with that Holy Spirit of promise which is the earnest of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession" (verses 13, 14); and so as believers in the Lord Jesus Christ—as Christians—members of his body—

We have all spiritual blessings in Him.
We are chosen in Him.
We are accepted in Him.
We have redemption in Him.
We have forgiveness of sins in Him.
We have an inheritance in Him.
We are sealed in Him.

And thus through and in the Lord Jesus we find that God our Father has bestowed upon the believer a seven-fold blessing; seven in Scripture being the perfect number, or as the same apostle again expresses it, "We are complete in him." Col. 2: 10.

But now mark the blessed assurance we have of the final outcome. God is behind it all; God is the actor in the whole scene, and love is the motive power. God before the foundation of the world hath and during this Gospel age or this parenthetical period between his ascension and his second coming, God, by his Holy Spirit, is calling out a people to the name of Jesus the Lord (Acts 15: 14), and sealing them, as we have already seen, with that same spirit, thus perfecting "the seed" through whom in the ages to come "all the families of the earth shall be blessed. See Gal. 3: 29; Acts 3: 25.

These called-out ones then are Christians, and none else. They are not made by subscribing to creeds and articles of faith, but they have been chosen in Christ before the world's foundation, God having marked them out beforehand for adoption through Jesus Christ to himself according to the good pleasure of his will. These, and these only, constitute the church—they are the "one body" of 1 Cor. 12, of which Christ is the head. To them and for them all the epistles were written, and their ultimate destiny is to to be raised to the divine nature at Christ's second coming (2 Pet. 1: 4), when they shall see and be like their risen Lord (1 John 3: 1,2), that so through this glorious body—the Head and the members united—God according to his purpose and promise should bring blessing and salvation to all the kindreds of the earth.

And now, dear friend, will you kindly

ANSWER ME THIS QUESTION.

Do you think that these called-out ones, these who are really and truly Christ's own (Christians), would ever think of going into a Masonic lodge where Christ is utterly rejected and pagan rites practiced? or, being already there, would they remain Masons after God by his Spirit had called them to the fellowship of his Son? 1 Cor. 1: 9. Surely not; the very thought of such a thing is more than grossly absurd; and neither would they have any fellowship with any of the numerous fads and follies and frivolities of the nominal church.

And last of all, may I now add one or two quotations from the teachings of Masonry in relation to this subject? In the General Ahiman Rezon, or Freemason's Guide, p. 196, we find the following extraordinary statement: "We now find man complete in morality and intelligence, with the stay of religion added to insure him of the protection of the Deity and guard him against ever going astray. These three degrees (ancient craft Masonry), thus form a perfect and harmonious whole, nor can it be conceived that anything can be suggested more which the soul of man requires."

IN CHRIST AND CHRIST ALONE

the believer is "filled full"—"complete in him." The Mason finds, or pretends to find, his all in Masonry; and notice, also, that nowhere is it asserted that man is complete in religion or through religion. The believer is only complete in Christ; and without him, whether a Mason or church member, all are simply children of wrath.

But let us always remember that salvation comes to us as the result of God's love. Christ did not come into the world to suffer and die in order merely to appease God's wrath, but he came to reveal God's love. "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son." John 3: 16. "It is "the grace of God that bringeth salvation to all men" (Titus 2: 11); and every unconverted man, be he a nominal Christian or a Freemason, is declared by the apostle to be without Christ an alien from the commonwealth of Israel, a stranger to the covenant of promise, having no hope and without God in the world. We can be children of God only by faith in Christ Jesus. Jesus and Jesus only is God's only remedy; without him you are surely lost; with him you are eternally saved.

A FAMOUS YOUNG MAN.

Few of the greatest characters recorded by the historian stand out so prominently as Timothy, who knew the Scriptures from his youth. The names of numbers of mighty warriors of older time have long since been forgotten, but the name of Timothy is a household word, and the New Testament story of his life is familiar to millions in every quarter of the earth. What was the secret of his greatness? Was it not the knowledge he possessed of the Word of God making him wise unto salvation, and blessing him unto the conversion of multitudes?

Under the title at the head of this article H. L. Hastings, of Boston, publishes a pamphlet consisting of his address delivered before the recent great Christian Endeavor convention in that city, which presents so much in connection with the life of Timothy that is helpful to a better knowledge of the Scriptures that its circulation should be a matter of general interest. The following is an extract:

"It was this young man thus trained and equipped whom Paul, on his third visit to Derbe, selected from all the young men of his age and his country to go forth with him as 'a good soldier of Jesus Christ.' And it was because from a child he had 'known the holy Scriptures,' that this honor was put upon him. Paul knew his man, and Timothy knew his Bible; and so, doubtless with many prayers and blessings from his early teachers, he left the tutelage of Lois and Eunice, to enter the theological seminary and training school of 'Paul, an apostle of Jesus Christ.'

"In such a school, without local habitation or name, presided over by one who had 'no certain dwelling-place;' with mobs and mockings, bonds and imprisonments, scourgings and stonings, as his object-lessons; and with the sacred memories of the Scriptures which he had learned in his Lycaonian home, and from 'the books and parchments' which Paul so sedulously guarded, this young man, 'as a son with a father,' labored with Paul in the Gospel; faithful among the faithless, and standing by his leader when Demas had forsaken him, 'having loved this present world,' and all sought 'their own, not the things which are Jesus Christ's'. And it was this young man's privilege to receive—an honor shared by no other man—two letters from the great apostle, one of them being the last writing of Paul the aged, now ready to be offered;' and having only before him the prospect of that crown which the Lord the righteous judge shall give the faithful in the coming day."

REFORM NEWS.

BOSTON KNIGHTS TEMPLAR CONCLAVE.

BOSTON, Mass., Aug. 26, 1895.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Portions of this "Puritan city" are profusely bedecked with the insignia of the secret empire. Emblems of the Blue Lodge and Chapter are not infrequent, but the cross, crown, beausant, sword and skull with cross bones, are the most conspicuous.

Fortunately our domicile is not directly on parade line, consequently the quiet of our Sabbath was broken by only five companies marching by with bands of music. According to press reports, the tumult and desecration was much greater at the depots where thousands of Knights were met by throngs of eager sight-seers. The route to my 4 P. M. appointment was along the parade line where many were arranging decorations and offering seats for sale, but I saw no heavy work in progress. Of necessity there was little solemnity or practical recognition of God's holy day in portions of our city where this modern prodigy of medieval knighthood took possession.

AUG. 27.—This is parade day for the Templars, and streams of humanity pouring in from all quarters for the last forty-eight hours have filled our city to its brim. The morning is prophetic of a perfect day, and everybody is astir. California headquarters are at the Parker House, but report has it that Knights from the Pacific slope have taken possession of the Columbian Hotel, furnishing their own servants and having everything after their liking. This appears to be a point of interest to many, where the bar was liberally patronized; while apartments in the rear, to which only the favored were admitted, received their due share of attention. One feature of this point was that many men and women arrived and departed in carriages by couples or in quartets from eleven P. M. until 2 A. M., beyond which hour "deponent saith not." Some two hours before the time for "forward march" the entire line of over three miles was packed with a dense mass of expectant humanity. Viaducts, roofs, lamp-posts and every available point for observation was pressed into service. The enterprising cartman was at every cross street and alley to drive a bargain with weary pedestrians at 75 cents and upward for limited extemporized accommodations, and the scene was a forcible reminder of Rev. 13:3: "And all the world wondered after the beast, and they worshiped the dragon which gave power unto the beast."

In the crowd I found a friend who has promised me an introduction to a man who is willing to give the inside of the Clan-na-Gael and other orders of which he has knowledge. There were as reported five principal stands erected by the authorities of which the one on Copley Square was probably typical. Upon the two divisions were fifteen flagstaffs. At the summit of either was displayed a knightly banner, and some two-thirds of the distance down the staff were four small American flags. I noticed a similar order in the different sections comprising the grand parade where invariably the commandery banner preceded the stars and stripes. It may have been an inadvertance or unintentional slight of our national colors, yet it was none the less an insult to the old flag in the eyes of every thoughtful citizen. It was all the more significant in connection with an illustration in the Boston Herald, representing a modest female delivering the keys of our city to a stern mailed and mounted Sir Knight, intended to symbolize the humility of our municipality at the feet of a titled, armed and, for the present, peaceable horde, who claim decent lineage from a chivalric and bloody ancestry.

AUG. 28.—I noted 111 saloons decorated in honor of the Sir Knights, and my personal canvass extended to only a small section of the city. The list will be extended, perhaps doubled, when completed. There are people hereabouts of whom I have no personal knowledge who have in some way formed an unfavorable opinion of me or of my work. I was accosted by some of this class while peacefully pursuing my business in a respectful way yesterday, and advised to "mind my own business." I accepted the advice, and went right on investigating and observing. I visitsd nine commandery headquarters where receptions were given last evening, and then took a stroll through some streets not so brilliantly illuminated as about commandery headquarters. The receptions were brilliant, not to say magnificent, and everything was decorous, abating perhaps a liberal holocaust of the Indian weed, which was offered in sacrifice even in these high places, by Sir Knights. The time is not yet to speak of all that might be seen not far distant from brilliant reception halls, but I can personally testify to numerous violations of the order that Sir Knights should not enter saloons wearing the insignia of the Christian (?) knighthood. Appetite doubtless was stronger than reverence for their superiors, and so they dared assert their personal liberty to drink of the rum manufactured by their Eminent Grand Commander, Samuel C. Lawrence, to their heart's content.

It would be an injustice to suppose that all who come as members of this triennial conclave are addicted to habits of intemperance or grosser sins; but the head is a rum-maker, and it is evident that some of the members in the body are saturated if not soaked in that decoction. It is the respectable temperance element that saves the order from popular contempt, and renders it all the more dangerous as the real enemy, though the professed friend of both church and state. The great day of parade and receptions is past, but the end is not yet. There will be more events worth chronicling which will interest your readers before the week ends.

LETTER FROM REV. P. B. WILLIAMS, OUR PACIFIC COAST AGENT.

PORTLAND, Ore., Aug. 27, 1895.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—On Saturday evening, August 24, I boarded the Southern Pacific train for North Yamhill. At Hillsboro, the county seat of Washington county, Mr. Austin Craig, editor of The Hatchet of Forest Grove, boarded the train. He is the young man who attempted a defense of the lodges at our last convention held at Philomath. We were soon discussing the lodge question, and kept it up until he got off at Forest Grove.

Among other things he said, "I find it greatly to my advantage to belong to the orders when traveling; I can get a lodgeman anywhere to indorse for me when I have to cash a money order or check." I answered: "You pay pretty dear, sir, for accommodations which cost me not a cent. I travel all the time and get orders cashed any where without trouble. They must suspicion you lodge fellows which puts you to so much trouble." He had just confessed that his lodge religion cost him $60 a year. Many a man squirms on less than half that much for true religion annually. At North Yamhill I spoke Sabbath morning to an excellent congregation, preaching a pure gospel of separation, entire consecration, a perfect faith, and perfect experience as the standard set up in the Bible.

In the afternoon I spoke at Hutchcrofts from Ephesians 5: 11,12. At night I spoke again at North Yamhill to a crowded house from the language of Jesus which forms the Cynosure motto. During my address I asked the question, "As many lodgemen as are present who practice a preference of the prayer meeting to the lodge, please hold up your hands." One lodgeman responded and jumped to his feet, saying, "I'm a member of several lodges, but always go to my prayer meeting in preference to my lodge." Before I left the town I learned from one of his church brethren, who was also a two-fold lodge brother and a very particular friend, that he has not been to a prayer meeting in nine months, and always goes to the lodge in preference. At the close of our service, he mounted the rostrum and harangued the people, boasting of his good Christianity, trying to make the people believe that we had falsified by our representing the lodges to be religious. He utterly denied that Odd-fellowship had any semblance of religion. I called the attention of the people to Rev. A. B. Grosh's statement, on page 90 of his manual: "What regeneration by the Word of Truth in religion is, initiation is in Odd-fellowship." Then said I, "You good people can believe Mr. Grosh or this man which ever you pleased." If ever lodge people were ashamed of a man they were of this fellow.

The next morning at the train I met a prominent business man of Portland who belongs to a number of lodges, and was present and heard my address, and saw how it effected the lodgeites of the place. This is what he said: "You stirred up a nest here last night; I belong to a number of lodges, but I am disgusted with that lodge set last night; they don't know how to act." Quite a number of the very best people gathered about us at the close and said: "God bless you; I am glad we have a few men like you and Bro. Watson, who are so fearless in preaching the truth."

When I arrived at Portland I was met by an old Ohio friend, who was a special friend to Bishop Becker. He asked, "Where have you been, and what are you doing?" Being told that I had just returned from North Yamhill where I had spoken on secret societies, he turned loose, and among all the defenses of Odd fellowship I have ever heard he capped the climax. In trying to defend the lodge as a moral system, he took the position that some "saloonkeepers were as good men as you can find anywhere." This shows the straits men get into when they undertake to defend the lodges. I am glad that I am not on that side. We look for a good attendance at our convention here Sept. 25,26 This is our earnest desire and prayer. We request all the friends of the cause to pray for the success of this meeting.

P. B. WILLIAMS.

CIRCULATE THE LODGE LAMP.

Secretary W. I. Phillips has received many letters urging the wide circulation of the last issue of his Lodge Lamp. Among others is the following from one of the Board of Directors:

CHICAGO, Aug. 26, 1895.

MY DEAR MR. PHILLIPS:—I am greatly pleased with the many direct points and dodgeless hits of the last Lodge Lamp. I do not now recall any other recent publication of our Association covering so many practical questions. It is a paper pregnant with common sense, and replete with unanswerable statements, from a man who writes and speaks as one having experimental authority. To the regular readers of anti-secret literature there may be in this number of the Lamp nothing especially new, yet the facts are so succinctly and lucidly stated as to carry conviction with them.

Instead of this paper being restricted to ten thousand readers it should be sown as thick as hail beside all waters. It should have at least one hundred thousand circulation. This can be accomplished very easily by the readers of the Cynosure and the many friends of the N. C. A. Procure for yourself ten, twenty-five, fifty or one hundred August Lodge Lamps, hand them to your neighbors, your grocer, your doctor, lawyer, dentist, etc., then think of friends in the distance and mail each a copy. While it has rained this afternoon I have spent an hour in marking with red ink certain paragraphs in this paper and mailing to friends who will be benefited. The sacrifice of a little time and a little money may accomplish more for anti-secrecy than a half hour of our belligerent argument, or a whole column of our prosy platitudes. J. M. HITCHCOCK.

REFORM AGENCIES AT WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 28, 1895.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Beer is called by some people a harmless beverage, but surely those who really regard it as such cannot read the newspapers very clearly. Only this week, right here in Washington, a man's soul was sent unheralded into the presence of his God—he having been murdered in a quarrel over the purchase of a bucket of beer for some street laborers. Nothing that intoxicates the brain and inflames the passions can be harmless.

Mrs. Sarah D. La Fetra, of Whashington, who was, at the last meeting of the world's W.C.T.U., placed in charge of the new dapartment of Christian Citizenship, has prepared a circular letter to be sent to each State president and to representatives of the union in foreign countries, asking co-operation in making the new department a success. "The aim of the department," says the circular letter, "shall be the promotion of a citizenship which shall be one of brains and intellect and unselfish devotion to principle, having no sex distinction; where woman shall be as fully recognized and effective as her brother, and where the golden rule shall be the basis of action; where loyalty to religion, not of creed or formalism, but 'pure and undefiled before God and the Father;' a religion of helpfulness and personal consecration shall be the standard; a citizenship whose aim shall be the extermination of the liquor traffic and the opium trade and every form of vice which debaucheth the citizen or worketh any ill to his neighbor; one which stands for the preservation of the Christian Sabbath and all institutions for the betterment of humanity, for public and private virtue, for the sanctity of marriage, and the protection of the homes of the people; a citizenship which stands for the overthrow of every institution or trade or business which robs womanhood and childhood of the sacred right to make the very best of the life given of God for his glory and for the purest human happiness. This department will co-operate with the oppressed and down-trodden of every land in securing and enforcing just and righteous laws, and may God grant his blessing evermore upon the work and the workers."

The opening at Colonial Beach, on the lower Potomac, of a children's country home, furnishes proof of what can be accomplished by one earnest woman whose heart is in her work. Late last summer Mrs. W. G. Davenport, wife of one of our well-known suburban ministers, and mother of the young minister whose recent disappearance from his home near Baltimore was a mystery which was not cleared up by the finding of his dead body in Scotland, all of which furnished a sensation for the daily papers, went to Colonial Beach for the benefit of her health.

She returned so well pleased with the place that she thought it would be a good idea to have it so that the poor children might spend a week or two there each summer without cost to their parents. The more she thought of the idea the better she liked it, and about last spring she began to put it into operation. First she secured an unconditional donation of two and one-half acres of ground for the site of the Home, from Prof. Melville Bell, who also became an enthusiastic supporter of the idea. Then many of the city ministers were asked to refer to the project and ask donations, and a society of the Daughters of the King was organized to push things along. Results now standing; a three-story building, 36x50 feet, and a one-story cottage, 25x35 feet, which is always during the season to be occupied by a minister. Not a bad bit of work for one woman to be responsible for, eh? C. A. S.

EXPERIENCE AS A FREEMASON.

CHICAGO, Aug. 30, 1895.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—One of the "constitutional questions" propounded to every Masonic candidate on the night of his initiation is as follows:

"Do you seriously declare, upon your honor, before these gentleman, that you are prompted to solicit the privileges of Masonry by a favorable opinion preconceived of the institution, a desire of knowledge and a sincere wish of being serviceable to your fellow creatures."

Now with regard to myself I can truely say that prior to my initiation I answered this question honestly in the affirmative with the exception of the last clause. I had no thought whatever of being serviceable or otherwise to my fellow creatures; and what is more, I never knew or heard of a Masonic candidate who had. I was led to believe that Freemasonry was a most mysterious thing, containing some awful and wonderful secret which, as I was informed, no one ever revealed or could reveal, and which, of course, the outside world could never find out. I had then "a desire of knowledge;" I was most anxious, in fact, I had an intense longing to become possessed of this most mysterious and wonderful secret, and so I was extremely anxious to become a Freemason.

It was in 1859 I was principal of the British and Canadian model school, one of the largest and best schools in the city of Quebec, and hence had no "mercenary motive" in becoming a Freemason. I was initiated, passed and raised in old Harrington Lodge, No. 49, on the Registry of Canada, little William Sweetman, a tailor and an ignorant, drunken little fellow at that, being Worshipful Master; stripped of my outer clothing, with "my right arm, left knee and left breast made bare" (I'm telling you how they do it in Canada), my right heel slip-shod, a hood-wink over my eyes and a rope around my neck.

I passed bravely through the ceremonies of initiation and all the time kept a sharp lookout for that wonderful Masonic secret. I was told by little Bill Sweetman to walk upon "the angle of an oblong square," but though a teacher of geometry I did not know what sort of an angle that was. I was then told to stand erect; then to kneel upon my naked left knee with my left hand under the Holy Bible, square and compass, and my right hand above it, and in that manner they made me swear that I'd never tell. Tell what? Tell the secret or tell what a fool I was being made of, which? The hood-wink was then removed, and Bro. Sweetman very solemnly and in a most mysterious manner went through the thumb and knuckle business, informing me of the awful secret that Boaz was the password of that degree, and that the grip was a pressure of the thumb on the first knuckle joint of the first finger of the right hand. What a solemn moment that was Masonically; a diminutive, ignorant tailor imparting the mysterious and awe-inspiring secrets of Freemasonry to E. Ronayne, principal of the Quebec model school. Well, I was then presented with a little white apron and shown how to wear it, after which I was placed in the northeast corner of the lodge and presented with the working tools of an entered apprenticed Mason with which I was to build up a moral character, and so prepare myself as a living stone for that spiritual building, that house not made with hands and designated by Freemasonry as "the Grand Lodge above."

I was then desired to return to the ante-room and resume my clothing; but where was that mysterious and wonderful secret which they professed to possess, and for which I paid my money? They told me to walk, to stand, to kneel, to swear; they showed me how to wear a little white apron and how to use my thumb; and they assured me solemnly that the little working tools if rightly used would fit me for an honored place in that spiritual temple called "the Grand Lodge above," but what did they do with that profound secret, or where was it? I was still on tip-toe of expectation for that, but it never showed up. And yet they made me swear not to tell it to any man, woman or child on top of the earth; made me swear to keep a secret which I never received and which never existed, and for this piece of swindling they charged me $20 cash.

Oh Masonry! Thou art indeed a most sublime humbug; an unparalleled farce; a stupendous lie from roof to cellar, in spite of all your Priests and High Priests and Eminent Commanders; thou art a rival of free government, a menace to honest administration of justice, and an enemy of true Christianity, and yet, strange to say, honest men and intelligent men too, at that, pretend to tell us that they cannot see anything bad in Masonry. I challenge any Mason in the country, be he high or low, rich or poor, to speak the truth about Masonry when asked a question as to any of its oaths, death penalties and modes of initiation; and still they tell us that a good Mason must be a good Christian. A good Mason is a man who will lie, and who must lie so as to "conceal" what Masonry really is, and yet such a one can be a good Christian. Shame on such stupidity as that! The utter foolishness of such assertions is really beneath one's notice and deserving only of silent contempt, were it not for a desire to call the attention of honest men and good citizens both inside and outside the lodge to its true character. In my next paper I shall (D. V.) continue these experiences and so exemplify the outside working as well as "the secret work" of this most notorious Masonic system.

E. RONAYNE,
Past Master Keystone Lodge, No. 639, Chicago.

FROM THE NATIONAL CAPITAL.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 22, 1895.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Reaching people as we do from almost every State in the Union and Canada, attracted by our show-case and bulletin board, there opens to us daily opportunities for sending out literature through the mails to those who are hungry for the light. Often names are left with us with requests that anti-secret literature be sent to them. To meet this want we have received to-day a contribution of postage stamps from J. D. Guengerick, of Amish, Iowa, a stranger to us but not a stranger to the glorious work of reform. It is just a little surprising that our brother from Iowa should be the first to aid us in spreading the light from our national capital.

The meetings this week have been of unusual interest, and are increasing in numbers. An address on Romanism and Masonry by a returned missionary, Robert J. Duglas, from the West Indies, a converted Romanist and Jesuit, was received with great favor. He turned on the light on those dark institutions known only to Jesuits who have been trained for the priesthood.

HATTIE EUNICE POWERS.

ARE SECRECY AND LODGERY THE SAME?

CHICAGO, Aug. 28, 1895.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—No doubt the words are often used in the same sense, but in reality they differ very much. Every faculty, mental and moral, has its legitimate and alas, too often, its illegitimate use or exercise. Secrecy is a faculty of our race; lodgery is one of its practices or organizations which from our standpoint we denounce as fundamentally wrong, violating the principle of legitimate secrecy in person, in family, in church and in state.

As counterfeiters try to pass their spurious greenbacks as genuine, so lodgery tries to pass its illegitimate secrecy in all the relationships of society. But when discovered in its true character it is found to be inimical to harmony in the church or churches of Christ, and to weaken or destroy confidence in the courts of justice, etc., in our country. The obligations of lodgery, or oaths, are believed to be often a hindrance to equal justice in our civil courts, and hence is one of the worst enemies of our republic, and of the rights of men in the whole world.

Holding such a view of lodgery the readers of the Cynosure are sorry to find such men as Bishop Fallows justifying lodgery by alleging the authority of the Lord Jesus Christ for legitimate secrecy. Jesus commended prayer in secret, and giving alms in secret, but never instituted any lodge; and when falsely charged by his enemies, at once appealed to all his teachings, and declared that he had ever taught openly the duties of man to Cæsar and God. Yet he was crucified as a rebel and blasphemer.

Let us all rather obey and follow Jesus, than the highest names in lodgery; in which may be found modern scribes and Pharisees and political time-servers, who are blinded to the teachings of Him and his followers who are "the light of of the world." Then let us be prepared to "rejoice" when evil spoken of for maintaining the truth. T. H.

FROM EGYPT TO CANAAN.

CHAMBERLAIN, S. D., Aug. 28, '95.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—If you think my Christian experience in coming out of the lodge, would be of benefit to the Cynosure readers I write it as follows:

When in the fortieth year of my life the Lord in the plenitude of his mercy brought me out of Egypt and led me through the wilderness up to the borders of the promised land, and gave me a taste of the milk and honey of Canaan, it spoilt all my relish for the leeks and onions of Egypt. And I desired to go up at once and possess the land, as I felt with Caleb and Joshua that I was abundantly able to possess it. But for some cause, unknown to myself at the time, I could not get forward. And I soon discovered that the great mass of the people with whom I was journeying did not seem to have very much of a desire to go forward, but in their hearts were turned back again into Egypt.

But as I had spent the best part of my life in Pharaoh's dominions under hard and cruel bondage, making brick without straw, I was fully determined to return no more that way. Nevertheless, after lingering awhile on the border I was turned back "with the mixed multitude" into that great and terrible wilderness, where six hundred thousand men of war perished in the time of Moses because they obeyed not the voice of the Lord. Here I wandered about making many crooked paths but still crying mightily to God for deliverance. And the Lord, seeing my heart was still set on Canaan and nothing short of its immediate possession and permanent occupation would satisfy my longing, gave me to see that I was in no condition to go over Jordan, as I was still clinging to the relics of Egypt.

I had not even renounced my allegiance to Pharaoh, but was bound by horrid oaths and barbarous death penalties to observe his statutes and keep his laws. On making this discovery I renounced my allegiance to Pharaoh at once and resolved to go no more down to Egypt for help. In less than twenty-four hours I was again brought to the border and immediately passed over with Joshua (Jesus) into the land of "corn and wine and oil favored by God's peculiar smile." And here I continue until this day, "dwelling in the secret place of the Most High, and abiding under the shadow of the Almighty," being abundantly satisfied with the fatness of his house, as he feeds me with the finest of the wheat and honey out of the rocks, and permits me to drink of the river of his pleasures.

By way of explanation let me add that it will be apparent to a spiritual mind that much of the Old Testament scriptures are not only historical but typical. And as Egypt is a type of the world, so is Pharaoh a type of the devil. And as there is a curse pronounced upon those that trust in the arm of flesh, so there is a woe pronounced against them that go down to Egypt for help, to strengthen themselves in the strength of Pharaoh and to trust in the shadow of Egypt. And it is written: "Therefore shall the strength of Pharaoh be your shame, and the trust in the shadow of Egypt your confusion." Isa. 30: 3. And, "When the Lord shall stretch out his hand, both he that helpeth shall fall, and he that is helped shall fall down, and they shall fall together." Isa. 31: 3. "If any man speak let him speak as the oracles of God; if any man minister let him do it as of the ability which God giveth; that God in all things may be glorified through Jesus Christ, to whom be praise and dominion forever and ever, Amen." 1 Pet. 4: 11. LETTER FROM MEXICO.

FUERTE, Mexico, Aug. 12, 1895.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I hasten to say that since your recent frank declaration, editorially, of good will toward the Hawaiian republic, those who are friends of Christian government in those islands will no longer fear they may find in any issue of the Cynosure notes of the character or tone of those to which I referred in my previous letter. It seems hardly fitting that from this remote corner I should write on the situation in Hawaii, a subject so amply and ably treated by numerous pens of unimpeachable integrity at home.

As to what "should be done," I can only remark that, since Christian government is almost infinitely better for all the inhabitants of those islands than a despotism favoring license and paganism could be, it would seem clear that such Christian government ought to be assured of the moral support of the American Christian press, at least.

Of Masonry in Mexico I had almost said I could write nothing, for the reason that it does not come under my observation in this part of the country. There are no lodges near us. But it occurs to me at this moment that the subject was brought up, a year or two ago, by an article in one of the evangelical papers of Mexico City, from the pen of a native brother, quite committing Protestantism to friendly affiliation with the lodge. Your correspondent at once prepared two articles for our semi-monthly paper, El Testigo (The Witness), and these appeared in successive numbers of this paper. As the Testigo is quite widely read by the native ministry of various denominations, I was prepared for some rejoinders; but none were heard, nor were any more articles noted in praise of Masonry.

It is barely possible that a translation of parts of those articles might be of interest to your readers, not as offering anything new, but as an instance of the setting forth of the matter (though not for the first time) to Mexican readers, from a Protestant standpoint. I will endeavor to look up the articles and let you know whether they seem to be of use. HENRY M. BISSELL,

THE SOLDIERS' OPEN ENROLLMENT ASSOCIATION.

DAYTON, Ohio, July 25, 1895.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Under the above caption I desire to tell your readers of a movement in the interest of good citizenship among old soldiers. The association took its origin at Hudson, Ind., May, 1893. Many of the survivors of the war are not inclined to join the Grand Army of the Republic because of its secrecy and many other disagreeable affairs connected with its organization, but desire to be enrolled in some kind of association where they can exchange thought on questions which touch the weal and woe of the country. The residence of the writer being at Dayton, Ohio, near the Soldiers' Home, gives opportunity to see the real condition of many of the boys whom the Home attracts. There are a great many of the men here who regard their characters too highly to debauch their lives in the slums of the city, but this is by no means true of a large number of them. They reel on our streets, sleep in our gutters, prostrate themselves before the vilest characters of the city and are robbed of their money as well as the loss of character. The G. A. R. offers no help. The saloons within a mile and a half are banished, but the saloon in the Home is there by the authority of the nation, and those who desire can drink to their appetites, content.

What is here said of the boys in the Home, is also true of many throughout the country who visit the saloons of the towns and cities and there spend the money their families ought to have. Most of them are pensioners and are expending their pensions to support the saloons and to increase the tax list to honest industries and increase the burdens of honest and hard-toiling men and women. The drunkenness and its associate vices and crimes are so numerous, so terrible, so cruel, so frequent, as ought to arouse the fears of patriotic men everywhere, and call for a line of action to suppress the revolting corruption of the brave men who offered their lives upon the altars of their country to redeem it from the impending danger of disunion and disruption. The tendency of war is towards hardness of heart and immorality. The exceptions are not ignored, and were it not that there is a conserving force among the survivors of the war, there would be still more vice and crime than we now deplore.

The association we have organized has undertaken to do something immediately towards a better state of society. Whatever influence one of the boys may have over another will be brought to bear upon him, and also upon lawmakers in order to have a better state of affairs touching the soldier's moral condition. I have in my possession about five hundred letters of boys who are not in favor of secret societies. They are desirous of uniting with us in a movement which is as open as the religious services of the Christian church. This they will find in the association which completed its organization on the Fourth of July, 1895. I herewith send articles one and two, together with the seven resolutions which set forth its object as follows:

RULES AND RESOLUTIONS OF THE GENERAL SOCIETY OF THE SOLDIERS' ENROLLMENT ASSOCIATION.

NAME.

ART. 1. The name of the association shall be The Soldiers' Open Enrollment Association.

OBJECT.

ART. 2. The object of the association shall be the elevation of good citizenship and society, and also to afford opportunity to its members to interchange thought and more practically unite their services to ameliorate the unfortunate condition of many comrades, whose sad lot both physically and morally calls for sympathy and assistance. Also to give expressions to all patriotic questions which touch the weal or the woe of our common country and countrymen. The more definite object of the association is further set forth in a series of resolutions which are here appended and made part of article 2, of the rules of the association.

Resolved. 1. That our first duty is to God as creatures fashioned after his image and destined to an endless life, and as being responsible at the bar of God for our conduct. Following this comes our duty to our homes and native land.

2. That virtue and every ennobling sentiment which forms the basic principle of loyal citizenship is incumbent upon all who desire the confidence and esteem of the good people of our country. Profanity, vice, immorality in every respect, under whatever specious pretext, provocation, or social inclination, is by us deplored and denounced.

3. That it is unpatriotic to consent to take any obligations to obey the mandates of any sovereign or of any of the authorized officers or priests of his dominion, when such authority asserts itself to be more binding than the patriotic pledges of fealty to maintain the laws of our land, whether magisterial or municipal.

4. That it is unpatriotic to subscribe to the belief of doctrines either civil or religious which are in conflict with the divine teachings of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, to whose authority both civil and ecclesiastical governments owe their right to exist.

5. That it is not in harmony with true patriotism to stand identified with any institution that abridges the rights of citizens, either by limiting the freedom of speech in matters of local or general concern, or by placing restrictions upon the immunities guaranteed by the constitution to all law abiding citizens of the republic.

6. That it is not in harmony with the design of a free government where the equality of the citizen is one of the vouchsafed rights of all who obey its laws, to become allied with organizations which segregate from the community only such citizens as are in their judgment eligible to membership, and thereby become the especial favorites of privileges which others as worthy as they, are, under no circumstances, permitted to enjoy.

7. That it is unbecoming the character and dignity of any of the survivors of the late war to engage in the manufacture, sale, exportation, importation, or consumption of intoxicating liquors to be used as a beverage, or to rent, lease, or own any property upon which such beverages are made and sold, or to go as bondsman upon any document that gives license to the traffic in ardent spirits of whatever kind.

HOW TO CARE FOR THE SKIN.

The Bath Is Valuable, but There Are Many Necessary Accessories.

While all baths are good for the skin, except in certain peculiar cases, the hot bath has advantages over the cold in that it opens the pores and thus encourages the escape of matter that would otherwise clog the system and impair the general health. When only one bath a day is possible, if that must be cold, it should be preceded by a sponging from head to foot in warm water.

Valuable accompaniments to the bath are the bags of bran, oatmeal or almond meal sold by druggists. A little borax or ammonia added to the water is excellent for people with greasy skins. A bathing glove of Turkish toweling may be used by those who prefer this to a sponge or wash cloth. Hard rubbing with a rough towel after the bath assists the action of the skin.

The woman who desires a good complexion must wash her face carefully. If soap is used, it must be of the best, and every particle of it must be rinsed off before drying the face. Use the hands or a soft cloth or sponge, and except in rare cases, do not wash the face more than once a day.

Water alone will not thoroughly cleanse the skin. If the face is gently but thoroughly rubbed with cold cream and then wiped off with a flannel, the grime that will be coaxed from the pores will give mute evidence to the truth of the statement. This process should be gone through at least once a week.

In every city there are establishments for facial steaming and massage, where better results are possible than can be obtained at home. Still, even home treatment is preferable to neglect, and if a woman possesses a face steamer she can manage very well. Lacking this she must improvise a steamer.

There are two ways of doing this at home. One way is to set a teakettle of boiling water over a strong alcohol lamp and then insert a wide mouthed funnel in the spout. As the water boils the steam will pour from the funnel into the patient's face. She should cover her head with a sunbonnet shaped construction of stiff brown paper.

Another way of steaming is to hold the face above a basin of boiling water, throwing over the head a large towel that will hang down on all sides and prevent the escape of the steam. With either method the steaming must be kept up until the pores are opened and the perspiration flows freely.

How to Estimate the Weight of Cattle.

The weight of cattle can be ascertained by measurement. The girth close behind the shoulder and the length from the fore part of the shoulder blade along the back to the bone at the tail, which is a vertical line with the buttock, should be measured in feet. Multiply the square of the girth, expressed in feet, by five times the length, and divide the product by 21. The quotient is nearly the weight of the fore quarters in imperial stones of 14 pounds avoirdupois. In very fat cattle the fore quarters will be about one-twentieth more and in very lean animals about the same proportion less than the weight obtained by the rule. The fore quarters are little more than half the weight of the living animal, the skin weighing about the eighteenth part and the tallow about the twelfth part of the whole.

How to Steam the Throat.

If it is necessary to steam the throat and lungs of a sick person, hot coals put into a vessel of water in the patient's lap will do it, but a kettle on the stove, with a connecting pipe reaching to the bedside, is even better. He can inhale much or little steam at will and without being hurried.

How to Remove Mildew.

Mildew is removed by first brushing off any loose mildew. Then a little common salt should be rubbed in, afterward liberally sprinkling with powdered chalk and thoroughly moistening with clean cold water. After this the articles should be slowly dried in the open air and then rinsed, and if the marks are not removed the treatment should be repeated, possibly several times, but in the end the mildew will be removed.

How to Make Ice Cream Cake.

Two cups of sugar, 3 cups of flour, three-fourths cups milk, three-fourths cup butter, whites of 6 eggs, 3 teaspoonfuls of baking powder.

How to Prepare Floral Conserves.

Women can make dainty conserves of flowers that are specially recommended as giving a dainty perfume to the breath and lips. They are made from violets, or very highly perfumed roses, or carnation pinks. Take half a pound of loaf sugar and moisten with rose water, melt the sugar slowly till it reaches the boiling point; have your violet or rose or carnation petals ready and stir them quickly in the liquid. Then pour the whole into shallow dishes or pans.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 5, 1895.

THE WITNESSES.

In studying the Concordance it is interesting to note how frequently the term witnesses is used to designate God's people. No other term so fully expresses their mission. Almost the last words spoken by Christ to his desciples before his ascension were, "Ye shall be witnesses unto me in Judea and Samaria and unto the uttermost parts of the earth."

Satan is disputing the claims of Christ to govern this world. Christ is pleading his own cause and calls out a people to testify for his truth. The true and faithful witness is the Christian who in walk and conversation and religious profession publishes the truth of Christ to the world—not merely the truth that is generally accepted, but the unpopular truth as well.

As Bro. Hinman so well shows in his article in this issue, the witnesses figure prominently in prophecy. The best students of prophecy agree that the two witnesses referred to in Revelation, eleventh chapter, are not two individuals, but all faithful ones of whatever age, nation or church, who maintain the true doctrines of the Bible, and insist upon their application to the whole moral order of society, both in church and politics; and who bear faithful testimony against all individuals and organizations refusing to submit to Christ. They are that succession of men and women who, in all ages, and in the face of all opposition, have valiantly advocated the claim of the law of Christ over both the sanctuary and the throne.

The most diligent students of prophecy are likewise agreed that the slaying of the witnesses refers to an event in the future, when these faithful witnesses for Christ will be disorganized and their testimony suppressed. It refers to a definite three years and a half when there will be a brief open and avowed triumph of the enemies of Christ. That they will not be literally slain is most probable from the language (Rev. 11: 5), "he must in this manner be killed," that is, "by fire proceeding out of their mouth," or the words (Rev. 19: 21), "the remnant were slain with the sword of him that sat upon the horse, which sword proceeded out of his mouth." Their dead bodies lying unburied, evidently implies that during these three and a half years, they will be objects of pity, and without sympathy and friends or worldly influence. The professed church represented by the Holy City will despise and cast them out and hate them as the Jews did Christ and his cause.

WOMAN AND MASONRY.

Mrs. H. J. Nelson, of Burlington, Vermont, to whom some friend has been sending the Lodge Lamp, writes us as follows:

"Having received several of your publications of late, and having been a Mason myself, I know I can be both a Christian and a Mason. And I think the publication shows such a very un-Christian spirit that I ask you as a favor to cross my name off your list, for I shall not waste my time reading any more of it."

Mrs. Nelson is the first woman we have heard claiming to have been made a Mason. Masonic lodges in France and Mexico, and in South America, have stripped women of their clothing and put them through their low and debasing ceremonies, but Masonry in this country swears its members never to initiate a woman. The leading organ of Masonry in Illinois is the Voice of Masonry, published in this city. In its last May number there is an editorial on this very subject. It says: "It is too much a fashion in some jurisdictions for women to assert a claim to Masonic recognition. We are one of those Freemasons that believe in the ancient custom, usages and landmarks of the fraternity. We believe also that they are 'established' by the continued adherence to them since they were canonized by the fathers as indestructible.

"When, therefore, plausible and persistent effort is made to evade those established regulations, it is a source of peril to the very foundations on which Masonry was built up, and which we have received under the solemn obligation to maintain, support and abide by them, This woman sufferance is one of those perils. There is an organization of women known as the 'Eastern Star.' It is all very well for women to unite in associations within the strict limits of their relations to the social organization to which they live. As to that we have nothing to say. But when this association, or any other association, adopts those features of Masonry that are to it especial and particular, and then asks to use the lodge-rooms of Masons, which they expect will be freely afforded, it is time for our craft to put an end finally and conclusively to this sort of combination. It weakens Masonry. It is violative of its teachings. It is contrary to the very spirit of its organization.

"A free man is the only constituency that Masonry ordains, or can directly or indirectly recognize. To make a sort of partnership with those who never can be Freemasons, by tolerating their pretensions when coaxed and coddled, to be a secret society with which Masonry ought to fraternize, is testing Masonic courage to do right, and it would seem in some cases almost succeeding in overturning Masonic common sense."

Now in all kindness and charity we would advise Mrs. Nelson to cultivate more of the spirit of self-esteem than to declare her membership in, and allegiance to, an institution which puts its members under sworn obligation not to initiate a woman; and whose official organ says that the admission of women "weakens Masonry," that "it is violative of its teachings," that "it is contrary to the very spirit of its organization." We would advise her not to allow herself to be "coaxed and coddled" into partnership with those who declare that she, because of her sex, can never be a Freemason.

HOW THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC WILL GO DOWN.

It has been said that the liquor traffic in its dying convulsions will shake the nation worse than slavery did. We know that slavery, the nearer it came to its death struggle, grew more and more insolent and tyrannical. The Chicago Record says the indications are that the rum power will meet its final doom by becoming anarchistic and overbearing, and thus arouse a too long suffering people.

As an illustration of this, a few years ago the people of northwest Missouri were greatly excited by the burning of the M. E. church at Quitman. It was believed to be the work of an incensed liquor seller whose business had been closed up by a Law and Order League. On the morning of August 24, the large proportion of the business part of Blanchard, Iowa, consisting of some fifteen buildings, was burned to ashes. The fire originated in a drug store which was heavily insured, and whose proprietor had recently been prosecuted by a Law and Order League and fined to the amount of $700 for selling liquor. Elder T. Wylie, in a private letter, says: "This has been Jehovah's fight from the beginning. When the friends of righteousness were almost discouraged by difficulties and by the apathy of professed Christians, and secret lodge influence, then the Lord made bare his arm and decended into the fight; and oh, what short work he made of it." Among the buildings destroyed was the store of J. R. Sharp and Joseph McKnight, and the office of Dr. Dodds. These men were the leaders of the Law and Order League. The two former are life-long subscribers for the Cynosure, and earnest friends of the cause. It is more than probable that when prohibitionists unite and bring their power to bear in the suppression of the accursed liquor traffic, it will manifest its spirit in deeds of lawlessness and crime all over our land, and finally go down in bloody revolution.

WHEN TO EXPECT A REVIVAL.

During the late war victory could not come to our armies until we had freed the slaves. We were defeated in almost every battle during two bloody years, till Mr. Lincoln issued the Emancipation Proclamation, and from that hour the tide of battle turned. It was not until we put ourselves right with God on this important question that God's blessing came.

Since the war the agitation of the questions of the rum traffic, the secret lodge question and the Sabbath question, have been steadily carried forward until we have well nigh reached the end of the agitation period, and it is time to put the questions. We have reason to believe that until we put ourselves as a nation in right relation to God on these questions, we cannot expect an outpouring of his Spirit upon the churches. When we get right with God the blessing will come. Rev. Andrew Murray says: "The churches are so taken up with the forms of belief, forms of activity, organizations, missionary enterprises, etc., that they have gotten away from the all important matter, spiritual life."

It sounds strange to hear this man, who has spent all his life in foreign missionary work, charge upon the churches in this land that they are too much taken up with missionary enterprises, so that they have gotten away from more important matters. We have for some years been fearful that Satan's policy in our day, especially with the reform churches, is to divert their energies away from reform work into the channel of foreign mission work. The result is the great public evils in our own land are increasing, and threatening the destruction of both church and state. In our efforts to plant the banner of Christ in foreign lands, the danger is that we allow Satan's forces to flank us by taking possession of our own land.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Prof. C. M. Lowe, who spent his vacation in Wheaton and Chicago, has returned to his post in Heidelburgh University at Tiffin, Ohio.

—R. Hammond, of Galesburg, an old and substantial friend of the Cynosure, sends his renewal and prayers that God will speed the cause.

—J. M Hitchcock has visited our office several times of late. Among all the N. C. A. Directors there are none who manifest a deeper interest in our work.

—Rev. W. M. Howie writes us from Seattle, Washington, that he is pleased with his new field and encouraged by a kind reception given him by the congregation.

—Bro. J. E. Wolfe baptized twenty-five in the lake at Victoria Park, Toronto, Ont., Saturday, Aug. 31, at the close of his labors in that city. Many souls have learned to know the Blessed Comforter. To God be all praise.

—Bro. Mojola Agbebi writes us that he will be leaving England at the end of September, and any pamphlets, book, tracts or newspapers on secret societies will be thankfully acknowledged by him, if sent to Lagos, West Africa.

—Rev. W. B Stoddard preached for Bro. McKinley in the U. P. church at Barnet, Vt., last Sabbath. He writes that he was much helped in securing readers for the Cynosure at West Barnet by Rev. D. C. Faris and his people.

—We are sorry to learn from the Superior, Neb., Journal of August 28th, of the death of a prominent United Presbyterian, and an old time friend. We are also sorry to read that he was a member of the Society of Modern Woodmen.

—A religious organization under the name of the Church Militant, led by Rev. John Rusk, will hold Sabbath services in Willard Hall, Chicago. The neglected and criminal population will receive special attention in the work of the members.

—Bro. A. C. Lemm, of Northville, Mich., in sending his renewal, calls our attention to an item about horse-racing that by accident got into our last page. We assure him and others that this caused us much regret and will not occur again.

—Captain Hester, one of our Washington subscribers, is a former class-leader of the M. E. church. He had some experience in breaking up the Ku-Klux Klan of the South, and is now separated from Masonry. He served during the war as an officer under Gen. Grant.

—Bro. James Brandt of Forest Grove, Mich., writes of the deep interest he feels in the work of Bro. P. B. Williams. He thinks it a dangerous symptom when there is any disposition to interfere with free speech and liberty of the press, and fears there are indications that anti-Catholic publications are discriminated against in some departments of the postal service.

—The Preachers' Magazine is brimming full of good things and steadily grows in popular favor.

The September number contains Dr. William E. Ketcham's Notes on Lessons and Outline Addresses; Dr. C. F. Deems' Prayer Meeting Talks. A grand number of a very popular preacher's aid, and worthy a place in every preacher's home. $1.50 per year. Wilbur B. Ketcham, Publisher, 2 Cooper Union, N. Y.

—Bro. J. E. Wolfe writes from Toronto, Canada: "The meetings here have grown to such proportions that we cannot see when and where to stop; so many have been saved and the work goes on with wonderful power. I often think of you and dear Phillips and Dresser, and wonder how you are getting along. Fill the old Cynosure with the blessed Gospel. Let the word of Christ dwell in it graciously and fully and then you will see wonderful fruitage as a result."

—Mrs. C. O. Keeler, our new Washington correspondent, Mrs. H. E. Powers writes, is exerting a strong influence for the anti-secret cause. She and her husband formerly edited the Banner of Love. She is now using her influence to expose the atrocities practiced under the Colored Convict Lease System, which are akin to the barbarities practiced in Russia. She finds that the secret lodge gives to a few men the power to control legislatures on the convict question in spite of every effort to overthrow the system. She is writing a book on the subject, and expects soon to go South on an investigation tour.

—A novel suit has been brought in the Supreme Court by George Weimer of New City. In March, 1894, while being initiated into Kakiat Tribe, Improved Order of Red Men of Congers, Mr. Weimer had his leg broken during some part of the ceremonies. Mr. Weimer has had much trouble and expense with his injured limb and thinks that $2,000 would recompense him. His doctor's bill is said to have amounted to $600. He wanted the tribe to settle this, but they could come to no agreement, and so the suit was instituted. Some say that the case will never come to trial, as the Red Men would not desire to have their secrets revealed upon the witness stand, and they may, therefore, settle with Mr. Weimer.

—Rev. N. R. Johnston, of Oakland, writes to the Christian Nation about the moral rating of some of the California lodges, thus: "The morals of the average secret society in California, if not elsewhere, may be inferred from the fact as found in the papers at the time, that during the late annual meeting of the 'Native Sons,' the citizens of San Jose gave a 'Sunday morning breakfast' to the visiting Sons which was much like a Bacchanalian feast. The San Francisco Chronicle of the next morning said: 'At the end of an hour every table was flanked by scores of bottles with patent stoppers, and bearing an inscription strongly suggestive of hops.'" Bro. Johnston writes us, "I cannot do without the Cynosure though I am so painfully embarrassed in finances. You may not know that if I survive until the 8th of October I will be seventy-five years old."

—Bro. S. S. Grannis, of Red Wing, Minn., shows a missionary zeal that should inspire us all. He writes: "In the past two years I have sent N. C. A. leaflets and the Cynosure to each of the 154 school district clerks and others in our county. I regard this as my best missionary work. It would be some gratification to know how many in this county have subscribed for the Cynosure in that time. Bro. J. P. Stoddard's eight reasons for subscribing are especially applicable to this section. When for our devotion to the Cynosure we find ourselves ostracised, shunned, frowned upon, ridiculed and boycotted even by brothers and sisters in the church, we are tempted at times to enquire, can it be possible that we are in the wrong? Still it is true that persecution for Christ's sake is the distinctive badge of the true Christian, and like Paul, we should rejoice in it."

—Dr. D. H. Coulter, of Winchester, Kan., in sending his renewal writes: "I have been for many years a subscriber to the Cynosure. Of late years I have read it more carefully than formerly, and with increasing interest and satisfaction. It has grown much in all that makes an able reform journal. One who wishes to keep himself informed as to the workings of secretism and the progress of reform cannot afford to do without it. I am happy to observe that since you took the editorial chair it has lost nothing of its courage and soundness and power, but has rather gained. The steadiness and force with which the pole star of reform yet shines, show that the new hand at the helm is a strong and faithful one. May you be divinely helped to make the Cynosure more and more a power for good. Never was there greater need for such an agency. Never was there a louder call for unshrinking fidelity to truth and outspoken testimony against living errors and shams."

—Referring to the scope of the Christian Cynosure as a distinctively anti-secrecy publication, Josiah W. Leeds writes: "I was glad to see in the last number of the Philanthropist, the monthly of New York specially devoted to the interests of social purity, two editorial items against war and in commendation of the arbitration of international differences. War is shown to be 'a monster of so frightful mien,' robbing the home of its natural protectors and tending to the propagation of impurity in many ways, that Christian people everywhere are called upon to withstand its continuance, and to provide a really national way of settling their disputes. War at every step is likewise an active school of secrecy and deception. 'You can,' says Lord Wolseley in his Soldier's Pocket-book of Field Service, 'by spreading false news among the gentlemen of the press, use them as a medium by which to deceive an enemy.' Hence in drawing away the curtain of oath-bound secrecy, I believe the Cynosure does well and consistently in letting the light fall full upon the enormity of war."

WHERE YOUR HELP IS NEEDED.

The N C. A. has lately sent out from their office literature to several thousand ministers, and this is one important part of the work for which the Association is organized. But your servants at headquarters can not carry on the work unless you furnish the sinews of war.

A card just received from the Rhode Island State missionary among the Armenians asks for a gift of Pres. Finney's book on the Character of Freemasonry. This brother says: "Pres. Blanchard's talk on secret societies at Northfield lately, interested me very much." We have sent books to quite a number of ministers who became interested at that meeting, and believe it a good investment for the cause. The total cost to the Association of that meeting was only about $40, but, dear friends, this work must stop unless you contribute to its support.

SPECIAL APPEAL.

We desire to make the coming convention in the First Evangelical church, cor. E. Sixth and Market streets, Portland, Oregon, Sept. 25 and 26, a success in every respect.

It will cost some money to do so.

1. We hope all friends of the cause will attend.

2. Any who find that they cannot attend are requested to send a small cash donation to help defray the extra expenses.

3. As the agent lives here and will share in the extra expense, will those who know themselves indebted to him please remit by money order or registered letter?

4. Let everybody pray for the success of our convention. Without Divine help we shall fail.

Portland, Ore. P. B. WILLIAMS.

TALKS TO YOUNG PEOPLE.

BY PROF. D. A. STRAW.

HARD WORK.

Oh, the work! What a bother it is—to have to work to get food, work to keep clean, work to keep warm, even work to keep cool, and then be told that we must work to keep well—what a wishing, worrying, working world this is! How nice it would be if puddings grew on the ground like mushrooms, and if potatoes grew baked and ripened up hot; if the maple limbs were candy sticks, and catalpa leaves were cookies instead. How glad we would be to gather mince pies from a cucumber vine, and eat hot sausages off from the bush. Surely no boy would ever feel tired when told to pick pop-corn balls from the top of a tree. And if ice-cream grew with a spoon for a stem on a thornless bush and ripened real cold with a strawberry flavor, how happy, oh, how happy the girls would be.

And instead of our washing and brushing and combing and dressing to keep clean and fresh all day at our play, why might we not be like a blue bird or oriole, always dressed fresh and tasty and tidy and clean, without even trying or trimming at all. The geese can keep their dresses white though they puddle all day in the water. Ducks never catch cold from getting their feet wet. A rabbit needs no handkerchief on a frosty winter morning, nor yet on a sweltering summer afternoon. Lambs never work nor even run errands. Fish never fall out of bed at night. Indeed, when we think what a quantity of work stands like a mountain before every fun-loving youth, it seems as if all things conspired to make people work, for it would have been just as easy for the Creator's word to have made food, clothes and cottages grow wild without weeding. And really all we need to do to make ourselves miserable is to keep hating the work and thinking how much it is and wishing there were none of it.

But what would we do if we had not any work? How delightful it looks until one tries it, having just nothing at all to do. Did you ever try it? Waiting in a depot, for instance; away from home; no business to attend to; everything ready; just nothing to do till the train comes. A half hour; an hour; two hours. When will it ever come? A week of such time would be enough for most of us to live. Ah! but we'd play if we did not have to work. Yes, how we would play! —till we got tired of it. Did you ever get tired of playing one game? Did you ever coax for some new game because this old one is so played out? Yes, and that one and the other one. They are all played out. And isn't he a good friend who can think up some new game to play in such case? And then if the men and women had nothing to do, and had to think up pastimes for them too! Why, that would be as hard work as all our work is now.

In fact, the best pastime for part of the time is standing around and seeing someone else work—at nice work—and helping a little. What a pleasure it is to help a little, when the tools are sharp; to run the machine a little while when one is not needed. But that's play. Yes, and so is all our work when we want to do it, and don't have to, or don't think of the "have to," which is just the same. Oh, thank God for work! Just enough of it, and the right kind. And let us work for the time when no man shall have more of it, and when each one shall know enough and have opportunity to get the kind of work that he likes to do. Why, that would be all play. And why shouldn't it be? A little planning and a little of this philosophy, a little good nature and plenty of Christian honesty would make our land just such a place to-day.

In fact, it is a happy thing that goodies do not grow all ready made. What fun it would take out of life to have the hickory nuts all cracked and shelled clean in a saucer. And would it not be too, too bad if pop-corn grew all ready popped; and if no one could ever make any more beautiful new dresses, but each one had to wear the same suit always, though it were pretty as a blue bird's. Now, I have played the game through, of writing this story, and I am so glad there is some other work I can play at right away.

LOOKING FOR A MAN.

REAL MEN AS SCARCE AS IN JEREMIAH'S TIME.

Rev. Madison C. Peters Says Hobbledehoys Are Plentiful, Those Physically and Mentally Endowed Few—A Warm Nature Is True Manliness.

Rev. Madison C. Peters is still on his vacation. He sends the following to his readers:

Run ye to and fro through the streets of the city Jerusalem, and see now and know, and seek in the broad places thereof if you can find a man.—Jeremiah v, 1.

Boys and hobbledehoys are plentiful, but men with proper physical development for life's battle are scarce, and men with moral measuremcnts such as fit them for God's war against sin are scarcer still.

What Jeremiah had so much difficulty in finding in Jerusalem 3,000 years ago is not too plentiful in any of our cities and towns today. Men—real men—are scarce. To be a man is to be everything. It is to be the grandest thing beneath the skies. I do not mean to say that there are no true, houest and brave men. If you thiuk that, you had better, for appearance's sake, keep off saying it until you are dead yourself.

In looking for a man look not merely for largeness of body. Muscles of steel, uerves of whipcord, stout lungs and perfect livers are everywhere needed. Yet powerful physiques are not infrequently united with feeble minds. Napoleon, Wellington and Grant were great in spirit, but not in body. Renan sarcastically called Paul "the ugly little Jew," but in conscience, mind and heart, soul and will, Paul was the greatest man that ever trod the earth since first the Almighty sent it circling round the sun.

Look for a man with a heart. A warm nature is true manliness. The manliest thing James A. Garfield ever their tes... when in the moment of his su- tbr... premest exaltation he turned away from all the brilliant glory that flashed about him at his inauguration as president of the United States and bent to print a kiss of recognition and honor on the wasted face of his mother.

Look for a large hearted man, a magnanimous mau. Prejudice stunts and dwarfs.

Look for a man who will disdain revenge. Revenge is sweet ouly to a little, weak and narrow mind.

Look for a man who knows his duty and does it, a man who knows his place and fills it, a man who knows his business and minds it, a man who is not too lazy to work nor too proud to be poor, a man who is willing to eat what he had earned and wear what he has paid for.

Look for a man who will stand by his friends with unfaltering devotion; look for a man who is not close and mean, who will not higgle for the lowest penny when he pays and the highest when he is making a sale.

Look for a man with a will; "master of himself" is one of the noblest titles to which a man can attain. Think of a man mastered by a thing!

Look for a man with a conscience. The noble minded, high hearted Paul said, "Herein do I exercise myself to have always a conscience void of offense toward God aud man."

Look for a man with a soul. Some men are so given to levity that they are incapable of a serious, solemn thought. Their hearts are set on "having a good time." Their lives are summed up in rising, dressing, dining, loafing, visiting and sleeping—busy men aud women about trifles, pitiful butterfly species, flitting from flower to flower, and dying like autumnal insects, despised and forgotteu.

Look for a Christian man. Dr. Young says, "A Christian is the highest style of a man." Dr. Hare, in his "Guesses of Truth," says, "A Christian is God Almighty's gentlemau."

Locomotive Wheels and Puffs.

The number of puffs given by a locomotive always depends upon the circumference of its driving wheels and the rate of speed at which the engine is moving. For every one round of the driving wheels a locomotive always gives forth four puffs—two out of each cylinder, all such cylinders being double.

The size of the driving wheels vary greatly on different patterns of engines, they being from 15 to 23 feet in circumference, the general run, however, being 18, 19 or 20 feet. Five engines out of every seven may be set down as having driving wheels 20 feet in circumference.

The speed of the average express train varies from 54 to 58 miles per hour. Taking the average circumference of the driving wheel to be 20 feet, and the average speed per hour at 50 miles, a locomotive will give, going at express speed, 850 puffs per minute, or 52,800 puffs per hour. During the same time the wheels will revolve 13,200 times, which will cause the locomotive to give 1,056 puffs to the mile. Therefore an express train going from London to Liverpool, a distance of 204¾ miles, will throw out 213,048 puffs between the time when it leaves the London depot and that at which it arrives at its destination.

During the tourist session of 1888 the journey from London to Edinburgh was accomplished in less than eight hours, the distance being 401 miles, giving a speed throughout of 50 miles per hour. According to the figures showu above, a locomotive making such a journey in the time stated must have given forth upward of a half million puffs, or, say, 532,456.—St. Louis Republic.

Numerous Names For One Town.

Annapolis was so called in honor of Queen Anne. The Catholics, who settled it, called it St. Mary's. It was renamed Arundelton in honor of the Earl of Arundel. Still later it was christened Anne Arundel, and finally the present name was bestowed.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic For the Week Beginning Sept. 8. Comment by Rev. S. H. Doyle.

TOPIC.—Teachings of Caleb's life.—Num. xiii, 30-33; xiv, 20-24, 30; Joshua xiv, 14.

Historical information concerning the life of Caleb is very scanty. It is probable that he was a foreigner by birth and was only an adopted son of Judah. Most of all that the Scripture tells about him centers around one event iu his life—his work as one of the 12 spies sent into Cauaan. Yet the moral portrait of the mau is very full and complete. All that we know of him is greatly to his honor and credit. It is just such men as Caleb that the world needs today—men of integrity, fidelity to God, independence and moral courage; meu who have convictions, and who dare stand by them, although they may be uupopular with the multitude and opposed by the majority.

Caleb's life teaches loyalty to God and to truthfulness. Caleb was loyal to God under very adverse circumstances. Ten out of the twelve spies were against his report. The masses of the people were enthusiastically in favor of following the advice of the majority. Caleb was in a decided minority. His position was unpopular, and yet, in his loyalty to God and to truthfulness, for he spoke from the conviction of his heart, he courageously maintained his positiou. Loyalty to God often requires us to be in the minority. It often places us on the unpopular side of many questions. Yet we should not falter because this is so. Our only question should be, Which is the right side? And being assured we are right we should be firm aud true.

Caleb's life teaches moral courage. There is too much moral cowardice in the world today. Policy predominates over conviction and expediency over right. Politicians vote with their party for measures which they disapprove. People in society yield to practices and customs which they feel to be wrong because they dare not brave the censure of public opinion. Still their course is wrong. Like Caleb we should have the courage to stand up for right and truth whether it is popular or unpopular. Moral courage pays in the end. Caleb's position was afterward seen to have been the correct position and he became a very popular man.

Caleb's life teaches that loyalty to God and to truthfulness pays even in this world. Caleb had his reward. He and Joshua, alone of all the people, entered the promised land. He received the portion of the land that he desired and that God had promised him. God rewards His faithful servants both in this life and the life to come.

Bible Readings. — Ex. xix, 5, 6; Num. xxxii, 11, 12; Deut. i, 35, 36; xxxi, 6-8; Joshua i, 6, 7; Ps. xxvii, 14; xxxi, 24; Prov. iv, 25-27; Eccl. xii, 13; Dan. vi, 10; Acts v, 27-32; xv, 24-26; I Cor. x, 31; Eph. vi, 5-8; Phil. iii, 13, 14; Col. iii, 23-25.

THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR WHEEL.

Many New Spokes Added, and All of the Old Ones Strengthened.

Last year our wheel was strengthened by 7,750 new societies, or "spokes" if you please. This is the largest increase for any one year since the "wheel" commenced revolving, 14 years ago.

"Spoke" after "spoke" passes our vision rapidly in this whirl of inspection, in all 41,229. Of these 4,712 are from other lands, the United Kingdom heading the list with 2,645, which figure includes 180 from Wales, 112 from Scotland and 53 from Ireland. Australia now has no less than 1,509; Africa, 30; China, 32; France, 64; India, 117; Japan, 59; Madagascar, 93; Mexico, 25; Turkey, 39; West India islands, 63, and so on until every country is represented save five—Italy, Russia, Iceland, Swedcn and Greece.

And now the "spokes" from the Dominion of Canada come into view. Ontario, with her remarkable growth of the last year, leads with 1,995; Nova Scotia, 388; Quebec, 264; New Brunswick, 152; Manitoba, 156; Prince Edward Island, 62; Assiniboia, 53; British Columbia, 40; Alberta, 15; Saskatchewan, 5. In all, counting 5 in Newfoundland, 3,105, an increase of 1,223 during the past year.

And now our view from the "hub" discloses the balance of the wheel, all bearing the familiar colors of the stars and stripes. Pennsylvania still leads, with 4,139; New York next, with 3,822; Ohio, 2,787; Illinois, 2,446; Indiana, 1,762; Iowa, 1,563; Massachusetts, 1,309; Kansas, 1,247; Missouri, 1,133; Michigan, 1,082; New Jersey, 1,045, etc. In all, from the United States, 33,412, as against 28,696 last year.—Secretary Baer's Report.

The Same Old Motto.

I have thought you might grow tired of our old annual motto, and I have tried to find another one as appropriate, but I cannot do it. The successes of the past year only emphasize it, for they are all of Christ and of Christian fraternity. So I must give it to you again for the coming year—the motto which tells of one Captaiu and of one fellowship; the motto which points backward to past successes; the motto which shows the only road to future victories; the motto which tells alike of our leadership and our brotherhood. Here it is. Take it, oh, Christian Eudeavorers, take it, and live by it for another twelvemonth. "Oue is your Master, even Christ, and all ye are brethren."—Francis E Clark.

The World For Christ.

The world for Christ—reverently
Before Thy throne we fall.
Bring forth the royal diadem
And crown Him Lord of all.

The world for Christ—earnestly
We'll work as well as pray,
With armor bright maintain the fight
Till victory crowns the day.

The world for Christ—joyfully
We lift our waiting eyes
To wondrous signs upon the earth,
To wonders in the skies.

The world for Christ—gloriously
The shout shall rise, Amen,
The Lord, the God omnipotent,
On earth has come to reign.

Doctors of Philosophy.

Mary Engle Pennington and Miss Alice M. Atkinson have received the degree of doctor of philosophy from the University of Pennsylvania. Dr. Pennington had previously received certificates from both the biological and college departments. In connection with the late Dr. John Ryder she published some interesting results in biology, and with Professor Edgar Smith an investigation on the atomic weight of tungsten. Her thesis presented for the doctorate relates to derivatives of columbium aud tantalum. During her entire course Dr. Pennington has been known as a thorough and accurate student, and she is probably the youngest person to receive the degree from this institution.

Washable Lingerie.

Just one word on the subject of lingerie. Those who have adopted the dual styles of underclothes cannot, of course, continue to wear black satin knickerbockers in this weather. Let them have three or four pairs made of white washing silk, line them with thin nun's veiling, and these can go to the wash with the regularity ever evinced by the petticoat of olden days. No other silk washes so well as this, and no other silk is so light and comfortable to wear.

The prettiest new petticoats are made of glace silk, with large flouncos of musliu trimmed with lace, these flounces being so made that they can be detached to visit the laundress.—Philadelphia Times.

Mrs. Lucie B. Tyng.

Mrs. Lucie B. Tyng of Peoria, Ills., has beeu elected on the board of school inspectors by a vote of 512 to 5. The daily papers paid a high tribute to her worth. One said, "The people of Peoria generally agreed that the ward would honor itself aud do the public schools a distinguished service by her election." Mrs. Tyng, in writing of the matter to Rev. Louise S. Baker of Nantucket, says, "Like many other things, it comes too late in life for me personally to enjoy, all my boys being out of school and in business, but perhaps I may be of service to some other mother's boys." Peoria is the same city that lately ohose a woman for health commissioner.

Strawberries For the Face.

A southern woman says that she has found it a good plan when coming in from a drive or walk at this season to bathe the face in the juice of strawberries. It is cool and refreshing to the skin, and where the complexion is pale adds a pretty pink tinge. The water in which oatmeal and bran have soaked are old fashioned yet excelleut remedies for giving a smooth skin. Some country maidens use a concoction brewed from elder flowers to remove freckles. It is less harmful and more effective than many a newfangled drug.

Miss Florence Bascom.

Miss Florence Bascom has been added to the faculty of Bryn Mawr college as reader in geology. Dr. Bascom is the only woman who has received the degree of doctor of philosophy from Johns Hopkins. For the past two years she has been instructor in geology at the Ohio State university. Her appointment means that next year, for the first time, Bryn Mawr will offer courses in geology.

The Belle of "the States."

When the English do allow any merit to those who come out of America, they do it with a prodigal generosity. Mrs. Curzon, who was Miss Leiter of Washington, is the present object of their admiration. They are now engaged in telling the world through their society journals that Miss Leiter was the most beautiful woman iu America and the undisputed belle of "the States."

Lady Somerset Re-elected.

Lady Henry Somerset was re-elected president of the British Womau's Temperance union. Lady Somerset and Miss Willard have both conditionally accepted invitations to speak before the fifth meeting of the great antialcohol congress, to be held in Basel, Switzerland, Aug. 20-22.

Bran Bags.

Bran bags are delightful adjuncts to summer baths. They soften and sweeteu the water aud add a new power of refreshment to the rites of ablution. They are rather expensive when bought, but when made at home they are among the cheapest of toilet luxuries.

"Piazzi" Needlework.

A new fashion in needlework called the "piazzi" shows white linen laid over white net Floral designs are traced on the linen and worked in soft colored silks. The spaces between the flowers and leaves are then cut away, leaving the linen design upon the net ground.—New York Post.

Sir, when a woman has the gift of silence, she possesses a quality above the vulgar. It is a gift heaven seldom bestows. Without a little miracle it cannot be accomplished.—Corneille.

An excellent polish for floors is made of beeswax and turpentine, and if a little sweet oil be added it will prevent the floor from becoming dangerously slippery.

After sweeping a room, the boards round the carpet should be wiped over with a damp cloth, in order to gather up the dust and fluff caused by the sweeping.

To clean carved ivory, put on a thick paste of sawdust, made with cold water and a few drops of lemon juice. Leave until quite dry and then brush off.

Miss Nellie Temple, a Vassar graduate of the class of '82, has recently been engaged in assisting Professor Ratzel of the University of Leipsic in a revision of his treatise on the United States.

Linseed oil is better than anything else for removing rust from a stovepipe. Rub the pipe thoroughly with the oil—a little goes a great ways—and build a slow fire until it is dry.

The Nonpartisan Woman's Christian Temperance union recently adopted a resolution which pledges its members to remove their hats at church and at all indoor speaking.

Mrs. Eliza H. Church, who died recently at Freeport, Ills., was one of the earliest and most sincere friends of the cause of woman suffrage.

In ribbons, chameleon is quite the newest thing. It possesses the changing qualities of the little reptile and ranges in hue from light to dark. It is to be very popular if the mandates of Dame Fashion are to be regarded.

It is the suggestion of a thrifty woman that pieces of children's dresses of wash materials should be included in several launderings to secure the requisite change of color that will make patches unnoticeable.

A number of women are making a good income in Philadelphia designing and drawing pictures for illustrating the newspaper advertisements of the big retail mercantile establishments.

Several towns in Russia have elected women as mayors on the ground that they are best fitted to be intrusted with the interests of the community.

Mayor Schieren of Brooklyn has appointed five women as members of the Brooklyn board of education.

The San Francisco League of Practical Progress recently discussed woman suffrage and indorsed it.

CALISAYA DRUNKARDS.

An Alcoholic Drink That Is Even Worse Than Pure Whisky.

"Calisaya drunkards are rapidly increasing in number," said a New York druggist. "Very few men who drink this insidious mixture know what it is made of, and consequently they drink it with a recklessness which is almost suicidal. There is a large number of men in New York who have drunk alcohol in its various forms for many years, and who, either from fear of its ultimate effect or from a desire for a change, resort to drinks the nature of the effects of which they know nothing.

"This drink, called calisaya, which is so extensively retailed in drug stores, really has very little calisaya in it. The basis of the drink is alcohol and quinine. When drunk in a rational manner, the mixture is a comparatively harmless tonic, but when indulged in to excess it is much more harmful than alcohol alone, as it combines the deleterious effects of an overdose of quinine as well.

"The unfortunate victims of the calisaya habit ignorantly think that in calisaya they have found a drink which has the stimulating effects of whisky without any of its physical penalties, when the fact is that they are practically only adding the spur of quinine to their whisky, which is thinly disguised by calisaya. A man with a calisaya jag is sincerely to be pitied. He is just a little short of being a raving maniac. His ears ring like an anvil from the effects of the quinine, while his blood riots through his veins like a mill race at the bidding of the alcohol."—Toledo Blade.

When He Took Whisky.

In a certain little Scottish town some time ago they held a temperance meeting. During the proceedings an old man who was not exactly celebrated for sobriety got up to address the audience. He said, after a few remarks upon the beauty and advantage of moderation, "My friends, there's just two occasions when I tak' whisky." Undismayed by the "hums!" and "hahs!" which ensued, he continued, "Aye, I just tak' whisky when I hae haggis for dinner, and I tak' whisky when I hae nae haggis." The rest of the speech was lost in the storm of applause that broke forth. —Exchange.

No Liquor There.

Another of the genuine nobility is the dowager Countess of Airlie, whose residence, "The Bonnie Hoose o' Airlie," is famed in Scottish ballad. She has practical total abstinence principles of such intensity that a public house is not tolerated on her estate. As each license expired under her reign its renewal was forbidden, and now peace, plenty and sobriety are the prevailing rules over her broad domains. The Earl of Airlie, although trained to military honors, sets his disapproval upon the wanton sport of game shooting, in which he never indulges.—Union Signal.

Unconscious Drunkards.

Dr. Pierret, head physician of the hospital for mental diseases at Bron, recently enlightened a large audience in Lyons on the peculiar character of the "unconscious alcoholic." This is the person who never really gets drunk, but who, while consuming only what he imagines to be a moderate amount, daily exceeds "the dose of spirituous liquor which the organism can safely tolerate." "The common result of his unconscious excess," he says, "is a successive getting out of order of the vital organs, stomach, liver, kidneys, followed regularly by mental and moral disorders." But the worst effect of this alcoholism is found in the children of its victims. "These are sometimes intelligent, but they are always unbalanced and impulsive, often tuberculous, epileptic or imbecile and without physical resistance." —Exchange.

Temperance Summer Drinks.

Barley Water.—Two and one-half ounces pearl barley, two quarts water, one lemon, sugar. Wash the pearl barley, simmer it in the two quarts of water until reduced to half. Strain it into a jug, add the thin rind and juice of half the lemon, sweeten to taste, and when cold strain again.

Oatmeal Water.—Two ounces or two tablespoonfuls of fine Scotch oatmeal, one spoonful of brown sugar. Mix well together with cold water into a smooth paste, then add one quart of boiling water, stirring it all the time to avoid lumps. Add as much cold water as you please. It is then ready for use. A sliced lemon added is a great improvement.—Union Signal.

They Don't Mention Beer.

Some of the funniest things in present American business methods are the big advertisements of the patent medicine order directing attention to the wonderful virtues of the malt extract as a spring tonic and nerve food. All reference to beer or to the fact that the manufacturers of the tonic are in the brewing business is carefully excluded, while the medicinal value of pure essence of hops is set forth elaborately. One western concern has an artistic full page advertisement in weeklies and magazines, while spread advertisements in the newspapers are becoming common. But the pictured bottles of the medicine are comically familiar to those who are not prohibitionists. The familiar labels of well known brands of lager are reproduced, but with the place usually occupied by the word "beer" taken by artistic scrollwork.—New York Sun.

Germany's Rum Blight.

An abstract from the German imperial statistics shows that one-fifteenth of all the cultivated land in the country is devoted to the production of materials for the making of alcoholic drink. The liquor traffic employs directly 1,500,000 men out of the 20,500,000 engaged in German industries of every kind. The loss to the country in money through this diversion of land, capital and labor into the service of an industry which leaves the country no richer than before is estimated at 458,000,000 marks —an average loss to every family of eight persons of a sum large enough to keep a laborer's family of that size for eight weeks.

Rapid Transit Promotes Temperance.

A Toronto saloon keeper is reported as saying that the introduction of electric cars in that city has greatly diminished the sales in saloons, as workmen who previously walked home in companies of from 5 to 20 and stopped at the saloons on the way for a social drink now ride home, and once there spend the evenings with their families. —Christian Work.

Things to Remember.

The effort to keep cool by drinking beer is very apt to end in the wrong kind of a cooler.

There is but one sure "cure" for drunkenness. It is to wipe out the drunkard making business.

It does not need a scientific council to determine the evil effects of alcohol. Any drunkard's child can tell all about them.

SABBATH SCHOOL.

LESSON XI, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, SEPT. 15.

Text of the Lesson, Joshua xx, 1-9—Memory Verse, 9—Golden Text, Heb. vi, 18—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

1. "The Lord also spake unto Joshua, saying." There was a time when God spake to men face to face as with Adam, Abraham, Moses and Joshua. He afterward spoke through the prophets, but He last spoke through His Son, our Lord Jesus Christ (Heb. i, 1, 2). Even His communications to Abraham and the others were through the Son, for, "No man hath seen God at any time, the only Begotten Son who is in the bosom of the Father, He hath declared Him" (John i, 18). Whether through the prophets or His Son it was always by the Spirit, and the same Holy Spirit now speaks to us in His word (I Pet. i, 11; II Pet. i, 21; John xvi, 13; I John ii, 27).

2. "Speak to the children of Israel, saying, Appoint out for you cities of refuge, whereof I spake unto you by the hand of Moses." The commands concerning the "cities of refuge" are found in Ex. xxi, 13; Num. xxxv, 11-15, and Deut. xix, 2-9. Our lesson is the fourth reference to them, and the number four is suggestive of completeness concerning God's dealings with the earth. The four gospels, the four faces of the cherubim, the four corners of the earth—all suggest God's purposes of grace in Christ Jesus for the whole earth.

3. "That the slayer that killeth any person unawares and unwittingly may flee thither, and they shall be your refuge from the avenger of blood." The word "miglat" here translated "refuge" is a word which is used only of the cities of refuge. It is from a root which signifies "to receive" and makes us think of Him of whom it is said, "This man receiveth sinners." The cities of refuge were only for the innocent who had killed accidentally and without malice: the Lord Jesus is a Saviour and a refuge for the guilty, and yet the cities of refuge were God's way of saving those who otherwise would have perished.

4. "They shall take him into the city unto them and give him a place that he may dwell among them." His dwelling among them calls to mind another word which is translated "refuge" only once It is in the passage, "The eternal God is thy refuge" (Deut. xxxiii, 27), and is in the Ninetieth and Ninety-first Psalms and elsewhere translated "dwelling place" and "habitation." When we have fled to Jesus, our refuge, He becomes our dwelling place, and we may "abide in Him."

5. "And if the avenger of blood pursue after him, then they shall not deliver the slayer up into his hand." The way to the city was prepared (Deut. xix, 3,) and everything made as plain and easy for the unwilling slayer as possible, but he had to flee to the city and flee for his life lest the avenger should overtake him. There is always a danger of the sinner's being cut off in his sins. Then there is no possibility of redemption, for it is written: "Because there is wrath, beware lest He take thee away with His stroke. Then a great ransom cannot deliver thee" (Job xxxvi, 18).

God is not willing that any should perish, and He has made every possible provision for every sinner who will come, so that the guilt is either upon the sinner who has heard and will not come, or upon those who, knowing of the refuge, have not informed those who know it.

6. "And he shall dwell in that city until he stand before the congregation for judgment, and until the death of the high priest that shall be in those days." His liberty depended upon the death of the high priest. Our High Priest has died and risen from the death and is alive forevermore. Because He ever liveth He is able to save evermore all who come unto God by Him. None who ever come to Him will be cast out, and because He lives all who come to Him shall live also (John vi, 37; xiv, 19). We have only to abide in Him, live unto Him and rejoice in Him who has made us free.

7. "And they appointed Kedesh in Galilee in Mount Naphtali, and Shechem in Mount Ephraim, and Kirjath-arba, which is Hebron in the mountain of Judah." There were three cities on each side of Jordan. Three is suggestive of the Trinity and of resurrection, and these names are all suggestive of Him who reveals the Father by the Spirit, and by His death and resurrection becomes a refuge for us. Kedesh means holiness, and Naphtaii means wrestling. He becomes our holiness when we yield to His wrestlings and are willing to acknowledge no good thing in us. Shechem is shoulder, and Ephraim is fruitful. It is only when we cease from our wrestlings against Him and rest quiet on His shoulder that He can make us fruitful. Kirjath-arba is the city of Arba, or of four. Hebron is a company, or fellowship, and Judah is praise. Resting from our wrestling in Him who is our holiness we become fruitful through fellowship with the Father and the Son by the Spirit and are thus a praise unto God. It all comes through coming unto and abiding in Him who is our only refuge.

8. "Bezer, out of the tribe of Reuben; Ramoth, out of the tribe of Gad, and Golan, out of the tribe of Manasseh." These were the three on the east of Jordan and are also very suggestive of Him. Bezer signifies strong, and also gold or silver, something precious. Reuben is "see a son." There is no real strength or wealth or preciousness apart from the Son in whom dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodily (See Prov. iii, 14, 15; I Pet. ii, 7; Isa. xii, 2; xl, 29). Ramoth is height or exaltation, and Gad is a troop or company. This makes us think of the host of exalted ones who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before them. Redeemed by His precious blood they are now by faith sealed with Him in the heavenlies—in due time shall be actually with Him, spirit, soul and body, and shall come with Him among the armies of heaven. Golan is a circle, or joy or rejoicing, and Manasseh is forgetting. When the circle is completed and we become manifestly a part of Him from whom our new life began, then will our joy be full and we shall forget all our miseries and remember them as waters that pass away (Job xi, 16). Then shall we see that all the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory that shall be revealed (Rom. viii, 18).

9. "These were the cities appointed for all the children of Israel and for the stranger that sojourneth among them." The benefit was for all, Jew or gentile. It was for "whosoever" killeth any person at unawares that he might not perish. Consider the whosoevers of John iii, 16; iv, 13; xi, 26; Acts x, 43; Rom. x, 11; I John v, 1; Rev. xxii, 17. What a responsibility rests upon all who know of this refuge for sinners to make Him known to all as speedily as possible.

NO SPLIT OCCURRED.

PENNSYLVANIA REPUBLICANS COMPROMISE THEIR QUARREL.

And the Proceedings of the State Convention Are Marked by Their Peacefulness—Quay Having Won Makes no Fight on Candidates.

HARRISBURG, Aug. 29.—The Republican state convention met without a row today and unanimously agreed upon the following ticket: State chairman, M. S. Quay; state treasurer, Ben J. Haywood, of Mercer; for superior court judges (six to be elected), James A. Beaver, of Center county; E. N. Tillard, of Lackawana; Charles E. Rice, of Luzerne; George B. Orlady, of Huntington; John J. Wickham, of Beaver; Howard Reeder, of Northampton. Senator Quay is now the hero as well as the idol of Pennsylvania politicians of all degrees of prominence.

First Blood for the Quay Men.

The convention, which started out with every promise of being one of the most exciting ever known in the state, developed into a "love feast" and wound up about as tamely as any ever seen here. The first battle between the factions came on the election of a temporary chairman. The Quay candidate won by a majority of 30, and after this the seator had his own way completely. An incident of the day was the offering by Senator Quay of a resolution calling for the purification of politics and civil service in all branches of the public service, which was afterwards embodied in the platform. Regarding this document there was much discussion in committee.

Came Near Forgetting Hastings.

Because of the fear that the outside rabble might break in it was deemed unwise to open the doors of the hall after all entitled to admission were inside, and it was necessary for the fifty platform-makers to get in one corner and discuss their business. The anti-Quay minority, led by Congressman Dalzell, fought for a more definite expression in favor of "sound money," and being outvoted in committee brought their fight to the convention floor and here carried their point without much opposition, Quay accepting their plank as additional to the one in his platform. The resolutions were prepared by men opposed to Governor Hastings, and the matter of indorsing his administration was very nearly overlooked, a thoughtful delegate offering the necessary plank a few minutes before final adjournment.

Some Leaders Who Do Not Speak.

Although there was an outward indication of harmony and forgiveness it is said that this extends only to Governor Hastings and his friends. Those on the platform observed that Quay did not look at or speak to C. L. Magee, David Martin and Senator Porter, the men who have led the fight against him. In nominating Quay for state chairman Congressman Stone, of Allegheny, put in a plea for harmony after the fight. He said: "We have had a great contest inside the party. Let us ever keep our contests within the party. Let us remember that we are Republicans. Let nothing be said or done here today that will come back to plague us when the battle is on with the Democratic party. It has been hot and many things have been said and published, and more things have been published than said, which have only made it hotter.

Should Not Treasure Up Hard Words.

"These things should not be treasured up as wrongs. In a fight like this we fight our best, and while the desperate fighting provokes and worries at the time, yet after it is over the hardest fighters are only remembered with admiration for their courage and their bravery. There aro too many good soldiers on both sides of this controversy to spare any of them from the ranks, and in a party contest no Republicans can ever dislike another so much as to wish to see him become a Democrat."

PLANKS OF THE PLATFORM.

National Declaration of 1892 with a More Radical Conclusion.

The platform is a standard Republican document as to the tariff, claiming that the national prosperity lies in protection and that the recent business depression is traceable entirely to Democratic success and free trade and the present recovery to Republican victories in recent elections. On the money question the national declaration of 1892 is reaffirmed with the following further defining the same:

"The Republican party believing it to be the settled doctrine of the party that the honor of the nation and the interests of its citizens require the maintenance of the national currecny, every dollar of which, whether in gold, silver or notes, shall be of stable value and of equal purchasing power, hereby declares its opposition to the debasement of the national currency by the admission of silver to free and unlimited coinage at the arbitrary ratio of 16 to 1."

In fact harmony was the motto of the convention. A spilt had been averted by a compromise reached by the Quay and anti-Quay men in the "wee sma' hours," by which, while it was agreed that Quay could have the chairmanship of the state committee if he had the delegates, it was also agreed that Governor Hastings men for judges should be nominated. Then, although a Quay man was the temporary chairman, Governor Hastings was made permanent chairman.

Populists of Nebraska.

LINCOLN, Aug. 29.—At least 500 delegates were in attendance at the Populist state convention. The most prominent leaders of the party—United States Senator Allen, ex-United States Senator Vanwick, Campbell, of Fremont, Heaton of Kearney, and others were present, with a large following of representative Populists of the country. Samuel Maxwell was nominated for supreme judge and James K. Thurston and E. W. Peattie for university regents. The platform is the Omaha declaration including the initative and referendum, against which a fight was made.

Can Stop the Mill with Lead.

AUSTIN, Aug. 28.—Sheriff Cabell, of Dallas county, some days ago asked the attorney general if in attempting to stop the Corbett-Fitzsimmons fight he was resisted, would he be justified in using fire-arms. The attorney general answered the query in the affirmative.

Transfer of Old Fort Mackinac.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 28.—Secretary Lamont has issued an order transferring the possession of the grounds of the old Fort Mackinac on the island of Mackinac to the state of Michigan. It is to be used as a park by the state.

MISS FLAGG'S LATEST NEW BOOK!
"A Prisoner of Hope."
COMPLETE IN ONE LARGE HANDSOME VOLUME.
Price, $1.25.

We heartily commend this new work, by Elizabeth E. Flagg, to all our friends. The narrative originated in her personal experience, two or three years ago, when she sought relief and restoration from the results of a painful accident, In that search she availed herself of a unique healer in New Jersey, whom she graphically described, at that time, in her weekly letters to this paper. The ideas created in her mind by that experience form the basis of this well-told story, and thoughtful readers will peruse it with interest. While all may not agree with its deductions, ministers of the Gospel, students in seminaries and intelligent home circles will find it pleasant food for thought. We sell it for $1.25 per copy postage prepaid.

THE PRAIRIE STATE.

NEWS OF ILLINOIS REPORTED BY TELEGRAPH.

Some of the Principal Events of the Past Few Days Given in Condensed Form and Placed Together for the Convenience of Our Readers.

CHICAGO, Aug. 29.—The facts in the case of the arrest of Oscar Baughman, alderman of Lewistown, Ills., as given by the detective firm which secured his arrest, are as follows: The Fulton county court house has been for years located at Lewistown, and it is a historic structure. Abe Lincoln used to plead some of his cases there and for a long time it was considered to be an attractive landmark. For a long time there has been a struggle going on between the people of Lewistown and the people of Canton for the county seat, but the former have succeeded in holding it. The contest was getting pretty warm and last fall some of the city officials of Lewistown came to the conclusion that their town was running down and they must do something to give it a boost.

So it was decided that the old court house was an eyesore, and a new one should be built, and a conspiracy was hatched to burn the old building. The prosecution says it has the affidavits of Brown, the city marshal, and Henry, the night watchman, to prove this conclusively. Henry says he was offered $200 by Baughman if he would burn the court house; that with Brown he set fire to the building on the night of Dec. 14 last; that they covered up their tracks almost perfectly; that he, Henry, called on Baughman the day after the fire and Baughman borrowed $197.50 on a note in bank and paid the money to him, Henry, and the note is yet in the bank and upaid.

The above is the story as the detectives tell it and W, D. Soule, superintendent of the detective agency, said Baughman had admitted the truth of the part concerning the payment of money.

DECATUR LAWYER IN TROUBLE.

Warrant Out For Him on the Charge of Criminal Libel.

DECATUR, Ills., Aug. 30.—C. M. Lane an attorney who has been trying to prosecute gamblers, has been calling on local officials to stop pool selling at race tracks. No attention was paid to him and he distributed on the streets handbills in which he said that States Attorney Isaac R. Mills, Mayor D. H. Conklin, Sheriff Jerry Nicholson and Marshal William W. Mason were catering to 300 hundred gamblers, worse than burglars.

He said these officers, sworn to enforce the law, had sold out their offices and were perjured scoundrels. Last night these officers had a conference and issued a warrant charging Lane with criminal libel. Deputy Sheriff Holmes and States Attorney Mills at 10 p. m went to Lane's house to arrest him. He was not there. Officers are now hunting him.

BRUTAL MURDER OF A WOMAN.

Southern Illinois Fair Closes with a Dastardly Crime.

ANNA, Aug. 31.—The southern Illinois fair closed here with a brutal and cowardly murder. John Jones, a notorious citizen of this place, beat and kicked to death a woman named Mendenahl. Jones had an eating stand on the fair grounds and Mrs. Mendenahl was cooking for him. She asked for her pay, and an altercation ensued which endcd by Jones knocking her down and kicking her so that she died in an hour.

Mrs. Mendenahl was a respectable woman and had a husband and children. Jones was promptly arrested and is in the county jail at Jonesboro He killed a man named Champion here about twelve years ago and served six years in the penitentiary.

MONKS AS BREWERS.

Mgr. Satolli Investigating Making of Beer by Benedictines.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 30.—The protest against the manufacture and sale of beer by the Benedictines of St. Vincent abbey of Beatty, Pa., is still under consideration by Archbishop Satolli. A second protest has been received here, this time coming from a temperance society of Buffalo, of which the Rev. Father Zureher is president.

Mgr. Satolli has sent a letter to the Benedictines referring to the the complaints. They have forwarded a response saying that there was no scandal connected with the sale of beer, which, they stated, was done merely to cover the cost of manufacture for their own consumption and the expense of the internal revenue tax. The total amount manufactured, it was stated, was in the neighborhood of four barrels a week, which they regarded as an insignificant output. The Benedictines announce, however, their readiness to see what can be done in the matter to quiet the criticisms.

Cuban News from Jamaica.

KINGSTON, Aug. 30.—Captain General Martinez de Campos has written to the Spanish consul here that the struggle against the insurrection in Cuba is hopeless. The conceding of autonomy, he adds, is the only means by which Spain can avoid losing the island. The Cubans are jubilant.

HAVANA, Aug. 30.—The Kingston, Jamaica, dispatch referring to an alleged letter from Campos to the Spanish consul at Kingston is entirely false.

FATAL BOILER EXPLOSION.

Accidents While Threshing Cost the Loss of Three Lives.

ELDORADO, Ills., Aug. 28.—By the explosion of the boiler of a threshing machine at Oowassa two people were killed and a number of others injured. Those killed were: Monroe Babcock, farmer; Anna Hoffman, daughter of Frank Hoffman. Several of the threshing gang were also injured, it is feared, fatally. The engine was an old one and had been declared unsafe, and was in the hands of an incompetent fireman.

JOLIET, Ills., Aug. 28.—Adam Bluth, who, with his two sons, runs a threshing machine in Frankfort, Will county, was instantly killed. He was threshing on the farm of Joseph Hunter, when he was caught in the straw blower of the machine.

WHAT THE LAW PROVIDES.

According to Judge Dibble's Charge to a Bureau County Jury.

PRINCETON, Ills., Aug. 28.—The August term of the circuit court opened here. Presiding Judge Dibble, in his charge to the grand jury, in referring to the recent assault upon the colored people at Spring Valley, among other things said that if the occurrences had been correctly reported "the reputation and honor of Bureau county are at stake. The law of the land protects every man in the right to work where he can find employment, in the right to the peaceable enjoyment of his home, and to go about the streets in a peaceable manner. It is your duty impartially and thoroughly to investigate those charges."

One Man Lost Off the Adelaide.

NEW YORK, Aug. 28.—It is almost certain now that one man was lost in the collision between the Adelaide and the Perseus—Robert W. Inman, owner of the yacht. He was a strong swimmer.

Alderman Baughman Indicted.

LEWISTON, Ills., Ang. 31.—Oscar Baughman, Frank Henry and Ellis Brown have been indicted by the grand jury, of Fulton county, for complicity in burning the Fulton county court house on the night of Dec. 14, 1894. Baughman and Brown quickly gave bond in $5,000 each. Both men still show the effects of their treatment while in Chicago.

Window Glass Scale Settled.

PITTSBURG, Sept. 2.—The window glass scale for the year beginning with Sept. 1 was settled at a conference of manufacturers and workmen here by the manufacturers conceding an advance over last year's scale of 7½ per cent. The settlement, which is a compromise, affects about 20,000 men.

Texas Fever In Illinois.

SPRINGFIELD, Aug. 29.—The state board of live stock commissioners reports that an official inspection of the outbreak of Texas fever at Mt. Sterling, Brown county, shows the disease had been brought into Illinois by cattle shipped from the Union Stock yards at St. Louis. The disease is under control in Brown county and no further trouble is anticipated.

State Notes.

Barney Howell of Kinmundy, Ills., was awarded by a jury in the circuit court judgment for $550, damages sustained by the building of the Chicago, Paducah and Memphis railroad on the street adjacent to his residence.

Belzchazzar Krieg killed himself near Virginia, Ills.

The Rev. John Frazier of the Methodist church of Colona, Ills., is insane. He escaped from his home in his underclothing only and ran to Warner Station, where he was caught.

Big Bend, Ills., reunion has closed, 5,000 people being present. The parade, headed by forty-five young women, followed by fifty or more decorated carriages, was the feature of the day.

At Rockford, Ills., Albert Bass fell from a roof and was fatally injured.

FARM·FIELD AND GARDEN

CORN HARVESTERS.

A Homemade Machine That Will Cut About Five Acres Per Day.

Notwithstanding the fact that there are now on the market corn harvesters and binders, the average farmer will for many reasons find himself at harvesting time without one of these patented machines. If he has much corn to cut, he may welcome the following concerning a homemade cutter from an Iowa correspondent of Farm, Field and Fireside. He writes:

We made one out of material on the place, and it does as good work as one that costs $20. Make a pair of runners out of 2 by 6 scantling or anything that will make a good water sled. The runners must be about 6 inches high at least—higher if your corn is tall and straight. Cut them about six feet long. Now nail three 4 foot strips across the top—fence boards will do. Do not make it any narrower than four feet. Next cover this with boards, making a tight floor. Place the front crosspiece at least two feet from front of runners. Bore holes in front end of runners to hitch team to.

Team must be hitched at least five feet from knife. Use a chain or smooth wire to fasten singletree to runners. Singletrees must be short ones. If you have a driver, it will have to be a man who can hold the lines out of the way of the operator, or a boy can ride. Now for the knives. Take two stack cutter knives; have them thin and sharp—not too thin, or they will turn on the edge. Make a hole in the center of the first crosspiece near the front edge. Bolt your knives firmly to this; then fasten the other ends to the runners. Give the knives slant enough to cut well. Be sure the knives fit closely at the intersection. Or if you wish to have a knife of one piece you can do so, but give it slant enough. See that the intersection of the knives is at least two or more inches from front end of platform, or it will not always cut.

Place a seat to the right side of your platform near the front, so that you can reach the corn easily. Place a guard or brace for your feet. If you slip off in front, you are a goner sure. To keep your horse from backing into it while turning do not turn short; take a land. Drive a short rod in each runner in front of the knives, bore holes in a piece of timber and place it on these rods in front of the knives. When your horse backs on to this, he is safe. Place two removable standards on the left side to keep fodder from falling off. Take a rope about ten feet long, fasten ends on left side and lay it over platform.

Hitch up and start. If it does not go to suit you, don't give up. You will have to get used to it. The operator reaches out and holds the corn against the knife, and as it cuts throws it back. When full, draw your standard, pull your rope and dump your load, or you can hold it in one arm till full; then get off and set up. Be very careful with the machines. They are very dangerous to operate if you are careless.

Homemade Corn Tie.

A New York farmer, writing to Rural New Yorker, tells of a device for binding corn in shocks which he has found to be much quicker and better than to use stalks. He says:

Take old elm barrel staves, cut them into four or five inch lengths and split them 1½ inch wide. With a circular saw cut them diagonally near each end one-half or three-quarters of an inch. These fasteners can be made very fast, as no guide is needed. To use them put a quantity of them in a half bushel basket, a ball of binding twine and a knife. Wind the end of the twine once around the fastener in the notch, pass around the shock and draw it as hard as necessary. Wind the twine once around through the notch and cut it off. It is advisable to wear a glove on the right hand, as the twine will make it tender after a day or so. A man can bind a shock in this way much tighter and quicker than he can select the stalks for a band. Then if the corn is drawn in the barn for husking unwind one end, draw up the twine, and the shock is again snug and tight and can be husked without unbinding if desired. These pieces could be ripped from the edge of any tough 1½ inch lumber and made for a trifle at any shop, but any one having a foot power saw can make enough in two hours for ten acres of corn. When the stalks are fed, it is very easy to save the ties for another year.

When to Sow Crimson Clover.

According to rules laid down by an agricultural writer in The American Cultivator, crimson clover ought to be sown broadcast at the rate of 12 to 15 pounds per acre in the north from July 15 to Oct. 15, in the northern tier of southern states until Oct. 15 and in the extreme south until the end of November. It grows during the fall and spring months and can be seeded among growing corn after the last working or on clean stubble, in tomato fields, among grapes, tobacco, etc., and will take root without being raked in or covered with soil. If the ground is moist, it spreads very rapidly. Probably the best way of seeding is to prepare the ground as for any other crop and lightly harrow in and roll the soil.

Corn For Fodder.

The Illinois experiment station some years ago made numerous experiments to determine the comparative merits of thick and thin planting of corn, and the conclusion reached was that the thicker the planting within reasonable limits the greater the amount of fodder, but that there was very little difference in the value of both combined. If the object is to get a liberal supply of fodder without much reference to ears, thick planting is advised.

The use of Hall's Hair Renewer promotes the growth of the hair, and restores its natural color and beauty, frees the scalp of dandruff, tetter, and all impurities.

VALUABLE

CRANBERRY LAND

FOR SALE.

320 acres in Klamath Co., Oregon, on Klamath Lake, about 8 miles by water from Klamath Falls, the county seat.

140 acres are fine Cranberry land, rich muck, and situated in just the latitude adapted to the successful culture of this luscious berry.

A strong creek runs through the middle of the land, emptying into the lake; the creek has abundant fall to turn it off anywhere above the Cranberry land, affording the means of flooding the Cranberries in the fall, without which the crop would prove a failure.

The remainder of the land is agricultural and fine timber land.

MASONIC CHART.

ILLUSTRATING THE RELATION OF SOME OF THE DEGREES AND RITES IN FREEMASONRY TO EACH OTHER.

The accompanying chart represents one hundred and forty two degrees.

1. The American Rite of 13 degrees;
2. The Scotch Rite of 33 degrees;
3. The Egyptian Rite of 96 degrees.
4. The Mystic Shrine of one degree.
5. The Eastern Star of 5 degrees for Master Masons and for women. These are side degrees, and not genuine masonry.

The Symbolic degrees, or Blue Lodge of three degrees, are common to every Masonic rite, whether American, Scotch, or Egyptian, or whichever of the Masonic rites, named in Mackey's Masonic Encyclopedia one may choose to investigate.

This chart shows in the Blue Lodge the position of the Worshipful Master and some of the other officers of the lodge. Several positions of the candidate who is being initiated are also shown. In the Master Mason's degree is recognized the murder, burial and resurrection scene so full of religious significance to Freemasons.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void: OR FREEMASONRY SELF-CONVICTED. This is a book for the times. The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. 207 pages. Postpaid, 40 cents each.

Judge Whitney's Defense before THE GRAND LODGE OF ILLINOIS. Judge Daniel H. Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. H. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge, but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each.

General Washington Opposed to SECRET SOCIETIES. This is a re-publication of Governor Joseph Ritner's "Vindication of General Washington from the Stigma of Adherence to Secret Societies," communicated to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, March 8, 1837, at their special request. To this is added the fact that three high Masons were the only persons who opposed a vote of thanks to Washington on his retirement to private life—undoubtedly because they considered him a seceding Freemason. 10cts each.

Morgan's Exposition, Abduction AND MURDER, AND OATHS OF 33 DEGREES. Composed of "Freemasonry Exposed," by Capt. Wm. Morgan;" "History of the Abduction and Murder of Morgan;" "Valance's Confession of the Murder of Capt. Wm. DECIDED AGAINST FEMALE SUFFRAGE.

Fair Citizens Cannot Vote at the Coming Election in Utah.

SALT LAKE, Utah, Sept. 2.—The supreme court has decided that women cannot vote at the coming election in November. This reverses the recent decision made by Judge Smith at Ogden. The cases came up on appeal in the suit of Sarah E. Anderson against Charles Tyro, registration officer at Ogden, involving the question of women voting. Chief Justice Merritt rendered the decision. He said Judge Bartch and himself had arrived at a conclusion, Judge Jing dissenting on the subject.

Mrs. Anderson had asked that her name be placed upon the registration list. Judge Merritt said the Edmunds-Tucker law had not been repealed and would remain effective until statehood was achieved. Section 2 of the enabling act had extended the franchise among males, but had not referred to females. To allow females to vote would be in conflict with the act and was forbidden. There had been stress laid upon the fourth section of the enabling act where the "qualified voters of the state" were authorized to vote.

In his view these qualified voters were those qualified under existing laws and the enabling act. There had been no intention on the part of the constitutional convention to allow women to vote at the first election, in November next, but to allow them to vote thereafter.

Declares Bradley Not Justified.

LEXINGTON, Ky., Sept. 2.—The conduct at Eminence which caused Colonel Bradley, the Republican candidate for governor, to retire from the platform, and the subsequent action of the Republican campaign committee in declaring all further debates between Bradley and Hardin off, has caused the greatest political sensation known in Kentucky for years. Chairman Norman, of the Democratic campaign committee, has sent a letter to the Republican committee in which he uses the following language: "I beg to deny that there was any discourtesy, intentional or otherwise, offered Colonel Bradley, or any disturbance that justified his action. I must therefore decline to cancel the dates for the joint debates."

German-Americans Visit Bismarck.

FRIEDRICHSRUHE, Aug. 31.—The German-American veterans of the Franco-Prussan war visited Bismarck, and four of them were deputed to address him. They presented him with an honorary membership in the Chicago Veterans' association. He thanked them for the honor and requested the four spokesmen to drink with him in silence to the memory of Emperor William I. He avoided politics in his conversation, but trusted that the Germans in America would never forget their fatherland.

A. R. U. Telegram to Debs.

CINCINNATI, Sept. 2.—The three unions here of the A. R. U. have wired the following to Eugene V. Debs: "Although you are a prisoner, deprived of your liberty by a rotten administration of justice at the bidding of the railroads and their servants the judges, the common people are today worshiping at your altar. The seeds you have sown will soon bear fruit. The time will soon come when labor will get its rights, or will take them. * * * God bless you."

Thirteen Miners Drowned.

DENVER, Aug. 30.—News is received from Central City to the effect that thirteen men employed in the Sleepy Hollow and Americus mines, situated midway between Blackhawk and Central City, lost their lives by an overflow of water. As yet none of the details of the disastrous occurrence can be learned, but it seems that in these mines heavy underground flows of water are occasionally encountered.

CHICAGO DRAINAGE CHANNEL.

Board of Investigation Report on the Effect on the Lake Levee.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 29.—The board of engineers which recently examined the Chicago drainage channel with reference to its effect on the lake level submits estimates made by other engineers indicating that a loss of seven inches is possible in Lakes Michigan and Huron as the effect of the canal. The trustees of the drainage canal contemplate taking only 300,000 cubic feet under present conditions, but after the canal is opened the board assumes that ultimately the entire 600,000 cubic feet will be drawn from Lake Michigan, as authorized by the state charter.

The report says that while the channels and harbors of the great lakes below St. Mary's falls will be injuriously affected by a diminution in depth, the inner harbor of Chicago will be diminished also by the introduction of a current which, in the present condition of the river with the minimum flow of 5,000 cubic feet per second, is entirely inadmissable. The estimate of the effect of the canal on this harbor should, they say, also consider this element. The board of trustees have not yet determined upon a plan of treatment of this navigable channel, and their plans may, the report suggests, be such as to improve, impair, or destroy its utility as a navigable river.

GOING TO ENTHUSE OVER SEDAN.

Anniversary of the Battle Unites All Germans Except Socialists.

BERLIN, Sept. 2.—Sedan day will be celebrated in a more general and enthusiastic manner than ever since 1870. No business will be done after noon today. The Siemens and Halske people will pay their 5,000 workmen double wages today and will let them enjoy themselves. Many other firms will do likewise. The government employes will get their holiday with full pay and all the schools will be closed. The celebration commenced yesterday with a very impressive ceremony, the dedication of the Emperor William Memorial church, at which the kaiser was the principal figure.

At the conclusion of this service the troops and veterans, including the German-American veterans now visiting the city, marched past their majesties in review. The veterans sang patriotic airs as they marched, in which the spectators joined. All parties are joining in the celebration, except the Socialists. The Roman Catholic authorities have ordered a Te Deum in honor of the day, something they never did before.

Receiver for a Car Factory.

MEMPHIS, Sept. 2.—Chancellor Sneed in chancery court has appointed E. A. Nixon, general manager of the Memphis Car and Foundry company, receiver for that corporation. The Corbett-Fitzsimmons Fight.

DALLAS, Sept. 2.—The civil code which levies a tax of $500 for every contest between man and man has gone into effect in this state. The tax will be tendered to the collector and if he refuses to issue a license mandamus proceedings will be entered by the Florida Athletic club and the supreme court called on to pass upon the case.

STATUS OF THE PENNANT FIGHT.

Baltimore Continues to Look Like a Base Ball Champion.

CHICAGO, Sept. 2.—The base ball situation foreshadows the victory of the Baltimore League club in the contest for the pennant. The Orioles seem able to win when and how they please. Cleveland has a good grip on second place, with Philadelphia third. Pure luck is all that keeps the Chicago "Colts" from being down alongside of St. Louis and Louisville. Following is the table:

Clubs.	Played.	Won	Lost.	Per Cent.
Baltimore	103	67	36	.650
Cleveland	111	71	40	.639
Philadelphia	105	60	45	.571
Boston	103	58	45	.563
Brooklyn	106	59	47	.556
Pittsburg	109	59	50	.541
Chicago	107	57	50	.532
New York	105	55	50	.523
Cincinnati	104	54	51	.519
Washington	98	32	66	.326
St. Louis	106	33	73	.311
Louisville	105	28	79	.247

Latest scores are as follows: At Washington—Louisville 8, Washington 4; second game—Louisville 7, Washington 9; at Boston—Cincinnati 6, Boston 12; at Brooklyn—Cleveland 15, Brooklyn 7; at Philadelphia—Pittsburg 9, Philadelphia 10; at New York and Baltimore—rain.
